4. Partnership in the opera house dissolved by the conduct of the parties making it impossible to carry it on upon the terms stipulated. Decree accordingly for sale of the whole concern; restraining the managing partner from acting with liberty to either party, and to lay proposals before the Master for management until sale. Waters v. Taylor, 2 Ves. & B. 299.

I. COMPUTATION OF. IN GENERAL.

5. Bequest of residue in trust in case A. shall, within six calendar months after the testator's decease, give security not to marry B., then and not otherwise to pay to the children of A.; with a proviso to go over if she shall refuse or neglect to give such security; a condition precedent: the six months are exclusive of the day of the testator's death; therefore, as he died on the 12th January, between eight and nine in the evening, a security given on the 12th July about nine in the evening was held sufficient. Lister v. Garland, 15 Ves. 248.

No general rule, in computing time from an act or event, that the day is to be inclusive or exclusive; depending on the reason of the thing, according to the circumstances. Id.

In the time from the presentment of a bill of exchange, the day of presentment exclusive. Other instances, where the day of an act done, or an event happening, is sometimes inclusive, sometimes exclusive. Id.

1. Devise to A. as soon as he shall accomplish his full age of twenty-one years. A. was born on the 16th August 1725, and died on the 15th August 1746:—Held, that he lived to attain his full age of twenty-one. Toder v. Sansam, 1 Bro. P. C. 469.

2. The six months given to tenants to redeem under the statutes of ejectment for nonpayment of rent, are calendar months, and the day on which the habere is executed is not to be included in the calculation. Where a right would be devested or a forfeiture incurred by including the day of the act done, the computation will be made exclusive of it. Dowling v. Fowall, 1 Ball. & B. 193, 196.

3. Where there was a right of forfeiture of shares, on giving ten clear days' notice:—Held, that a notice to forfeit "on Monday the 9th" was insufficient, the 9th being on a Friday. Watson v. Eales, 23 Beav. 294.

4. In computing time, under the 15 & 16 Vict., c. 5, s. 2, avoiding letters-patent, in failure in payment of stamp duties:—Held, that the day of the date is excluded, and that the three years do not expire until twelve o'clock at night of the anniversary of the day on which the letters-patent were granted. Williams v. Nash, 5 Jur., N. S., 696; 28 L. J., Ch., 886; 28 Beav. 93.

5. Limitation in a will that the tenant for life, who should be of full age, should reside at the house for six months in every year, to be computed from January to January, or in default forfeit 1,000*l.*:—Held, to mean a personal presence at the house for the period of six lunar months. Walcot v. Botfield, 2 Eq. Rep. 758; 1 Kay & J. 534; 18 Jur. 570.

II. REASONABLE.

6. What is reasonable time, in compliance with request of landlord, to pay a fine on renewal of leases in Ireland. In considering what reasonable time is after demand, the previous transactions are to be taken into the account. Jackson v. Saunders, 2 Dow 444.

7. Reasonable time in mercantile transactions not applicable to cases of contracts respecting real property. Jessop v. King, 2 Ball. & B. 95.

III. FRACTIONS OF A DAY.

8. Fraction of a day to support a commission of bankruptcy, by evidence that it was committed before the commission sealed on the same day. Exp. Dufrene, 1 Ves. & B. 54.

9. Fraction of a day allowed, in support of a commission of bankruptcy, by admitting evidence, that the act of bankruptcy, though on the same day, was previously to the issuing, i.e., the awarding and sealing the commission. Wydown's case, 14 Ves. 80.

10. Under 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, s. 81, where the computation of time is to be from an act done, the day when such act is done is to be included. For some purposes the Court notices the fraction of a day. Exp. Farquhar, Mont. & M. 7.

11. Fraction of a day in notices to prevent reputed ownership. Exp. Bagnold, Re Newton, 3 Mont & A. 13.

IV. MONTH.

12. Under an order permitting a plaintiff to amend within a month, the amendment must be made within a lunar month. Creswell v. Harris, 4 L. J., Ch., 94; 2 Sim. & S. 476.

The Court will not relieve a plaintiff from the consequences of a mistake in acting under such an order, when his conduct shows that he had not in view the due prosecution of the suit. Id.

13. In most orders of the courts of law and equity "month" means a lunar month; and it so means in an order for payment of money. Att.-Gen. v. Nembury Corporation, C. P. C. 383.

14. Where parties contract that the purchase of lands shall be completed within so many months, calendar, and not lunar, months are intended. Hipwell v. Knight, 1 Y. & Coll. 401; 4 L. J., N. S., Exch. Eq., 52.

15. If a clerk and foreman is engaged at a weekly salary, and to have two suits of clothes, per annum, it is a yearly hiring within s. 48 of 6 Geo. 4, c. 16. The words "six months" in s. 48 mean "six lunar months." Exp. Humphreys, Mont. & Bli. 413; 3 Dea. & Ch. 114; 2 L. J., N. S., Bky., 71.

16. The nine months allowed by the stat. 8 Geo. 1, c. 2, s. 4, to a mortgagee of an evicted lease to redeem, are calendar months. Bidulph v. St. John, 2 Sch. & Lef. 521.

17. The six months given to tenants to redeem under the statutes of ejectment for nonpayment of rent, are calendar months, and the day on which the habere is executed is not to be included in the calculation. Where a right would be devested or a forfeiture incurred by including the day of the act done, the computation will be made exclusive of it. Dowling v. Fowall, 1 Ball. & B. 193, 196.

18. Under the Act against stock-jobbing, the six months in the first section means lunar months, and no discovery lies where the cause of action arose prior to the expiration of six lunar months. Windale v. Fall, 3 Bro. C. C. 11.

19. Months ought to be considered in equity as calendar months; but in Acts of Parliament it means lunar months, except in the case of tempus semestre, with regard to the lapse of livings, and other instances of six months, allowed to prohibition. Franco v. Alvaes, 3 Atk. 346.

20. By 2 & 3 Edw. 6, c. 13, s. 5, all barren heath or waste land shall pay tithe after seven years' improvement and conversion into arable or meadow; and the suggestion for a prohibition against the Spiritual Court must be proved within six months after the prohibition granted, for it is an affirmative suggestion; which six months shall be computed by the calendar, and begin to run from the teste of the prohibition. Thomas v. Gifford, 2 Show. 92; Straker v. Baynes, id. 308.

1. The six months for redemption given to the tenant, after the execution of the habere, by 4 Geo. 1, c. 5, are calendar and not lunar months. Devereux v. Bradstreet, Wall. Lyn. 338.

2. A custom of letting on a particular estate cannot be imported into an agreement so as to give to the word "month" the meaning of "calendar month," unless, perhaps, in the case of an estate so large that all persons living in the district may be presumed to know of the custom. Rogers v. Hull Dock Co., 4 N. R. 494; 10 Jur., N. S., 1245; 12 W. R. 1101; 13 W. R. 217; 11 L. T., N. S., 42, 463.

3. The plaintiff hired chattels of the defendant by a hiring agreement, by which he agreed to pay him a certain sum once a week, the hiring to be for twenty-six months from the date of the first payment. The plaintiff afterwards gave the defendant a bill of sale of the same and other chattels to secure money owed by him to the defendant. An account was ordered of the dealings between the plaintiff and defendant, the bill of sale to be a security for what should be found due on such account. The defendant claimed that in taking the account the twenty-six months should be taken to be calendar, and not lunar months:—Held, that the months must be taken to be lunar. Hulton v. Brown, 45 L. T. 343; 29 W. R. 928.

V. OTHER CASES.

4. A week's order to examine means exclusive of that day se'night. Otherwise in Irish courts. Donovan v. Keatinge, 2 Moll. 337.

5. Notice for payment of a mortgage at three o'clock, is not forfeited, where there is an attendance before four o'clock. Know v. Simmons, 4 Bro. C. C. 443.

6. Two bound jointly and severally; a day given to one for payment shall be extended to other. Anon., Cary 1.

7. An assignment with notice of an act of bankruptcy, is not protected under the old statutes after the lapse of five years. Mountford v. Ponten, Mont. 79; 7 L. J., Ch., 156.

8. Deed of composition by creditors not signed within the time stated in it, though void at law, yet if the creditors act under it who have not signed it, it is good in equity. Plea of two creditors not having so signed it, therefore, held bad. Spottiswoode v. Stockdale, Coop. 102.

9. The word "forthwith" in a notice to a party charged criminally, and out on bail to appear, on pain of forfeiting his recognizance means, within a reasonable time from the service, and not from the date of the notice. Reg. v. Price, 8 Moo. P. C. 203.

I. JURISDICTION.

10. Quere, have courts of equity jurisdiction with respect to tithes, except as incident to their jurisdiction in amount, and in enforcing discovery. Disney v. Taaffe, San. & Sc. 113. n.

In a suit for tithes, where the sum in dispute was only 6l. 1s. 5d., the defendant having moved at the Rolls that, on payment of this sum, the plaintiff should be stayed from all further proceedings, the Master of the Rolls, under the special circumstances, granted the motion:—Held, on appeal, that the order of the Rolls should be affirmed; and that as, in this case, there was no allegation of any special circumstances arising, either from combination, or any right to be ascertained, or any difficulty in the way of proceeding at law, the bill might have been demurred to or dismissed at the hearing, with costs. Semble, that the tithe composition might have been recovered in any county in which the defendant was resident, even though the lands out of which the tithe issued were situate in a different county. S. C. nom. Tisney v. Taaffe, 1 Dr. & Wal. 94. Affirming Sau. & Sc. 105.

1. Quere, whether a court of equity can make a decree to establish the right to tithes. Day v. Drake, 3 Sim. 72.

2. Sequestrators appointed by the Court of Chancery have no right to seize on the tithes of an ecclesiastical benefice. Ward v. Hayes, 1 Hog. 107.

3. Chancery has jurisdiction in case of sequestration of tithes during a vacancy, by reason of general jurisdiction of court in matters of trust. Biroh v. Bygrave, 6 Madd. 158.

4. Bill for partition will lie as to tithes. Demurrer overruled. Gibson v. Montford, 1 Ves. 404.

5. The award of the commissioners, although final as between the tithe owners and the tithe payers, yet, as between the former, does not preclude further investigation as to their title, which by accident or mistake was not brought forward until after the award made; as where by the award the whole was made payable to the rector, he being entitled only to a moiety, the patron the other joint owner being ignorant of his right, and the former having under mistake received the whole:—Held, that the patron might have relief in the Court of Chancery against the former. Clarke v. Yonge, 5 Beav. 523.

A. and B. were entitled to tithes in equal moieties; B. under mistake received the whole. A bill filed by A. against B. for his moiety dismissed with costs. Id.

6. It is no ground for application to Court of Equity, to restrain plaintiff in suit for tithes in equity from proceeding in actions brought by him against parishioners, not parties to that suit, for not setting out their titles, that equity has decreed issue to try the validity of (parochial) moduses, laid in answers as covering the articles in respect of tithes of which actions are commenced; nor will fact of such parishioners having entered into bond to pay costs of all suits, etc., relating to such tithes, entitle them to relief. Taylor v. Cooke, 9 Price 207.

7. The Court will, on motion, grant an injunction to restrain actions for tithes, which had accrued since the decree for an account, and pending the taking of the report; on the ground of the plaintiff having elected to proceed in equity, and having got the relief he prayed for: and as the subject matter of the actions was the same as in the suit, he must continue in equity till the report of the Master is made. Thorpe v. Mattingley, 2 Y. & Coll. 421; 8 L. J., N. S., Exch. Eq., 9.

8. Canonical constitutions of ecclesiastical synods have no binding force or authority in this kingdom in questions of tithes between the clergy and laity in courts of law, without acquiescence. Evans v. George, 12 Price 76.

9. If a modus be pleaded in the Spiritual

Court, and they refuse the plea, a prohibition shall go. Hucks v. Phelps, Bunb. 8.

10. Where a bill is brought in the Exchequer Chamber to establish a modus, the Spiritual Court shall be enjoined. Blackett v. Finney, Bunb. 176. Salmon v. Rake, id. n.

11. After a suit in the Ecclesiastical Court for a subtraction of tithes, defendant there brought a bill in equity to establish a modus, and, on the bare suggestion of a modus, moved for an injunction. Injunction denied, as it would be a precedent for tripping up both the ecclesiastical and common law courts. So the King's Bench will not grant a prohibition, unless it be shown that a modus has been pleaded in the Ecclesiastical Court, and refused there; and equity grants an injunction on the same ground that a court of law grants a prohibition. Rotherham v. Fanshaw, 3 Atk. 628.

II. TITLE TO.

1. Of Crown, 6704.

2. Of Rector, 6704.

3. Of Vicar. Endowment of Vicarages, 6706.

4. Of Perpetual Curate, 6709.

5. Of Portioner, 6709.

6. Inclosure Acts. Effect, 6711.

1. Of Crown.

12. The King, in right of his crown, has a general right to the tithes of all lands situate in extra-parochial places. Att.-Gen. v. Eardley (Lord), 1 Dan. 271; 8 Price 39.

13. Tithes of rectory which belonged to a dissolved abbey, are due to the grantee of the Crown, and not to the incumbent as rector. Turner v. Smith, 7 Bro. P. C. 7.

2. Of Rector.

14. The defendant, in a suit for tithes, by his answer said that he heard and believed that the plaintiff was instituted and inducted into the rectory of A., and ever since continued and then was rector of A., and as such was entitled to the tithes of A.; "but for greater certainty as to the truth and legality of said several matters, defendant begs leave to refer to such proof of same as complainant may adduce." It was proved that the plaintiff had been in the receipt of tithes for several years, and had been paid tithes by the defendant:—Held, that the plaintiff was not bound to prove his title by the production of the certificate of his collation, presentation, or donation. Jones v. Waller, 1 Jones 300.

15. In a suit for tithes, the plaintiff, claiming as rector, need go no farther in showing his title than to prove institution and induction, and occupation by the defendant, and it makes no difference that the benefice consists of a union of parishes, although such union of parishes must be confirmed by the lord-lieutenant and Privy Council; such confirmation being merely in approval of the act of the bishop, his certificate is sufficient prima facie evidence of title, and the confirmation need not be proved. Armstrong v. Blake, 1 Moll. 178.

1. Representatives of a rector not permitted to enforce payment of tithes which the rector never demanded. Cart v. Hodgkin, 3 Swan. 161.

2. Payment of tithes by the defendant, a parishioner, is prima facie evidence against him of the rector's title. Chapman v. Beard, 3 Anstr. 942.

3. Immemorial non-payment of any tithes from a district cannot raise a presumption of an exemption by grant from the lay rector, but is strong evidence to explain the extent of the grant to the rectory, if at all doubtful. Petre (Lord) v. Blencoe, 3 Anstr. 945.

4. In a suit by rector for account of great tithes, evidence of vicar to prove payment of small tithes to himself is admissible. Barker v. Baker, Wightw. 397.

5. Mere non-payment of a particular species of tithes is no evidence against a lay rector of a conveyance of that tithe. Nagle v. Edwards, 3 Anstr. 702.

6. A party entitled to an impropriate rectory for life, and in possession, is entitled to receive the tithes, notwithstanding the legal estate is subject to a trust term to secure annuities, and to a mortgage. Glegg v. Legh, 1 Dow, N. S., 98; 1 Bli. N. S. 302.

7. If tithes claimed by vicar are supposed to be payable to rector, and he makes no claim, but stands by and allows the vicar to take them, he is bound as between him and vicar by the effect of such laches. Manby v. Lodge, 9 Price 231.

8. Bill to establish the rector's right to tithes, and for an account; the defence, though formerly stated as a prescription de non decimando in a quo estate, was, as to two-thirds possession by the lord of the manor, under an apparent title by various conveyances, etc., stated by the answer, from 37 Hen. 8, of the lands with tithes generally, or two-thirds specifically, with evidence of reputation and notice to the plaintiff, who had purchased the advowson and was lessee of the tithes, but the commencement of the title did not appear. The bill was dismissed with costs. Strutt v. Baker, 2 Ves. J. 625.

9. Plea of title to bill by impropriate rector, for account of tithes, overruled. Heathcote v. Aldridge, 1 Madd. 236.

10. Plea of non-residence in bar to a bill for tithes is good. Quilter v. Mussendine, Gilb. Exch. Rep. 228. S. P. Mills v. Etheridge, Bunb. 210.

11. In proving the title of a lay impropriator to tithes it is not necessary to produce the deed of severance; it is sufficient to give evidence that there was one. Fansham v. Rotherham, 1 Eden 297.

12. Bill by a lay impropriator for tithe hay; he derived his title under a grant from Jac. 1, but it appearing that no tithe had been paid since the grant, the bill was dismissed. Stone v. Rideout, Bunb. 262.

13. Tithe of peas and beans shall be paid to the impropriator, if the vicar doth not show an endowment or usage to the contrary. Gumley v. Burt, Bunb. 169.

14. Bill by a lay impropriator for tithe; he only proved his claim under laymen, and went no further back than thirty-four years. This is sufficient:—Held, also, that where a general exemption is insisted upon, a partial one cannot be admitted in evidence. Leigh v. Maudsley, Bunb. 296.

15. Person suing as lay impropriator for tithes of a parish in which there has been within living memory a parish church and burial-ground, in order to establish his title, must show that there has been an appropriation, and when it was made. Norbury v. Meade, 3 Bligh 211.

16. A grant of tithes of land will not be presumed from long non-payment, although lands may be shown to have been once in possession of a former lay impropriator, unless some evidence of the existence of a grant be offered, or the enjoyment of tithes be shown by at least something like pernancy, or a dealing with the tithes as owner. Nor will evidence of retainer only be sufficiently strengthened to support such presumption by its being shown that a former impropriator had declared the lands in question to be exempt from tithes, or by instances of exemption of tithes in leases by impropriate rector. Meade v. Norbury, 2 Price 338.

17. The mere non-payment of tithes, for however long a period, would not be evidence of a grant; yet a layman's adverse enjoyment or pernancy for a long series of years of the tithes of certain lands, or of a money payment in lieu of tithes occupied by a succession of deeds, by which the tithes of money payments in lieu of tithes have been conveyed from one person to another, corresponding with the enjoyment, affords evidence sufficient to justify a jury in presuming a legal grant of the tithes. Bacon v. Williams, 3 Russ. 525.

18. The mere non-payment of tithes is not a sufficient answer to a claim of tithes made by a lay impropriator. Garland v. Cartledge, 4 Cl. & F. 693; 11 Bli. N. S. 421.

Perception of tithe of corn is evidence of a title to tithe of hay. Id.

19. Though a layman may prescribe in quo estate to have tithes as appurtenant to a manor, upon the ground that before the time of memory the lord may have bargained with the parson to pay him a pension and receive the tithes of the manor, yet this prescription has never been extended to the lord and his assigns, i.e., the assigns of the tithes simply. Knight v. Waterford (Marquis), 4 Y. & Coll. 283; 10 L. J., N. S., Exch. Eq., 57; 5 Jur. 818.

20. A lay impropriator, who is in possession of a rectory, and in perception of the tithes, subject to charges by way of mortgage, and for raising portions (inasmuch as such mortgagees, etc., having permitted the possession, cannot claim the bygone rents), has a title sufficient to sustain a suit against occupiers for an account of tithes. Cherry v. Legh, 1 Bli. N. S. 306.

Upon a bill filed by such a lay impropriator against an occupier, who had taken a lease from the rector of the tithes of corn and grain, but expressly without prejudice to any question as to the tithes of hay, and who by his answer set up, but did not prove, a modus as to the small tithes:—Held, that proof of the perception of some tithes by a lay impropriator, without evidence of a grant from the Crown, gives a title to other tithes of the perception of which there is no actual proof. Id.

If the occupier shows a colour of title to the tithes not rendered, a court of equity will not interfere, but leave the plaintiff to his remedy at law. Ib.

1. At the trial of an issue to ascertain whether one of defendants, a layman, was entitled to tithes as a modus of certain lands, it was proved that a payment described as a tithe, or a rate tithe, issuing out of the lands in question, had been conveyed by defendant's title-deeds for the last 150 years, and that this payment had been received by defendant and his ancestors, and that no tithe had ever been paid to plaintiff, the rector, within living memory; and a verdict was found for defendant. Motion for new trial refused. Williams v. Bacon, 1 Sim. & S. 415; 1 L. J., Ch., 210.

2. Upon the trial of an action brought by a lay impropriator, under the stat. 5 & 6 Edw. 6, c. 13, for not setting out tithe, evidence having been given that the tithe in question had never been paid for the lands of the defendant, the judge was required to direct the jury that a grant or release of the tithe ought to be presumed. But the judge told the jury that they could not presume a grant from mere non-payment, and that it was no answer to a claim of tithe by a lay impropriator; whereupon a bill of exceptions was tendered and signed. A verdict upon this direction having been given for the plaintiff, and judgment thereon, upon a writ of error the judgment was affirmed in the Exchequer Chamber and in the House of Lords. Andrews v. Drever, 9 Bli. N. S. 471; 3 Cl. & F. 314.

From evidence of a grant from the Crown in 1579, and of modern enjoyment of tithes, the jury may presume intermediate conveyances of the rectory between the date of the original grant and a lease of tithes dated in 1686. Ib.

Perception of tithe of corn is evidence of a title to tithe of hay. Ib.

From evidence of right to tithes of all kinds, in a lay impropriator, up to a given time, and of perception of the corn tithe since that time by another party, a jury may, if it think fit, infer a grant of all the tithes by the first-mentioned impropriator to such latter party, who is therefore at liberty, in support of his right to the hay tithe, to give in evidence leases of that and all other tithes from the presumed grantor. Ib.

3. Presumption of grant founded on non-perception, may be raised against a lay-rector, if the pleadings are so framed as to admit it. Ringrose v. Todd, 12 Price 650.

4. Impropriator of the small tithes bound to maintain a priest where there is no vicarage endowed. And in such case, the king may assign to a curate such a proportion of the small tithes as he thinks fit. Otherwise, where there is an endowment, though never so small. Bonsey v. Lee, 1 Vern. 247.

3. Of Vicar. Endowment of Vicarages.

5. In a suit by the vicar for agistment-tithe, the endowment was lost; but he produced an old extent of the rights of the impropriators and tenners, in support of his claim to all small tithes, except wool and lambs; tithe of agistment had never been paid in the parish; the defendant was in the occupation of land in the parish, and also of the other tithes, which he claimed as rector. The Court decreed for the vicar without an issue. Garmons v. Barnard, 1 Anstr. 296. Decree reversed in House of Lords, and issue directed. See 3 Anstr. 926.

6. The right to compel an account for tithes being incidental to the legal title, and a rector having prima facie a title to all the tithes in turn, it seems that in questions between the rector and vicar, a court of equity ought not to make a decree in consequence of their favourable opinion of the vicar's title, and in derogation of that of the rector, until the title of the vicar has been established at law, unless such title is made out in the most clear and satisfactory manner. Barnard v. Garmons, 7 Bro. P. C. 105.

7. Where defendant admits that a vicar is entitled to all sorts of tithes, but insists on a special exemption, the vicar shall not be obliged to show any special title, either by endowment or prescription. Pye v. Rea, Bunb. 72.

8. If endowment of tithes be not followed by usage, the claimant as to such tithes as fail of usage shall not support his claim. Anon., Loft. 66.

9. A modus bad in law received by the vicar is proof of endowment of the tithe for which the modus was paid. Travis v. Oaton, 1 Anstr. 309.

10. A modus for agistment tithe paid to the rector is a bar to the demand of that tithe by the vicar, although by the endowment he has all the small tithes. Ellis v. Saul, 1 Anstr. 342.

11. A vicar has the same right to all tithes in his endowment as a rector has of common right. Fox v. Rutty, Bunb. 87. Sed quare, if a vicar has received for many years tithes, not mentioned in his endowment, whether subsequent augmentation or endowment shall not be presumed. Twiss v. Brazenose Coll., Oxon., Hardr. 328.

12. In a suit by a vicar for tithes the occupiers insist on certain exemptions, but the impropriator by his answer admits the vicar to be entitled to all tithes, except corn and grain. On this admission the Court decreed for the vicar, without hearing the evidence touching the exceptions; but this decree was reversed on an appeal, and the Court was ordered to hear the cause upon the pleadings and proofs. Berkeley v. Fox, 3 Bro. P. C. 618.

An answer of impropriator admitting title of vicar to all tithes except corn and grain, is not sufficient to establish that right against occupiers. Id. 613.

13. Bill by a vicar for tithe hay and small tithe. Defendant admitted, by his answer, that the vicar was entitled to all tithe, except corn and grain:—Held, sufficient to support the vicar's right to hay. Fox v. Bardwell, Bunb. 327.

14. Where there is an old endowment of a vicarage, but the modern usage varies from it, there is ground to presume that the variance has arisen from the act of persons competent to make it. The endowment is not, therefore, conclusive evidence in favour of vicar, but his right is properly triable at law. Carr v. Henton, 7 Bro. P. C. 100.

15. Usage of rendering one article of small tithe to the rector will not support his title against the vicar, if it appears to have originated from a mistaken notion that the article in question was a great tithe. Davis v. Benn, Jac. 95.

1. Bill by a vicar for tithe herbage and furze. Plaintiff proved that the vicar was entitled to all small tithes within the parish, and that the great tithes were constantly paid to the impropriator; and he gave one instance within thirty years of a compensation with the vicar for the agistment tithe of the close:—Held, this was sufficient proof of the vicar's title to the small tithes. Goole v. Jordan, Bunb. 144.

2. Where an endowment gave to the vicar the tithes of flax and hemp, mills, dairies, calves and colts, pigs and kids, geese, hens, eggs, bees, and gardens, and other small matters, belonging to the altarage of the church and chapel:—Held, there being no usage to the contrary, that these words would carry all small tithes. Gibson v. Peacock, Younge 184.

3. A vicar, unable to produce an endowment, has to support his claim by secondary evidence, and, if that secondary evidence furnishes a ground for inferring that the missing endowment contained a gift to the vicar of all small tithes, there are authorities for decreeing to him not only the tithes which have actually been received by him, but all other tithes of that class, either neglected or of modern introduction. The cases in which the inference has been made have been, generally, cases in which the vicar has received the whole small tithes actually rendered, and in which it did not appear that any other person had received any tithes of that class. Such a usage has been supposed to warrant the presumption that the endowment bestowed upon the vicar all small tithes, in general words. The intention of the Ecclesiastical Survey was to ascertain the value and amount of the living, the particular sources from whence that amount came being but a secondary object; and the expressions, therefore, upon the latter point are equivocal, and capable of receiving any construction, from contemporaneous and collateral documents and usage. And, therefore, where the Ecclesiastical Survey, after enumerating certain tithes, stated the vicarage to be worth a specified sum in decimis minutis et oblationibus, but collateral documents and usages showed that the vicar had not received all small tithes, but only some small species of small tithes, and the other small tithes had been received by the rector and his lessees; the Court held:—That the vicar was not entitled to all the small tithes, contrary to Cowliffe v. Taylor, 2 Price 329; Masters v. Fletcher, Younge 25.

4. A rector (claiming tithe of seed against a vicar, endowed of all small tithes except hay, on ground of presumption, that, as the former has had perception of the tithe of seeds, notwithstanding the terms of the endowment of the latter, who had also had immemorial perception of the tithe of corn of certain lands ultra his endowment, an ancient exchange must be presumed of vicarial for rectorial tithes) will be held to strict proof of his title to tithes sought, and of exchange or grant of the tithes. Nor is his perception of tithe in question available against perception by vicar, if it was even doubtful whether they were rectorial or vicarial tithes, nor can rector insist on issue. Dorman v. Curry, 4 Price 109.

5. Construction of endowment of vicarage, as to articles of modern introduction. Usage is the broad ground of presumption in favour of vicar's endowment; and if there be an endowment in proof, expressing of what tithes vicarage shall be endowed, and other tithes not so expressed are received by him, a subsequent endowment shall be presumed. Williams v. Price, 4 Price 156.

6. Endowment produced, showing the vicarage expressly endowed of hay, not sufficient to support a bill for that tithe without usage, against evidence of money payment to rector in lieu of hay; but grant from Crown subsequently to endowment, including all the tithes in general words, not sufficient to overturn vicar's right without proof of perception. A particular and minute enumeration of the several articles of endowment in that instrument does not preclude vicar's right to other small tithes not therein mentioned. Manby v. Curtis, 2 Price 284.

7. Vicar (claiming tithes), relying on a special endowment to support his case, is not precluded by the enumeration therein of specific titheable matters, the tithes of which were assigned to him, from demanding from occupiers tithes of other articles ejusdem generis, usually called small tithes, where the vicar can show that he has received some tithes not included in the enumeration in his endowment, and they are not shown to be payable to some other person. Manby v. Lodge, 9 Price 231.

8. A vicar, by showing a general right to the perception of tithes in kind, places himself in the situation of a rector, and throws it upon the occupier to prove the existence of moduses set up, and the lands to which they apply; and, semble, that evidence of a general payment throughout the parish of so much in the pound in lieu of tithes regulated according to the poor's rate or rack-rent, is sufficient evidence of a vicar's general right to tithes in kind. Wright v. Southwood, Dan. 137.

9. It is not sufficient for vicar, who rests his case on presumption of an endowment from evidence of perception, to prove that he had received the tithes claimed from the rest of the parish generally, and even from part of the district in which defendant's lands are situate, unless he carries it to the parts for which the exemption is claimed by the defence; and the vicar not doing so, proof on part of defendants that no tithe has ever been paid for their lands, will entitle them to an issue: nor will the Ecclesiastical Survey, stating vicar to be entitled to tithe of parish generally, supply the absence of proof of perception from the particular lands. Armstrong v. Hewitt, 4 Price 216.

10. Vicar claiming tithe of hay may establish his right by sufficient proof of perception during living memory, where none can be shown to have been enjoyed by rector, although his endowment actually negative his right to that tithe expressly, and state it to belong to rector, on presumption of a subsequent endowment, which the Court is bound to adopt. Parsons v. Bellamy, 4 Price 190.

Perception of tithes by means of a composition, which has always been understood by the parties to have been paid for tithe hay, is as strong evidence as if it had been paid in kind. And perception by vicar for a considerable period, where its inception cannot be shown, and is not met by perception by rector, or any other person, is a sufficient proof of usage to ground a presumption of perception long anterior, and of its having been founded on subsequent endowment; nor will Court grant an issue for the rector. A receipt for payment (by person sued by vicar for tithes) of plaintiff's bill of costs, is evidence of suit having resulted in favour of vicar. So also is an entry to that effect in a former vicar's books. Ib.

1. Evidence relating to tithes so old as to be unintelligible, issue was directed. Evidence of reputation of certain lands having been inclosed in pursuance of agreement, not admissible. Copy of lost terrier rejected as evidence. Leathes v. Newitt, 4 Price 355.

Non-perception of vicarial tithes by either vicar or rector (the latter admitting the vicar's right except as to certain titheable articles, there being no third claimant) in certain parts of parish, throughout which vicar receives some small tithes, is negative evidence in favour of vicar's right to all other than excepted articles. Id. 374.

2. In favour of a long-continued enjoyment of tithes, in conformity with successive recitals in old leases, the Court will presume performance of conditions to endow, etc., and adopt every other presumption necessary to give effect to such a title so supported. Woolley v. Birkensham, 12 Price 702.

3. A general title to tithes throughout a parish in a vicar gives him a prima facie case; and throws it on the defendants to prove their alleged exemptions from liability, on the trial of an issue. Pulley v. Hilton, 12 Price 625.

4. Vicar having made out a prima facie title to all tithes, except corn, grain, and hay, in a suit for agistment-tithe, a defence that it belonged to the lay impropiator is not proved by showing that agistment-tithe has never been paid to vicar, and that lay impropiator is entitled, under a grant from the Crown, of tithes of corn, grain, hay, and grass; and that tithe of agistment is covered by a modus payable to impropiator in lieu of tithe of hay and grass. Williamson v. Hutton, 9 Price 187.

5. Where a vicar succeeds in establishing a general right to all tithes, except those of corn and grain, throughout a parish, it requires very strong evidence to show that an impropiator of a particular district, who claims under a grant, limiting his title to the excepted articles, is entitled to the tithes of any other thing. Williamson v. Lonsdale (Lord), Dan. 171.

6. Where a rectory was granted by the Crown in 22 Edw. 6, with licence to appropriate, and a direction to appoint a vicar, and endow him with a dwelling-house, and on the appropriation to endow him also with a specified annual pension or portion for his food and sustentation; and it appeared that there had been a vicar through all subsequent time, and that such vicar had, for a great number of years back, received from the lessees of the rectory for the time being a larger sum than the pension specified by the grant; but no instrument of endowment, nor evidence of the existence of such, was produced, from the absence of which it was contended that the terms of the grant had not been complied with, and that the payment by the lessees was a voluntary payment by the impropiators, and determinable at their pleasure; the Court held:—That after so long a possession it might be presumed that an endowment had been made according to the terms of the grant, and that the vicarage had been subsequently augmented. Inman v. Whormby, 1 Y. & J. 546.

7. In a suit by the vicar, where the endowment is lost, and it appears from the evidence that the rector has not received any small tithes, but that the vicar has received all the small tithes which have been rendered, the Court infers, in favour of the vicar, that the endowment conferred upon him, by a general expression, all small tithes whatsoever, carrying not only such small tithes as were then actually received, but such as were at that time neglected, or came afterwards into existence by the improvements in husbandry; but where the vicar never has received, or been entitled to receive, the whole of the small tithes, then it cannot be so readily presumed that the endowment contained a gift to him in those general terms. Willis v. Farrer, 2 Y. & J. 217.

8. Upon a bill for tithes by a vicar against the occupiers of an estate, which had belonged to the knights hospitallers of St. John of Jerusalem, and, after the dissolution of the monasteries, being vested in King Henry VIII., had been granted to him by the Archbishop of York and his successors, under whom the defendants occupied. The defendants pleaded that the lands were held by the hospital exempt from tithes; that they were so held and granted by the king; and they proved that no tithes had, within memory, been paid for the lands. On the part of the vicar was produced an inquisitum of an inquisition, made under the authority of the Archbishop of York in 1314, by which it was found, after specifying certain tithes, "that the vicar ought to receive all other tithes to the said church belonging (except corn and hay) which the master and brethren of the hospital of St. John of Jerusalem received, as rectors, but that all the vicars had, ever since the time of the ordination of the vicarage, received all other tithes, and peaceably, and did so at that time, but they were bound to give their tithe of corn and hay:—Held, that this instrument afforded evidence that the small tithes had been de facto paid to the vicar at the time when it was made, and that the usage proved had grown up from some unexplained cause after the time of memory; and that it therefore overturned the defendant's prima facie case; and an account of tithes demanded by bill was decreed. Donnison v. Elsley, M'Clel. & Y. 1. Affirmed sub. nom. Elsley v. Donnison, 2 Bl. N. S. 94.

Evidence of reputation of exemption of district from tithes read de bene esse. S. C. M'Clel. & Y. 24.

9. The words "privy tithes" are generally synonymous with "small tithes;" therefore, although the ecclesiastical survey appeared to distinguish between privy tithes and small tithes, yet this was held to be explained by a subsequent terrier, which mentioned privy tithes, in contradistinction to tithes in general, as being payable to the vicar; and under these circumstances, supported by evidence of former vicars having regularly received payments called "privy tithes," although those payments had been in some instances made for houses only, and in other instances omitted altogether, and although some portion of the small tithes was proved by the defendants to have been conveyed away:—Held, that vicar was entitled to a decree for small tithes. Hall v. Godson, 2 Y. & Coll. 153. Affirmed sub. nom. Clee v. Hall, 7 Cl. & F. 744; West 148.

1. Vicar's bill for small and great tithes of an ancient park, which had been disparked and thrown into cultivation, dismissed; there being no evidence of perception, or of receipt of compositions for tithes by the vicars in respect of the lands within that district, although it was proved that compositions for tithes had been regularly paid to the vicars in respect of the other lands in the township in which the park was situate. Hall v. Farmer, 2 Y. & Coll. 145.

2. Held, upon circumstances stated in report contained in this case, tithes of hay and corn were due except as to certain farms covered by modus. Holdsworth v. Fairfax, 8 Bli. N. S. 882; 3 Cl. & F. 115.

3. By the common law, the rector has a right to all such tithes as the vicar is not proved to be entitled to, and the title of the vicar must rest either on direct proof of an endowment, or on an endowment to be inferred by prescription or usage. Att.-Gen. v. Ward, 11 Beav. 203; 17 L. J., N. S., Ch., 486; 12 Jur. 807.

4. Of Perpetual Curate.

4. A perpetual curate removable at pleasure cannot maintain a bill for tithes. Price v. Pratt, Bunb. 273.

5. There is nothing illegal in the supposition that, in ancient times, a chapel and chapelry existed, to the curate or chaplain of which the rector of the parish, with the consent of all proper parties, may have assigned a portion of the tithes by way of endowment, reserving to the rector the right of patronage of the curacy: and, therefore, where it appeared from ancient documents that a chapel had immemorially existed as a parochial chapel, with rights of baptism, marriage, and sepulture; and that, in early times, there were chaplains having an assignment of the tithes, as of old time, and there were appointments to the curacy from a very early period; and there was evidence of usage, on the part of the curate, to receive all small tithes of modern introduction:—Held, that the curate was entitled to all small tithes, except wool and lamb, which appeared from the documents to be clearly payable to the rector. Where parishioners, dwelling within a chapelry, contribute to the repairs of the parish church, it is strong but not conclusive evidence that the chapel is a chapel of ease to the inhabitants of the parish, and not a separate and distinct chapelry. It does not of necessity follow that there cannot be a parochial chapel because there has not been a union of parishes in ancient times, nor any vicarage or mother church with which the chapel can be supposed to have been anciently united. And the circumstance that there is no vicarage may be accounted for by the fact of the rectory having been conveyed to a monastery prior to the stats. 15 R. 2 and 4 Hen. 4. Dent v. Rob, 1 Y. & Coll. 1.

6. Proof of perception of certain tithes by the successive officiating curates of a church for a period of nearly two hundred years, without opposition on the part of the impropriate rectors who had, during the whole of that time, resided in the parish:—Held, sufficient evidence of title, as against the tithe payers, to support a bill for such tithes by the present minister as perpetual curate, although the defendants insisted that such perception had been permissive only, and the documentary evidence was irreconcilable with the supposition of an endowment. Oliver v. Latham, 1 Ph. 408; 13 L. J., N. S., Ch., 149; 8 Jur. 411. Affirming 1 Y. & Coll. C. 243; 6 Jur. 206.

To a bill by a perpetual curate for tithes, a modus was held to be well pleaded, as payable to the impropriate rector, or other owner for the time being of the tithes. Id.

7. James I., by letters patent, granted the rectorial churches and chapels of T. and K., and two parts of the tithes and altarages of the rectory or chapel of C., parcel of the possession of the abbey or monastery of T., in Ireland, the grantee repairing and maintaining the chancel of the churches, rectory, and chapels, at his cost, from time to time, for ever, and supporting annually and from time to time paying the stipend of the curates, and all other the rents and services issuing or payable out of or from the premises. In 1641, the church of K. was destroyed, and was not afterwards rebuilt. By an order of the Lord Deputy and Council, in 1678, the parish of K. was united with the parish of A. In 1855, the bishop of the diocese, by a deed, executed under 14 & 15 Vict., c. 72, erected the ancient parish of K., and a part of the parish of A., into a new district or parish, to be called by the name of the parish of K., and constituted the district or new parish of K. into a perpetual cure, and declared that the curate thereof, and his successor, should be perpetual curates, thenceforth and for ever, of the new parish, and appointed a salary for the perpetual curate; and in 1856 a new church was erected, which was situate in the old parish of K.:—Held, that the curate of the new parish of K. was not entitled to any stipend from the owner of the tithes of K. Att.-Gen. v. Ashe, 10 Ir. Ch. R. 309.

Held, also, that the owner of the tithes was not bound to repair the chancel of the new church of K. Id.

5. Of Portioner.

8. An incumbent of one parish is capable of tithes in another as a portioner, or in nature of a portioner, but it is incumbent on him, as claiming against a common right, to prove his title strictly, either by producing an actual grant, or evidence of usage, affording by presumption legal evidence of a grant. Evidence of usage to receive certain mixed tithes by an incumbent in another parish as a portioner, or in the nature of a portioner, is not of itself evidence of a right to receive the tithes of all descriptions which lands may produce under any circumstances. Carlile v. Blain, 1 Y. & J. 123.

1. To bill for tithes by lessees of spiritual impropiator against occupiers alone, mere non-payment, coupled with evidence of pernanacy by landlord of premises for a few years, and of loose reputation of title in him as a portioner, unsupported by any document, does not constitute a defence, and the case will not be sent to law. Wolley v. Platt, M'Clel. 468.

The title of a portioner must be either proved by showing grant under which he claims, or, if it has been lost, by that species of evidence which would enable the Court to presume that such a grant once existed. Id. 473.

Whenever a portion of tithes is claimed, actual pernanacy of these tithes from a long and remote time ought to be proved. Id. 476.

2. The Court will not make a decree in favour of rector claiming tithes in kind of lands not within his parish, for which he has for many years received a money payment by way of composition, which defendant does not pretend to insist on as a modus, nor will it grant a commission to ascertain boundaries of such lands without a previous inquiry, whether the plaintiff is entitled to any and what tithes on such lands by trial at law or on issue; nor can he take advantage from a former decree in favour of a predecessor of plaintiff, and a verdict obtained by him on an issue under it, especially if the intermediate rectors have taken no step of advantage from such suit. Sanders v. Longden, 4 Price 117.

3. When a defendant, in a suit for tithes by a rector, makes out a clear defence as portioner, claiming under the successive grantors of the Crown of the possessions of one of the dissolved monasteries, a right to some of the great tithes of the rectory, yet, if neither can ascertain and show specifically what were the tithes which belonged to the rector or to the monastery, the Court has no means of assisting either party in availing himself of his title. The Court will not decree an account in favour of the rector under such circumstances, where he has never had perception; but they will retain the bill to give him an opportunity of taking an issue, or proceeding by commission, ejectment, or by action on the statute. The onus probandi is not on the portioner, if there has been no perception on the part of the rector. Boulton v. Richards, 9 Price 671.

4. A title (admitted) in portioners to tithes of corn, grain, and hay, and some other, but not all the great tithes arising within the parish, in a case where nature and extent of tithe due did not otherwise appear than by an admission in those terms in the answer, the plaintiff giving no evidence of his claim, so that it could not be ascertained in what character, whether as rector or otherwise, he was entitled:—Held, not to give him a right also (as a necessary incident on the title to tithe of hay) to the tithe of clover, vetches, and other grasses, or food cut green, and applied for fodder for owner's cattle. Semble, that consumption of such titheable articles by owner's husbandry cattle, is not an available defence to a case to establish a right to the tithe of them. Lewis v. Young, 13 Price 394; M'Clel. 113. Reversed 2 Bli. N. S. 83.

5. A portion of tithes is distinct from tithe annexed to a rectory. Dornes v. Mooreman, Bunb. 189.

6. A usage to pay to the rector of the parish one-twentieth only, instead of the tenth, of the titheable matters of lands in an extensive manor, proved to be of very great antiquity, and supported by evidence, that the manor, though in modern times reputed to be within the parish and rectory, was anciently a parish of itself, was held to be a void usage, no evidence being adduced of its having had any legal origin:—Held, also, that it was impossible to treat the rector as a portioner, so as to deprive him of his common law right, and impose upon him the burden of proof required from a portioner; and that, it being clear that the manor (whatever might have been the case formerly) was at the present time within the parish and rectory, the legal union of the manor to the rectory would clothe the rector with the common law right to the tithes of the district so legally united to the parish. Kensington (Lord) v. Pugh, Younge 125.

7. Upon a bill for tithes by the lessee of a prebendary, against the occupier of a farm, he, by way of defence, suggested that his farm was part of the possession of a dissolved monastery; that the farm was situate in a district which had formerly been a distinct parish, and was still distinct in some respects; that all the lands in that district had paid from time immemorial only one-twentieth, instead of one-tenth of the produce; and that the other twentieth was a portion of tithe belonging to the farm, as part of the lands of the dissolved monastery:—Held, that assuming the district to have been a distinct parish, the presumption arising from evidence tending to prove one moiety to have been a portion of tithes is rebutted, the other moiety not being accounted for; and that the common law right of the parson to tithes applied as much to the whole of two united parishes, as to the tithes of one of the parishes before the supposed union. Wilson v. Kensington, 5 Bli. N. S. 475; 1 Cl. & F. 1.

8. To a bill in equity, by L. and his lessee, against an occupier of lands, stating a seizure of the corn, grain, hay, and grass, yearly arising within a certain district or portion of land in the parish of C., and praying an account of clover, vetches, and other grasses cut green, the defendant pleaded that he was not seized of any tithes within the parish of C., except such as belonged to the parsonage of Cannon (the district, etc.), which was an impropriate rectory, to which the tithes of clover, etc., cut and taken without being made into hay, did not belong, etc. Issue being taken upon this plea, the vicar of C. (not being a party to the suit) was examined as a witness, and deposed that there was no endowment, that he was entitled to the small tithes, and that he had always received a money composition for the small tithes, including the parsonage of Cannon. The bill was dismissed, and the decretal order affirmed on appeal. Lewis v. Bridgman, 8 Bli. N. S. 907; 2 Cl. & F. 738.

A portioner entitled to tithe hay is not necessarily entitled to tithe of clover, tares, vetches, and grass cut and carried away green, semble. S. C. 3 Sim. 316.

A portioner is not entitled to an issue as a matter of right. Ib.

1. The primâ facie meaning of the word "portio," in an old document relating to tithes, is not a part of all the tithes of a parish, but all the tithes of a part of a parish. Scarlet v. Luoton School, 10 Bli. N. S. 592; 4 Cl. & F. 1. Affirming 2 Y. & J. 330.

6. Inclosure Acts. Effect.

2. An inclosure Act directed part of a waste to be sold, tithe free, to defray the expenses of the inclosure. The rector was not otherwise a party; and the saving clause was, of all claims except of the lord and of the commoners; yet the rector's right to the tithes of the waste sold tithe-free, was gone. These inclosure bills are not to be considered as merely private Acts. Riddell v. White, 1 Anstr. 281.

3. Under an Act for inclosing lands in the townships of A., S., and W., directing the commissioners to allot to the rector of the parish of W., in lieu of the tithes of the townships of S. and W., so much of the lands to be inclosed in the township of S., and of the titheable part of the township of W., as should, quantity, quality, and situation considered, contain, or be equal in value to, two-fifteenth parts of the titheable places thereof, and to make the rector of W. and the vicar of B., in lieu of the tithes of a part of the lands in the township of S. and A., to which they were entitled, a like allotment, equal to two-fifteenths of such lands, and declaring that, after the enrolment of the award of the commissioners, all tithes arising within the lands inclosed should cease, an award by which the commissioners allotted to the rector of W., "in lieu of the tithes of S. and A.," lands more in quantity than two-fifteenths of the lands inclosed in S. and A., but less than two-fifteenths of the lands inclosed in S., A., and W., without any allotment in lieu of the tithes of W.; is a bar to the claims of tithes in W. The award would not be vitiated by error in the allotment. The Act having directed the commissioners, in estimating the proportion, to have regard to quality and situation; deficiency in quantity is not proof of error. Cooper v. Thorpe, 1 Swan. 92; 1 Wils. 55. See 4 Barn. & C. 36.

4. A modus of 10s. a year was payable to an impropriate rector, in lieu of all the tithes of a farm, to which farm were appurtenant rights of common in two several townships B. and C. Under an inclosure Act, to which the impropriator was a party, the common lands in the township of B. were inclosed, and allotments made to the impropriator, in lieu of all tithes, moduses, prescriptions, and customary payments. The Act directed, that when the allotments should be made to the impropriator, all tithes, moduses, prescriptions, and customary payments should cease, and be for ever extinguished. By a contemporaneous Act, to which the impropriator was not a party, the common lands in the township of C. were also inclosed:—Held, that the impropriator being only entitled to a modus in respect of the farm and the commons appurtenant, and the modus having been extinguished under the provisions of the first-mentioned Act, he was not entitled to tithes of the allotments made in respect of the farm under the other Act. Jackson v. Douglas, Younge 391.

5. Bill by the impropriate rector of A. for predial tithes of lands allotted under an inclosure Act. The defence was, that the land allotted was awarded in lieu of a right of common in A., appurtenant to a tenement in the parish of B., and that the tenement in B. was protected from all tithes by a farm modus of 20s., payable to the rector of B., and therefore that the modus for the tenement protected the allotment. The Court, however, decreed an account. By the common law, and also by general presumption, all tithes are due to the incumbent of the parish where they arise; and, therefore, tithes arising upon a common are due to the incumbent of the parish in which the common is situate, not to the incumbent of the parish in which the tenement to which the common is appurtenant is situate, if that same tenement be in a different parish. Custom may, however, vary this. When the tenement is in one parish and the common in another, the incumbent of the farm is not of right, and by the common law, independently of custom or prescription, entitled to the tithes arising upon the common; and if the common be inclosed, the allotment will become, by the general rule, for the purpose of tithes, parcel of the parish in which it is actually situate. Carlisle v. Blain, 1 Y. & J. 123.

6. Commissioners, under an inclosure Act, were to allot by their award to the rector of the parish so much of the lands so inclosed in the township of S., and of the titheable parts of the township of W., as should, quantity, quality, and situation considered, contain, or be equal in value to, two-fifteenth parts of the titheable places thereof, in lieu of tithes arising within the same lands. After enrolment of the award of the commissioners, all tithes arising within the lands inclosed were to cease; but there was a saving to all persons (other than the persons to whom any compensation by virtue of the Act in respect of the interest for which such compensation should be made), of all such interest as they had in respect of the said lands. Before the passing of the Act, an award, by which the commissioners allotted to the rector, in lieu of the tithes of S. and A., lands more in quantity than two-fifteenths of the lands inclosed in S. and A., but less than two-fifteenths of the lands inclosed in S., A., and W., without any allotment expressed to be in lieu of the tithes of W., is not a bar to the rector's claim of the tithes in W. Cooper v. Thorpe, 2 Russ. 78.

7. The right to the tithes of an allotment generally follows the right to the old tenement in respect of which the allotment is made. Blackford v. Kirkpatrick, 6 Beav. 232; 12 L. J., N. S., Ch., 108.

III. GRANTS. CONSTRUCTION OF.

1. A grant by Edw. 6 of certain tithes originally appropriated to a dissolved priory by the description of omnes illas decimas garbarum granorum bladorum feni lanae et agnellorum ac alias decimas nostras quascunque, etc. :—Held, to pass the rectory and all tithes. Holdsworth v. Fairfax, 3 Cl. & F. 115; 8 Bli. N. S. 882.

2. "Grant of herbage," held not to mean agistment. Scott v. Lamson, 7 Price 267.

3. The words "tithes" and "hereditaments," occurring amongst words of general description in a grant, after a particular description of the thing intended to be passed, will not pass "tithes in gross." Att.-Gen. v. Eardley (Lord), Dan. 271; 8 Price, 39.

4. The words "white tithes" have no general meaning, but are applicable to distinct things in distinct parishes. The meaning, therefore, of those words, as applicable to a particular parish, is to be ascertained only from the usage in that parish. Becher v. Clave, 1 Y. & Coll. 448.

5. Bill for tithe wood in the forest of Dean, by virtue of a grant of all tithes, issuing de assartis, within the forest, de novo assartatis et assartandis. Upon proof, it appeared that the lands were always woodlands and never grubbed up, and that no tithe was ever paid. The Court construed the meaning of assart to be only such lands as have been grubbed up, and made fit for tillage, and dismissed the bill. Evans v. Newell, Bunb. 128; Bond v. Barrow, id. 312.

6. A rectory, extending over the manor of A., and comprising among others the chapelry of Lucton, which included the township of Lucton, came into the hands of the Crown, James I., by letters-patent, granted to the trustees of the Lucton School, together with other tithes within the manor of A., all the tithes yearly growing or renewing in Lucton. And by other parts of the same grant, the tithes of hay are specially granted as to particular lands, not the lands in question. Under this grant, tithes of corn and grain, and every other species of tithe, except that of hay and agistment, had been always levied without dispute, but payment of the latter had, it appeared, been habitually withheld, though not without litigation. Upon a suit being instituted for the recovery of these tithes :—Held, that the grant, whether or not it carried the rectory, was a grant of all the tithes in Lucton, and that the grantees were entitled to the benefit of whatever legal presumption would have been available for the rector, and that their claim must be rebutted by the same evidence which would have been required against his. Scarlet v. Lucton School, 10 Bli. N. S. 592; 4 Cl. & F. 1. Affirming 2 Y. & J. 330.

7. The word "tithes" is continually found in ancient instruments used to denote tithes, quæ tithes, or a commutation for them, and may mean either one or the other, as the subsequent usage explains. Norton v. Hammond, 1 Y. & J. 94.

IV. LEASES.

8. Upon lease of tithes by lay impropiator, if the tithes of the particular lands are excepted, it might admit of construction that lessor is entitled to that which he excepts; but if former owner of tithes upon a lease has made a parol declaration that he is not entitled to the tithes of those lands, that declaration is in itself important evidence, and gives a construction to the exception in the lease. Norbury v. Meade, 3 Bligh 212.

9. The lessee of a rector, in whose lease there is an exception of various small tithes nominatim, and of all the tithes belonging to vicar, is not entitled to tithe of potatoes, though he has always received some of the small tithes in kind not mentioned in the lease speciatim, either as demised or excepted, and particularly for geese and pigs. Cuntiffe v. Taylor, 2 Price 329. But see Masters v. Fletcher, Younge 25.

10. A lessee of rectory for three lives, who had made a derivative lease, brings a bill for tithe in kind, and to establish a custom of setting out corn in shocks :—Held, the bill is properly brought, though the tithes are out in lease to prevent collusion between lessee and occupiers. York (Archbishop) v. Stapleton, 2 Atk. 136.

11. A person with notice that the small tithes of a certain parish are payable to the vicar obtains an assignment of a lease of the great and small tithes, the grantors of such lease being the trustees of a charity who are entitled to the great tithes only, but who have always in form granted leases of both kinds of tithe. The assignee being unable to recover the small tithes at law, procures at law an apportionment of the rent. The Court, under such circumstances, will relieve against the apportionment. Att.-Gen. v. Dixon, 1 Y. & Coll. C. C. 614; 11 L. J., N. S., Ch., 396.

12. Bill by the purchaser, at an auction, of tithes for three years, against an occupier, for an account and satisfaction. It was objected that, tithes lying in grant, the plaintiff, as a lessee by parol, could not maintain the suit, but the tithe owners having been originally made defendants to the suit, and on their disclaimer dismissed, the Court supported the plaintiffs' title, and decreed an account. Williams v. Jones, Younge 252.

13. Bill praying account of tithes, and merely stating that inappropriate rector demised tithes to plaintiff, demurred to for want of title; but on argument plaintiff was allowed to amend by making inappropriate rector a party, on payment of 5*l.* costs. Jackson v. Benson, McClel. 62; 13 Price 131.

14. Lessee of tithes filing bill for satisfaction of them, need not set forth his lessor's title. Crathorne v. Taylor, 2 Bro. P. C. 512.

15. Plea of 13 Eliz., c. 20, for non-residence, allowed to bill by lessee of tithes. Bokenham v. Bentfield, 1 Com. 392.

16. Usage as to tithes was admitted, to explain a lease of a farm with all tithes, against the very word "tithe," the Court considering it as a lease. Quaintrell v. Wright, Bunb. 274.

17. A lease of tithes or other matter which lies in grant, for all the time the lessor should be vicar, is good, and conveys a freehold. Brewer v. Hill, 2 Anstr. 41.

18. Disclaimer of title to tithes by rector binds his lessees. Leathes v. Newitt, 4 Price 374.

V. IN LONDON.

1. The right of exemption from tithes, and the mode of computing them in the deanery of St. Paul's, London. St. Paul's (Warden) v. Lincoln (Bishop), 4 Price 65.

2. A certain customary payment in London, in lieu of tithes, may be good so as to exempt an individual house, if usually made a sufficient time to acquire the character of customary in the Ecclesiastical Court, though within time of memory, and not general through the place or parish. St. Paul's (Warden) v. Kettle, 2 Ves. & B. 1.

Mere non-payment of tithes under stat. 37 Hen. 8, c. 12, is no answer to a claim for them; as it would be no answer to a claim for tithes at common law. Ib.

Bill had been filed under stat. 37 Hen. 8, c. 12, to recover 2s. 9d. in the pound for tithes, and an issue was refused, under these circumstances: first, misleading; the defendants not stating customary payments by their answer, but adopting ore tenus payments disclosed by the answer to their cross bill, instead of moving for leave to file a supplemental answer: secondly, the improbability of establishing those payments, after two unsuccessful trials at bar in another cause. Ib.

3. Decree, under the stat. 37 Hen. 8, for payment of tithes in London as to warehouses erected by the East India Company upon the site of old buildings, and occupied by them, at 2s. 9d. in the pound upon the value, to be let, without an issue, no specific customary payment in lieu of tithes being alleged. Antrobus v. East India Co., 13 Ves. 9.

4. Notwithstanding the statute and decree 37 Hen. 8, c. 12, the Court of Chancery has jurisdiction upon the subject of tithes in London. An account was decreed according to the improved rent. Another defendant, setting forth his lease at a low rent and a fine, and alleging by answer that he had never heard of any greater rent being paid, there being no evidence against it, was held liable only according to that rent. St. Paul's (Warden) v. Crickett, 2 Ves. J. 563.

5. A parson sues for 2s. 9d. per pound for tithes of houses in London, under the stat. 37 Hen. 8. But an issue was directed to try whether less than that sum had ever been paid, although there was no proof of any regular modus. Bonnet v. Treppass, 4 Bro. P. C. 650. Affirming Bunb. 106; Gilb. Eq. Rep. 191.

The books of former rectors may be produced in evidence, upon an issue to try whether there had been any variation as to sums paid for tithe in London. Ib.

6. By the stat. 37 Hen. 8, c. 12, all houses in London shall pay tithe according to their ordinances, except the houses of noblemen; therefore, a surmise that a house in London was a priory, and discharged from tithe by the pope's bull, and by the stat. 31 Hen. 8, which gave the possessions to the Crown, will not prevent a consultation being awarded on a prohibition prayed against a suit in the Spiritual Court. Green v. Pipe, Moore 912.

7. A bill lies in the Exchequer for non-payment of tithes in London, according to the decree in 37 Hen. 8. Langham v. Baker, Hardr. 116.

8. Houses in St. Saviour's, Southwark, shall pay tithe, it being the only provision made for the minister. Pocock v. Twimash, Bunb. 102.

9. The term "rent," used in a decree, under statute 37 Hen. 8, c. 12, relating to tithes in London, means rent actually and bonâ fide received, without fraud or covin, and not the annual value of the premises let. Fines, to whatever amount, paid on the renewal of leases of dwelling houses, are not to be considered as increase of rent, or to be taken into calculation in estimating the amount of tithes due, provided the rent reserved is equal to that at which the houses have been at any time before let. St. Paul's (Minor Canons) v. Crickett, 5 Price 14.

10. The clergy of the city of London were, by a decree made under the authority of an Act of Parliament, 37 Hen. 8, c. 12, declared entitled to 2s. 9d. in the pound of the rent by the year of all houses, shops, etc., as and for tithe. The Blackwall Railway Company's Act empowered that company to remove certain houses, and it declared, that for indemnifying the rectors, etc., against such loss as might accrue to them from the railway taking down houses, etc., and until new houses should be erected on the ground which should be cleared, of such an annual rent or value that the tithes actually payable therefor should be fully equal to the tithes or yearly sums of money payable for the houses quitted by the occupiers, the company should pay tithes for the houses quitted by the occupiers "according to the last assessment thereof to the 25th of March last," and such sum or sums should diminish in proportion to the tithes actually payable for new houses erected and occupied on ground which should be so cleared. In respect of all the houses taken by the company, with the exception of two, annual payments had been taken in lieu of tithes, at a rate, in each instance, below 2s. 9d. in the pound on the annual value agreed between the rector and the occupiers. The rector claimed to be paid 2s. 9d. in the pound upon the annual value of all the premises taken by the company:—Held, reversing the decision of the Court below, that where there had been an agreed rent, but the rector had received less than 2s. 9d. in the pound, he was not now entitled to receive 2s. 9d. in the pound; that the object of the Act was only to give indemnity to the rector; and that the term "assessment" had reference to the arrangement throughout the parish, whereby the amount of tithes to be paid to the 25th of March 1839 had been understood, agreed, and settled. London & Blackwall Railway Co. v. Letts, 3 H. L. Ca. 470; 15 Jur. 996. S. C. nom. Letts v. London & Blackwall Railway Co., 6 Rail. Ca. 687. Reversing 5 Hare 605; 4 Rail. Ca. 530; 11 Jur. 669. And see Letts v. London Corn Exchange Co., 1 De G. M. & G. 398; 21 L. J., Ch., 684.

Held, also, reversing the decision of the Court below, that the amount of tithe payable by the company was to be credited with the tithes actually payable to the rector in respect of new houses, and not merely with the sums actually received by the rector in respect of such new houses. Ib.

Held, affirming the decision of the Court below, that the word "assessment" did not mean the assessment to the poor-rate. Ib.

1. Form of reference to the Master to ascertain the value of the London Corn Exchange in regard to its liability to tithe under the Act 37 Hen. 8. c. 12. Letts v. London Corn Exchange, 1 De G. M. & G. 398; 21 L. J., Ch., 684.

2. By the decree made under the London Tithe Act (37 Hen. 8. c. 12), it is provided that the inhabitants of London shall pay 2s. 9d. in the pound for tithe upon the rent reserved; or if a less rent is reserved by reason of any fine, or if the owners are also occupiers, then the tithe is to be paid at the same rate upon the rent at which the premises were last letten for without fraud or covin:—Held, that the decree assumes that every house has a rent attached to it or representing it, and except in case of invariable rents which have remained, or are assumed to have remained, unchanged since the passing of the Act, the word rent, as there used, means rack-rent, and where the house is not let, it means the full value to let. Vivian v. Cochrane, 4 De G. M. & G. 818; 1 Jur., N. S., 809; 25 L. J., Ch., 553; 3 W. R. 254.

The defendant was the lessee of premises in London, which were let for a term of sixty years at a reserved rent (including insurance) of 102l. 10s., in consideration of the lessee laying out 2,000l. in building thereon; the improved annual value of the property after the building was completed was 250l.:—Held, that under the statute, the defendant must be considered as owner of the house during the term, and that the tithe must be paid at 2s. 9d. in the pound on the full annual value of 250l. S. C. 4 Hare 167; 14 L. J., N. S., Ch., 89; 9 Jur. 8.

The second resolution in Skidmore v. Bell (2nd Inst., 660), to the effect that such houses as were never letten to farm, but inhabited by the owner, are a casus omissus, and shall pay no tithes by force of the decree, is not now law. Id.

VI. WHETHER GREAT OR SMALL.

3. Peas and beans planted in rows are small tithes. Nicholas v. Elliott, Bunb. 19.

4. Clover seed is a small tithe, and, as such, due to vicar. Wallis v. Pain, 2 Com. 633; Bunb. 344.

5. The tithe of tare seed held to be a small tithe. Dams v. Benn, Jac. 95.

6. Agistment is a predial tithe. Scarr v. Trinity College, 3 Anstr. 760.

7. The tithe of a horse malt-mill is a personal tithe, and the tenth part of the clear profits arising from corn ground in such mill, over and above all incidental charges, is to be paid as the tithes thereof, and the corn ground therein is to be tithed by the tenth toll-dish. Chamberlaine v. Newte, 7 Bro. P. C. 3.

8. Tithes are by law denominated and adjudged great and small, according to the nature of the thing, and not from the mode of cultivation; therefore, tithes of beans and peas, whether sown in fields or gardens, are great tithes, and do not fall under the denomination of tithes of gardens. Sims v. Bennet, 7 Bro. P. C. 29; Eden 382.

9. Potatoes being in their nature a small tithe, the sowing them in small quantities makes no alteration. Smith v. Wyatt, 2 Atk. 364; 9 Modd. 336.

The distinction between great and small tithes might arise at first from the former producing greater, and the latter smaller quantities. Id.

Though Lord Chancellor J. Holt, in Wharton v. Lisle (3 Lev. 365), held tithes should be determined, whether great or small, from their quantity, the judgment was contrary. Id.

If potatoes in gardens should be called small tithes, and great in fields, it must vary every year in every parish. Id.

Where arable is turned into pasture, it is an agistment tithe, and becomes a small one from a great one. Id.

10. To a vicar's bill for an account of all small tithes the defendants answered that the right to all tithes, as well small as great, became vested in the rector, and in the owners of the lands by grants and conveyances, and that they and their tenants held the lands, with the tithes, or free from all tithes whatsoever; but that some occupiers paid annually to the vicar, in respect of their house, certain small sums in the name of "privy tithes," which the defendants alleged were personal tithes, and not compositions for small tithes. The vicar, unable to produce an endowment, gave secondary evidence showing that the vicarage was endowed generally with small tithes. There was no evidence that any small tithes were ever paid to or claimed by the rector, or the persons who became entitled to the rectory:—Held, first, that the defendants, after failing to show title to the small tithes in themselves or the owners of the lands, could not be heard to say that the small payments in the name of privy tithes were compositions; secondly, that, in the district in which those lands are situated, privy tithes are not personal tithes, but are the same as small tithes; and thirdly, that where there is evidence that the vicarage was endowed with small tithes, the vicar's right to them is established against all occupiers of lands within the parish as to which no particular discharge is proved, although no small tithes have ever been paid by them. Clee v. Hall, West 148; 7 Cl. & F. 744. Affirming S. C. nom. Hall v. Godson, 2 Y. & Coll. 153.

VII. OBLATIONS AND EASTER OFFERINGS.

11. Oblations, obventions, and offerings are one and the same thing; though obvention is the largest word, and is in the nature of tithe. Offerings are reckoned among personal tithes, and such as arise from the labour and industry of the parishioner are payable by custom to the parson or vicar, either occasionally at sacraments, marriages, burials, churching of women, etc., or at constant stated periods, as at Easter, etc. By stat. 2 & 3 Edw. 6, c. 13, they are to be paid to the parson of the parish where the party dwells. 2 Inst. 659, 661. Grant's case, 11 Co. 16; Lawrence v. Jones, Bunb. 173; Egerton v. Still, 1 Bunb. 198; Cartheron v. Edwards, Amb. 72.

Easter offerings are due of common right, though demanded by custom, for they are a composition for common tithes. Id.

VIII. OF WHAT PAYABLE.

1. Lamb's wool shall pay tithe, though the lambs had paid tithes two months before; and tithe shall be paid for agistment of yearlings, because a new increase. Baker v. Sweet, Bunb. 90.

2. Tithe milk should pay every tenth meal where there is no custom. Bate v. Sprackling, Bunb. 20.

Hop-poles shall not pay tithe, nor hops till they are picked, and then every tenth measure before they are dried. Id.

3. All the garden ground in England shall pay tithe; and turnips, though pulled and sowed ever so often on the same land, shall pay tithe. So shall aftermath pay tithe, but not after-pasture, unless by custom, ut semble, sed quere. Benson v. Watkins, Bunb. 10.

4. Saddle-horses shall pay no tithe, neither shall cattle for the plough or pale, nor cattle killed for the use of a man's own family. Underwood v. Gibbon, Bunb. 3; Fisher v. Loman, id. n.

5. If a man depastures unprofitable cattle, he shall pay tithe in proportion to the number of the cattle and the value of the land, generally at the rate of 2s. in the pound; so, if they are travelling cattle which come and go. Smith v. Johnson, Bunb. 1.

So are cattle fed on a meadow ground after it is mowed, unless a custom be to the contrary. Id.

6. Agistment-tithe is not within the 2 & 3 Edw. 6, c. 13, s. 3. Ellis v. Saul, 1 Anstr. 342.

Agistment-tithe is the tithe of the herbage eaten by cattle not titheable; it is not tithe of the improvement of the cattle. When grass has been cut for hay, no tithe is due for the after-pasture. Id.

7. Agistment-tithe is not claimable for after-pasture, where lands have been mown in the same year, and paid tithe. Batchellor v. Smallcombe, 3 Madd. 12.

8. As to payment for keep of tithe animals, see Jenkinson v. Royston, 5 Price 495.

9. Though beasts of the plough are exempt from tithe, because, by the labour of such cattle, tithes of another kind arise, yet, if oxen are turned to grass, and fattened for sale, they shall from such time pay tithe for the herbage they eat, being in no wise beneficial to the parson in any other tithe. Edmond v. Sandys, Show. P. C. 192.

10. Agistment is a predial tithe. Carr v. Trinity College, 3 Anstr. 760.

11. Horses kept on one farm for its cultivation, and used occasionally on another farm, in a different parish, shall not pay agistment tithe; otherwise, if habitually so used. Filerwood v. Button, 2 Anstr. 498.

12. Sheep kept principally for the sake of folding, if sold out of the parish before shearing time, shall pay agistment-tithe. Hoves v. Carter, 2 Anstr. 500.

13. By 2 & 3 Edw. 6, c. 13, s. 5, all barren heath or waste land shall pay tithe after seven years' improvement and conversion into arable or meadow; and the suggestion for a prohibition against the Spiritual Court must be proved within six months after the prohibition granted, for it is an affirmative suggestion, which six months shall be computed by the calendar, and begin to run from the teste of the prohibition. Thomas v. Gifford, 2 Show. P. C. 92; Straker v. Baynes, id. 308.

14. Tithes for barren cattle are due of common right, according to the value of the land, but they may be paid for by custom or prescription. Holbeech v. Whadcocks, Hardr. 184.

Tithes payable by custom shall be paid, though the lands be not rented. Id.

15. Tithes are payable for herbage eaten by travellers' horses. Guilbert v. Eversly, Hardr. 35.

16. A modus of 1d. for every sheep, and a ½d. for every lamb, brought into the parish after Candlemas, and sold out before shearing time, it is a wool modus, not an agistment modus. Garnons v. Barnard, 1 Anstr. 320.

17. If a farm has a right of common appendant in another parish, tithe of wool paid for the farm discharges from agistment-tithe of the sheep in both parishes. Riddell v. White, 1 Anstr. 290.

18. Where vicar is by endowment entitled to tithes of peas and beans, set and planted in rows in gardenlike manner, the use of a plough instead of a spade makes no difference. Austen v. Nicholas, 7 Bro. P. C. 9.

19. Wood ground grubbed up pays tithe, and is not exempt for seven years as barren land, within the stat. Edw. 6. Beardmore v. Gilbert, Bunb. 169.

20. Timber trees above twenty years' growth are titheable, if cut and corded for fuel, aliter non. Greenaway v. Kent, Bunb. 98. And it is not the growth of the trees alone that will privilege them, but the use that is made of them. Buckle v. Vanaore, Acton v. Smith, Franklin v. Jones, Comper v. Layfield, Bunb. 99. n.

21. Whether tithe wood was due of common right, the Court will not determine. Jordon v. Colley, Bunb. 61.

22. Lops and tops of ancient pollard oaks and ashes are exempt from tithes; the use to which wood is applied, does not determine the right to tithes. Walton v. Tryon, Ambl. 130. Dick. 244.

All coppice woods are liable to tithes. Id. 131.

The circumstance of loppings being tenant right profits, and therefore not part of the inheritance, affords no rule as to the liability to tithes. Id.

The subsequent use of a thing cannot add a titheable quality to it, which it had not before. Id. 132.

Wood cut, to be burnt in the house, is not exempt of common right, but by special custom. Id.

All timber trees of twenty years' growth, and their lops and tops, are freed from tithes, to whatever use they are put, except in cases of fraud; and this is by the Statute of Silva Cædua, 45 Edw. 3. Id.

The Statute of Silva Cædua is declarative of the common law. Id.

Wornbeam not timber. Id. 133.

Germins growing from stools of old timber trees pay tithes. Id.

If timber-trees be cut before twenty years, the boughs and branches shall be always titheable. Id.

Pollards that have once gained their privilege shall not lose it. Id. 134.

It is a question of fact, whether beech of twenty years' growth is timber. Id. 135.

1. By Edw. 6, c. 13, land in its own nature not fit for tillage, pays no tithe for seven years after improvement; but if not fit for tillage, by reason of woods, etc., pays tithe presently after improvement. Stockwell v. Terry, 1 Ves. 115.

2. Turnips (sown after the corn is cleared) fed with sheep and barren cattle, shall pay tithes. Swinfen v. Digby, Bunb. 314.

3. Vetches and clover are a great tithe, but, when cut green for cattle used in husbandry, tithes are not due. Hayes v. Domse, Bunb. 279. But in Dorman v. Currey, Dan. 206, Richards, C. B., said this was a case which ought not to have been introduced into a book of reports. In Hodgson v. Smith, id. 279. n., it was held that tares, whether green or ripe, are a great tithe, and belong to the rector.

4. Tithe herbage shall not be paid for sheep shorn out of the parish, because they are animalia fructuosa. Poor v. Seymour, Bunb. 313.

5. Tithes are payable for the after-depasturing of sheep on turnips, etc. Coleman v. Barker, Gilb. Exch. Rep. 231.

6. Head-lands only large enough to turn the plough upon, shall not pay tithes; neither shall an ancient mill. Chapman v. Barlow, Bunb. 184.

Black cherries growing wild in hedges, and used as fences, shall pay tithe. Id.

7. Tithe of lambs is not divisible, as wool is. Boys v. Ellis, Bunb. 139.

8. Wood cut from hedges is titheable, although used on the farm. White v. Smith, Tambl. 306.

9. Wood used for hop poles upon the farm, for hurdles, for hurdling sheep, for repairing hedges, for land draining on the farm, and for fuel in the husbandry house, is not exempt from tithes by the common law, but may be so by custom. Willis v. Stone, 1 Y. & J. 262.

10. As to tithe for oak-wood springing from stumps or germins of eighty years' old trees, formerly felled. Evans v. Rowe, McClel. & Y. 577.

11. In construing the stat. of 45 Edw. 3, c. 3, with reference to the law on questions of the tithe of wood, the phrase gras-bois or great wood:—Held, to mean wood of the original trees which either are timber by common law, or are accounted timber by local custom when of twenty years' growth or upwards. Evans v. George, 12 Price 76.

Of such timber trees, those only which are termed maiden trees or trees sprung from seed or mast, and have obtained twenty years' growth, are exempt from tithe of wood as timber. Id.

Germins, or trees of whatever age or size they may be, growing from old stools, stumps of roots of timber, trees which have been felled:—Held, not to be so exempt by reason of the privilege of timber. Id.

12. Wood springing from the roots or stools of trees is titheable, and neither its own age, nor the age of the trees from the roots or stools of which it sprung, will exempt it. Chichester v. Seldon, T. & R. 245.

13. Trees of the growth of twenty years or upwards, sprung from the roots or stools of old trees formerly cut down, are within the exemption of the 45 Edw. 3, c. 3, and are not titheable. Louzon v. Pryse, 4 Myl. & C. 600; 10 L. J., N. S., Ch., 103; 5 Jur. 310.

14. Stubble mowed, and used as fodder or manure, is not titheable. Tennant v. Stebbing, 3 Anstr. 640.

15. Grass cut, and given green to the beasts of the plough, shall not pay tithe. Collyer v. Howes, 2 Anstr. 481.

16. Tithes of peas and beans have been held to be comprised in the description of "tithes of corn." Att.-Gen. v. Ward, 11 Beav. 203; 17 L. J., N. S., Ch., 485; 12 Jur. 807.

17. Consumption of titheable articles in the family of the land occupier, is not a ground of exemption. Quare, as to green peas. Williamson v. Lonsdale (Lord), 5 Price 25.

18. Lucerne, tares, clover, and all other artificial grasses cut green, and given severed to husbandry horses, etc., employed on the farm on which they are grown, are not, therefore, exempt, by general custom, from the render of tithes, unless the farmer have no other fodder or sustenance of any sort on the farm on which such horses, etc., may be subsisted, without necessarily having recourse to such green food. Dorman v. Sears, 6 Price 338.

19. Tares and other artificial grasses, cut green, and given to husbandry horses used in the cultivation of the farm, are not liable to the payment of tithes, where there is not sufficient sustenance of any other description for the horses on the farm. And whether there was or was not sufficient sustenance, is a question of fact, and the subject of inquiry before the Master. The tithe of tares, clover, and other artificial grasses cut green, and consumed by husbandry horses, is in the nature of an agistment-tithe; and is not agistment-tithe, following all the circumstances of agistment-tithe. Where a farm was situate in two parishes, and tares and other artificial grasses were cut green in one parish, and carried to the farm buildings, which were situate in the other parish, and there given to husbandry horses used in the cultivation of the whole farm; it was referred to the Master to inquire whether the proportion of the produce of the lands consumed by the horses was in proportion to the labour of the horses employed in each parish. Austin v. Allen, Younge 585.

20. Tithes of fish are only payable by custom, and cannot be claimed as mere personal tithe deductis expensis. Kelynaock v. Gravas, 2 Bro. P. C. 446.

21. Turkeys titheable; but if tithes are paid of eggs, then none to be paid for the chickens. Carleton v. Brightwell, 2 P. W. 462.

Mills are titheable, but they are only to pay a personal tithe of the clear gains, after all manner of charges deducted. Id.

Acorns are small tithes, if gathered and sold; but if they drop from the trees in the season, and the owner's cattle eat them, they shall pay no tithe. Id. And see Hetl. 27.

22. On a bill by a vicar for the tithe of mills, the defendant set forth that the mill was an ancient mill, and was built before living memory, and that tithes had never been paid, but that they had always been considered as exempt from tithes. The exemption was considered as sufficiently laid. Townley v. Colegate, 2 Sim. 297; 6 L. J., Ch., 159; Brownne v. Woolley, 2 Sim. 305.

Tithe is not payable in respect of corn, belonging to the parties, ground at their own mills, and afterwards sold to the public. Id.

1. Account of tithes decreed of ancient mills, altered by addition of two new mill stones. Manby v. Taylor, 3 Ves. & B. 71; 9 Price 249.

2. A water-mill is titheable as a predial and local tithe in respect of the person to whom it is due, but as a personal tithe in the mode of accounting. Hall v. Machet, 3 Anstr. 915.

3. Where a miller grinds his own corn at his mill, and afterwards sells the flour, he is not liable to the payment of tithes of his mill in respect of that corn. Austin v. Elphinstone, Younge 586.

4. A new mill erected on the site of an ancient mill is exempt from tithes; but if it is built partly on the site of the ancient mill, and partly on a new site, it is not exempt. Newcome v. Mathew, 5 Sim. 243.

IX. EXEMPTION AND PRESCRIPTION IN NON DECIMANDO.

5. In a suit for tithe, defendant by answer set forth that the lands were parcel of a priory, whose lands were discharged by order; yet held good. Page's case, Hardr. 322.

6. The King's prerogative will not discharge him from tithes for the ancient demesnes of the Crown, though he be capable of a discharge de non decimando, by prescription. Croft v. —, Hardr. 315.

7. Upon a bill for tithe, an issue was directed to try if the lands in question belonged to any religious order that claimed to be discharged, quandiu in propriis manibus:—Held, that if the lands were in lease at the dissolution, or an estate for life or in tail were upon them, the reversioner should have the benefit of the discharge, for that was only suspended during the particular estates; but if an escheat had happened, it was doubted whether they would have been discharged, having been aliened by feoffment before the Statute of Quia Emptores Terrarum, by an abbey, to hold of them by certain services. Sed scous, of a discharge by unity, for that must be perpetual, and continue so at the time of the dissolution. Wilson v. Reedman, Hardr. 190; Harpur's case, 11 Co. 23. And see Canterbury's (Archbishop) case, 2 Co. 46.

A tenant for life or years is not within the statute for discharging tithes heretofore part of the possessions of a Cistercian abbey; but a tenant in tail, having the inheritance, is discharged, quandiu in propriis manibus, etc. 8. C. Hardr. 174.

8. Unity of possession of manor and rectory will not exempt demesne lands from payment of tithes, when they come to be severed. Fox v. Bardwell, 2 Com. 498.

9. Lands exempted from tithes, as being part of the demesnes of an ancient monastery, when enclosed by Act of Parliament, shall not be made liable to tithes by the general words of the Act. Pratt v. Hopkins, 7 Bro. P. C. 12.

10. Plea of stat. 13 Eliz., c. 20, for non-residence, was allowed to bill by lessee of tithes. Bokenham v. Benfield, 1 Com. 392.

11. He who hath the inheritance of the Cistercians, Hospitallars, and Templars is discharged from tithes, but his lessees, etc., shall pay them. Stathome's case, Dyer 277, pl. 60.

12. Church being void and dilapidated is no ground of discharge from payment of small tithes to the impropriate rector on the motion of an agreement having been entered into between the rector and the parishioners, by which the ecclesiastical duties have been dispensed with, in consideration of abandonment of small tithes. Meade v. Norbury, 2 Price 338.

13. To a bill for tithes, even by a lay impropriator, prescription in non decimando, or presumption from mere retainer, without colour of title, is no defence, and will not be sent to law. Bernay v. Harvey, 17 Ves. 119.

14. A prescription in non decimando can only be set up for a large tract of country, well known as a distinct district. Nagle v. Edwards, 3 Anstr. 703.

15. The lessee of the land cannot claim to hold discharge of tithes under any covenant with his lessor. Brewer v. Hill, 2 Anstr. 414.

16. There cannot be prescription in non decimando against a lay impropriator; but it is not necessary to produce the deed of severance; it is sufficient to show that it existed; where defendant, and those under whom he claimed, had been upwards of 130 years in the pendency of the tithes, a bill by impropriator was dismissed. Fanshaw v. Rotherham, 1 Eden 276.

At common law no man could avail himself of a discharge from tithes by grant without producing it. Id. 293.

The stat. of Hen. 8 is silent as to the manner in which a person must make out his right to tithes against the church or patentees standing in the place of the church; and only provides for the assurance and recovery of them, like temporal possessions, in the King's Court. Id. 294.

17. If lands were in possession of a greater monastery at the dissolution, and no evidence of payment of tithe, they shall be considered discharged. Lamprey v. Rooke, Amb. 291.

18. Prescription in non decimando even against a lay impropriator:—Held, not good. Bury St. Edmunds Corporation v. Evans, 2 Com. 643; Bunb. 345.

19. A prescription in non decimando cannot be supported against a lay impropriator, any more than against a spiritual rector. Charlton v. Charlton, Bunb. 325.

20. Bill by a lay impropriator for tithes of part of the possessions of the priors of St. John of Jerusalem, which were exempt quandiu propriis manibus, etc.; and then defendant set forth the stat. 31 Hen. 8, with the clause of discharge, and also the stat. 32 Hen. 8, whereby these priories, with all privileges, etc., were vested in the Crown, and that no tithes in kind had been paid to the Crown ever since:—Held, a good exemption. Hanson v. Fielding, Bunb. 214; Gilb. Eq. Rep. 225.

21. The long-contested question, whether constant non-payment of tithes is evidence of an exemption against a lay impropriator, was agitated in this case, but not determined. Fisher v. Christ Church (Dean), Bunb. 209.

1. Unity of possession of a manor and rectory will not exempt the demesne lands from tithes when they come to be severed. Fox v. Bardwell, 2 Com. 498; Bunb. 327.

2. An exemption from tithe extends to a right of common as well as to the estate to which it is appurtenant. Lambert v. Cumming, Bunb. 158.

3. Lands which were parcel of a monastery of the Cistercian order are only discharged from tithes quoad in propriis manibus; and the method to prove whether the lands were purchased before or after the council of Lateran, is to show a payment of tithes, which will induce a presumption that they were purchased after. Lord v. Turk, Bunb. 122.

4. Proof of exemption resting only on belief and hearsay is not admissible. Clark v. Dashwood, Bunb. 66.

5. Where an exemption from tithe is insisted upon, because the lands were parcel of one of the greater monasteries, plaintiff must show that the lands were in the abbot's hands, and that they were discharged in his hands; for the stat. 31 Hen. 8 extends only to such. Hanking v. Gay, Bunb. 37.

6. Where the land in question is part of a bishop's palace, the exemption goes along with the land; but where the land was belonging to a monastery, the prescription must be set forth. Benning v. Dovee, Bunb. 26.

7. A county or a hundred cannot prescribe in non decimando for things titheable of common right; aliter, if not titheable of common right. Hick v. Woodson, 2 Salk. 695.

8. Evidence of an exemption depends on usage, and a posterior one is evidence of the antecedent, for no other can be had. York (Archbishop) v. Stapleton, 2 Atk. 137.

9. Construction and effect of very ancient documentary evidence (opposed to a case of uninterrupted non-payment), in a suit for tithes, as applied to the claim, and to a defence of prescription in non decimando, on the ground of the lands having belonged to a religious house. To support such a defence, the lands must be shown to have belonged to a religious house before time of legal memory; it is not sufficient to show that lands were in the hands of religious house at time of dissolution. Markham v. Smith, 11 Price 126.

In claiming an exemption from tithes for particular lands, they must be accurately described in defendant's pleadings, and their local situation, etc., set out. Id.

10. An exemption from tithes on the ground of the lands having belonged to a monastery of a privileged order, does not rest on prescription; but the owner must show satisfactorily that the monastery was seised of the lands before the council of Lateran, and also at the time of the dissolution. In order to support a general exemption in non decimando, it must be shown that the lands were part of the possessions of a monastery before the time of legal memory; but it is seldom that such fact can be distinctly proved, and therefore it must usually depend upon presumptive evidence. Norton v. Hammond, 1 Y. & J. 94.

11. Where a non decimando was set up for lands as part of the possessions of a monastery which was dissolved by or came into the hands of Henry VIII., and the answer alleged that such lands were, at the dissolution, in the hands or occupation of the abbot, discharged of all tithes, without stating in what manner they were discharged, whether by bull, order, or prescription; the Court, upon the effect of the whole answer, considered it might understand it to mean prescription. Where there are no ancient documents to support the presumption of a prescription in non decimando, the modern evidence of usage must be carried back a great way to satisfy the Court that it is acting upon a presumption supported by usage of considerable antiquity. Fritchett v. Honeyborne, 1 Y. & J. 185.

12. As to exemption of lands from tithes as having been part of possessions of abbey at time of dissolution, which was also supported by evidence of non-payment, other parcel of the same manor, however, paying tithes. Carysfort (Earl) v. Wells, McCl. & Y. 600.

13. In making out a defence, grounded on an alleged discharge in the hands of the Hospitallers by prescription, it is not necessary to show possession by them at the time of memory; usage of non-payment not, in the absence of all conflicting evidence, to be accounted for, except upon the hypothesis of such a discharge, constitutes a prima facie case of prescription. Donnison v. Elsley, McCl. & Y. 1.

The privileged orders were capable, like every other religious order, of having their lands discharged of tithes by a real composition, or by prescription; the lessee, under the Crown's grantee, of lands which had belonged to the knights of St. John of Jerusalem, and his under-tenant, may defend themselves against a demand for tithes just as they might have done if their lands had belonged to an order not privileged. Id.

14. Lands which were held discharged from tithes before time of memory, by one of the alien priories, and, coming to the Crown on their suppression, were granted to a lay person, and, by him, to one of the greater monasteries, in whose hands they remained till the dissolution, are no longer exempt. Page v. Wilson, 2 Jac. & Walk. 513.

By common law all land is equally charged with tithe; there can be no exemption inherent in the land. Id. 528.

15. The right of exemption from tithes, and the mode of computing them in the deanery of St. Paul's, London. St. Paul's (Wardens) v. Lincoln (Bishop), 4 Price 65.

16. It is not sufficient for a vicar, who rests his case on presumption of an endowment from evidence of perception, to prove that he has received the tithes claimed from the rest of the parish generally, and even from part of the district in which the defendant's lands are situate, unless he carry it to the part for which the exception is claimed by the defence; and the vicar not doing so, proof on the part of the defendants that no tithe has ever been paid for their lands, will entitle them to an issue; nor will the Ecclesiastical Survey, stating vicar to be entitled to tithe in parish, generally supply the absence of proof of perception from the particular lands. Armstrong v. Hewitt, 4 Price 216.

17. If exemption is pleaded for lands as having belonged to a dissolved priory, and it is proved they belonged to a free chapel, it is sufficient. Ward v. Shepherd, 3 Price 620.

1. Where exemption was claimed under 2 & 3 Edw. 6, c. 13, issue was directed as to facts entitling party thereto. Kingsmill v. Billingsley, 3 Price 465.

2. The answer to a bill for an account of tithes, having insisted upon what was equivalent to a prescription in non decimando, and defendant's evidence going to the same point, the Court will not permit the evidence to be read to support a different defence, viz., a presumption that the tithes had been granted to the owner. Nash v. Thorn, 2 Cox 197.

3. Held, under the circumstances, and upon the evidence stated in the following report, that lands within a parish were not exempted from tithe by a money payment of ancient date and proof that no tithes had ever been rendered. Graves (Lord) v. Fisher, 8 Bli. N.S. 934; 3 Cl. & F. 1.

4. Where tithes have never been paid since the dissolution, the Court will presume all facts, which, consistently with the evidence in the cause, would give legal origin to an exemption from the payment of tithes. Humphreys v. Wagstaff, 1 Russ. & M. 529.

5. A party setting up an exemption from vicarial tithes for part of his farm, as being the demesne lands of a priory or monastery, the tithes of which were excepted from the endowment of the vicar, is bound to prove, that his lands actually were the demesne lands: and it is not sufficient for him to show that the priory had a manor and lands in the parish; that, on the dissolution of monasteries, the manor and lands devolved to the Crown, by whom the same, together with the rectory, were granted to persons under whom the defendant claimed title; and that the defendant's farm was known by the name of the Manor Grange, which, it was insisted, meant the demesne lands: and, therefore, where a defendant set up such an exemption, but did not actually prove that his lands were the demesne, and there was evidence of the receipt, for a century past, of a composition for tithes for the farm in question, though alleged by the defendant to be paid for a part of the farm only, which he admitted not to be demesne lands, the Court decreed an account, with costs. Young v. Merchant, 3 Y. & J. 467.

6. An exemption from tithes was claimed, as to certain copyholds, on the ground of unity of possession of the rectory, manor, and lands, in one of the greater monasteries, dissolved by 31 Hen. 8; other copyholds of the manor had belonged to the monastery at the dissolution, and were subject to tithe:—Held, nevertheless, that the exemption was good, because the monastery might have granted out the latter copyholds before the union of the rectory, and the former after it. Monck v. Huskisson, 1 Sim. 280.

7. The 1 & 2 Vict., c. 109, does not create any new grounds of exemption from payment of the rent-charge in lieu of tithe, or establish exemptions in cases in which they could not have existed independently of the Act; and the 18th section relates to cases of the possession or enjoyment of exemption, and to the evidence to be required of such possession or enjoyment. In order to show an exemption two things are necessary: first, the title to the lands giving a legal capability of exemption, e.g., being derived from an ancient monastery; and, secondly, the enjoyment of the exemption for the period specified in the Act. Therefore, a petition claiming exemption exclusively on the ground of non-payment of tithe, etc., for sixty years next before the signing of the certificate of tithe-composition, was dismissed, and with costs, the Court, after argument, holding that it had jurisdiction so to dismiss it although the statute is silent as to costs. Chambers v. Shannon (Earl), 5 Ir. Eq. R. 335.

8. Where lands were not formerly in the possession of the dissolved monasteries, unity of possession of the lands and tithe will not extinguish the title. Therefore, where the petitioner derived title under a lease for lives renewable for ever of lands and the tithes thereof, made in 1700, the Court refused to declare the land tithe free on a petition presented under the 1 & 2 Vict., c. 109, s. 16, though no tithes had been paid since 1700, there being no proof that the lands were abbey lands, and no notice of the proceedings having been given to the reversioner. Denny v. Devonshire (Duke), 1 Ir. Ch. R. 401.

The 20th section of the stat. 1 & 2 Vict., c. 109, enacting that the provisions therein before contained with respect to the establishment of exemption, etc., from tithes, shall not extend to any case where the tithes of any land shall have been demised by deed for any term for life or years, or where any composition for tithes shall have been made by deed or writing, by the person entitled to such tithes, with the owner or occupier of the land for any such terms for life or years, and such demise or composition shall be subsisting at the time of the passing of the Act, nor to any suit for establishing a claim to tithes then pending, means that the exempting clauses of the statute are not applicable to the case of the owner of tithes demising them to the owner or occupier of the land chargeable with those tithes; but a person actually entitled to the common ownership both of lands and the tithes thereof is not, merely because he has derived his title under a lease making separate demises of each, disentitled by that section to hold the lands tithe free. 8. C. 1 Ir. Ch. R. 657.

X. SETTING OUT AND PAYMENT.

9. The tithe calf is the tenth in order of birth. Carrington v. Cornock, 4 Sim. 217.

10. Where peas grown in fields, but gathered green, were gathered by women and children in small baskets or aprons, and from those emptied into sacks, each sack being computed and intended to contain three bushels, and when the sacks amounted in number to ten one sack was set out for the tithe, and when there were not ten each sack was calculated to contain three bushels, and upon that presumption a tenth of the whole was measured out and tendered for the tithe, and if there were a surplus over ten sacks the surplus was measured in the same manner:—Held, that this was a good mode of setting out the tithe, though it was objected by the vicar that the peas ought not to be put into sacks till the evening, and he had seen the whole measured, and by that means knew that he had the actual tenth; it being, however, shown in evidence that it was the usual mode of tithing in the neighbourhood, and that any other mode would greatly injure the peas, as exposure to sun and air for any time after they were gathered, would destroy their bloom, and diminish their value in the market; it being also shown in evidence that the sack was a measure of three bushels, and that the occupier gave the vicar his choice of sacks, and did not insist upon his accepting the sack without giving him an opportunity of seeing and measuring the contents of any of the sacks he chose. Funshawe v. Brittain, 2 Y. & J. 575.

The incumbent is entitled to the milk of the tenth day, morning and evening, and not to the tenth meal; and the milk of the whole herd of cows must be rendered on one and the same day. Ib.

The tithe of lambs is due when the animals are dropped, but payable when they are able to live without their dams; and, therefore, where the occupier removed lambs out of the parish, immediately after they were dropped:—Held, that he was liable to pay for the value when fit to be weaned. Ib.

It is easy to state the principle on which the tithe of vegetables in a garden, gathered for the consumption of a family, is to be rendered, but very difficult to imagine in what manner the principle is to be applied in practice, and, therefore, requires a mutual spirit of accommodation on the part of the vicar and the occupier. Ib.

1. Defendant, in suit by bill in equity for tithes, relying on defence of tithes having been duly set out, may (notwithstanding cause be at issue) bring action of trespass for not carrying them away. Court refused injunction to restrain him. Bradley v. Bensted, 13 Price 221; McClell. 80.

2. The tithe of calves is to be set out when they are fit to be weaned, and to live alone on the same food with the cow. Bearbrook v. Tyler, Jac. 560.

The proper mode of tithing hay is by the fork and rake. Ib.

The rule that involuntary rakings are not titheable, does not extend to hay. Ib.

3. The tithe of the clear profit being only due, the rent is the first deduction; and in the case of a new mill in the occupation of the owner, a yearly value, in the nature of a rent, is to be set upon it and deducted. Hall v. Machet, 3 Anstr. 915.

A farmer may cut a field in any portions most convenient, provided he sets out the tithe of all then cut, before any is carried, and provided it be not done vexatiously. Ib.

4. Parishioners only bound to cut the grass, and to lay it into heaps or cocks, but not bound to make it into hay. Fos v. Ayde, 2 P. W. 523. And see Woodnoth v. Cobham (Lord), Bunb. 180; Bennet v. Peart, in Scacc. 1786.

5. Tithes of hay ought to be paid in grass cocks. Smithson v. Dodson, 9 Mod. 117.

6. Clover hay is titheable in the cock, not in the swathe. Collyer v. Homes, 3 Anstr. 954.

But where, by the usual mode of husbandry, clover-hay is not made into cocks at all, the farmer may set out the tithes in the swathe. S. C. 2 Anstr. 481. S. P. Baker v. Athill, id. 491.

7. Setting out tithes cannot be dispensed with, even although the uncertainty of the weather prevents the corn from being put in shocks at all. Franklin v. Gooch, 3 Anstr. 682.

8. A custom of tithing, by throwing aside every tenth sheaf, as the corn is about to be carried, is bad. Tithes must be set out so that the rector may compare them with the other parts. Where, by the custom, notice of tithing is to be given, an hour's notice is not sufficient. Tennant v. Stubbing, 3 Anstr. 641.

9. Where tithe milk is due in kind, it must be set out by every tenth morning's meal, and every tenth evening's meal. Cullimore v. Bosworth, 7 Bro. P. C. 57.

10. The tithe of hops is to be set out by the tenth measure after they are picked, and not by the tenth hill, as soon as the vines are severed from the ground. Tyers v. Walton, 7 Bro. P. C. 18.

11. Tithes of wool are due at shearing-time, and are a satisfaction for pasturage for the year past, ending at that time, but not for subsequent pasturage. If the farmer, after shearing-time, depasture sheep, and sell them before the next shearing-time, tithe of pasturage is due for them. — v. Gold, Ambl. 149.

12. Tithes of wood must be set out on the spot at the time of felling. It is impossible, at the time of cutting, to say to what use it will be applied. Walton v. Tryon, Ambl. 132; Dick, 244.

13. The usual time for tithing lambs is when they can live without a dam (about Michaelmas). A custom, therefore, to tithe them on St. Mark's Day, 25th April, was held unreasonable. Reignolds v. Vincent, Bunb. 133.

14. If there be any custom in a parish for the manner of tithing milk, as, to carry it to the church porch, or parsonage-house, that must be observed by the parishioner; but if there be no particular custom, the parishioner is obliged, de jure, to pay a tenth meal, to milk the cows at the usual place of milking into his pails, and the parson is obliged to fetch it away from the milking-place in his own pails, in a reasonable time; but if he does not fetch it before the next milking-time, the parishioner may justify the pouring the milk on the ground, because he then has occasion for his own pails. Dodson v. Oliver, Bunb. 73. And see Carthem v. Edwards, Ambl. 72.

15. In debt for not setting out tithes, the setting them out and taking them away by plaintiff himself, is not good within the stat. 2 & 3 Edw. 6, c. 16. Sed secus, if taken away by a stranger. Anon., 2 Show. 184.

16. Tithes for agistment of cattle are payable by the owner of cattle. So in the case of commoners. Pory v. Wright, Hardr. 184; Underwood v. Gibbon, Bunb. 3; Fisher v. Leman, id. n.

And where tithe is payable, it shall be paid by the occupier of the ground, and not by the agistor. Ib.

17. If a man has a nursery of trees, and sells them, and pulls them up himself, he shall pay the tithe; otherwise, the vendee shall pay it, as in the case of corn sold standing; but if sold after severance, the vendor must pay it. Grant v. Hedding, Hardr. 380.

1. A distributive modus is unreasonable, and not good. Turton v. Clayton, Bunb. 80.

2. A modus is bad where the time of payment is uncertain. Goddard v. Keeble, Bunb. 105; Phillips v. Symes, Bunb. 173; Blacket v. Finney, Bunb. 198; but whether it can be supplied by evidence, vide Taylor v. Walker, Bunb. 267. It seems it may, if the day of payment be omitted in the answer. *Gibb v. 3. Modus of 1*d.* for orchards and gardens is good. Franklyn v. St. Cross Hosp., Bunb. 79; but they must be ancient gardens. Perrot v. Markwick, there cited.

4. Modus of 1*s.* per acre for marsh, and 4*d.* per acre for upland; payable at Michaelmas for hay and all small tithes (except hops), held good. Bate v. Hodges, Bunb. 125.

5. Work done by carrying a cartload of turf to the parson's house, in lieu of tithes of hemp, flax, and hay, was disallowed as a modus. Tully v. Kilner, Bunb. 126.

6. Modus of 4*s.* at Easter in lieu of tithe hay of a farm is bad. Burnell v. Coates, Bunb. 129.

7. Modus of 1*d.* at Easter for hay, and 2*s.* 8*d.* for hay and small tithes, is good. Finch v. Maisters, Bunb. 161.

8. Modus of 8*d.* for a cow, and 4*d.* for a heifer, in lieu of milk and calves, is good. Phillip v. Symes, Bunb. 171.

9. Modus of 1*s.* in the pound for pasture, according to the value of the land, is too rank and void. Smith v. Roocliff, Bunb. 20; Harrison v. Sharp, Bunb. 174.

10. Nine cartloads of log-wood, a hog'shead of cider, and 2*d.* per acre, for eighteen acres:—Held, good. Woolferston v. Manmaring, Bunb. 279.

11. Modus of 4*l.* 10*s.* per annum for a farm of 30*l.* per annum, is too rank. Kennedy v. Goodwin, Bunb. 301.

12. If a parishioner has ten lambs, the tenth is due to the rector on St. Mark's day; if nine he shall have one, paying ½*d.*; if eight, he shall have one, paying 1*d.*; if seven, he shall have one, paying 3*d.*; but for less than seven, the rector shall have no lamb, but ½*d.* for each under seven. Where there were ten lambs, after the parishioner had taken two, the rector shall choose his lamb. And the like modus decimandi was established as to pigs, so as to poultry: for every cock and drake, three eggs, payable on Wednesday before Easter; and for every hen and duck, three eggs in lieu of tithe eggs, and chickens and ducks hatched in the parish. This modus was established without a trial. Brinklow v. Edmonds, Bunb. 307.

Modus of ½*d.* for each calf is good. So ½*d.* for each sheep dying before shear-day. So a smoke-penny for firewood. So 4*d.* per month for wool of each 100 sheep shorn in the parish. Id.

Part of the milk of a farm for the whole is a bad modus. Id.

13. Modus of 6*s.* 8*d.* for one calf, if ten, but it was not said, "and so less in proportion, if under ten; this is bad, but 4*d.* for milk payable at Easter is good. Gibb v. Goodman, Bunb. 329.

14. Modus of 12*s.* an acre for low meadow lands, and 8*d.* for high ones, in lieu of tithe hay:—Held, good. Pole v. Gardiner, 7 Bro. P. C. 5.

15. What shall be said to be a good modus, quare. — v. Munson, 1 Barn. K. B. 292.

16. Modus pleaded in bar against tithe of hay, that within the parish of W. there were several townships, and that the occupiers of each township, time out of mind, had paid certain sums of money in lieu of tithes of hay, which sums were respectively collected by constables, and then the whole, which amounted to 15*s.* 4½*d.*, was by some of them paid to rectors as a modus for the whole parish: modus held good. Hereford (Bishop) v. Comper, 3 Swan 158.

17. Modus of 5*s.* payable out of every yard of land is valid. Cart v. Hodgkin, 3 Swan 160.

18. Modus for foreigners to pay 4*d.* per acre yearly for herbage and hay tithe is good. Monson v. Chapman, Fitzg. 119; 2 P. W. 566; Mos. 266, 279.

A modus, that every occupier of land within the parish of A., living out of the parish, shall pay 1*d.* an acre for all pasture lands within the parish; but if he lives within the parish, to pay the tithes in kind; a good modus. Id.

19. A modus that in consideration the parishioners made the tithe grass into hay, therefore the parishioners, inhabitants within the parish, were to pay no tithes for the herbage of dry and unprofitable cattle, and though proved that the parishioners, time out of mind, had paid no tithe of its herbage, yet the Court held it to be a material objection to the modus, that foreigners living out of the parish made the tithe grass into hay, and yet paid tithe herbage. Fow v. Ayde, 2 P. W. 520.

The Court held it to be a void modus, that the making of tithe grass hay should not only excuse that ground from paying tithes for herbage, but that perhaps a small quantity of meadow ground, by making the grass thereof into hay, should excuse the greater part of the ground of that parish from paying tithe herbage. Id. 521.

A modus in relation to the tithe due to the parson, may be a good bar to the payment of a small tithe due to the vicar, because all the tithes did at first belong to the parson, during which time he might agree to this modus. Id. 522.

20. A modus for tithe of corn for the inhabitants of such a tenement, and the lands therewith, usually enjoyed, void for uncertainty, in regard the tenement may be uninhabited, and the lands often shifted, and let with other farms. Carleton v. Brightwell, 2 P. W. 462.

21. A modus may extend to hops or clover (though lately brought into England) if it covers all small tithes. Green v. Austin, Lut. 1071.

22. A parol agreement to accept a modus in lien of tithes, will not bind the parson, but it will excuse the parishioners from the penalties of 2 Edw. 6. Breamer v. Thornton, Hardr. 203.

1. Milk is exempt from tithe, by a custom that the parson shall for so many weeks have the sole milking of all milch cows in the parish. And apples or other fruit in an orchard shall not pay tithes, if there be a modus to pay a groat for every hogshead of cider, or 2s. per annum in lieu. Hill v. Harris, 2 Show. 461.

2. Where a modus of 20s. was set up by a parishioner, and the parson had entered into a special agreement to accept that composition, and had for many years given a receipt for it, and had also agreed to be paid moreover 10l. yearly, a bill by the parson for tithes generally was dismissed, the Court holding him to his agreement; but the Lords reversed the decree, and ordered the Court of Exchequer to hear the cause on the right of tithe, notwithstanding the agreement. And the Court having, on further hearing, directed issues to try the validity of the modus, the Lords, on further appeal, affirmed the decree. Dent v. Buck, Colles's P. C. 182.

3. Where a parishioner insisted on a modus, and it appeared that the parishioners had usually paid differently, the alleged modus will be disregarded, and he will be decreed to account for the tithe in kind; and where the matter is plain, the Court will not direct the modus to be tried at law. Charleton v. Bayly, Colles's P. C. 206.

4. Where a modus is too rank, defendant must account for tithe in kind. Benson v. Watkins, Bunb. 10.

5. For a milch cow and calf, 17d. is good for the calf and milk. So for a milch cow without calf, 11d. for the milk. So for a heifer and calf, the first year, 13d. for the milk and calf; all payable at Michaelmas. For cider, made of apples grown in the parish, 8d. per hogshead. For hoard apples, 1d. For firewood spent on the farm, a hearth-penny. For fruit, herbs, roots, and other garden stuff, a garden-penny. For a colt, 1d.; all payable at Easter. Roe v. Ezeeter (Bishop), Bunb. 57.

6. Modus of 12d. for a milch cow is too rank, and so is 6d. for any calf killed and sold. Franklyn v. St. Cross Hospital, Bunb. 78. But it has since been held, that 6d. for a calf is good. Reynel v. Aokland, id. 78. n.

7. Account of vicarial tithes decreed against a modus of 1s. per acre for each acre of marsh land, for tithe of hay and all other vicarial and small tithes, the vicarage appearing to have been established by endowment in 1367, within legal memory. Scott v. Smith, 1 Ves. & B. 142.

8. Annual payment of 1d. by each occupier for tithe of hay, a good modus, but an issue granted. Modus for turnips, bad, being of too recent introduction into this country to be the subject of immemorial usage. Leyson v. Parsons, 18 Ves. 173.

9. Issue directed to try modus of 1s. per acre, in lieu of tithe hay; modus of 1s. 6d. and 2s. per acre for tithe hay, held rank. Heaton v. Cooke, Wightw. 281.

10. Modus of 1d. for each lamb, where number did not exceed four; 1s. where number did not exceed five; 1s. 8d. where number did not exceed six, and so increasing:—Held, not rank, and sent to an issue. Asken v. Greenhow, 2 Price 314. n.

11. Issue directed on modus for certain lands amounting to 1s. per acre for all tithes, notwithstanding apparent rankness. O'Connor v. Cook, 6 Ves. 665. See 8 Ves. 535.

Rankness of modus is only evidence as to the immemoriality of payment, and not an objection in point of law. Distinction as to rankness between modus for tithe of particular things and a farm modus. Id. 672.

12. A modus payable by the owners of the land covered by it, is good. Ord v. Clarke, 3 Anstr. 638.

13. The Court will not decree against a farm modus on the ground of rankness. Atkins v. Willoughby de Brooke (Lord), 2 Anstr. 397.

14. A modus of 1d. for every sheep, and ½d. for every lamb, brought into the parish after Candlemas, and sold out before shearing time, is a wool modus, not an agistment modus. Garnons v. Barnard, 1 Anstr. 320.

15. A modus of every tenth day's cheese during twenty weeks from Holyrood day, in lieu of tithe of milk, is good, semble. Wake v. Russ, 1 Anstr. 295.

16. A modus of a 1d., in lieu of tithe of hay, of the lands occupied with each house in the parish, is bad. Travis v. Oxtou, 1 Anstr. 308.

A modus bad in law received by the vicar, is proof of endowment of the tithe for which the modus was paid. Id. 309.

17. A modus of 2d., payable by every householder inhabitant in the parish, for all tithe of fuel, of fruits, of agistment, and of wood, is a good modus. Bennet v. Read, 1 Anstr. 322.

Another modus of 3d. for all sheep carried out of the parish between Candlemas and shearing time, covering the same place and persons, does not contradict the former modus for agistment, but is only to be taken as limiting it in the extent covered by the latter. Id. 323.

A modus covering a parish or district, is rather a custom than a prescription, and may often be good when a prescriptive modus covering particular lands would be bad. Id. 329.

18. Modus set up since 13 Eliz. does not bind the successor. Anon., Lofft. 66.

19. If it appear that a pecuniary payment has been made for any sort of tithes, the Court will help the imperfect manner of setting out the modus. Mallock v. Browne, Amb. 423.

20. Issue directed whether a modus extended to modern orchards; and was so found, and decree for account accordingly. Butcher v. Hill, Amb. 376.

21. A fother of hay as a modus in lieu of tithes:—Held, uncertain and void. Fenwick v. Lambe, Amb. 365.

22. Doubtful modus not determined by a court of equity without a trial at law. Chapman v. Smith, 2 Ves. 506.

An exception in the alleged modus, that it was not to be paid when the land should be planted with hops, not fatal on the face of it in point of law. Id.

23. A modus for rabbits, part in kind and part in money, may be good. Walton v. Tryon, Amb. 135; Dick. 244.

24. A modus to take part of the tithes for the whole, has always been held a void custom. York (Archbishop) v. Stapleton, 2 Atk. 138.

1. In a suit by rector for tithe of lambs, the defendant insists on a modus of 3*d.* for every lamb, payable on St. Mark's day, or so soon after as demanded. This modus is not void at law, but its validity shall be determined by a jury. Where plaintiff claims tithes in kind, and defendant sets up a modus, if plaintiff declines trying the modus at law, it shall be taken against him pro confesso. Giffard v. Webb, 7 Bro. P. C. 15.

2. In a defence of modus for produce of an ancient farm, it is indispensably necessary to show, by evidence, that a farm is ancient. Stuart v. Greenall, 9 Price 106.

Tithe of milk held to be within the payment for cow and calf, laid as a modus in lieu of tithe of such cow and calf. 1b.

3. Modus of 4*d.* for every milch cow and calf, and 3*d.* for every heifer and calf, in lieu of tithe of calves and milk; and modus of 3*d.* for every hogshead of cider, and 1*d.* for fruit, in lieu of tithe of apples, pears, etc., are bad. The union of articles distinctly titheable, in one modus, is objectionable. Short v. Lee, 2 Jac. & Walk. 464.

4. A modus of 1*d.*, payable for every occupier of land, in lieu of the tithe of hay, held bad. A modus of 1*s.* for a milch cow, in lieu of the tithe of milk, held rank. Busk v. Lewis, Jac. 363.

Modus for every occupier of land to pay 1*d.*, in lieu of the tithes of calves, bad. 1b.

5. A farm modus for part of a farm, may be valid. White v. Lisle, 3 Swan. 344.

6. Modus for pasture land, stated to be in lieu of the tithes of all titheable matters, yearly arising, etc., covers too much. Lake v. Skinner, 1 Jac. & Walk. 9.

7. A modus of 1*d.*, in lieu of the tithe of hay, of every inhabitant or occupier of a house, and having any land at, or belonging to, or used or enjoyed with, any house, is invalid. The decree of the Master of the Rolls on the other moduses, affirmed. Blackburn v. Jenson, 3 Swan. 132. And see 2 Ves. & B. 359.

8. Measure of oatmeal, payable in lieu of tithe of corn and grain, is a good modus. De Whelpdale v. Milburn, 5 Price 485.

9. Modus of 1*d.*, payable at Martinmas by every owner of a garden or garth within the parish, called a garth penny, in lieu of tithes of articles produced in such gardens, as covering potatoes and turnips, is good. Williamson v. Lonsdale (Lord), 5 Price 25.

10. A modus for agistment-tithe, in satisfaction of all tithes, made in years when the grass land was otherwise cultivated, was holden bad. Mould v. Wyat, 2 Ken. Ch. 38.

A modus of 1*d.*, commonly called a plough-penny, payable, etc., by the several occupiers of lands in tillage within the said parish, for and in lieu and satisfaction of all small predial tithes, arising, etc., upon land so in tillage, as covering field turnips and potatoes, is bad. 1b.

11. Modus of 2*d.* for a day's math of grass is good, the quantum being matter of evidence. Cockburn v. Hughes, 3 Price 408.

12. Modus of 1*d.* a cow for milch cows summered on lands within a parish, disallowed, because of the uncertainty of the word "summered." Rumney v. Beale, Dan. 35.

13. Modus of 5*s.* for every ten calves, where there happens to be ten, in lieu of tithe of such calves, and also of tithe milk of cow belonging to such calves, called renew cows, or cows having had each a calf within the year, preceded by modus of 1½*d.* for every cow called a renew cow, or a cow that has had a calf within the year, and is full of milk, in lieu of tithe of milk of such cow, cannot be supported as being inconsistent. Layng v. Yarborough, 4 Price 383.

Modus of 1*s.* for every tenth fleece, in lieu of tithe of the ten fleeces, is rank; 3*d.* for a lamb, or 2*s.* 6*d.* for every tenth lamb, in lieu of tithe of such ten lambs, not held rank, but issue directed; so for every tenth pig; so as to geese. Modus for tithes of articles of modern introduction cannot be supported, because of the anachronism; 1*s.* 6*d.* in lieu of tithe of rape seed, when sold in seed, bad for uncertainty: 4*d.* for messuage and garth; 2*d.* for every cottage and garth; 1*d.* for every strip cow; 4*d.* for every foal; 2*s.* 6*d.* for every tenth lamb, in lieu of tithe of such ten lambs, are good moduses. 1b.

14. Modus of 3*d.* a year for every cow, and 6*d.* for every calf, in lieu of tithes of cows, calves, and milk, is good. A modus of 1*d.* a year, in lieu of tithe of gardens, is good, and may be so pleaded without stating that it is payable for ancient gardens. Prevost v. Bennett, 2 Price 272.

15. Modus of 3*l.* payable for certain tithes within township, the occupier of each farm or tenement within such township respectively paying his ratable proportion, is bad for uncertainty, even in an answer. Wolley v. Hadfield, 3 Price 210.

16. Modus of 10*d.* a score for agistment of sheep, bad. Mytton v. Harris, 3 Price 19.

17. Modus may exist for artificial grasses used in improvement of hay; modus of 3*d.* for a lamb, not rank; modus of 4*d.* for a cow in lieu of milk not supported by proof of modus for every cow with calf; modus of 1*s.* for every seventh pig on the ninth day, held good, after some doubt. Bertie v. Beaumont, 2 Price 303.

18. The defendants to a bill by a rector for tithes of hay, set up a modus of 2*d.* for each load of hay, of the weight of one ton, payable at Easter by the several occupiers, in lieu of tithes of hay grown from Easter in the year preceding inclusive; and they, by their answer, further stated that the amount of the modus payable to the rector under such custom had been usually ascertained by a person on behalf of the rector inspecting the ricks of hay made within the parish in each year, and forming an estimate of the number of loads of one ton weight contained in each rick, upon which estimate the whole of the annual modus payable to the rector was calculated, but that this mode of estimating the weight formed no part of the custom. It also appeared that, in a suit instituted in the Exchequer by the same rector against some occupiers for the tithe of hay in the same parish, an issue had been directed, and the jury having found that 2*d.* for every load of hay of the weight of one ton had been immemorially paid to the rector at Easter in each year, by the several occupiers of lands, in lieu of the tithes of hay, the rector's bill had been dismissed with costs:—Held, that the alleged modus was bad in law, and the account ought to be directed against the defendants, without directing an issue as to the validity of the modus. Goodenough v. Powell, 2 Russ. 219.

1. A modus of 1½d. for every milch cow, if under seven, kept and fed on the lands, in lieu of the tithe of milk and calves of such cows; 2s. 4d. if the milch cows and calves shall amount to seven, and not seventeen; and the like sum of 2s. 4d. for every ten milch cows after the first seven, in lieu of tithe of milk and calves of such cows, considered good. A modus of 2d. for every house and garden, in lieu of garden stuff, considered good; but held to cover only gardens annexed to houses for the use of the houses, and not to market-gardens or the like. Pritchett v. Honeyborne, 1 Y. & J. 135.

2. A modus of 6d. in the pound, on an ancient rent, held bad, as a shifting and uncertain modus. The following moduses were held good, viz., 2d. for every milch cow called a new cow, that is, a cow that had more than one calf, in lieu of the tithe of milk of such cow; 1d. for every milch heifer, or whey of her first calf, in lieu of the tithe of milk of such milch heifer or whey; 1d. for every far cow or strip, that is, a milch cow that has not had a calf within the year, in lieu of the tithes of such far cow, and the milk thereof; 1d. for every calf under five within the year; for five calves, the value of ¼d. a calf; six calves, up to fourteen inclusive, a calf in kind, or its value; fifteen calves, a calf in kind, or its value, and the value of half a calf more; sixteen calves, to twenty-four inclusive, two calves in kind, or their value, and so on in proportion; the like modus for fowls; 1d. for every garden; and 4d. for a hen called a loak hen, in lieu of tithes of eggs and young poultry. The following moduses, namely, for every number of lambs within the year, under five, nothing; five lambs, the value of ¼d. a lamb; six lambs, and up to fourteen inclusive, a lamb in kind or its value, and the value of half a lamb more; sixteen lambs, up to twenty-four inclusive, two lambs in kind, or their value, and so on; the like modus as to fleeces; the same to geese were considered bad, nothing being paid under five. Norton v. Hammond, 1 Y. & J. 94.

3. A district modus, to be good, must cover all the lands in the district; and, therefore, where a modus was pleaded for a particular district, and it appeared from the evidence that certain farms within the district never paid or contributed, the modus was considered bad. Miller v. Jackson, 1 Y. & J. 65.

4. Modus for the cover of clover, eo nomine, as distinct from a modus for the acre of hay:—Held, not objectionable, either on the ground of the former being an article of modern introduction in agriculture since legal memory, or as not being per se a subject matter of modus distinct from, and independently of, natural grass made into hay; and that although the modus for hay was laid generally as a parochial modus, without any exception, as hay made of clover. Davies v. Moseley, 13 Price 423; M'Clel. 143.

5. Moduses of 7d. for every milch cow, in lieu of tithe for calf and of milk of such cow; 5d. for every heifer, in lieu of tithe of calf and milk of such heifer; 4d. for every hogshead of cider, and so in proportion for a greater or less quantity, in lieu of tithes of apples, etc.; 1d. for hoard or hoard-penny, in lieu of tithe for apples, hoarded, etc.:—Held, to be legal, and issues directed to try them. Holwell v. Blake, M'Clel. 559.

6. Modus of sum of money in groes, payable to vicar on his induction, in lieu of certain tithes during his incumbency, is bad. So, also, in such a payment, with a further annual payment of smaller sum in lieu of certain tithes during the same period. Manby v. Taylor, 9 Price 249.

7. Where defendants who had pleaded certain farm moduses, in lieu of the tithes of their respective farms, proved, by a series of terriers and vicars' receipts, the payment and acceptance, for about a century back, of the several sums alleged by them to be moduses, in satisfaction of the tithes of lands, called in the terriers and receipts by the same names as the farms of the defendants; and also proved that tithes in kind had never been paid for such lands; yet the defendants not having by their answers, nor by evidence, distinctly described and established the boundaries of their respective farms:—Held, that the defence of modus could not be supported, but in decreeing an account of the tithes, the Court expressly directed that the decree should be without prejudice to the defendant's making use of the same defence at a future time, in case, on further inquiry, they should be able to distinguish the actual boundaries of their farms. Rudd v. Champion, Younge 173.

8. A district modus of 4s., for hay and agistment, was pleaded as payable by the owners or occupiers of lands within that district; but it was also stated by the answer, and proved by the evidence, that the modus had uniformly been paid by the owner and occupiers of two closes within the district:—Held, that as a modus must be paid and payable by those whom it protects, this circumstance would be fatal to the modus, unless explained, which it was in the present case, by the fact of two closes being proved to have been allotted to particular individuals in fee, on condition of their satisfying the modus. Gibson v. Peacock, Younge 184.

9. A modus of 1½d. payable by every occupier of land in the parish, for every cow kept by him within the parish, in lieu of the tithes of the milk and calves of such cow, is good. Tomlinson v. Lymor, 4 Sim. 467.

10. A modus payable by every householder, in lieu of all tithes of hay, without regard to the fact whether such householder has, or has not, hay, is valid; but otherwise if it be alleged to be payable only when the householder has hay. 6d. in lieu of a tithe pig is rank. A modus for fruit and garden-stuff is good, though it be not alleged to be growing in a garden. Gronow v. Edwards, 2 Russ. & M. 102.

11. A modus of one egg for a hen, and two for every cock kept on the farm of the occupier, in lieu and satisfaction of the tithes of the eggs produced by such hens:—Held, void. Lonsdale v. Heaton, Younge 58.

12. Moduses of 1½d. for every cow calving and being milked within the year ending at Easter, in lieu of the tithe of milk and calf of every such cow; of 1*d.* for every cow not calving, but being milked, within the year ending at Easter, in lieu of the tithe of milk of such cow; of 4*d.* for every colt foaled; of 3*d.* for every lamb; of 1*d.* for every sheep shorn, in lieu of the tithe of wool; and of 1*d.* for every garden, in lieu of tithes of the produce of such garden:—Held, good moduses, but issues offered. Luton School v. Scarlet, 2 Y. & J. 380. Affirmed sub. nom. Scarlet v. Luton School, 4 Cl. & F. 1; 10 Bli. N. S. 592.

1. A custom that the rector shall occupy, from Lady-day to Michaelmas in each year, forty acres, part of a fen, consisting of about 1,200 acres, in lieu of the tithes of all hay and fodder arising on the fen, is a valid custom. Sparke v. Ivatt, 7 L. J., Ch., 158.

2. Issue directed to try a modus of 37*l.* a year, payable half-yearly, alleged to be payable in satisfaction of all the vicarial tithes of certain farms, constituting a particular hamlet within the parish, notwithstanding the presumptive rankness of the modus; and though it appeared from ancient documents that the whole tithes of the land in the parish, at a date long subsequent to the time of legal memory, were of less annual value than the sum pleaded as a modus, and notwithstanding there was no evidence of any payment of tithes, the validity of the ancient documents, and their application to the subject being, however, questioned, and a great deal of parol testimony being adduced in support of the modus, uncontradicted by any parol evidence to the contrary. Strong v. Denchfield, 2 Y. & J. 594; Affirmed 4 Bli. N. S. 136.

3. Where a township modus of 5*l.* 3*s.* 10*d.* was pleaded as covering all the lands in a particular township, in lieu of predial tithes, and it appeared from the evidence that, for a great many years, several small sums amounting to about the sum pleaded, had been paid by the inhabitants severally, and not collectively, to the rector, the Court held that though some of the payments might be good moduses, or prescriptive payments for their respective farms, yet that they could not together make a good township modus. To render a township modus good, it ought to be payable by each and every of the inhabitants, and ought not to be collected by the rector. Jackson v. Benson, 2 Y. & J. 45.

4. The occupiers of land in a parish which consisted of three species of land called uplands, townlands, and marsh or moorlands, set up three different moduses in respect of the lands within each designation; namely, 4*d.*, 6*d.*, and 8*d.* per acre. Issues were directed to try the validity of the moduses. The jury found in favour of all the moduses; and further found that there was a natural mark or boundary distinguishing the uplands from the marshlands, but there was no fixed boundary to the lands called the townlands:—Held, that none of the moduses could be supported, it appearing from the evidence and the finding of the jury, that there were no fixed and immemorial boundaries to the townlands, and it being also consistent with the evidence that part of the marshlands might have been converted into lands of another description. Ward v. Pomfret, 6 Jur. 568.

5. The rankness of a modus is not strictly speaking an objection to it in point of law; but courts of equity, judging both of the fact and the law, in the absence of the original deeds of agreement, determine from the gross absurdity of the bargain that no such bargain ever was made. The same may be said of an annuity given from time immemorial in purchase of the tithes. Knight v. Waterford (Marquis), 4 Y. & Coll. 283; 10 L. J., N. S., Exch. Eq., 57; 5 Jur. 818.

6. In a bill for tithes the defendant set up a modus for outners (persons dwelling out of the parish but holdings lands within it), to pay 4*d.* per acre for all ancient pasture lands:—Held, that such modus was good in law. Byron v. Cooper, 11 Cl. & F. 556; 8 Jur. 991. Reversing on this point Cooper v. Byron, 3 Y. & Coll. 467; and on a re-hearing, S. C. nom. Cooper v. Hewson, 4 Y. & Coll. 269.

7. Commentary on the inferences to be drawn from the value of money at various times, in forming a judgment as to the validity of the modus. Cooper v. Hewson, 4 Y. & Coll. 269. Affirming S. C. nom. Cooper v. Byron, 3 Y. & Coll. 467, on a re-hearing.

8. In a suit for tithes by an ecclesiastical rector against the occupiers, the defendants set up a modus of 1*l.* 17*s.* 9*d.*, as covering the tithes of four townships in a parish, which were claimed by the plaintiff. The latter proved by documents older than those produced by the defendants, that separate moduses, amounting to 1*l.* 17*s.* 9*d.*, had been paid for separate portions of the four townships:—Held, that the modus pleaded was bad. Harcourt v. Pierson, 5 Sim. 368.

9. In a suit for tithe of hay, the occupier pleaded a modus of 2*d.* an acre at Easter, for and in lieu and satisfaction of the tithe of hay on ancient meadows, and went on to state that such modus of 2*d.* an acre, in lieu of tithe of hay, was meant and intended to cover, and in fact covered, tithe of agistment of all cattle depastured on the ancient meadows thereafter until Candlemas in each year; but if the ancient meadow-lands were depastured after Candlemas, and before they were laid up to be mown, then tithe in kind of agistment became payable to the vicar. The evidence went to establish the modus of 2*d.* an acre for tithe of hay of ancient meadows, but not the agistment:—Held, that, as tithe agistment was not claimed in this cause, the variation in the modus as proved, and as laid in the answer, was not fatal to the defence, but that it might be treated as if the modus proved had been pleaded as a modus for tithe of hay only. Pope v. Farthing, Younge 263.

2. Proof of.

10. A defendant insisting on a modus as an outner, must prove himself to have been such at the time his lands became titheable; his being so described in the bill, not sufficient. Lake v. Skinner, 1 Jac. & Walk. 9.

11. As to the preponderance of conflicting evidence as to title in tithe causes. Peto v. Dalton, 6 Price 232.

12. Modus of sum of money laid as payable in lieu of tithes of hay, and all small tithe, is not supported by proof of payment for hay, and non-payment of hay in kind or any small tithes either in kind or sub modo. Payments laid as moduses, and proved to have been always paid within memory, and not opposed by evidence of their origin:—Held, sufficiently proved to establish them on a defence of moduses, although all the witnesses called them compositions. Driffild v. Orrell, 6 Price 324.

1. Parol evidence of payment for hay and agistment is rebutted by evidence of modus having been established at law and equity for hay. Williamson v. Thompson, 9 Price 197.

A modus covering both these tithes is suspicious, and requires strict proof that it is a payment in lieu of both. Evidence of payment, however, was sent to be tried by jury. Id.

2. Modus of 4d. for every cow in lieu of tithe of milk, is not supported by proof of modus for every cow with calf. Bertie v. Beaumont, 2 Price 303.

3. On question of parochial modus referred to a trial at law, testimony offered as evidence of reputation in proof of custom on which right to the advantage of modus decimandi was founded, that money payments, constituting alleged modus, had been uniformly made beyond living memory, and that witnesses had heard old persons, who at that time occupied lands in the parish and were long since dead, say that it had always been the custom to make such payments, was held admissible evidence of reputation against an objection taken of interest in making such a declaration on the part of such deceased persons on whose information the evidence was founded. Moseley v. Davies, 11 Price 162.

4. It is no objection to evidence of reputation, that deceased person from whom it came was liable to pay tithes. Harwood v. Sims, Wightw. 112.

5. Evidence of reputation, as to the payment of a farm modus, is inadmissible, on the ground that hearsay evidence is not admissible on a question of private right. And therefore, and in obedience to this rule, the evidence of old persons, who deposed to having heard their parents and relations, and other persons, since dead, state that a certain farm modus was payable in respect of a particular farm, was rejected. Where certain payments, alleged to be farm moduses, were proved by persons who had known the farms for many years, some of them for more than half a century, and who had actually occupied the farms, to have been uniformly paid to the rector in lieu and satisfaction of the tithes alleged to be covered by the moduses:—Held, that the moduses were not so clearly disproved by several terriers signed by the rector, churchwardens, and inhabitants, containing entries to the following effect:—"Tithe rents due to the rector 35l. 16s. 10d." "The tithes due to the rector are small tithes, Easter offerings, and great tithes; for which last a composition tithe rent throughout the parish is at present paid to the rector," as to authorise the Court, sitting in equity, to overrule them and disregard the evidence of usage upon which they were founded; and the terriers being evidently erroneous in some particulars, the Court refused to decree an account of tithes in kind, but offered the rector an issue or to retain his bill for a year, with liberty to bring an action. Lonsdale v. Heaton, Young 58.

6. Where a modus is laid with exceptions, it may be proved by some witnesses who speak to a general modus, and others who speak to the exceptions. A second set of depositions taken upon the same interrogatories, rejected. Hadow v. Barnett, 1 Y. & Coll. 164.

7. Modus set up for hay, hemp, and flax is so far proved by receipts for money payment made for hay, hemp, and flax, for forty-five years back, although earlier receipts describe it as payable for hay only, which would have otherwise been conclusive against the occupiers, as that the payment must be made the subject matter of an issue. The payment being called a hay-rent in receipts, is no objection to them as evidence of the existence of a modus. Manby v. Lodge, 9 Price 231.

8. Evidence of reputation cannot be received in support of a farm modus. The evidence required to establish a farm modus, is, first, the clear identity of the farm by metes and bounds; secondly, the antiquity of the farm; and, thirdly, immemorial payment of the modus. But it cannot be expected that any testimony should be adduced that the lands comprising the farm were cultivated together before the year 1189, and that the payment was then made. It would be as reasonable to require the actual production of the deed of composition. There seems to be no reason why the same evidence which establishes a parochial modus, viz., usage as far back as can be reasonably traced of the payment being made on one side, and tithes in kind not having been demanded on the other, should not be good evidence of a farm modus, and such seems to be the result of the authorities. Pritchett v. Honeyborne, 1 Y. & J. 135.

9. The defendant having set up a farm modus in answer to a bill for tithes, issues were directed to try whether the ancient farm consisted of the lands mentioned in the answer, and whether a certain modus had been immemorially payable for the tithes arising upon it. The jury found that the farm consisted of these lands, together with four other closes, and was covered by a modus. The circumstance that the jury found the ancient farm to consist of other lands besides those mentioned in the pleadings, is no ground for a new trial, unless the plaintiff can show that he has evidence with respect to those four closes which, upon the supposition that they are parcels of the alleged ancient farm, might materially vary the substance of the case. Bailey v. Semell, 1 Russ. 239.

10. Where a district modus was pleaded, and it appeared from ancient documents that the modus could not consistently with those documents have existed at the time of legal memory, the Court decreed an account of tithes in kind, and refused an issue, notwithstanding the payments were proved to have existed for a great number of years. Müller v. Jackson, 1 Y. & J. 65.

Evidence that sums had been collected from the inhabitants by a person employed by the person, and from a list furnished by him, affords strong presumption that the payments are farm moduses, and not a district modus. Id.

11. Issue directed to try the validity of a modus laid for a very small district, though the map attached to the answer varied from that given in evidence by the defendants, and though the defendants relied on evidence of reputation to prove the bounds of the district. The lands of smaller monasteries which were surrendered to the King, after the 27 Hen. 8, c. 28, and were, at the time of their surrender, free from tithes, are within the protection of 31 Hen. 8, c. 13, s. 21. To show that a monastery held lands discharged from tithes by prescription at the time of its dissolution, positive evidence must be given that the monastery existed prior to the time of legal memory; but if this evidence be given, its possession of the lands before that period may be left to presumption. Under the general pleading, that the lands were, at the time of the dissolution, held, discharged "by prescription, or other lawful ways and means," the defendants may give evidence of any legal discharge. A witness is not disqualified from proving the payment of a modus, on the ground of being an owner of the lands in question, unless it be clearly proved that he is an owner at the time of his examination. The stat. 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 42, s. 26, does not render a man, who has sworn before the Act, a competent witness afterwards. Whether that Act extends to equitable proceedings, quære. Matthew Paris is not evidence of the establishment of the order of Franciscans in Italy. Barnes v. Stuart, 1 Y. & Coll. 119; 4 L. J., N. S., Exch. Eq., 25.

1. Where it appears in evidence that Quakers have been convicted for non-payment of their tithes or prescriptive payments, it is strong evidence that a township modus, in respect of those tithes, does not exist. Jackson v. Benson, 2 Y. & J. 45.

2. Modus laid to have been immemorial, and payable by every occupier growing hay:—Held, not to be disproved by evidence of endowment in 1253, and of contributory payments by every occupier indiscriminately. Atkins v. Drake, M'Clel. & Y. 213.

3. The evidence of a witness in support of a modus for milk and calves, is receivable, notwithstanding he occupies a cottage and garden in the parish. An owner of lands in the parish is a good witness to prove the custody of old receipts for moduses alleged to be payable for his lands, notwithstanding he has agreed to contribute to the costs of the suit. Old receipts for tithes and moduses expressed merely to have been given to A. for sums received of him by B., on account of C., sufficiently appear to relate to the parish, it having been proved that persons of those names were respectively, at the dates of the receipts, owners of lands in the parish, and curate and rector thereof; and such receipts having been found by A. amongst his late father's papers, under whom he claimed, are admissible in evidence to prove the moduses. Tomlinson v. Lymer, 4 Sim. 469.

4. Modus alleged in answer to be payable in lieu of tithes, is not supported by proof of payments of a large amount. Fisher v. Graves, M'Clel. & Y. 362.

Where a payment in lieu of tithes of the ancient demesne lands of a manor was proved to have been paid to and accepted by the rector for the time being, upwards of a century, and, from the recitals in a lease in the reign of Car. I., there was strong ground to presume that it existed before that period, and there was no evidence of tithe in kind ever having been rendered; yet it being manifest, from certain ordinances and other ancient documents produced and proved in the cause, that the payment had its origin subsequent to time of legal memory, the Court, notwithstanding the antiquity of the payment, decreed an account. Id. 363.

5. Depositions of defendant, who set up a farm modus, allowed to be read de bene esse in favour of co-defendant, who set up other farm moduses. Deposition of witness, who states himself to have been interested in cause, but duly released, cannot be read until Court has, by inspection of documents creating such interest and release, satisfied itself thereon. Wolley v. Brownhill, M'Clel. 324. S. P. 13 Price 500.

Plaintiffs, having read a passage from answer ending thus, "but have not set forth an account of such titheable matters, on account of the expense thereof, and for the reasons herein mentioned," the Court refused to permit a distinct part of the answer, which contained the reasons referred to, to be read as evidence for the defendants. Id. 326.

In proving farm modus, defendant is bound first to prove distinctly that the farm was an ancient farm, and then to show the particular payment in respect of that ancient farm. Id. 331.

6. If, in a suit for tithes, the plaintiff, to prove his title as tithe owner, reads passages from the answers, in which the defendants state their belief, that as to certain matters, the lands in question are covered by moduses; this constitutes a prima facie case for the moduses; and it becomes the business of the plaintiff to overthrow them, and that of the defendant to sustain them. Carrington v. Jones, 2 L. J., Ch., 11.

7. A modus established by verdict of jury on an issue, is conclusive on judge in equity. Davis v. Moseley, 13 Price 423; M'Clel. 143.

8. Where the Commutation Act passed pending a suit between the rector and occupier, and in the course of proceedings under the Act an action was brought to try the validity of a modus, which was found against by the verdict:—Held, that the verdict was admissible, not as conclusive, but as matter of evidence against the occupier, and that the plaintiff might, by a supplemental bill, put in issue the fact of the verdict stated in it, in order that he might prove it at the hearing. Morris v. Ellis, 13 Sim. 1; 6 Jur. 547.

3. Issue at Law.

9. Where a parishioner insisted on a modus, and it appeared that the parishioners had usually paid differently, the alleged bonus will be disregarded, and he will be decreed to account for the tithe in kind; and where the matter is plain, the Court will not direct the modus to be tried at law. Charlton v. Bayley, Colles's P. C. 206.

10. The Court will direct an issue to try a modus, though not proved exactly as laid in the bill. Laithe v. Christian, Bunb. 340.

11. Modus for clover, instead of saying modus for grass:—Held, sufficient, and issue directed to try modus for grass. Wood v. Harrison, Ambl. 563.

12. Issue directed to try modus of 12d. an acre, in lieu of tithe hay: moduses of 1s. 6d. and 2s. per acre for tithe hay, held rank. Heaton v. Cooke, Wightw. 281.

1. Issue directed on modus of certain lands, amounting to 1s. per acre for all tithes, notwithstanding apparent rankness. O'Connor v. Cook, 6 Ves. 665. See 8 Ves. 535.

2. Bill for tithes, glebe, and right of common. Defendant insisted on a modus. Though the modus appeared to be too rank, yet the Court would not determine upon any of the points until plaintiff had established his right at law. Sweetapple v. Kingston, Bunb. 238; Chamberlain v. Spencer, id. n.

3. In a suit for tithe hay, the defendants, by their answer, only set up several moduses by the name of straw tithes. An issue in this case proper to try whether the moduses insisted on by the defendants, in their answers, have been time out of mind paid and payable for and in lieu of tithe hay in kind. Harrington v. Horton, 4 Bro. P. C. 624.

4. Where modus is set up, but not proved by clear legal evidence, a court of equity ought not, in the first instance, to decree an account, but should direct an issue to try validity of modus. Whitehead v. Travis, 7 Bro. P. C. 49.

5. A modus being clearly invalid as laid, the question of law is decided without directing an issue on the question of fact. Blackburn v. Jepson, 3 Swan. 132.

6. Where defendant states in his answer that modus has been immemorially paid to vicar in lieu of tithes, and vicarage is shown to have been endowed within time of legal memory, Court will allow modus to be re-stated, so as to take issue to try modus. Prevost v. Benett, 1 Price 236.

7. Old terriers, recording that tithe of hay is payable in kind, signed by rector and churchwardens, overseers, and some of resident parishioners, are good evidence to rebut the presumption of a farm modus, attempted to be established by proof of money payment having been uniformly rendered within living memory; and the absence of any evidence, even of reputation that tithe had ever been taken in kind, and that though such terriers are not proved to have been signed by any persons interested in the farm. Nor will the Court grant an issue in such case. Nycton v. Harris, 3 Price 19.

8. The amount of money payments laid as moduses in answer to vicar's claim, being totally inconsistent with value of vicarage, as established by ancient documents, usually put in evidence, is not sufficient (where the payments have been uniform and uninterrupted) to induce the Court to dispense with an issue. It seems no objection to lay a modus, that it excepts articles of modern introduction specialim. Jee v. Hockley, 4 Price 87.

9. Modus of 1s. for a Welch cow in lieu of tithe of milk of such cow sent to issue. Modus of 1½d. for every calf fallen or dropped in the parish in lieu of tithe of such calf, is not proved if evidence add a qualification to custom. Leathes v. Newett, 4 Price 355.

10. Modus of 15s. payable on Easter Monday by all the occupiers of land in the township, etc., or some or one on behalf of all, in lieu of tithe of grass growing within the same township, whether the same be mown or made into hay, or eaten by barren and unprofitable cattle covering the tithe of agistment, if there be evidence given of its having been paid, and for the tithe of agistment, will be sent to an issue. Williamson v. Lonsdale (Lord), 5 Price 25.

11. Where tithe of corn has never been paid within memory in the parish, and a contributory payment exempting the whole parish is paid by certain, though not all of the owners and occupiers of estates, the question whether it is a farm or district modus must go to issue. De Whelpdale v. Milburn, 5 Price 485.

12. If modus be laid in answer to case resting on endowment as covering several titheable articles, it must be proved to be payable for all of them. A doubt from evidence as to that extent is not sufficient to direct an issue. Kempson v. Yorke, 8 Price 13.

13. Where evidence in support of tithes, and in support of modus, was very strong and conflicting, an issue was sent to law to determine the question. Taylor v. Cook, 8 Price 650.

14. Doubtful modus not determined by a court of equity, without a trial at law. Chapman v. Smith, 2 Ves. 506.

15. Where a modus was pleaded as covering tithe of hay and agistment, and many receipts for the modus were produced, in some of which it was stated to be paid in lieu of tithe hay, and in others in lieu of tithe hay and joistige, and there was parol evidence of reputation, that the payment covered both hay and agistment, the Court would not decree an account of the tithe of agistment, but left the vicar to an issue. Gibson v. Peacock, Younge 184.

16. To a vicar's bill for tithes, except of corn and grain, the defendants pleaded a modus, as covering all tithes payable to the vicar. No endowment was produced, nor was there any admission or evidence of the tithes to which the vicar was entitled. An issue was directed to try the modus, which issue was found in favour of the vicar. On the further hearing on the postea, the Court referred it to the Master to inquire to what tithes the vicar was entitled. Strong v. Denchfield, Younge 272.

17. A township modus of 4l. was set up in lieu of the tithes of corn and grain. It appeared from a grant in the time of Queen Elizabeth, that the then extended value of the tithes of the parish, which comprised ten other townships, besides the one in question, was 10l. only, the entire quantity of land comprised in the parish being 8,000 acres, and the quantity contained in the particular township 600. From the evidence in the cause, the modus appeared to have been paid and received for upwards of 150 years, though there was some discrepancy in the evidence, whether the modus covered hay only, or hay and corn:—Held, that the value stated in the grant was not conclusive evidence of the actual value, and that the question of rankness, and also the question as to what the modus covered, were properly questions for the consideration of a jury, and an issue was accordingly directed. Rededale (Lord) v. Welby, Younge 202.

18. In a suit for tithes, the defendants alleged that their several farms formed parts of a district of land of considerable extent, for which district a modus was payable in lieu of tithes. The defendants, by their answers, and in schedules and maps annexed thereto, stated and described the boundaries and abutments of the district of land, and also of their several farms, as comprehended within that district. Witnesses were examined with reference to the boundaries who proved the general accuracy of the maps annexed to the answers of the defendants; but deposed, that, to their belief, three small closes of land (no part of the farms of any of the defendants), which were stated by the maps to be within the district, were not in fact within the district:—Held, that this discrepancy was not sufficient to destroy the modus, and that, if it were, still it would be necessary to have the opinion of a jury, as to the accuracy of the maps, and the descriptions in the answers. Rudd v. Wright, Younge 147.

1. Money payments in lieu of tithes, although made as far back as living memory can reach:—Held, not to be moduses where they were apportioned by reference to the poor rates. An issue will not be granted to try the character of such payments. Walter v. Holman, 4 Price 171.

2. In pleading, case proved should correspond with case laid. Therefore, where, in answer to bill for tithes, certain customary payments were alleged, and some payments which, from their smallness, appeared customary, were shown in evidence, without making out moduses as laid, Court of Exchequer, without issue, decreed for plaintiff. Blake v. Veyrie, 3 Dow 189.

3. The defendants to a bill by a rector for tithes of hay, set up a modus of twopence for each load of hay, of the weight of one ton, payable at Easter by the several occupiers in lieu of tithes of hay grown from Easter in the year preceding, inclusive; and they, by their answer, further stated that the amount of the modus payable to the rector under such custom had been usually ascertained by a person, on behalf of the rector, inspecting the ricks of hay made within the parish in each year, and forming an estimate of the number of loads of one ton weight contained in each rick, upon which estimate the whole of the annual modus payable to the rector was calculated, but that this mode of estimating the weight formed no part of the custom: it also appeared that, in a suit instituted in the Exchequer by the same rector against some occupiers for the tithe of hay in the same parish, an issue had been directed, and the jury having found that 2*d.* for every load of hay of the weight of one ton had been immemorially paid to the rector at Easter in each year by the several occupiers of lands, in lieu of the tithes of hay, the rector's bill had been dismissed with costs:—Held, that the alleged modus was bad in law; and the account ought to be directed against the defendants, without directing an issue as to the validity of the modus. Goodenough v. Powell, 2 Russ. 219.

4. In a suit by the rector for tithes, the defendants pleaded a modus as covering their lands, as part of a district or tract of land, called Allesley Park; the defendants, in support of their defence, proved the boundaries of the district, and proved by terriers, rectors' books, and other documents, and also by parol testimony, the existence of the payment as a modus for the district, for upwards of 150 years. The rector gave in evidence Pope Nicholas's taxation, various inquisitions and surveys, in which the rectory, and the district in respect of which the modus was pleaded, were estimated at values wholly inconsistent and irreconcilable with the existence of the alleged modus:—Held, that the rankness of the modus, as compared with the value stated in the ancient documents, was not a sufficient ground to disturb so ancient a payment without an issue. And an issue being accordingly tried, and a verdict found for the defendants, thereby establishing the modus:—Held, after verdict, that it was for the jury to consider the weight due to the documentary evidence produced by the rector, and whether it ascribed to the rectory and the district their actual value at the time, or whether that evidence bore internal marks of its being erroneous in those respects. And an application for a new trial, on the ground that such consideration of the evidence ought not to have been left to the jury, was refused. Bree v. Beck, Younge 211.

5. The defendant having set up a farm modus, in answer to a bill for tithes, issues were directed to try whether the ancient farm consisted of the lands mentioned in the answer, and whether a certain modus had been immemorially payable for the tithes arising upon it. The jury found that the farm consisted of these lands, together with four other closes, and was covered by a modus. The circumstance, that the jury found the ancient farm to consist of other lands, besides those mentioned in the pleadings, is no ground for a new trial, unless the plaintiff can show that he has evidence with respect to those four closes, which, upon the supposition that they are parcels of the alleged ancient farm, might materially vary the substance of the case. Bailey v. Sewell, 1 Russ. 239.

6. Semble, an issue to try money payment set up as a farm modus, may be granted on the parol evidence of a single witness, uncorroborated by other evidences, but his testimony must be positive and distinct, and should apply to everything necessary to be proved before the jury, in order to establish the fact intended to be tried. If it be insufficient or unsatisfactory in any of those respects, the Court will not grant an issue, but will proceed to decree an account of the tithes. Wolley v. Underhill, 13 Price 500; M'Clel. 317.

7. A double issue may be directed to try the validity of a farm modus; the inquiry being, first, as to the existence of the ancient farm; secondly, as to the payment of the modus. Bryan v. Parker, 1 Y. & Coll. 170.

8. Where, after two trials of an issue on a modus in a tithe cause, in both of which defendant (in equity) obtained verdicts, the Court dismissed bill as to tithes covered by modus, with all costs at law and in equity, except the costs of the first trial of the issue, as to which they ordered each party to pay his own costs,—the question raised by motion for new trial having been doubtful. Stuart v. Greenall, 13 Price 755; M'Clel. 705.

9. On a bill filed by a perpetual curate against occupiers for the tithes of hay and certain small tithes, it appeared probable, from the evidence, that previous to the year 1715 the curate only received the tithes by permission of the lay impropriator; but it was proved that since that period he had, to a certain extent, received tithes, or a compensation for tithes, and that no tithes of any description had ever been demanded by, or paid to, the lay impropriator:—Held, that the curate's title to tithes was established; but issues were directed to try the existence of certain moduses set up by the defendants. Oliver v. Latham, 1 Y. & Coll. C. C. 243; 6 Jur. 206. Affirmed 1 Ph. 408; 13 L. J., N. S., Ch., 149.

1. Where the defendants in a tithe suit set up by their answer certain yearly payments as moduses, but insisted that, if the same, for any reason, were not good and valid moduses from time immemorial, they must be taken to have been payable as a good and valid real composition, made with the assent of all parties whose assent was necessary thereto, and before the restraining stat. of 13 Eliz.:—Held, upon a re-hearing, that the allegation as to the composition was not shaped as stating a fact in the alternative, but only as introducing an argument, and, therefore, might be rejected as surplusage; and that the defendants, under the circumstances of the case, were entitled to an issue as to the modus. Janus College (Oxford) v. Gibbs, 1 Y. & Coll. 445. And see S. C. 1 Y. & Coll. 145; 4 L. J., N. S., Exch. Eq., on original hearing.

2. Where the circumstances appearing on the evidence in a tithe suit were inconsistent with the statement in the bill as to the modus set up, the Court refused to direct an issue to try its existence. Cooper v. Byron, 8 Y. & Coll. 467. Affirmed on a re-hearing S. C. nom. Cooper v. Hewson, 4 Y. & Coll. 269.

3. The validity of a modus for outners to pay 4d. an acre for ancient pasture land, having been established, the rector was allowed to take an issue to try whether it applied to ancient pasture lands which, after being meadowed or ploughed up within the time of legal memory, were re-converted to pasture; and the House reserved costs and further directions till such issue should have been determined. Byron v. Cooper, 11 Cl. & F. 558.

4. To a bill by the rector for an account of tithes against the owners of the manor and the lands in the parish, the defendants set up a modus of 13l. 6s. 8d. By the documents coming out of the possession of the defendants, it appeared that 13l. 6s. 8d., and also 8s. 9d. not pleaded, had been paid by the owner of the manor and lands for different considerations expressed in the documents, and at different times of the year, from 1607 until 1823; when the then owners of the fee agreed to discontinue the money payments, and thenceforward to pay tithes in kind:—Held, that in such a case the Court would decree an account of the tithes, without requiring the plaintiff to establish his right at law either in an issue or by an action; that in such a case, if upon the evidence the existence of the modus as pleaded were doubtful, the Court would direct an issue and not leave the plaintiff to his action at law. Raine v. Cairns, 4 Hare 327. Affirmed sub. nom. Cairns v. Raine, 12 Cl. & F. 833.

4. Other Matters.

5. As to the propriety of bill to establish moduses, see Rudge v. Chapman, 2 Com. 697.

6. Rector of M. claiming tithes in kind, the occupier and landlord filed a cross-bill to establish modus payable to rector of S. by the lord of the liberty of which the lands were parcel. It was objected, first, that the rector of S. not disputing the modus, a bill would not lie to establish it; second, that the other owners of lands in the liberty should have been parties. Bill dismissed. Woolston v. Wright, 3 Anstr. 801.

7. A defence of modus is wholly inconsistent with a defence in non decimando. Norton v. Hammond, 1 Y. & J. 94.

8. Defendant cannot plead a payment as a modus, and afterwards insist upon the same payment as a composition, requiring six months to determine it. Wolley v. Brownhill, M'Cl. 317; 13 Price 500.

9. Bill lies to perpetuate the testimony of witnesses to prove a modus; but quere, if it will lie to establish a modus. Somerset v. Fotherby, 1 Vern. 185.

10. Where occupiers file a bill against a party to establish a modus, pending a suit instituted against them by the same party for the tithes, it is not necessary for them, in support of their bill, to have the defendant's admission of their occupation. Fisher v. Ariott, 2 Y. & Coll. 208.

11. One entire payment may be due for many distinct sorts of tithes; it is no objection that it falls unequally on the parishioners by being as heavy on the occupiers of small as of large tenements and farms. Bennet v. Read, 1 Anstr. 327.

12. Defence to bill for tithes of a district modus where the defendants do not state on record, and prove by evidence, an occupation therein, must fail. Jenkinson v. Royston, 5 Price 495.

13. In a suit for tithes, an admission by the defendant of the plaintiff's right to a specified modus, in lieu of tithes, which cannot be sustained, in consequence of its being defectively pleaded, is an admission of his title to the tithes. Wharton v. Child, 7 L. J., Ch., 106.

14. The commissioner appointed under an inclosure Act stated that lands in the parish were subject to a modus, which "extended only to the lands when occupied by the owners thereof," or by residents, but that such lands become liable to the payment of tithes, the amount of which he specified in a schedule, when otherwise occupied, or "if converted into tillage." A resident owner built in one of his fields, then subject to the modus, a house, attached to it a garden, and planted fruit trees on the rest of the field:—Held, that by the planting of the fruit trees there had not been a conversion into tillage so as to destroy the modus and render the land subject to the increased tithe. Dudman v. Vigar, 6 L. R., H. L., 212; 42 L. J., C. P., 294; 29 L. T., N. S., 552.

The conversion into tillage of any part of the land, if such conversion had actually taken place, would not under this award make the whole field, but only that part of it which was so converted, liable to the increased tithe. Id.

15. The case of a money payment in lieu of tithes made upon an annual value is not like that of an ordinary composition, and it requires strong evidence to make out that such a payment is to be treated as a composition; and if the annual payment is less than the annual value, the mere circumstance of the receipt of the annual payment will not establish it as a composition. Letts v. London Corn Exchange Co., 1 De G. M. & G. 398; 21 L. J., Ch., 684.

Whether, assuming such a payment to be made and received as a composition, the same notice is necessary to determine the composition as is requisite in the case of one relating to a common render of tithes. Quære. Ib.

XII. CUSTOM.

1. Tithes are not due by particular custom. Buxton v. Hutchinson, 2 Vern. 46.

2. Where a titheable article has been introduced into a parish within time of memory, but the mode of tithing it has always been uniform, the Court will support the established practice, semble. Baker v. Athill, 2 Anstr. 492.

3. Where a customary manner of tithing is generally alleged, defendant cannot be let in to prove a particular manner of tithing. Boughton v. Wright, Bunb. 186.

4. Custom that the occupiers are to give notice of setting out of tithes, or an allegation that there is some such custom, is uncertain and bad. Beaver v. Spratley, Bunb. 333.

5. The words "white tithes" have no general meaning, but are applicable to distinct things in distinct parishes. The meaning, therefore, of those words, as applicable to a particular parish, is to be ascertained only from the usage in that parish. Becher v. Clayc, 1 Y. & Coll. 448.

6. The reasonableness of setting out every tenth turnip instead of every tenth heap of turnips for the parson, must depend upon whether, by that mode of tithing, the parson has an opportunity of seeing that the tithe is fairly laid out. Clarke v. Clarke, 2 Y. & Coll. 245.

7. A usage to pay to the rector of the parish one-twentieth only, instead of the tenth, of the titheable matters of lands in an extensive manor, proved to be of very great antiquity, and supported by evidence that the manor, though in modern times reputed to be within the parish and rectory, was anciently a parish of itself, was held to be a void usage, no evidence being adduced of its having had any legal origin:—Held, also, that it was impossible to treat the rector as a portionist, so as to deprive him of his common law right, and impose on him the burden of proof required from a portionist; and that, it being clear, that the manor (whatever might have been the case formerly) was at the present time within the parish and rectory, the legal union of the manor to the rectory would clothe the rector with the common law right to the tithes of the district so legally united to the parish. Kensington (Lord) v. Pugh, Younge 125.

8. A custom to pay the seventh lamb, pig, fleece, or gosling, if there be seven, instead of a tenth only of the value of the lambs, pigs, fleeces, or goslings, in lieu of the tithes of such lambs, etc., and if there be seventeen, then a lamb, pig, fleece, or gosling, and so an additional lamb, etc., for every successive ten:—Held, void. Prichett v. Honeyborne, 1 Y. & J. 135.

9. It is not correct to plead, that by custom used and approved in P., and nineteen other parishes, no tithes of a particular kind were due and payable to rector of P. Page v. Wilson, 2 J. & W. 521.

No custom in non decimando can be good, unless for wood, and for a known and ancient district, not less than a county or hundred. Id. 524.

A custom in part of a hundred, exempting hedges and hedge-rows less than a rod in width from tithes of wood and underwood, is bad. Id. 531.

10. Semble, a custom of rendering one in ten parcels of corn set up together in the quantity of ten sheaves to each, called kivers or riders, in lieu of corn and hay produced in the same year, is not good. Legh v. Glogg, 8 Price 492.

11. Custom that landowner should take the two best lambs out of ten, and the tithe owner the next best, is bad. Hall v. Malby, 6 Price 240.

12. Uncertainty and unreasonableness as to time of taking tithe, and payment for keep, if not taken at that time, vitiates custom. Jenkinson v. Royston, 5 Price 495.

Custom to pay for every foal 1*d.*; for every milch cow 2*d.*, and for every heifer that had but one calf 1*d.*, for and in lieu of milk, and "all profit arising by such cow or heifer, except the calf," is good, notwithstanding the redundancy of expression. Ib.

As to money payment for pigs and geese, dependent in amount on their number. As to custom as to tithe of wool, hemp and fable, rape seed, onion seed, reeds, eggs, etc. Id. 496.

13. As to validity of custom of taking eleventh instead of tenth of article, in consideration of labour bestowed, and where there is an option on part of farmer, which of two ways tithe shall be taken in; issues will be granted to try such questions. Cookburne v. Hughes, 3 Price 408.

14. The established course of setting out the milk is, that the entire meal of the whole herd of cows shall be set forth every tenth day, both morning and evening; and where a custom to the contrary is alleged, it must be formally pleaded or supported by such evidence as will warrant a court of equity in directing an issue to try its validity. Full v. Hutchings, 7 Bro. P. C. 78.

15. A lessee of rectory for three lives, who had made a derivative lease, brings a bill for tithe in kind, and to establish a custom of setting out corn in shocks:—Held, the bill is properly brought, though the tithes are out in lease, to prevent collusion between lessee and occupiers. York (Archbishop) v. Stapleton, 2 Atk. 136.

A modus to take part of the tithes for the whole, has always been held a void custom. Ib.

16. Tithes of fish are only payable by custom, and cannot be claimed as a mere personal title, deductis expensis. Kelynaok v. Gravas, 2 Bro. P. C. 446.

Bill for tithe of fish according to the custom; plaintiff set forth a decree, temp. Car. 2, signed by 130 parishioners, and acquiescing in the custom, yet the Court sent the plaintiff to law. S. C. nom. Gravas v. Kelynaok, Bunb. 239.

At law a verdict was found for plaintiff, and the barons decreed accordingly; but defendants afterwards appealed to the Lords, by whom the decree was affirmed. Id. 258.

1. Bill for tithe of fish, taken at sea, brought within the parish of H., and there sold, and also for fish sold at sea, and the vessel brought back to the parish of H., also for fish taken by the inhabitants, and sold at another port. Plaintiff was impropriate rector of the parish of H., and claimed the tithe as due by custom; but he did not prove his custom:—Held, a good custom, for one tithe may be made by custom and another by common right. Scarborough (Lord) v. Hunter, Bunb. 43.

2. The usual time for tithing lambs is when they can live without a dam (about Michaelmas); a custom, therefore, to tithe them on St. Mark's Day, 25th of April, was held unreasonable. Reynolds v. Vincent, Bunb. 133.

3. Custom that owners of cattle, fed on common lying in two parishes, should pay tithes for agistment in parishes where they respectively reside:—Held, good. Mickleburgh v. Crisp, 2 Bro. P. C. 444.

4. Bill by a rector of a parish against householders, claiming payments in respect of their houses, either as tithes or in lieu of tithes, or as a rate-tithe. He did not by his bill specifically state whether he claimed in respect of a modus proper or of a special custom affecting all houses in the parish, or in respect of prescriptive rights affecting the particular houses, but at the bar contended that there was a custom. With reference to the claim on the ground of modus proper, the evidence showed that he claimed a distinct annual sum as payable by the occupier of each house in the parish; and he claimed also an additional annual payment in respect of every additional building which might be erected on the site of any building already liable. With reference to the ground of prescription, the evidence showed that as to three of the householders their houses had been erected within memory; as to the fourth, the date of the erection of his house was not known, and a payment for one hundred and twenty years was proved, but the amount paid had varied; down to 1811 it was 8s. per year, and then it was increased to 14s. With reference to the ground of custom affecting all the houses in the parish, whenever built, the custom alleged was, that as to new houses the annual amount payable was such as should be agreed upon, and if no agreement could be come to, then to be ascertained by reference to the amounts paid for other buildings of a like nature. There was no personal evidence of the custom, and the account books referred to, though they showed payments, did not show on what principle the custom was founded:—Held, that the claim could not be supported as a prescriptive right; and that, as grounded on a custom—first, the custom, if well alleged, was too uncertain; and, secondly, that it was not alleged with sufficient distinctness, and the bill was dismissed. Champneys v. Buchan, 4 Drew. 1041; 5 W. R. 461.

XIII. TITHE PRESCRIPTION ACT AND STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS.

5. The Statute of Limitations cannot be pleaded to a bill for tithes. Marston v. Cley-pole, Bunb. 213.

6. A bill for an account of tithes received from the occupiers by a person claiming under an adverse legal title, will not lie. St. Asaph (Bishop) v. Williams, Jac. 349.

7. A bill for tithes having been filed within the period limited by the statute 3 & 4 Will. 4, and amended after that period for the purpose of adding another party:—Held, sufficient as against the last party, inasmuch as the bill and amended bill formed but one record. Thorpe v. Mattingley, 2 Y. & Coll. 421; 8 L. J., N. S., Exch. Eq., 9.

8. A suit was instituted for the tithes of a particular district in a parish. The whole tithes of that parish had been demised by general words, but it was not asserted that the lease had been granted with a view to the tithes claimed by the bill, or that the lessee had paid or received anything on account of them:—Held, that the outstanding lease did not prevent the operation of the Statute of Limitations running as regarded the particular tithes claimed. Ely (Dean and Chapter) v. Bliss, 5 Beav. 574; 11 L. J., N. S., Ch., 351; 6 Jur. 496.

The right to tithes as against an ecclesiastical corporation, aggregate is barred under the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, by non-payment for twenty years. Id.

Where, on a bill for tithes of a district of the parish recently brought into cultivation; plea, non-payment and no acknowledgment of the right within twenty years (under 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27) before the commencement of the suit; it appeared from the bill, by way of evidence, that the district was not exempt: that a decree was obtained in 1813 in favour of the lessees of the plaintiff for the tithes generally, and which might have included this particular tithe; and that in 1831 a lease was granted of the tithes of the rectory generally, and was subsisting at the time the act took effect, but no payment or receipt of tithes in respect of the particular district was ever made:—Held, that, showing a right of action and the non-payment during above the period prescribed by the Act, the plea was good. Id.

The Act 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 100, is unaffected by the provisions of the Act 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27; the interpretation clause of the latter Act, although enacting that the word "land" shall in its meaning extend to tithes, has reference to an estate in tithes, and not to tithes as a chattel, and the 2nd section, therefore, does not embrace the case of a render of tithes as a chattel by the person bound to pay to the tithe owner. S. C. 2 De G. M. & G. 459.

9. The statute 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 100, brings down the period of legal memory from the time of 1 Rich. 1 to the time of the commencement of the two incumbencies (not being together less than sixty years), and three years of a third incumbency, but does not create a new ground of exemption, or destroy the right to tithes upon mere proof of non-payment or non-render during two such incumbencies, and three years of a third, in cases where proof of non-payment, or non-render, from the time of 1 Rich. 1, would, before the statute 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 100, have established no exemption. Salheld v. Johnston, 1 Hare 196; 11 L. J., N. S., Ch., 201; 6 Jur. 210. Reversed 1

Macn. & G. 242; 1 H. & Tw. 329; 18 L. J., N. S., Ch., 493; 14 Jur. 1. And see S. C. at law, 2 Mann. Gr. & Sc. 749; 18 L. J., N. S., Exch., 89; 2 Exch. Rep. 256.

1. Courts of equity are not bound in tithe causes to any limitation in point of time for which tithes are sought, although, à convenienti, it has been usual to confine the account to the period of six years where the Court sees no reason to depart from such usage. St. Paul's (Wardens of) v. Lincoln (Bishop), 4 Price 86.

2. In a bill for tithes in the Exchequer, the Court decrees payment of tithes to the time of the filing of the bill; but in Chancery, to the time of the decree. Carleton v. Brightwell, 2 P. W. 463.

3. In a suit in equity for an account of tithes, the defendant set up an award, which declared that a certain sum should be paid in lieu of tithes, provided the whole lands were subject to tithes; but if only subject to tithes according to a specified terrier, then a different sum was awarded. The defendant's counsel also set up at the hearing the stat. 53 Geo. 3, c. 127, as a bar to the recovery of tithes for more than six years. The statute was not pleaded by the answer of the defendant:—Held, that the award, not being final, was void, but that the plaintiff was only entitled to an account of tithes for six years before the filing of the bill. Goode v. Waters, 20 L. J., N. S., Ch., 72.

4. To a bill filed for tithes against occupiers of lands in July 1833, the owner was made a defendant in January 1835:—Quære, whether he was defendant to a suit commenced within the time limited by the Act, 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 100, s. 3, that is, within a year from the 17th August 1832. Plowden v. Thorpe, 7 Cl. & F. 137; West 42; 4 Jur. 211.

5. Deed creating composition real, will not be presumed from payment of 20*l.*, in lieu of tithe for two hundred years. Estcourt v. Kingscote, 4 Madd. 140.

6. The consent of the ordinary to composition real may be presumed from length of time. Sambridge v. Clerk, 1 Anstr. 372.

7. An agreement was made between the rector and inhabitants of a parish, allotting lands in lieu of the ancient glebe with some additions, on account of the rector losing certain rights of common by an inclosure, and also providing an annual stipend, or pecuniary compensation in lieu of tithes. The successor declined abiding by the agreement, unless on an increase of stipend, and an amicable suit was instituted in chancery, to which the ordinary, but not the patron, who was the King, was made a party; and the parishioners agreeing to increase the stipend, a decree was made by consent to ratify the article of agreement. This agreement was acquiesced in for eighty years (forty of which the rector, against whom the decree was made, remained incumbent):—Held, that as to the pecuniary composition the agreement was not binding, the patron not having been party thereto; and the composition being made as respected the past value of tithes, without any regard to future increasing value. Cholmley v. Att.-Gen., 7 Bro. P. C. 34. S. C. nom. Att.-Gen. v. Cholmley, 2 Eden 304; Amb. 510.

8. In 1593 the parish church of K. (a rectory) having become ruinous, the parishioners of the adjoining parish of W. (a perpetual curacy) entered into an agreement under which the parishioners of K. were admitted to the use of their church and to the benefit of all usual ecclesiastical offices, which were thenceforward performed by the incumbents for the time being of W. for the parishioners of both parishes. From 1606 onwards there was no separate presentation to the benefice of K., but no formal union of the livings of W. and K. was made, although the holders for the time being of the living of W. were cited, and made official returns and paid charges, as rectors of K. In 1844 the Tithe Commissioners awarded a tithe rent-charge in respect of lands at K. which then were, and had since remained, the property of the defendants and their predecessors in title. The holder of the benefice of W. claimed the tithe rent-charge upon the ground that there had been a union of his benefice with that of K., and that the profits of the latter benefice belonged to the holder of the united benefices:—Held, that there had been no legal or effectual union upon which the claim could be founded, and also that no receipt of the tithe rent-charge by the defendants or their predecessors in title could be shown, and the defendants were therefore not liable to account. Att.-Gen. v. Durham (Earl), 46 L. T. 16.

Semble, the statute limiting the time for recovery of tithes (2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 100) would not have operated to bar the claim. Id.

Semble, also, the remedy for arrears would have been against the occupier, not the owner, of the lands charged. Id.

Semble, also, antagonistic cases cannot be combined by co-plaintiffs in an action, and that the attorney-general was not a proper party to the present proceedings, his claim being founded upon a case which could only succeed if the case of the informant and co-plaintiff should fail. Id.

The object of the Tithe Prescription Act, 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 100, to be inferred from its preamble, as explained by the enacting part, was to prevent the expense and inconvenience of suits for tithes, by establishing certain limitations of time, after which claims of moduses and discharges should not be questioned. And the effect of the Act, as applicable to claims of exemption, is not only to facilitate the proof of exemption de facto for the time past, but to dispense with the proof (which was before required from laymen) of any legal origin of such exemption. Id.

And semble (though the opinion of the majority of the judges consulted was to the contrary), that the Act applies to cases in which it appears that the lands have paid tithes of some titheable matters, other than those for which the exemption is claimed, and even where such last-mentioned matters are of modern introduction, as well as to cases in which the lands have been enjoyed without payment of any tithes. Id.

But:—Held, that at all events it is sufficient, even in a case of the former description, for the occupier to allege and prove that his lands have been enjoyed for the prescribed period, without payment of the tithes demanded, unless the party claiming the tithes shall specifically allege as well as prove that other tithes have during that period been paid. And, therefore, where a bill by a vicar for some particular tithes contained no such allegation, and the defendants alleged and proved that their lands had been enjoyed for the prescribed period, without payment of the tithes demanded, or any money or other matter in lieu thereof, it was:—Held, that the Court could not notice the fact that tithes of other matters had been paid for the same lands, although that fact was clearly established by the evidence in the cause; and, therefore, that whether the fact were so or not, the defence set up was, upon these pleadings, a complete answer to the plaintiff's demand, and the bill was accordingly dismissed. Ib.

Semble, that a modus proved to have been acted upon for the prescribed period cannot be defeated on the ground of rankness. Ib.

1. The Commissioners of Church Temporalities in Ireland having filed a bill for the recovery of tithe rent-charge, in respect of which there had been no payment or acknowledgment in writing for the then previous twenty years, and the defendants having pleaded the Statute of Limitations, to which the plaintiffs demurred:—Held, that tithe rent-charge is neither "tithes" nor "land," but "rent" within ss. 1, 2 of the Statute of Limitations, that the plaintiffs' claim was barred, and that even if it were "composition" within s. 1 of that Act, still, the plaintiffs not being transferees of the immunity from the Act, which as to composition rent-charges was enjoyed by spiritual corporations sole, could not recover. Commissioners of Church Temporalities in Ireland v. Grant, 11 L. R., Ir., 430.

XIV. SUBTRACTION.

2. As to the evidence of fraud in case of subtraction of tithe, etc. Hall v. Maltby, 6 Price 240.

3. Bill for tithe of lambs; the ewes were kept by defendant, in the parish of D. (where the demand lay), all the year until Christmas; when they were ready to drop their lambs, he removed to the parish of S. (where there was only a small modus for lambs), and there kept until Lady-day for the convenience of forage; and at Lady-day they were driven back to D. Plaintiff complained of this as a fraud in the tithing. Per curiam, here is not a sufficient proof of fraud; and plaintiff's bill was dismissed. Boys v. Ellis, Bunb. 139.

4. It is a fraud in equity to remove sheep fed in one parish to another before shearing and lambing seasons, and then driving them back again without accounting for tithe in the parish wherein they were depastured. Hall v. Maltby, 6 Price 240.

5. Where the occupier of lands, shortly before the lambing season, removed his ewes to part of his farm in another parish, which he occupied tithe free; and, shortly after the lambing season, removed back the ewes with their lambs to that part of his farm on which they had previously been depastured, where such as lived remained until the next shearing time, and then rendered tithe of wool to the vicar, there being no direct evidence of the removal being fraudulent, and some evidence that the land to which the ewes were removed to drop their lambs was the most convenient for the purpose:—Held, that the vicar was not entitled to the tithes of the lambs, and that he was not entitled to the tithe of agistment of the ewes, from the time of their last shearing, down to their removal to drop their lambs; but that the tithe of wool at the next shearing was the whole that the vicar was entitled to. Scott v. Smelt, Younge 256.

6. If a sequestrator file a bill for subtraction of tithe during the vacancy, the bishop of the diocese must be made a party, because the sequestrator must account to him for his receipts. Jones v. Barrett, Bunb. 192.

XV. COMPOSITION.

1. Validity, 6734.
2. Notice to Determine, 6736.
3. Other Matters, 6736.

1. Validity.

7. Trover for a lamb and a sheaf of wheat; upon not guilty pleaded, the jury found, that Fountain Abbey, being of the order of Cesteaux, was exempted from tithe of their lands, quos propriis manibus excolerent: that the abbot was seised of the lands in question before the council of Lateran; that between the years 1216 and 1261 there was a composition between the abbot of F. and the prebendary of S. under their common seals, whereby the abbey should be free from tithe of all lands, tilled at their own charge, within the grange of H., and they should pay as tithe for all other lands five marks yearly to the prebendary; and that another composition was made (which did not appear to be confirmed by the patron and ordinary), whereby the prebend, and his successors in time to come, should yearly elect either to receive the tithes in kind, or five marks per annum in lieu, to be notified to the abbot before St. Thomas's day; and if the prebend should elect to receive the money, his right to the tithes of lamb and wool should be paid as formerly; and they further found that the possessions of the abbey came to the Crown by 31 Hen. 8, and that at the time of the trover defendants were proprietors of the lands in the grange of H., and that a lamb and sheaf were renovated upon the land: and whether or no tithes in kind should be paid for the lands was the question. Per Hale, C. B.—By the first composition, the abbot only was discharged, but, by the second, the abbot and his tenants were discharged of tithes of corn and hay only. The doubts in this case were, whether the second composition was good without a confirmation and an annual election, and also by whom and to whom notice was to be given since the dissolution. Afterwards this cause was argued again, when the Court held that the second composition did not affect the successors of the prebend, and that therefore the abbot was not bound by it; for by the first composition the prebend and his successors were only bound quandiu, etc., and by the second composition the five marks go to recompense of all, whether in propriis manibus, or in the hands of the tenants. But to this it may be answered, that the successor may still elect whether to take the five marks or tithes in kind, and therefore he is at no prejudice:—Held, also, that the power of election is gone, for it cannot now be made according to the composition; and that therefore the first composition should stand quoad terras in propriis manibus, and for the others that tithe in kind may be taken as before. Judgment for defendant. Ingolsby v. Wivell, Hardr. 381.

1. When evidence of a payment in lieu of tithes was given, extending so far back as the reign of Charles I., but more ancient documents relating to the same parish, and among them the Ecclesiastical Survey of Henry VIII., made no mention of such payment:—Held, that an allegation of such payment having existed before legal memory was not supported. Graves (Lord) v. Fisher, 3 Cl. & F. 1; 8 Bli. N. S. 937.

2. A composition by way of retainer by parol, is good only for one year; but a parol lease of tithes, even for one year, is void. Keddington v. Bridgman, Bunb. 2.

3. In order to establish a real composition for tithes, the evidence must be such as to distinguish it clearly from a prescriptive payment. Hames v. Swaine, 2 Cox 179.

4. A real composition cannot be established without showing the deed by which it was created, or proving its existence. Heathcote v. Mainwaring, 3 Bro. C. C. 217.

5. A composition of 20s. yearly, out of the profits of T. manor, in lieu of tithes of J. park, is good. Sambridge v. Benton, 2 Anstr. 372.

The consent of the ordinary to composition real may be presumed from length of time. Id.

6. Deed creating composition real will not be presumed from payment for 200 years of 20l. in lieu of tithes. Estcourt v. Kingscote, 4 Madd. 140.

7. Lessee of tithes agreed with the owner of lands, for certain collateral considerations, not to take tithes in kind from the tenants of the lands for twelve years, but to accept a reasonable compensation not exceeding 3s. 6d. per acre, and thereto bound himself and his assigns. His under-lessee sued (in the name of a trustee, to whom he had nominally again under-leased), for tithes in kind against the tenant of the land, and had a decree. Such an agreement is void for the uncertainty of the sum to be paid. Bremer v. Hill, 2 Anstr. 413.

The lessee of the land cannot claim to hold discharged of tithes under any covenant with his lessor. Id. 414.

8. Where an agreement having been made between the rector and inhabitants of a parish, allotting lands in lieu of the ancient glebe, with some addition, in consequence of the rector's losing certain rights of common by inclosure, and also providing an annual pecuniary compensation in lieu of tithes, which, upon the successor's declining to abide by, an amicable suit was instituted in this court, to which the ordinary (but not the patron, who was the king) was made a party, and the parishioners agreeing to increase the stipend, a decree was made, by consent, to ratify the articles:—Held, that this agreement, though acquiesced under for eighty years (forty of which, however, the rector, against whom the decree was made, had remained incumbent), was not binding as to the pecuniary compensation, the patron not having been a party, and the composition having been made only with regard to the past, and not to the future, increasing value of the tithes. Att.-Gen. v. Cholmley, 2 Eden 304; Ambli. 510. S. C. on appeal, nom. Cholmley v. Att.-Gen., 7 Bro. P. C. 34.

9. A composition real, or grant of tithes made by a vicar to the lord of a manor, in consideration of his finding a priest to officiate in a chapel, etc., previously to 32 Hen. 8, c. 7, and supported by evidence of constant perception and compliance with the conditions on which it was made:—Held, to be valid. Ridley v. Storey, Dan. 157.

10. Though it is not necessary to produce the actual deed creating a composition real, still reasonable evidence must be given to make it probable that such a deed once existed; and the mere circumstance of the possession of a piece of land mentioned in various ancient documents as having been assigned to the curate, is not a sufficient ground for any such presumption. Dent v. Rob. 1 Y. & Coll. 1.

11. A verdict and judgment against a rector, obtained in proceedings in prohibition as far back as the year 1680, will, in case of any claim to tithes being made by a subsequent rector, be conclusive against him of the existence of a binding composition real. Wynnriatt v. Lindon, 8 L. J., N. S., Ch., 121; 3 Jur. 50.

A binding composition real need not have been made within the time of legal memory; and it is not necessary that the deed creating the composition real should be produced. Id.

12. To make out a defence to a bill for tithes of a composition real, it is not enough to show that the same money payment had been constantly received in satisfaction of tithes for a considerable period before 13 Eliz., but evidence must be given of the existence of an agreement in writing, and made between all proper parties interested; nor will issue be granted on such evidence, or costs allowed to those defendants who are occupiers. Bennett v. Sheffington, 4 Price 143.

13. An agreement with a former rector, by which benefits were given to the rectory in lieu of tithes, and which was decreed by the Court of Chancery to be carried into effect, is void; but his successor, whilst in the enjoyment of what was so given, cannot maintain a suit for the tithes. Floden v. Thorpe, 1 West 42; 7 Cl. & F. 137; 4 Jur. 211. Reversing S. C. nom. Thorpe v. Mattingley, 2 Y. & Coll. 421; 8 L. J., N. S., Exch. Eq. 9.

An agreement was made (in 1711) between the rector and the owner of the lands (who was also patron of the living), by which certain lands and a perpetual annuity were given to the rector in exchange for his glebe lands, and for the discharge of the lands occupied by the defendants from tithes. The agreement was, and continued to be, beneficial to the church, having been made with reference to the probable future increase in the value of the tithes; it was approved by the ordinary, and established by a decree of the Court of Chancery, and acted on down to the filing of the bill, when the rector refused to accept the annuity, but still retained the lands allotted to him in the exchange, which were much more valuable than the old glebe lands:—Held, that, although it was open to the rector to put an end to the agreement as being void under the disabling statutes, he was not entitled to the aid of equity to enforce his legal title to the tithes while he retained part of the consideration for their discharge, contrary to the principle that he who seeks equity must do equity. Id. And see 5 Mees. & Welsb. 302.

1. By letters patent a rectory, with the appurtenances, was granted to the dean, etc., of York, and their successors, for the support and maintenance of a grammar school. In 1712 an arrangement was entered into between the dean and chapter and their lessee of the rectory, and the lord of the manor of a district within the rectory, to take a perpetual composition in lieu of the tithes of that district, and such arrangement was carried into effect by deeds of covenant executed by the dean and chapter and their lessee, and the lord of the manor; and the latter granted a perpetual rent-charge to the amount of the composition out of his estates. The composition or rent continued to be received by the lessees of the dean and chapter, for upwards of a century, when the dean and chapter, the rectory being then in their own hands, refused any longer to receive it, and filed their bill for tithe. The Court held, that the deed of covenant of 1712 was void under the Disabling Statute, and that the covenant was not binding on the dean and chapter, and that they were entitled to the tithes. York (Dean & Chapter) v. Middleborough, 2 Y. & J. 196.

2. In a suit for tithes by the rector, the defendant set up a real composition of 10s. as covering, with other lands, the lands in his occupation. In support of that defence, he proved that, in the reign of Charles II., the lands in question were divided among three persons, on a partition, and from which persons the title was regularly deduced by numerous instruments, many of which conveyed the tithes of the portions of the lands comprised in them; and, from some of them, it appeared that a money payment, parcel of a larger payment, amounting to 10s., was provided for the parson, in lieu of the tithes; he also proved that, in 1666, in an action, on the statute, for not setting out tithes, by the then rector, against an occupier of the lands, a verdict was found for the defendant. It appeared from the evidence that tithes had been rendered prior to the reign of Edward II.; but, from that period, no trace could be found of any tithe having ever been rendered; nor was there any evidence of the payment of the 10s., or any part of it; there was no reference in the pleadings, or in the evidence, to the actual deed of composition. The Court held, that there was not sufficient evidence from which a real composition could, in the present state of the law, be inferred; and decreed an account, with costs. It is clearly settled that mere non-payment will not support the defence of a real composition, nor be evidence from whence to presume the deed which must have been the foundation of it. Lediard v. Anstie, 3 Y. & J. 548.

3. The case of a money payment in lieu of tithes made upon an annual value is not like that of an ordinary composition, and it requires strong evidence to make out that such a payment is to be treated as a composition; and if the annual payment is less than the annual value, the mere circumstance of the receipt of the annual payment will not establish it as a composition. Letts v. London Corn Exchange Co., 1 De G. M. & G. 398; 21 L. J., N. S., Ch., 684. And see London & Blackwall Railway Co. v. Letts, Letts v. London & Blackwall Railway Co., 3 H. L. Ca. 470; 6 Rail. Ca. 687; 15 Jur. 995. Reversing 5 Hare, 605; 4 Rail. Ca. 530; 11 Jur. 669.

2. Notice to Determine.

4. A composition for tithes cannot be determined as to part, and continued as to the rest. Reynel v. Rogers, Bunb. 15.

5. Peremptory composition requires notice to determine it. Anon., Lofft. 66.

6. Whether notice is necessary to determine a composition where a modus is insisted upon, quære. Atkyns v. Willoughby de Brooke (Lord), 2 Anstr. 397.

7. Notice to determine composition should be reasonable in point of time, and suited to convenience of farmer. A notice by parol at time of settling annual amount of the tithe due, the tithe owner telling the farmer that, "for the time to come," he requires the tithes to be paid in kind, sufficient. When the farmer pleads the composition as a modus, he cannot insist on no notice to determine having been given. Leach v. Bailey, 6 Price 504.

8. General allegation, in answer, that defendant could not be affected by notice to determine a composition in any way, is not sufficient intimation to plaintiff that defendant intended to rely on insufficiency of notice. Bennett v. Noale, Wightw. 324.

9. The same notice must be given to determine a composition for tithes as between landlord and tenant, and that although the defendant set up modus. Bishop v. Chichester, 2 Bro. C. C. 161.

10. A rector agreed to receive a money payment in lieu of tithes, upon the annual value of houses which were about to be pulled down. Other premises were built on their site of greater annual value. Quære, must a new rector, who has received the money payment, give the same notice, to put an end to such composition, as is requisite in regard to a common render of tithes. Letts v. London Corn Exchange Co., 1 De G. M. & G. 398; 21 L. J., N. S., Ch., 684.

3. Other Matters.

11. A bill to establish a customary payment in lieu of tithes, does not lie upon a simple demand of tithes without suit. Gordon v. Simpkinson, 11 Ves. 509.

12. A vicar may avail himself of his general title for tithes, in opposition to a pecuniary composition, even though established by deed, executed by parson, patron, and ordinary. Mortimer v. Lloyd, 7 Bro. P. C. 44.

13. Defendant in tithe cause, having set up defence of composition real, cannot afterwards rely on its being, in fact, a modus; such defence being double, and too uncertain. Ward v. Shepherd, 3 Price 608.

1. Where a money payment has been set up as a defence of a modus, it is a denial of plaintiff's title, and therefore cannot (failing as a modus) be used pro hac vice to defeat the immediate claim, as being a composition undetermined for want of six months' notice. Wolley v. Brownhill, 13 Price 501; McClellan, 317.

2. Composition for tithe puts an end to lien on the land; therefore, where produce of land is taken by sequestration, and sold, tithe owner cannot demand payment thereof out of that fund. Dickinson v. Smith, 4 Madd. 177.

3. A rector having come to an agreement with his parishioners for tithes, cannot in equity set up his own non-residence to avoid the agreement. Atkinson v. Folkes, 1 Anstr. 67.

An agreement between rector and parish for tithes, is not within the Statutes of Elizabeth. Semble. Ib.

4. Payment of a composition for the tithes of turnips, whether pulled or eaten off the ground, where neither party considered it as an agistment tithe. Garnons v. Barnard, 1 Anstr. 319.

5. Composition for tithes, received after the death of the incumbent by the successor, apportioned with reference to the respective periods of enjoyment. Aynsley v. Wordsworth, 2 Ves. & B. 331.

6. As to evidence of money payments in tithe causes. Drake v. Smyth, 5 Price 369.

7. Where the defendants, in a tithe suit, set up by their answer certain yearly payments as moduses, but insisted that, if the same, for any reason, were not good and valid moduses from time immemorial, they must be taken to have been payable as a good and valid real composition, made with the assent of all parties whose assent was necessary thereto, and before the restraining stat. of 13 Eliz.:—Held, upon a re-hearing, that the allegation as to the real composition was not shaped as stating a fact in the alternative, but only introducing an argument, and therefore might be rejected as surplusage; and that the defendants, under the circumstances of the case, were entitled to an issue as to the modus. Jesus College (Oxford) v. Gibbs, 1 Y. & Coll. 445.

8. Upon the application of a tithe owner, under the 4 Geo. 4, c. 99, s. 38, a receiver in a minor's cause was directed to pay over one year's arrear of tithe composition out of the proceeds of a distress for rent made by him upon a tenant, who was primarily liable to payment of the composition, but the tenant ought to have notice of such application. Where the amount is small, the tithe owner will not be compelled to apply to be examined pro interesse suo. Hanhes v. Smith, Sau. & Sc. 326.

9. In a suit by rector for an account of tithes against the owner of the manse and lands in the parish, semble, that the defendants were not bound by an agreement between the rector and the last owners of the fee to discontinue money payments, and pay tithes in kind, but were at liberty to relieve themselves of the tithe as of an incumbrance on the estate, notwithstanding they had notice at the time of their purchase of the agreement between the last owners and the rector, and of the subsequent payment of tithes in kind. Raine v. Cairns, 4 Hare 327.

10. A rector, who took a composition for his tithes every Michaelmas, died in January 1841. The new rector was collated in the following April, and before harvest time he employed a surveyor to value the tithes. The surveyor furnished him with a report, stating what he considered ought yearly to be paid by each of the occupiers, as a composition in lieu of tithes. In August, the new rector required the respective occupiers to pay him, as a compensation for their tithes, the amount mentioned by the surveyor. The occupiers accordingly, in November 1841, made their payments according to the surveyor's report, for the whole year from Michaelmas 1840 to Michaelmas 1841:—Held, that the representative of the late rector was entitled to be paid by the new rector a proportion, according to the time which elapsed from Michaelmas 1840 to the late rector's death, of the composition which existed in the late rector's lifetime. Oldham v. Hubbard, 2 Y. & Coll. C. C. 209.

Semble, that a composition for tithes is within the stats, 11 Geo. 2, c. 19, s. 15, and 4 Will. 4, c. 22. Ib.

XVI. COMMUTATION AND TITHE RENT-CHARGE.

Commissioners and Practice under Acts.] 11. The parties to an action, brought upon a feigned issue, under the provisions of the Tithe Commutation Act, 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 71, are not precluded by that Act from sustaining a bill of discovery in aid of the trial of such issue. Morris v. Norfolk (Duke), 9 Sim. 472; 9 L. J., N. S., Ch., 273; 4 Jur. 1007.

12. Under the 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 71, s. 45 (Tithe Commutation Act), the commissioners have a discretionary power to determine suits theretofore pending; but where they intend to do so, specific notice of such intention must be given. Wetherell v. Weighill, 3 Y. & Coll. 243; 8 L. J., N. S., Exch. Eq. 1; 2 Jur. 939.

In a suit for tithes, commenced before the passing of the Tithe Commutation Act, this Court refused, on motion, to suspend the proceedings on the mere ordinary notice of the commissioners under the Act, that they should, on a particular day, proceed to commute. Ib.

13. The commissioners under the Tithe Commutation Act, 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 71, have no jurisdiction to interfere with suits for tithes which were pending in the Court of Exchequer when the Act was passed. Girdlestone v. Stanley, 3 Y. & Coll. 421; 3 Jur. 382.

Merger and Union of Benefices.] 14. The enactment of the Tithe Commutation Amendment Act (9 & 10 Vict., c. 73, s. 19), that every instrument purporting to merge any tithes, and made with the consent of the Tithe Commissioners, shall be absolutely confirmed and made valid both at law and in equity, in all respects, is not limited to cases in which the person executing the instrument has a title to the tithe, but operates as well where such person has no estate in the tithe, as where his estate is insufficient to effect the merger. Walker v. Bentley, 9 Hare 629.

The intention of the Tithe Commutation Act is, that the lands on which the apportionment of the tithe in each parish is cast, and these lands only, shall be liable in respect of the tithe payable for any lands in the parish, and that lands on which no apportionment is cast shall not be liable to tithe. Id.

Lands which on the agreement and apportionment under the Tithe Commutation Act (confirmed by the Tithe Commissioners) are treated as free from tithe, cannot be afterwards made subject to tithe. Id.

The intention of the Legislature was to preclude all questions of merger of tithe in all cases where declarations of merger had not been made with the consent of the Tithe Commissioners, leaving the parties affected by an erroneous declaration to their remedy against the party making it; and such being the intention, the merger is effected, although the sanction of the commissioners has been erroneously given. Id.

The words "every instrument," in s. 19 of the Tithe Commutation Amendment Act, 9 & 10 Vict., c. 73, cannot be read as "every such instrument." S. C. 9 Hare 633.

1. In 1593 the parish church of K. (a rectory) having become ruinous, the parishioners of the adjoining parish of W. (a perpetual curacy), entered into an agreement under which the parishioners of K. were admitted to the use of their church and to the benefit of all usual ecclesiastical offices, which were thenceforward performed by the incumbents for the time being of W. for the parishioners of both parishes. From 1605 onwards there was no separate presentation to the benefice of K., but no formal union of the livings of W. and K. was made, although the holders for the time being of the living of W. were cited, and made official returns and paid charges, as rectors of K. In 1844 the Tithe Commissioners awarded a tithe rent-charge in respect of lands at K. which then were, and had since remained, the property of the defendants and their predecessors in title. The holder of the benefice of W. claimed the tithe rent-charge upon the ground that there had been a union of his benefice with that of K., and that the profits of the latter benefice belonged to the holder of the united benefices:—Held, that there had been no legal or effectual union upon which the claim could be founded, and also that no receipt of the tithe rent-charge by the defendants or their predecessors in title could be shown, and the defendants were therefore not liable to account. Att.-Gen. v. Durham (Earl), 46 L. T. 16.

Seem, the statute limiting the time for recovery of tithes (2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 100) would not have operated to bar the claim. Id.

Seem, also, the remedy for arrears would have been against the occupier, not the owner, of the lands charged. Id.

Seem, also, antagonistic cases cannot be combined by co-plaintiffs in an action, and that the attorney-general was not a proper party to the present proceedings, his claim being founded upon a case which could only succeed if the case of the informant and co-plaintiff should fail. Id.

Ratability.] 2. The owner of the tithe rent-charge in a parish where money has been borrowed under the provisions of the 5 Geo. 4, c. 36, is liable to be assessed to the rate made for repayment of the money. Small bones v. Edney, 3 L. R., P. C., 444; 40 L. J., Ecc., 8; 24 L. T. 241; 7 Moo. P. C., N. S., 286.

Apportionment.] 3. Upon the death of a tenant for life, under a will executed before the Apportionment Act, 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 22, of tithes which after the Act were commuted for a rent-charge, payable at fixed periods:—Held, that the award of the Tithe Commissioners was "an instrument under which the rent-charge was payable" within s. 2, and therefore the rent-charge was apportionable. Heasman v. Pearce, 8 L. R., Eq., 599.

Bequest.] 4. A testator gave to his trustees a tithe rent-charge held under an ecclesiastical lease for twenty-one years, which was in practice renewed every seven years on payment of a fine, upon trust to renew out of the proceeds, and to apply the surplus in a certain way during the life of his wife, and directed that after her death it should form part of his residuary estate. He gave his trustees power at any time to sell the leasehold interest. The lease having ceased to be renewable:—Held, that the persons interested during the life of the widow were entitled to receive the rent-charge free from any deductions for raising a renewal fund; and that a renewal fund which had been raised out of the income, but could not be applied for renewal, must be paid to the persons entitled to the income. Maddy v. Hale, 24 W. R. 452.

Held, on appeal, that the leasehold interest ought to be sold and the proceeds invested, and only the income of this fund, and of the renewal fund, applied as income. S. C. 3 Ch. D. 327; 45 L. J., Ch., 791; 85 L. T. 134; 24 W. R. 1006.

Distress for Arrears.] 5. An injunction will not be granted under the Companies Act 1862, ss. 87 and 163, to restrain proceedings under a distress for arrears of a tithe rent-charge. Re Trimmaran Coal, Iron, and Steel Co., 24 W. R. 900.

Agreements respecting Payment.] 6. A landlord agreed to let, and a tenant agreed to take, a farm for a term of fourteen years, determinable at the end of the first seven years, at the yearly rent of 40*l.*, payable quarterly, "free of all outgoing," the landlord to abate 5*l.* per annum of the rent for the first two years, in consideration of the condition of the place, and to put the farm into repair, and the tenant to keep the same in repair:—Held, that under the words "free of all outgoing," the tenant was bound to pay the land tax and tithe commutation rent-charge. Parish v. Sleeman, 6 Jur., N. S., 385; 29 L. J., Ch., 96; 8 W. R. 166.

7. A tenant holding lands under an accepted proposal for a lease specifying the term, and bearing date prior to the 16th of August 1832, is liable to the payment of the tithe composition, and is not to be considered as a tenant from year to year within the 12th section of the 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 119. Langley v. Langley, Ll. & G. temp. Plunk. 361.

XVII. COMMUTATION (IRELAND).

1. A receiver, appointed under the 1 & 2 Vict., c. 109, s. 30, to pay the tithe rent-charge, is bound to apply the sums received, in the first instance, in discharge of the rent-charge and costs, and has nothing to do with the payment of the head-rent to which the land may be liable. Saunderson v. Stoney, 2 Ir. Eq. R. 153.

2. The mode of service required by the 1 & 2 Vict., c. 109, s. 30 (Tithe Rent-Charge Act), with respect to the ten days' notice of a party's intention to apply for a receiver under that Act, is not applicable to the service of the order appointing such receiver, which must be served in the usual manner required by the justice of the Court for the service of its orders. Mangan v. Massey, 2 Ir. Eq. R. 106.

3. Where lands were apportioned with tithe composition for two parishes, the Court, upon a petition presented under the 1 and 2 Vict., c. 109, s. 16, referred it to the remembrancer to inquire and report in which of the parishes the lands were situated, and whether they were doubly charged with the rent-charge, and, if so, for which of said parishes they had been rightfully charged with tithe composition. Armstrong v. Pepper, 2 Ir. Eq. R. 89.

4. A purchaser of an estate, sold under a decree of the Court of Chancery, who confirmed his sale on the 28th of April, but whose purchase-deed was not executed until the 8th of December following, is liable for the tithe composition, which accrued due on the 1st of November, the lands being in the occupation of tenants from year to year. Stewart v. Alexander, 2 Jones 530.

A person, having a clear equitable estate in the lands greater than a tenancy from year to year, is a person liable to the tithe composition within the meaning of 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 119, s. 12. Ib.

5. In a suit for the arrears of tithe composition in the names of the sequestrator of a parish, and of the bishop who died, the defendants may, nevertheless, proceed with a motion for costs. Egan v. Doherty, 2 Ir. Eq. R. 68.

6. A lessee of tithes may maintain a bill for the recovery of tithe composition, effected under the 2 and 3 Will. 4, c. 119. Kane v. Potter, 2 Jones 276.

The 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 119, s. 30, applies only to cases of composition for tithes made between the tithe owner and tithe payer. Ib.

7. Upon application made by petition, under the 16th section of the Tithe Rent-Charge Act, 1 & 2 Vict., c. 109, claiming a partial exemption on the ground of a modus decimandi, it was referred to the remembrancer to report whether the lands in question were rightfully charged with tithe or tithe composition; and on the report of a modus decimandi, as contemplated by the Act, such lands were declared not to be chargeable with tithe composition, and the apportionment book directed to be altered by the proper officer accordingly, without prejudice to the previous liabilities of the parties applying; a copy of the order and summons to proceed thereunder, to be served, one month previously, on the churchwardens of the parish, and on twelve of the tithe-payers, and to be posted on the usual places of posting notices of road sessions, with liberty for the tithe payers to appear on such reference. Houston v. Kinahan, 1 Ir. Eq. R. 470. Patterson v. Kinahan, id. 478.

8. Semble, a person in possession of land, under a contract for a lease thereof for a term greater than three years, but upon which an action at law could not be maintained, is not a person having an estate or interest therein greater than a tenancy from year to year, within the meaning of 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 119, s. 12, though a court of equity would decree specific execution of the contract, on the ground of part performance. Orpen v. Moore, 2 Jones 435.

9. In answer to a petition for a receiver for payment of tithe composition, under 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 119, s. 15, the respondent cannot set up as a defence that the lands are in the occupation of his under-tenants, who hold under unstamped accepted proposals in writing, executed prior to the 16th August 1832. Orpen v. Allen, 2 Jones 434.

10. On a summary petition under the 16th section of 1 & 2 Vict., c. 109, the Court has no jurisdiction to declare a certificate null and void; it can only amend the certificate apportionment as to the charge on the petitioner's lands. On such a petition, the Court has no jurisdiction to decide between the two conflicting certificates. Connor v. Devonshire, 1 Ir. Eq. R. 328.

11. The owner of a tithe composition, effected under 4 Geo. 4, c. 95, may sue for it by bill in equity, though he might have distrained the defendant for its amount. Ryan v. Maher, 1 Jones 595.

The jurisdiction of the Superior Court is not taken away in cases where the amount of the tithe composition demanded is within the jurisdiction of the Civil Bill Court. Ib.

12. An agreement for a lease at a gross rent, with a collateral covenant on the part of the tenant to pay the tithe rent-charge, would be void under the 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 119; but, semble, an agreement by which the tenant offers to pay 100*l.* a year rent, and in consideration of the tithe rent charge, an additional sum of 5*l.* per annum, is not illegal, and would be specifically executed. Davies v. Fitton, 2 Dr. & War. 225; 4 Ir. Eq. R. 612.

13. Under 1 & 2 Vict., c. 109, s. 32, upon application by three or more persons in any parish, each charged with payment of 3*l.* or upwards, in respect of the tithe rent-charge, and who have given notice in the manner specified by the Act, the Quarter Sessions may vary the rent-charge, according to the price of corn. An order, reducing the rent-charge, recited that "Whereas, due notice having been first by them given, three owners and occupiers of land in the parish of T., etc., each charged with payment of 3*l.* and upwards in respect of the rent-charge payable in lieu of the composition for tithes made by certificate of, etc., applied to the justices of the peace at Quarter Sessions," etc. Afterwards, the incumbent proceeded by petition under the 30th section of the Act to recover the rent-charge which accrued from the gala-day after the order of Sessions, as if no reduction had taken place; and a rule nisi for a receiver having been obtained, the respondents came in to show cause against it, relying upon the order of the Quarter Sessions:—Held, that the recitals in the order were not evidence of the facts thereby stated; and, as it now appeared that one of the three persons who signed the notice, and upon whose application the order was made, was not an owner or occupier of land in the parish, nor charged with payment of any portion of the rent-charge:—Held, that the Quarter Sessions had not jurisdiction, and that the order was a nullity. Thompson v. Shiel, 3 Ir. Eq. R. 135; Fl. & K. 53.

1. The registrar of the diocese is the proper officer to amend the tithe certificate and applotment, pursuant to an order made under the 1 & 2 Vict., c. 109, s. 16. Adair v. Johnson, 3 Ir. Eq. R. 61.

2. The Earl of A., being seised in fee under a grant to his ancestor by King James II., with a license to alien, to be held of the grantee and his heirs, non obstante the Statute of Quia Emptores, conveyed the lands to J. P. and his heirs in 1834:—Held, that no reversion being left in the Earl, the lands were not let, set, or demised within the meaning of the 13th section of the 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 119 (Stanley's Act), and that, therefore, the estate of J. P. was liable to the tithe rent-charge. Verschoye v. Perkins, 13 Ir. Eq. R. 72.

3. Quare, whether a lay landowner can establish an exemption from tithe rent-charge by proof of non-payment, for one of the periods mentioned in the 1 & 2 Vict., c. 109, s. 18, without other proof of the legal origin of the exemption. The cases of the latter question considered. Shiel v. Incorporated Society, 10 Ir. Eq. R. 411.

4. The Court has a discretion to grant or withhold a receiver, under the 1 & 2 Vict., c. 108, s. 20 (Tithe Rent-Charge Act); therefore, though a prima facie title be stated in the petition, if a fair doubt be cast on it by the answering affidavit, the Court will not appoint a receiver. Semble, a certificate by the Commissioners under the Tithe Composition Act (4 Geo. 4, c. 99, s. 25), is valid, though it only finds generally that tithes are payable to a lay impropriator, without giving his name. Semble, also, the title to the tithes is not concluded by the certificate. Greville v. Fleming, 8 Ir. Eq. R. 201; 2 J. & L. 335.

A receiver refused to a lay impropriator to get in the tithe rent-charge, there being a contest in the parish, and the affidavit stating merely that he was lay impropriator. Id.

5. If the person liable to pay tithe rent-charge fail to do so within ten days after service of notice, the rent-charger is entitled to prepare his petition, and may refuse the arrears without the costs. What are reasonable costs in such a case. Macartney v. Graydon, 8 Ir. Eq. R. 99.

6. Under the 1st section of the Act for the Abolition of Tithe Composition in Ireland (1 & 2 Vict., c. 109), a plaintiff is entitled to dismiss his bill without payment of costs, although it was filed for the recovery of not only the tithe composition due for the years 1834, 1835, and 1836, but also of the arrears or additions recoverable therewith, under the provisions of the Million Act; and he may dismiss it against one of the several defendants, retaining it against the rest. As a general rule, the costs in a court of equity follow the result. Burgh v. Kenny, 1 Ir. Eq. R. 264.

7. Service of subpoena to appear and answer a bill for tithe composition, may be effected out of the jurisdiction, under the 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 82. Anon., 1 Jones 561.

8. Where petitioners, under the stat. 1 & 2 Vict., c. 109, s. 16, praying that Whiteacre should be declared tithe free, alleged that those lands had constituted part of the possessions of the monastery of D., and were held by the friars and abbots free from tithes, and that, under a commission issued in the 18 Eliz., an inquisition was held, and the jury found that 150 acres of land in Whiteacre, with the tithes of the same, formed parcel of the monastery of D. and had been concealed from the Queen and her progenitors; and the petitioners also alleged that by letters patent in the 19 Eliz. 150 acres of land in Whiteacre, and the tithes of the same, were granted to W., under whom the petitioners alleged that they derived by lease made in the year 1700, demising Whiteacre and the tithes thereof for threelives with a covenant for perpetual renewal, and stated a composition made in 1833, and a certificate of the commissioner certifying the composition of the parish in which Whiteacre was situate (of which 47l. was assessed on Whiteacre), and also certifying that it was payable to the respondent; and the petitioners also alleged that, for sixty years anterior to the composition, Whiteacre was held by the owner and the tenants thereof tithe free. The respondent denied that Whiteacre was part of the possessions of the monastery, and insisted that, even admitting the statement of the petitioners as to the 150 acres to be true, it only led to the conclusion that to that extent alone were the lands of Whiteacre tithe free. The Court referred it to the Master to inquire whether Whiteacre was rightly charged with tithe composition, if the stat. 1 & 2 Vict., c. 109 had not passed, or if such composition had not been suspended. Evidence was entered into on both sides, and tendered to the Master, who declined to consider it; and, inasmuch as it appeared on the petition and the charge that the lands and tithes were separately demised by the lease of 1700, he found that Whiteacre would have been rightfully charged with tithe composition if the stat. 1 & 2 Vict., c. 109 had not been made, or if such composition had not been suspended. The Court, being of opinion that the lease of 1700 was susceptible of being construed to mean a demise of Whiteacre tithe free, and inasmuch as the respondent had not in his discharge rested his defence upon the view adopted by the Master, but had denied the title of W., the lessor of the petitioner, directed the Master to review his report, but ordered that notice of all further proceedings should be given to the person entitled to the reversion on the lease of 1700, who had not previously been made a party in the matter. Denny v. Devonshire (Duke), 1 Ir. Ch. R. 657. Varying S. C. id. 401.

XVIII. ACCOUNT.

9. On the bill for tithe of agistment of "barren and unprofitable cattle," defendant, from plaintiffs' loose mode of pleading, supposing it not to relate to sheep, made no defence as to them. Court refused the account as to them. Turner v. Williams, 3 Anst. 829.

1. It is the duty of courts of equity to decree tithes in kind, when satisfied that modus is either bad, or has not immemorially existed. Short v. Lee, 2 Jac. & Walk. 464.

2. Account of vicarial tithes decreed against a modus of 1s. per acre, for each acre of marsh land, for tithe of hay and all other vicarial and small tithes: the vicarage appearing to have been established by endowment in 1367, within legal memory. Scott v. Smith, 1 V. & B. 142.

3. Account of tithes decreed of ancient mill, altered by addition of two new mill-stones. Manby v. Taylor, 3 Ves. & B. 71.

4. Bill for tithes; answer admitting the right to one-third, and submitting to account, and claiming the other two-thirds, under a title derived from grant by Queen Elizabeth, submitting to be examined upon interrogatories, but not setting forth a description of the lands; the defendants having gone into evidence in support of their claim, pressed to have the bill dismissed generally; the plaintiff pressed for a general account; the M. R. decreed an account as to one-third, and as to two-thirds, the plaintiff declining to try the right at law, dismissed the bill. Fworcroft v. Paris, 5 Ves. 221.

An account of tithes is consequential upon the legal right; and therefore, if the least doubt is thrown upon it by prima facie evidence, the account cannot be decreed till the right is established at law. Id.

5. An account of tithes in kind decreed, notwithstanding evidence of payment of certain customary payments for upwards of a century, and evidence that numerous bills had been filed by vicars, but had been subsequently abandoned, it appearing, from the depositions and proceedings in an old cause, rather more than a century back, that the customary payments did not then exist, but that the then vicar had endeavoured to set them up. Jackson v. Morris, 1 Y. & J. 275.

6. A bill for an account of tithes received from the occupiers by a person claiming under an adverse legal title, will not lie. St. Asaph (Bishop) v. Williams, Jac. 349.

7. Bill by the purchaser, at an auction, of tithes for three years, against an occupier, for an account and satisfaction. It was objected that, tithes lying in grant, the plaintiff, as a lessee by parol, could not maintain the suit; but the tithe owners having been originally made defendants to the suit, and on their disclaimer dismissed, the Court supported the plaintiffs title, and decreed an account. Williams v. Jones, Young 252.

8. A., being entitled to parcels of tithes, was made defendant in suit by person also claiming to be entitled to tithes against occupiers; he joined with occupiers in answer, and insisted on his right to tithes: Court retained bill for one year, with liberty to bring an action; if not, bill to be dismissed with costs. Action was brought against occupiers, and verdict for plaintiffs. On further hearing, account against occupiers decreed and occupiers and A. to pay costs. Wing v. Murrell, M'Clel. & Y. 620.

XIX. EVIDENCE.

1. Ecclesiastical Surveys, 6741.
2. Maps, 6741.
3. Receipts and Books of Account, 6741.
4. Terriers, 6742.
5. Other Documents, 6744.
6. Discovery and Production, 6744.
7. Other Evidence, 6745.

1. Ecclesiastical Surveys.

9. The Ecclesiastical Surveys are admissible to prove an ancient endowment, and, aided by perception of small tithes, though not of all, will give the vicar a right to tithes of articles of modern introduction against the lessee of the rector. Cunliffe v. Taylor, 2 Price 329.

10. The evidence affirmed by Ecclesiastical and Parliamentary Surveys, either for or against a modus, is entitled to very little weight. Atkins v. Drake, M'Clel. & Y. 123.

11. A valuation of tithes made by surveyor, at the instance of rector, if it can be distinctly proved to have been made with reference to certain money payments in lieu, is evidence to fix rector with an acknowledgment of such payments. Bertie v. Beaumont, 2 Price 303.

12. The Ecclesiastical Surveys are admissible to prove an ancient endowment, and, aided by perception of small tithes, though not of all, will give the vicar a right to tithes of articles of modern introduction, against the lessee of the rector. Cunliffe v. Taylor, 2 Price 329.

2. Maps.

13. Producing map of lands of which the farm was stated to consist, and proving the accuracy of the description of the lands in the map as compared with them in 1803 (with reference to the time of commencing the suit), is no proof of such farm being ancient, nor sufficient even to raise such a presumption, that it may be capable of further proof as to furnish ground for giving an opportunity of establishing it by issue. Stuart v. Greenall, 9 Price 106.

14. In a suit for tithes between a vicar and the occupier of a mill, an old map of the parish, belonging to the lord of the manor, was not admitted as evidence for the defendant. Newcombe v. Mathew, 5 Sim. 243.

15. A tithe commutation map is not, under 6 & 7 Will 4, c. 71, s. 64, admissible in evidence as showing the boundary of land in a case of disputed title. Wilberforce v. Hearfield, 5 L. R., Ch. D., 709; 46 L. J., Ch., 584; 25 W. R. 861.

3. Receipts and Books of Account.

16. Old receipts by churchwardens to parishioners for contributions by the latter to the modus, rejected as evidence. Atkins v. Drake, M'Clel. & Y. 213.

17. A receipt, even of more than fifty years old, offered to be put in to prove a money payment, purported by it to have been received in lieu of tithes, is not admissible evidence of the fact of such customary payment having been acted on, so as to establish a defence of a modus, unless it can be proved who the parties to the receipt were, and in what character they stood; and unless proof be given of the handwriting or death of the party giving it. Manby v. Curtis, 1 Price 225.

1. An old receipt of former rector in hands of a defendant for a money payment in lieu of tithes, where there was a probability of its having come to him from a predecessor in the same way, admissible evidence to support modus. Bertie v. Beaumont, 2 Price 303.

2. Evidence of rector's handwriting to receipts, by comparison with his signature in registrar's books, the entries in which it was his duty to sign:—Held, sufficient in a tithe suit. Taylor v. Cook, 8 Price 650.

3. Entry in parish register of different moduses, the sum total of which was in handwriting of deceased vicar, admitted as evidence. Perigal v. Nicholson, Wightw. 63.

4. An account-book of a former vicar produced by a witness, who deposed that he had received it from his aunt, who resided with his father, who was the son of the vicar, and that he had frequently seen the book in his aunt's possession, and had heard her say it belonged to his grandfather:—Held, not to be admissible evidence. An occupier of lands in the parish, but who had been examined as a witness on both sides, proved the handwriting of the plaintiff (the vicar) to receipts for alleged moduses. An objection to his evidence on the ground of interest was overruled. Receipts given by the parish clerk for the use of the vicar, for small tithes, the handwriting of the parish clerk being proved, were rejected as evidence, on the ground that the parish clerk was living, and his agency for the vicar could not be inferred, but must be proved. Thompson v. Perryman, Young 598.

5. In a suit for tithes by an ecclesiastical rector against the occupiers. Old accounts found in the custody of the personal representative of a deceased tithe collector of a former rector were received, although there was no evidence to show by whom they were made out. The defendants set up a modus of 1*l.* 17*s.* 9*d.* as covering the tithes of four townships in a parish, which were claimed by the plaintiff. The latter proved, by documents older than those produced by the defendants, that separate moduses, amounting to 1*l.* 17*s.* 9*d.*, had been paid for separate portions of the four townships:—Held, that the modus pleaded was bad. Harcourt v. Peirson, 5 Sim. 368.

6. In a tithe suit by a vicar, old overseers' accounts mentioning that a sum had been received from the vicar, in respect of a modus payable to him, are admissible for the defendants. Ward v. Pomfret, 5 Sim. 475; 2 L. J., N. S., Ch., 22.

Plaintiff had subpoenaed the defendants' agent to produce, at the hearing, a parish book in his custody:—Held, that as it was a public document, and in the possession of the defendants' agent, the defendants were entitled to have it produced and read at the hearing for their benefit. Id. 476.

7. Entries by the lord's steward may be admitted to prove a modus to the vicar in discharge against the lay person. Woodnoth v. Cobham, Bunb. 180.

8. The bishop's registry office is the proper custody for the sequestrator's accounts, with reference to their admissibility on questions of right to tithes. Pulley v. Hilton, 12 Price 625.

9. A book, in handwriting of A., purporting to be an account of tithes collected by him seventy years ago, cannot be read in evidence without proof that A. was collector at that time. And in a suit for tithes by lessee of an ecclesiastical corporation aggregate to which the rectory belonged, ancient documents in their possession, purporting to be accounts furnished by some of their members employed to collect tithes, and appearing to have been approved and settled, are admissible in evidence; and the statutes of the body, enjoining the appointment of collectors, together with the internal evidence of the documents and their coming out of proper custody:—Held, sufficient proof of their being collectors. Short v. Lee, 2 Jac. & Walk. 464.

As to the principle on which entries in a rector's books are admitted as evidence for his successors. Entries of tithes received in books of ecclesiastical corporation aggregate entitled to a rectory, are evidence for their successor. Quare, whether entries in books of lay impropriator in fee, of tithes received, are evidence for those claiming under him. Id. 478.

10. Vicar's books were admitted in evidence, though they contained private entries and memorandums of the vicar not relating to the parish, and though one of the books had remained for many years in the hands of a representative of a deceased vicar, instead of having been delivered to the succeeding incumbent. Miller v. Jackson, 1 Y. & J. 65.

11. Vicar's books are evidence to show that money payments received in lieu of tithes are founded on, and regulated by, a criterion not in existence beyond legal memory—e.g., the poor rates. Walter v. Holman, 4 Price 171.

12. Ancient receipts of a payment as a modus for hay, accompanied by rector's books, in which were contained entries of receipts for hay of persons who, from defendant's title-deeds, appeared to have been then owners of estate, good evidence of payment as a farm modus. Brazier v. Mytton, M'Clel. & Y. 613.

13. A receipt for payment (by person sued by vicar for tithes) of plaintiff's bill of costs, is evidence that suit resulted in favour of vicar. So also is an entry to that effect in a former vicar's books. Parsons v. Bellamy, 4 Price, 190.

4. Terriers.

14. Terriers alone not sufficient to prove a modus. Lake v. Skinner, 1 Jac. & Walk. 20.

15. Terriers are not documents of such conclusive authority as to exclude all other evidence. Atkins v. Drake, M'Clel. & Y. 213.

An entry, purporting to be a terrier, in an old book called a parish registry, produced from an old iron chest in the vicarage house, of which the only key was kept by the vicar, and accompanied by other suspicious circumstances, admitted in evidence at N. P., and left to jury to receive its due weight, found by them not to be authentic, and therefore rejected by Court. Id. 214.

16. The three legitimate repositories of terriers and vicar's books, to make them evidence, are the parish chest, the registry of the bishop, and the registry of the archdeacon. Armstrong v. Hewitt, 4 Price 216.

17. A terrier found in the archdeacon's registry is admissible. Potts v. Durant, 3 Anstr. 789.

A terrier, although not signed by the impropriate rector, nor any person for him, is evidence against him as to tithes due to him in the parish. Ib.

1. A terrier cannot be received in evidence unless it comes from the proper repository; the registry of the diocese, or a copy from the parish registry, if the original cannot be found. Atkins v. Hatton, 2 Anstr. 387.

2. A terrier, though signed by churchwardens only, is admissible evidence in a suit for tithes, by a portioner against an occupier. Lewis v. Bridgman, 3 Sim. 316.

3. A single terrier, unsupported by usage, is not sufficient to establish a modus. To support a parochial modus, it is not sufficient for the defendant to prove the non-render: he must go further, and show the acceptance of the modus for some time, and to some extent. Lynes v. Lett, 3 Y. & J. 405.

4. A terrier without date, and bearing the signatures of various persons, having no addition or designation affixed to their names, is admissible in evidence on behalf of the vicar, if produced under circumstances showing it to be a genuine document. Hall v. Farmer, 2 Y. & Coll. 145.

5. Old terriers recording that tithe hay is payable in kind, signed by rector and churchwardens, overseers, and some of the resident parishioners, are good evidence to rebut presumption of farm modus attempted to be established by proof of money payment having been uniformly rendered within living memory, and the absence of any evidence, even of reputation, that tithe had ever been taken in kind, and that, though such terriers are not proved to be signed by any persons interested in the farm. Mytton v. Harris, 3 Price 19.

6. Copy of a lost terrier rejected as evidence. Leathes v. Newitt, 4 Price 355.

7. In a suit for tithes by an ecclesiastical rector against the occupiers, a terrier signed by a vicar, churchwardens, and inhabitants, and which was tendered by the defendants, was rejected. Harcourt v. Peirson, 5 Sim. 368.

8. Terriers are evidence of tithes merely personal. Townley v. Colegate, 2 Sim. 297; 6 L. J., Ch., 159; Bronne v. Woolsey, 2 Sim. 305.

9. The omission, in the earlier two or three of a series of old terriers, of any notice of money payments set up as moduses, does not destroy the evidence of the existence of the moduses, arising from the subsequent terriers which do notice them: nor even a variation in the amount of one of the sums, and a qualification of the payment of it occurring in one of them, where the payments relied on are supported by the testimony of witnesses, who prove that such payments have been in fact made accordingly. Stuart v. Greenall, 9 Price 106.

10. Modus claimed for hay was described in terriers to be for all grass, "except clover and the like":—Held, this was no proof of modus being modern. Franklin v. Spilling, 3 Anstr. 760.

11. Terriers, in stating the rights of the vicar, contained the following entry, "Item, small tithes, as hemp, flax, geese, and ducks":—Held, that they afforded strong evidence that the endowment carried all small tithes, and that the true construction of the terriers was, that it was intended by them to state, that the vicar was entitled to small tithes, as, for example, hemp, flax, geese, and ducks. Gibson v. Peacock, Younge 184.

12. A money payment of 5s. yearly at Lammas by every occupier of lands or tenements within a district set up as a modus, when of all tithe hay within district, although proved prima facie in point of fact:—Held, to be disproved as a modus for all the hay in the whole township by the evidence of terriers stating that "in the district, only 5s. per year for all the hay in their (the occupiers') crofts," was payable; the parol testimony of the money payment, and the evidence of terriers, being quite consistent with each other, there being nothing contradictory in the terriers so limiting and specifying the object and consideration of the sum proved to be paid generally throughout the parish in lieu of hay, to such hay as was grown in crofts. Drake v. Smyth, 8 Price 692.

13. A township modus of 6l. was pleaded, and was supported by several terriers, and by a great deal of parol evidence; but in an earlier terrier the modus was stated to be 6l. 0s. 4d., from which it was contended, that the immemorability of the payment was disproved: the Court held that this terrier alone was not sufficient, as opposed to the other evidence, to defeat the modus; and that the additional 4d. might either have been introduced into the terrier by mistake, or might have been a small fee for the collection. A modus of 13s. 4d. was pleaded as payable on the first Sunday after old St. Michael's day, by the occupiers of lands within the township of A., and the township of B., of which the occupiers in A. contributed and paid 10s., and the occupiers of lands in B. contributed and paid 3s. 4d., in lieu of the tithes of hay and grass in and throughout the townships, and which modus had been accustomed to be paid on the altar-table of the parish church. The payment was supported by several ancient terriers, but which only stated the 13s. 4d. as payable for the township of A. and B., without referring to any contribution:—Held, that the modus, as pleaded, was supported by the evidence; that the contribution was a private arrangement between the townships, by which the vicar was not bound, and that he had his remedy against any part of both townships for the entire modus. A modus was pleaded as payable by the occupiers of lands within two townships; the external boundaries of both the townships were clearly and distinctly made out in evidence, but the witnesses deposed that the lands in these two townships were intermixed, and could not be extinguished:—Held, that the boundaries were sufficiently proved. Warrington v. Sadler, Younge 288.

14. Where certain payments, alleged to be farm moduses, were proved by persons who had known the farms for many years, some of them more than half a century, and who had actually occupied the farms, to have been uniformly paid to the rector, in lieu and satisfaction of the tithes alleged to be covered by the moduses:—Held, that the moduses were not so clearly disproved by several terriers, signed by the rector, churchwardens, and inhabitants, containing entries to the following effect:—"Tithe rents due to the rector, 35l. 16s. 10d.;" "That tithes due to the rector are small tithes, Easter offerings, and great tithes, for which last a composition tithe-rent throughout the parish is at present paid to the rector," as to authorise the Court, sitting in equity, to overrule them and to disregard the evidence of usage upon which they were founded; and the terriers being evidently erroneous in some particulars, the Court refused to decree an account of tithes in kind, but offered the rector an issue, or to retain his bill for a year, with liberty to bring an action. Lonsdale v. Heaton, Younge 58.

Where terriers state the rector to be entitled to the small tithes of the parish, the expression is so general and indefinite, as not to exclude the possibility of the existence of money payments, in lieu of the small tithes; and, therefore, where terriers so stated, but the parol testimony proved money payments for nearly a century back, in lieu of certain small tithes, a decree for tithes in kind of those articles was refused, and the rector left to an issue or action. Id.

1. On a vicar's bill for tithe of agistment, no endowment being extant, the plaintiff produced a series of terriers, commencing from the year 1685, describing the several rights of the rector and vicar, and enumerating, among the rights of the former, a sum of 2*l.* in lieu of the tithe hay, and, among the rights of the vicar, tithe calf, and all small and petty tithes. On the part of the defendants, a number of terriers were also produced, commencing from 1749, conflicting with those produced by the vicar in some respects, but all containing the 2*l.* as payable to the rector in lieu of tithe hay cut and grassing, and gave evidence of the general reputation that the sum was payable for both. There was no evidence of perception of the tithe of agistment by either rector or vicar. The Court declined to decree for the vicar, but offered him an issue. Willis v. Farrar, 2 Y. & J. 217.

5. Other Documents.

2. Matthew Paris is not evidence of the establishment of the order of Franciscans in Italy. Barnes v. Stuart, 1 Y. & Coll. 119; 4 L. J., N. S., Exch. Eq., 25.

3. Bishop Wells' liber de ord. illationibus vicariorum received in evidence. Tucker v. Wilkins, 4 Sim. 362.

4. A book found in the Heralds' Office, purporting to be an account of the possessions of a monastery, is not admissible evidence of that fact. Lygon v. Strutt, 2 Anstr. 601.

5. An instrument purporting to be an endowment without the seal, and another purporting to be an inseximus thereof under the seal of the bishop, were rejected as coming out of private hands, unconnected with the matter in dispute. Potts v. Durant, 3 Anstr. 789.

6. A copy of a faculty granted in 1613 admitted as evidence in a tithe suit, it being produced from the custody of a person whose rights were abridged by it, and there being evidence that the original could not be found in the proper depository, which was destroyed by the great fire of London. Isham v. Wallace, 4 Sim. 25.

7. Book from registry of Lincoln, containing inter alia what were called copies of endowments of certain vicarages, was received as evidence of an endowment of vicarages in Northampton. Leonard v. Franklyn, 4 Price 264.

8. The question being, whether the appointment of a curate belonged to the vicar of the parish or to a corporation, entries in old books of the corporation were not received as evidence against the vicar, to show that the corporation had from time to time appointed the curate. Att.-Gen. v. Warwick, 4 Russ. 222.

9. The minister's accounts and the royal grants are, when they so state, usually considered as sufficient evidence that certain premises were part of a dissolved monastery. Pierrepont v. Scarlet, 2 Y. & J. 330.

10. An original ancient book, containing, amongst other matters concerning a particular see, the entry of the endowment of a vicarage by a former bishop, to whom the rectory was granted by the Crown, with licence to appropriate, and coming from the registry of the diocese, is evidence of the endowment. But regularly, a copy of an entry is not admissible. Woolley v. Brownhill, McCl. 321. S. P. 13 Price 600.

11. The proceedings (properly authenticated) of the Tithe Commissioners are public evidence of the matters therein stated, and to be received as such. Giffard v. Williams, 38 L. J., Ch., 597; 21 L. T., N. S., 575; 18 W. R. 56.

12. The applotment book of a parish is not evidence to prove the value of the benefice in years previous to the establishment of tithe composition in the parish. Hogg v. Garrett, 12 Ir. Eq. R. 559.

13. An inseximus of an inquisition admitted as evidence in a tithe cause. Donnison v. Elaley, McCl. & Y. L. Affirmed sub. nom. Elaley v. Donnison, 2 Bli., N. S., 94.

14. The ecclesiastical survey, stating vicar to be entitled to tithe of parish generally, will not supply the absence of proof of perception from the particular lands. Armstrong v. Hewitt, 4 Price, 216.

6. Discovery and Production.

15. Miller carrying on trade of mealman is obliged to discover, on suit for tithes, the quantity, though not the price, of meal ground. Chapman v. Pilcher, Wightw. 15.

16. A plaintiff in a tithe suit is not entitled to a production of receipts for moduses and compositions, given to the defendants by the plaintiff and his predecessors, some of these receipts relating to tithes not sued for, and the others being evidence for the defendants and not for the plaintiff. Tomlinson v. Lymer, 2 Sim. 489.

17. Bill by an impropriate rector against occupiers for an account of tithes, and against a portionist requiring a discovery from the latter of the deeds under which he claimed to be entitled to the portion of tithes to which the bill admitted him to be entitled, alleging that the deeds would show not only the title of the portionist to the tithes claimed by him, but also the title of the plaintiff to the tithes demanded by him of the occupiers. Demurrer by the portionist to the discovery allowed. Compton v. Grey (Earl), 1 Y. & J. 164.

18. A defendant, who had pleaded moduses to a bill for tithes filed by the rector's lessee, was ordered, on motion, to produce all the documents in his possession which had belonged to a former lessee of the rectory, and also all the other documents in his custody relating to the matters in dispute, except those which tended to show the existence of the moduses. Tomlinson v. Booth, 4 Sim. 461.

1. The Court will not, on bill for tithes, praying discovery of documentary evidence, order tithe book of former rector, shown to have been in the possession of defendant's attorney, unless it clearly appear, from admissions in the answer, that it would assist plaintiff's case. But if there be enough shown to give colour for the application, Court will not give costs to the defendant. Bligh v. Benson, 7 Price 205.

2. As to how far vicar, plaintiff in tithe cause, is compellable to produce for inspection, etc., vicar's books, and those of predecessors, admitted by him in his answer to cross bill by defendant to be in his possession, and to contain entries relating to payments of sums of money as compositions, corresponding in amount with money payments set up by defendant as modus relied on. The costs of all proceedings had for obtaining the discovery by such means, must be paid by party acquiring it. Firkins v. Lowe, 13 Price 193; McCl. 73.

3. On cross-bill, plaintiff cannot compel discovery of defendant's title to tithes, though defendant must answer whether they have or have not been conveyed away to another person. Glegg v. Legh, 4 Madd. 193.

4. The defendant in a tithe suit, who denies the rector's title, cannot, by a cross bill, compel the rector to discover the evidence of his title; therefore, where the rector, by his answer to such a cross bill, refused to set forth under what deed or deeds the rectory was conveyed to the persons under whom he claimed, exceptions to the answer, which had been taken on the ground of that refusal, were overruled. Bellwood v. Wetherell, 1 Y. & Coll. 211; 4 L. J., N. S., Exch. Eq., 23.

5. The dean and chapter of C., being rectors of a parish, leased all the tithes belonging to the rectory; the lessees filed a bill for tithe of hops against the occupiers, to which the vicar was made a party as claiming that tithe. The occupiers then filed a cross bill against the dean and chapter and their lessees, for a discovery and production of documents: demurrer by the dean and chapter allowed. Tooth v. Canterbury (Dean), 3 Sim. 49.

6. Plaintiff in tithe cause, lessee of vicar, ordered on motion, on part of defendant, to bring in and deliver to clerk in court books, papers, etc., stated in affidavit to be in his possession, and to belong to vicar, who was not a party to suit. Foreman v. Cooper, 11 Price 515.

7. Other Evidence.

7. As to the preponderance of conflicting evidence as to title, in tithe causes. Petch v. Dalton, 6 Price 232.

8. As to evidence of old persons of the nature and extent of a farm. Brazier v. Mytton, McCl. & Y. 613.

9. As to evidence in tithe matters. Bullen v. Michel, 4 Dow 297.

10. As to evidence to support the existence of an ecclesiastical rectory. Boulton v. Richards, 9 Price 483.

11. In a tithe suit by a vicar, for small tithes, depositions of deceased witnesses in an old suit, by the rector, for great tithes of the parish, were received as evidence. Ward v. Pomfret, 5 Sim. 477; 2 L. J., N. S., Ch., 22.

12. Court will not, on motion, order depositions in tithe cause in Exchequer to be read in a tithe cause in this court, against any other occupiers of lands in same parish, though objects of both suits and the interest of parties were the same. Goodenough v. Almay, 2 Sim. & S. 481.

13. The proof of the title of the vicar to some small tithes, and that the other small tithes had never been paid to the rector, is not necessarily sufficient to establish the right of the vicar to such other small tithes, especially where some of the evidence is opposed to the vicar's claim. Where, in a suit for small tithes by the vicar against occupiers, the rector is a defendant, and disclaims, the Court may use the disclaimer for the purpose of founding upon it a decree for the particular tithes demanded by the plaintiff in a suit, but not for the purpose of proving the right of the vicar to such tithes. Salkeld v. Johnston, 1 Hare 196; 6 Jur. 210.

14. The plaintiff, who was entitled to tithes arising on the defendant's land, served the defendant with notice that he had, by a certain indenture and lease, demised those tithes for a term of years. The plaintiff afterwards filed the bill for an account of the same tithes. It appeared that the lessee disclaimed all interest in the tithes, and the lessee also put in a disclaimer in the cause:—Held, that upon the disclaimers the Court might safely make a decree upon the evidence then before it, without directing an inquiry with reference to the alleged demise. Mounsey v. Burnham, 1 Hare 15.

XX. SUITS RESPECTING.

1. Parties, 6745.
2. Pleading, 6747.
3. Issue at Law, 6748.
4. Costs, 6749.
5. Other Matters, 6750.

1. Parties.

15. To a bill for tithes by the bishop and sequestrator during the incapacity of the incumbent, the incumbent must be a party. London (Bishop) v. Nicholls, Bunb. 141.

Bill for tithes by the bishop and sequestrator during the incapacity of the incumbent, dismissed, the incumbent not being a party. Id.

16. Decree in time of Car. 1, for payment of 40l. per annum out of particular lands, formerly part of the forest of B., to the vicar in lieu of tithes. In a bill against the landowners to establish a right for this 40l. per annum, it is not necessary that the occupiers, as well as landowners, should be made parties to the bill. Cuthbert v. Westwood, Gilb. 320.

17. Rector ought not to be made defendant in vicar's suit for an account of small tithes charged to be withheld by occupiers, on a claim by rector. Williams v. Price, 4 Price 156.

18. It is multifarious for rector and vicar to join in suit for tithes respectively due to them. Exeter College v. Rowland, 6 Madd. 94.

19 In a suit by an improprie rector for tithes, when the defence is, that the tithe in question is vicarial, and vicar, who is a defendant, dies during the suit, it is not necessary to make the new vicar a party, if the plaintiff will waive the account subsequent to his induction. Dames v. Benn, Jac. 95.

The vicar is a necessary party to a bill for tithes, by the improper rector against an occupier, when the defence made is that the tithes in question are payable to him. S. C. 1 Jac. & Walk. 513.

1. Bill by plaintiffs as lessees of the rector of W., for a portion of great and small tithes in S., a neighbouring parish; the vicar of S. who might be entitled to the small tithes, is a necessary party. Baily v. Worrall, Bunb. 115.

2. To a bill to establish a customary payment in lieu of tithes, the ordinary must be a party. Gordon v. Simpkinson, 11 Ves. 509.

A bill to establish a customary payment in lieu of tithes does not lie upon a simple demand of tithes without suit. Id.

3. Bill to establish a custom, the owner of the inheritance must be a party. Spender v. Potter, Bunb. 181.

4. Where a lay impropriator is not a necessary party, and ought to demur, if he does not, but suffers the cause to go to the hearing, the Court will not give him costs. Williamson v. Hutton, 9 Price 187.

5. Impropriator must be party to bill against his lessee to establish a modus. Glanvil v. Trelanney, Bunb. 70.

6. To a bill by a vicar against occupiers for certain tithes, impropriators ought to be omitted as parties, although the defendants allege that it is uncertain, whether these lands are or are not within the parish; and that the impropriate rectors had always received or demanded the tithes: occupiers only are necessary parties. Cooke v. Blunt, 2 Sim. 417.

7. An impropriator is not a necessary party to a bill by a vicar against occupiers; and, if made one, he may demur. Bill dismissed against him, but, under circumstances, without costs. Williamson v. Lonsdale (Lord), Dan. 171.

8. Where impropriate rector, not being an occupier, is made party to bill for tithes, and a decree is made for plaintiff, he is not (but under particular circumstances) liable to pay costs. Petch v. Dalton, 8 Price 9. See also S. P. Leathes v. Newitt, id. 566.

9. Where an equitable lessee of tithes, having a right to call for the conveyance to him of the legal interest, had neglected to do so previously to instituting a suit for the recovery of part of those tithes; and upon the refusal of the rector to join as co-plaintiff in the suit, had made him a co-defendant:—Held, that he was not entitled to the costs arising from the rector's refusal to join, and that the rector was entitled to his costs. White v. Gardner, 1 Y. & Coll. 385.

10. A., being entitled to parcel of tithes, was made defendant in suit by person also claiming to be entitled to tithes, against occupiers, joined with them in answer, and insisted on his right to tithes. Court retained bill, with liberty to bring action; if not, bill to be dismissed with costs; action determined by verdict for plaintiff. On further hearing, account against occupiers was decreed, and they and A. were ordered to pay costs. Wing v. Murrell, M'Clel. & Y. 620.

11. The landlord is not a necessary party to a bill for an account of tithe filed against his tenants; but where he had been made a party by amended bill, on a suggestion made by his tenants in their answer, the bill was dismissed against him without costs. Thorpe v. Mattingley, 2 Y. & Coll. 421; 8 L. J., N. S., Exch. Eq., 9.

12. In general a landlord cannot be made a defendant to a bill for tithes against his tenants. But if he is charged with having got into his possession, from his tenants and other persons, documents for the purpose of preventing the plaintiff from obtaining evidence from them in support of his demand, the landlord cannot demur to the bill. Day v. Drake, 3 Sim. 64.

13. Bill praying account of tithes, and merely stating that impropriate rector demised tithes to plaintiff, demurred to for want of title; but on argument, plaintiff was allowed to amend, by making the impropriate rector a party, on payment of 5l. costs. Jackson v. Benson, M'Clel. 62; 13 Price 131.

14. Landowner, not being an occupier, made defendant in a suit for tithes, is entitled to have the bill dismissed as against him, with costs, but if he mixes in defence, etc., it will be dismissed without costs. Markham v. Smith, 11 Price 126.

15. A vicarage being under sequestration for debt, the occupiers paid their tithes, and certain alleged moduses to the sequestrator:—Held, that the vicar might, notwithstanding, file his bill against the occupiers for an account and satisfaction of their tithes, without making the sequestrator a co-plaintiff, though no fraud or collusion between the occupiers and the sequestrator was alleged. Warrington v. Sadler, Younge 283.

In a bill to establish a modus against the lessee of the impropriator, the owners of the impropriation must be parties. Id.

16. One owner of lands in a township may sue for himself and the others, to establish a contributory modus for all the lands there. Chayter v. Trinity Coll., 3 Anstr. 841.

17. On bill to establish modus against dean and chapter as rector, the ordinary and patron are necessary parties. De Whelpdale v. Milburn, 5 Price 485.

18. A bill to establish a modus should be filed by certain owners and occupiers of land within the parish, on behalf of themselves, of all other owners, occupiers, etc. And the ordinary should always be a party. Hales v. Pomfret, Dan. 142.

19. Ordinary is a necessary party defendant to bill for establishing modus. Cook v. Butt, 6 Madd. 53.

20. Though a modus be laid in all the occupiers, yet suing part of the occupiers is sufficient, each being liable for the whole. Hardcastle v. Smithson, 3 Atk. 247.

21. Rector of M. claiming tithes in kind, the occupier and landlord filed a cross bill to establish a modus, payable to the rector of S., by the lord of the liberty of which the lands were parcel. It was objected, first, that the rector of S. not disputing the modus, a bill would not lie to establish it; secondly, that the other owners of lands in the liberty should have been parties; bill dismissed. Woolaston v. Wright, 3 Anstr. 801.

22. Where an impropriator's right does not come in question, he need not be made a party to a bill for subtraction of tithes. Carte v. Ball, 3 Atk. 500.

1. If a sequestrator file a bill for subtraction of tithes during the vacancy, the bishop of the diocese must be made a party, because the sequestrator must account to him for his receipts. Jones v. Barrett, Bunb. 192.

2. In a tithe suit, if a defendant is not charged with having done some specific act to incite the parishioners to resist the payment of the tithes, he may have his name struck out of the bill, upon payment of the tithe demanded, and the costs of the suit, except such parts of the bill or proceedings as relate exclusively to the defendants. Goold v. Prendergast, 1 Jones 298. And see Green v. Prendergast, id. 299. n.; Thompson v. Callaghan, id. 300. n.

2. Pleading.

3. If the executor of a person brings a bill for tithes, he need not offer to accept the single value, he not being entitled by the statute of Edw. 6 to the treble value. Anon., 1 Vern. 60.

4. In a bill for the single value of tithes, it is not necessary expressly to waive the treble value. Wools v. Walley, 1 Anstr. 100.

5. A bill for tithes used formerly to waive the penalties, but not of late, because the single value is only prayed. Att.-Gen. v. Vincent, Bunb. 393.

6. Bill for tithe of corn and grain. Demurrer, because the single value was not barely demanded, but the bill was for a discovery only, to enable the plaintiff to recover the treble value: non allocatur, for that tithes were suable in the Exchequer before the statute. Sed quare, because it is contrary to the practice to have such a bill, without alleging that plaintiff is content to receive the single value only. Driver v. Man, Hardr. 190.

7. In a bill for tithes, complainant did not show how he was entitled to them, yet held good. Stone v. Ludlowe, Hardr. 321.

8. A vicar need not set forth how he is entitled to tithe herbage and small tithes. Ayde v. Klover, Bunb. 7. S. P. Goole v. Jordan, Bunb. 144.

9. The Court would not determine whether there was any difference between a lay and spiritual impropriator, in setting out his title to tithes. Burnell v. Coates, Bunb. 129.

10. To a bill for tithes, defendant must set out quantities and values of the tithes particularly: it is not sufficient to deny generally the taking the titheable matter. Baker v. Planner, Bunb. 108.

11. In a bill for tithes by a lay impropriator, the title must be shown. Penny v. Hoper, Bunb. 116.

12. In an information for tithes, the value of them must be set forth. Hardnycke v. Newra, Hardr. 4.

13. In a bill for vicarage tithes, plaintiff did not set forth whether they became due to him by prescription or endowment. Defendant, by answer, admitted that the tithes were the vicar's due; but the bill was dismissed upon the merits. Button v. Honey, Hardr. 130.

14. It is not correct to plead that by certain custom used and approved in P. and nineteen other parishes, no tithes of a particular kind were due and payable to rectors of P. Page v. Wilson, 2 Jac. & Walk. 521.

15. In plea of payment of composition to bill for tithes, time when or where is not necessary to be stated. Mytton v. Harris, Wightw. 111.

16. Lessee of tithes filing bill for satisfaction of them, need not set forth his lessor's title. Crathorne v. Taylor, 2 Bro. P. C. 512.

17. A trivial incorrectness in setting out the tithe of wool, and for which amends had been tendered, and the non-payment of Easter dues, which were never demanded, are not sufficient to prevent a bill from being dismissed. Baker v. Athill, 2 Anstr. 493.

18. It is not uncertain or multifarious in bill for account of tithes, bill having stated, as the foundation for plaintiffs' claim, a decree made pursuant to Act of Parliament, also to charge two other distinct sources from which he derives his right, and on which he rests his title, the basis of those two latter being, first an agreement anterior to decree, charged to have been confirmed by Act of Parliament passed ten years before former Act; and, secondly, custom founded on immemorial usage, there being nothing uncertain or real. Owen v. Nodin, 13 Price 478; McClell, 238.

19. In debt on the statute of 2. Edw. 6 for tithes out of plaintiffs' parish, a general allegation is sufficient, without showing a title; defendant was not alleged to be subditus domini regis; yet held good because he was called occupator terre. Phillips v. Kettle, Hardr. 173.

20. Where, in a suit for tithes, the title to the rectory is in issue, to a cross bill praying a discovery of the title, the rector cannot demur, although no other title is set up. Bowman v. Lygon, 1 Anstr. 4.

21. Plea of former decree, for payment of tithes, where a modus of lands alleged to be covered by it was improperly stated, so that the Court could not direct an issue, is not a good plea in bar to bill brought for establishing modus. Collins v. Gough, 7 Bro. P. C. 94.

22. Defendant was permitted to go into evidence of his right to tithes, where his title appeared likely to be clearly established, although he had inaccurately stated the subject-matter of his defence in his answer. Wilmot v. Hellaby, 5 Price 355.

23. Defendant, in answer to bill for account of tithes in kind, must set forth an account of titheable matters taken by him, although he relies on a defence of a composition or modus; or it will be a ground of exception. Whistler v. Wigney, 8 Price 1.

24. To bill against occupier for amount of tithes, arising from farms and lands situate within the township of K., in the parish of L.; a plea, that defendant did not occupy any lands or farm within parish of L., or titheable places thereof, allowed. Warrington v. Mothersill, 7 Price 666.

25. If vicar, claiming an account of tithes throughout the whole parish, by bill in equity, prove his right in part of the parish only, the objection, that the claim is too largely laid, is not a ground for dismissing the bill. Scott v. Lawson, 7 Price 267.

Plea of Modus.] 26. Unnecessary words used in the laying a modus which would make it indefinite, may be expunged. Ellis v. Saul, 1 Anstr. 341.

1. Though modus be pleaded, yet the quantities and value of tithes must be set forth. Gumley v. Fontleroy, Bunb. 60.

2. If a modus decimandi be alleged no otherwise than by answer to a bill for tithes, defendant must answer all other parts of the bill: but if he pleads it, he need not answer any other matter. Langham v. —, Hardr. 130.

3. Misdemeanor of modus in Exchequer always occasions decree for tithes in kind. Anon., Loftt. 66.

4. Modus for clover, instead of saying modus for grass:—Held, sufficient, and issue directed to try modus for grass. Wood v. Harrison, Amb. 563.

5. Not necessary to use the word modus in laying it; nor a particular day of payment. A modus may be overruled for rankness, if for a specific thing; if otherwise, will be sent to trial. Richard v. Evans, 1 Ves. 39.

6. A bill to establish a modus for every ancient farm, stating that the whole parish consisted of ancient farms, but not setting forth the abutments of each, is bad. Scott v. Allgood, 1 Anstr. 16.

7. Modus claimed for lands as part of an ancient estate, without naming ancient estate, or setting forth the abutments, or any descriptions of it, or of the lands of defendant in it, is bad. Wood v. Wray, 3 Anstr. 838.

8. A bill to establish a farm-modus, setting out the abutments of the farm, and stating that the modus had immemorially been paid for the said farm, is good, without stating it expressly to be an ancient farm. Stowell (Lord) v. Atkins, 7 Anstr. 564.

If an action is brought by the lessee of tithes for subtraction, it is a sufficient ground for filing a bill to establish a modus. Id. 566.

A bill to establish a modus will not lie, where the parson has not sued for tithes in kind. Id.

9. If it is not stated in an answer to bill for tithes which set up modus, in respect of what titheable article the modus is laid, it is bad for uncertainty, and no evidence can supply it. But it is sufficient if from whole answer it can be collected to what article it refers. Bourke v. Isaac, 2 Price 299.

10. Uncertainty as to metes and bounds in pleading modus is bad. Gillebrand v. Scotson, 4 Price 267.

11. Modus laid to be payable "by certain occupiers," uncertain and insufficient. De Whelpdale v. Milburn, 5 Price 485.

12. Where a modus is pleaded for a particular description of lands, it must be alleged in the answer that defendants occupy such lands. Stuart v. Greenall, 9 Price 106.

13. Moduses, introduced by stating that they are payable by occupiers in lieu of tithes within and throughout parish (except the occupiers of several other farms and lands), not otherwise describing them than by their respective names:—Held, ill pleaded for uncertainty. Wright v. Southwood, 5 Price 607.

14. Money payment alleged to be a modus in lieu of tithe of lands and of the wool of the first shearing of such lambs, or in lieu of tithe of such lambs:—Held, ill pleaded in the alternative; so also if pleaded as a composition. Such money payment may be relied on at hearing as a composition, if charged to be so in the answer, in case it should not be a modus. Leach v. Bailey, 6 Price 504.

15. Defendant, in answer to bill for account of tithes in kind, must set forth an account of titheable matters taken by him, although he relies on a defence of a modus or composition; or it will be a ground of exception. Whistler v. Wigney, 8 Price 1.

16. Defendant to a bill for tithes put himself upon one modus in his defence, and proves another. There must be a decree against him. St. Paul's (Warden) v. Morris, 9 Ves. 164.

3. Issue at Law.

17. In suit for tithes, jurisdiction of equity is limited to discovery and account. Title must be tried at law, and if disputed, equity has no jurisdiction to make a decree. Norbury v. Meade, 3 Bligh 211.

18. Where a title to tithes in a layman is clearly made out, though not supported by possession, the Court will decree an account without an issue. Lygon v. Strutt, 2 Anst. 602.

19. When a bill is filed for an account of tithes against one who had a lease of his own and the other tithes in the parish, and the whole question in the cause turns upon the validity of the lease, and of the notice given to determine it, this Court will not proceed till those points are settled at law. Boushier v. Morgan, 2 Anstr. 404.

20. In what cases and under what circumstances a person claiming title to tithes must have his right established at law, before he can come into a court of equity for an account and satisfaction. Hantrey v. Daniel, 7 Bro. P. C. 21.

21. The right to compel an account for tithes being consequential to the legal title, and a rector having prima facie a title to all the tithes in turn, it seems that, in questions between the rector and vicar, a court of equity ought not to make a decree in consequence of its opinion of the vicar's title, and in derogation of that of the rector, until the title of the vicar has been established by the decision of a jury, unless such title is made out in the most clear and satisfactory manner. Barnard v. Garnons, 7 Bro. P. C. 105.

22. When a defendant in a suit for tithes, by a rector, makes out a clear defence, as portionist, claiming under the successive grantees of the Crown, of the possessions of one of the dissolved monasteries, a right to some of the great tithes of the rectory, yet, if neither can ascertain and show specifically what were the tithes that belonged to the rector, or to the monastery, the Court has no means of assisting either party in availing himself of his title. The Court will not decree an account in favour of the rector, under such circumstances, where he has never had perception, but they will retain the bill, to give him the opportunity of taking an issue, or proceeding by commission, ejectment, or by action on the statute. The onus probandi is not on the portionist, if there has been no perception on the part of the rector. Boulton v. Richards, 9 Price 671.

1. An account of tithes is consequential upon the legal right; and, therefore, if the least doubt is thrown upon it by prima facie evidence, the account cannot be decreed till the right is established at law. Fowcroft v. Parris, 5 Ves. 221.

2. In a suit for tithes, by a rector, against the owner and occupier of a farm, part of the demesnes of a manor of which the owner was the lord, he, in order to prove that he was entitled to two-thirds of the tithes of the farm, produced a grant from Queen Elizabeth to one of his ancestors, of a chapel with the tithes belonging to it, within his lordship, and also his title deeds, in some of which tithes, in others, tithes of corn, grain, and hay, and in others, tithes and portions of tithes, in the parish and several other places, were conveyed, but in none of them were the tithes of the farm mentioned specifically, except in an old lease of the farm, in which the lord's part of the tithes, together with ingress, egress, etc., were reserved. The witnesses proved that one-third only of the tithes of the farm and the rest of the demesnes had been paid to the plaintiff and his predecessors, and that one of them having employed a person to value the tithes of the parish, pointed out, to the valuer, the farm and other demesnes as being titheable in the thirtieth only. The Court refused to decree an account until the plaintiff had established his right at law. Hughes v. Davies, 5 Sim. 331.

3. Rector is entitled, as a matter of right, to issue at law as to tithes where he sues alone. Williams v. Price, 4 Price 156.

4. Where an adverse title to tithes is set up and established against a demand by rector who offers no evidence to impeach title, he is not entitled to an issue. Wilmot v. Hellaby, 5 Price 355.

5. Rector is not entitled to issue where defendant sets up a grant of a portion, and constant non-payment of tithes, which defence is not impeached by plaintiff. Baker v. Baker, Wightw. 397.

6. A landowner cannot, like a rector, insist on an issue as a right, but in doubtful cases it is granted. Cairns v. Raine, 12 Cl. & F. 833. Affirming S. C. nom. Raine v. Cairns, 4 Hare 327.

7. Bill for tithes, glebe, and right of common. The two latter points being proper at law, the Court retained the bill until plaintiff had ascertained his title, and in the meantime would not decree the tithes. Sweetapple v. Kingston, Bunb. 238.

8. The right to compel an account for tithes being consequential to legal title, and a rector having prima facie title to all the tithes in turn, it seems that, in questions between the rector and vicar, a court of equity ought not to make a decree in consequence of their opinion of vicar's title, and in derogation of that of the rector, until the title of the vicar has been established by the decision of a jury, unless such title is made out in the most clear and satisfactory manner. Barnard v. Garnons, 7 Bro. P. C. 105.

9. Bill for tithe of conies by custom, to pay every tenth coney, or the value of it. Defendant, by his answer, denied the custom, whereupon the Court directed an issue to try it. Randall v. Head, Hardr. 188.

10. The language of endowment being ambiguous, and it being unexplained by any other documents, and there being no parol testimony on either side on which any reliance could be placed, the Court declined making a decree, but directed an issue. Wyld v. Ward, 3 Y. & J. 192.

11. Court will not direct an issue to try composition real, where defendant, by his answer, only alleged a modus. Bennett v. Neale, Wightw. 324.

12. Evidence so old as to be unintelligible, issue was directed. Evidence of reputation of certain lands having been enclosed, in pursuance of agreement, not admissible. Leathes v. Newitt, 4 Price 355.

13. In a suit for tithes, there was no proof of payment for a very long period; all the evidence which could tend to prove a legal exemption (claimed by the occupier) was adduced at the hearing; but as that would not, in the opinion of the Court, justify a jury in finding for the exemption, an issue was refused. Ross v. Aglionby, 4 Russ. 489.

14. Where, in a suit for tithes, the question depends entirely on the construction of ancient documents, the judge in equity is more competent to draw the proper conclusion than a jury; and in such case, an issue will not be directed. Fisher v. Graves (Lord), McCl. & Y. 362.

15. Under what circumstances a new trial of an issue, directed to try vicar's right to tithes, ought to be refused. Brownlow v. Davis, 7 Bro. P. C. 83.

As to Modus.] See XI. 3 ante.

4. Costs.

16. If more tithes are claimed than defendant has kinds of titheable goods, it is practice in Exchequer to dismiss bill with costs. Anon., Loftt. 66.

17. Plaintiff sued for thirteen different species of tithes, and proved but one; yet the Court decreed costs generally. Smith v. Morgan, Bunb. 335. But see id. n.

18. Where two defendants were sued for tithes, and one made default, the Court decreed the whole costs against the other, and left him to get the contribution as he could. Lloyd v. Macknorch, Bunb. 138.

19. If to a bill for tithes, the defendant does not show a previous tender, or make one by his answer, plaintiff shall have an account; if the tender be only by answer, defendant shall account with costs; but if made before, he shall save his costs, and that a tender may be made after answer. Anon., Bunb. 38. See Exeter (Bishop) v. Trenchard, Bunb. 47.

20. Bill for tithes; modus set up as a defence. Motion by defendant to pay up arrearages of modus with costs up to time, refused; but plaintiff proceeding and then abandoning suit, costs after tender allowed to defendant. Bristol (Dean) v. Donnesthorpe, 1 Anstr. 272.

21. The application to equity by cross-bill to establish moduses against a bill to overturn them being matter of favour, costs in equity are never allowed. Morrell v. Gregson, 11 Price 421.

1. Where defendant in tithe cause sets up modus, and is desirous of protecting himself from costs, he should move for an order that plaintiff accept sums admitted to be due by answer, or proceed at peril of costs, and Court will notice such tender by minute. The motion may be made without notice, or payment of money into court. Davis v. Moseley, 9 Price 211.

2. If claim of plaintiff in tithe suit be larger than he can support, the Court will give costs against him for the excess up to the time of his giving notice of abandoning any part of the excessive demand by the bill. Wolley v. Brownhill, 13 Price 500; M'Clel. 317.

3. Plaintiff, in suit for tithes, having commenced action at law for treble value, ordered, on motion, to elect law or equity within six days, with costs on either course abandoned, and of the motion. Taunton v. Glyde, 10 Price 129.

4. Where defendant in tithe cause submits to part of plaintiff's demand, the Court will, on motion for that purpose, on part of defendant, refer it to Master in any stage of proceeding to ascertain what is due, and to tax costs; the defendant undertaking to pay the amount, without prejudice to any other question in the cause. Lowe v. Firkins, 11 Price 453.

5. Vicar, after issue directed to try modus, suffering modus to be taken pro confesso, pays costs. Drake v. Smyth, M'Clel. & Y. 380.

As to costs in general, of issue at law, relative to tithes. Id.

6. An account of tithe hay being decreed, the defendant appealed from so much as directed an account in respect of lands in the township of S., and the decree was to that extent ultimately reversed; pending the appeal, the plaintiff took the account as to all the lands, including those in the township of S.; the Court, on application, declining to restrain him from so doing. On an application for costs:—Held, that it was convenient that the whole account should be taken at the same time, and the Court refused to make plaintiff pay costs of account, as to the township of S., but made him pay his own costs in respect of that part of the account. Id.

As to evidence of money payments in tithe causes. S. C. 5 Price 369.

7. On issues directed by a court of equity to try a modus, though established by two verdicts, the plaintiff is entitled to his costs at law only, and not in equity. Clifton v. Orchard, 1 Atk. 610.

8. Where improper rector, not being an occupier, is made party defendant to bill for tithes, and decree is made for plaintiff, he is not (but under particular circumstances, as to which see Leathes v. Nemitt, 8 Price 562) liable to pay costs. Petch v. Dalton, M'Clel. 9. See also Leathes v. Nemitt, id. 566, and Williamson v. Hutton, 9 Price 187.

9. Where a district of about 370 acres, within the ambit of the parish, was found, on an issue at law, to be extra-parochial, the rector's bill for the tithes thereof was dismissed with costs; the plea to the bill having been overruled, with liberty to amend, and the amended plea put in and allowed:—Held, that the defendant was entitled to the costs of correcting his own error, but that he was entitled to such costs as if his amended plea had been first put in; and in taxation the Master will, without any special direction, exercise a discretion as to the taxing the costs of informal proceedings. Clayton v. Meadows, 2 Hare 26.

Of Parties improperly joined.] See 1 supra.

5. Other Matters.

10. Particular course pursued on hearing of tithe cause. Lowe v. Firkins, M'Clel. 595. S. P. Drake v. Smyth, 5 Price 375.

11. In suit for account of tithes, defendant cannot pay money into court before answer. Hull v. Matthews, 2 Anstr. 444.

12. Defendant in suit by will in equity for tithes, relying on defence of tithes having been duly set out, may (notwithstanding the cause be at issue) bring action of trespass for not carrying them away; Court refused an injunction to restrain him. Bradley v. Bensted, 13 Price 221; M'Clel. 80.

13. Where defendants had described their farms by so many acres, and an objection was taken at hearing to want of sufficient description of locality, the Court permitted the cause to proceed, suggesting that, if the objection was insisted on, leave would be given to defendant to file interrogatories for purpose of enlarging the description. Wright v. Southwood, 5 Price 607.

14. A vicar having granted an annuity charged on his benefice, and being entitled to compensation for tithe arrears, under the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 100, may be restrained from receiving the same until answer put into a bill filed against him for raising the arrears of the annuity. Stannus v. Robinson, Hay. & J. 622.

15. In a suit for account of tithes, defendant cannot pay money into court before answer. Hull v. Mathens, 2 Anstr. 444.

Reference to Master.] 16. Reference, whether several tithe causes should be consolidated, not of course before answer. Keighley v. Brown, 16 Ves. 344.

17. Where defendant in tithe cause submits to part of plaintiff's demand, the Court will, on motion for that purpose, on part of defendant, refer it to the Master in any stage of proceedings, to ascertain what is due, and to tax costs, the defendant undertaking to pay the amount, without prejudice to any other question in the cause. Lowe v. Firkins, 11 Price 453.

18. Form of reference to the Master to ascertain the value of the London Corn Exchange, in regard to its liability to tithe, under the Act 37 Hen. 8, c. 12. Letts v. London Corn Exchange Co., 1 De G. M. & G. 398; 21 L. J., Ch., 684.

19. A reference as to whether a receiver over improper tithes should proceed against the defaulters by bill in equity or otherwise, was granted upon the motion of the receiver, with the concurrence of the plaintiff. Callaghan v. Reardon, Sau. & Sc. 682.

XXI. OTHER CASES.

20. Tithe owners cannot control the farmer in his mode of cultivation or consumption of produce of his ground, provided he act bonâ fide, and without fraud. Lewis v. Younge, 11 Cl. 129; 13 Price 394.

1. Bill to enforce contribution under an agreement, by owners and occupiers of land in a parish, to defend and prosecute tithe suits at joint expense, dismissed upon doubtful evidence, and long delay. Stone v. Yea, Jac. 426.

2. Bequest of pure personality to "the secretary for the time being of the association for buying impropriate tithes, and vesting them in the Church of England," is void under the Statute of Mortmain, 9 Geo. 2, c. 36, notwithstanding the 13 & 14 Vict., c. 94, s. 23. Denton v. Manners (Lord), 4 Jur., N. S., 724; 27 L. J., Ch., 623; 2 De G. M. & G. 675. Affirming 25 Beav. 38.

Quære, whether a bequest of pure personality to "the Tithe Redemption Trust for the Church in England and Wales" would be valid. Id.

3. Under the powers created by the statute 17 Car. 2, c. 3, B., by his will, dated in 1671, gave all the tithes of hay, corn, grain, and all other tithes, great and small, of the parish of B., to H. F., his heirs, etc., to the use of a preaching minister, to be nominated by H. F. and his heirs. In 1706, T. F., the descendant and heir of H. F., conveyed the tithes with other hereditaments in trust, for the payment of creditors, and upon a bill in equity filed by the creditors, they were sold under a decree of the Court, and in 1716 conveyed to R. F. and J. H., a trustee for R. F., and their heirs, etc., in trust as to the tithes of B., to the use of a preaching minister, to be nominated by R. F. and his heirs. J. H. survived R. F., and became seised of the legal estate, and his descendant and heir, in 1826, conveyed the tithes of B., etc., to T. L. F., the heir of T. F., upon the original trusts. Before this conveyance (in 1821), T. L. F., who then had the equitable estate in the tithes of B., appointed E., the preaching minister of B.:—Held, upon a bill in equity by T. L. F. and E., against occupiers of lands in B., for an account of tithes, that the title derived under the will of F., and the decree of sale for payment of debts was good in equity, and the appointment made by T. L. F. before he had the legal estate, valid. Holdsworth v. Fairfax, 8 Bli. N. S. 882; 3 Cl. & F. 115.

4. The 28 Hen. 8, c. 11, s. 3, gives the "tithes, fruits, oblations, obventions, emoluments, commodities, advantages, rents, and all other whatsoever revenues, casualties, or profits, certain and uncertain, offering or belonging to any" dignity, prebend, or benefice therein mentioned, which shall accrue between the concurrence of a vacancy and a new appointment to the appointee. The 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 30, directs the profits of dignities or benefices without cure of souls becoming vacant during the existence of a certain ecclesiastical commission to be paid to the treasurer of Queen Anne's Bounty, who is to keep an account of the receipts and expenses, and retain the balance until he shall be otherwise ordered "by competent authority." By a subsequent statute, the Crown is declared entitled to appoint, notwithstanding the existence of the commission in question, three persons to certain prebends therein named. One of these appointees having duly demanded from the treasurer of Queen Anne's Bounty the profits received by him during the vacancy, brought an action for money had and received to recover them. A special verdict (on a verdict found in his favour) declared these to be "the net profits of the prebend":—Held, that a judgment for the plaintiff given on this verdict could not be sustained, because it did not distinguish the sources from which these profits might arise, nor show whether they were derived from the corpus of the prebend, to which he was individually entitled, or from sums due to him in respect of his share of the funds of the corporation aggregate, of which as prebend he was a member. Repton v. Hodgson, 3 H. L. Ca. 72.

5. A bill was filed by a tithe-owner claiming tithes against several occupiers of land who had not rendered any tithe, and disputed the plaintiff's title to it. One of the defendants was a Quaker, and applied to the plaintiff, on that ground, to dismiss the bill against him, which the plaintiff consented to do, provided the Quaker's answer admitted the actual title of the plaintiff, so as to enable the plaintiff to obtain his tithes against the Quaker by the ordinary proceedings before justices in the country. The draft of the Quaker's proposed answer was then shown to the plaintiff, and was by arrangement altered, so as not to deny the plaintiff's title, but so as to object merely on the grounds of religious scruple entertained by him as a Quaker. On this answer being produced in evidence, the plaintiff recovered his tithes before the justices, and the further prosecution of the suit against the Quaker became unnecessary. On motion by the plaintiff, the suit was dismissed against the Quaker defendant; but as it appeared upon the affidavits and the draft of the answer, as originally prepared, that the defendant had, previously to and at the time when the bill was filed, disputed the plaintiff's title, the bill was dismissed, without costs of the suit or of the motion. Wright v. Barlow, 5 De G. & Sm. 43; 15 Jur. 1149.

I. POSSESSORY.

6. Upon possession for many years, the origin of it not appearing, and no title, except as cestui que trust, under a term to raise a sum of money, the Court would not presume any other title, and, therefore, decreed the plaintiff to be let into possession on payment of the charge, but with reluctance, and, upon the laches, refused an account of the rents even from the filing of the bill. Acherley v. Roe, 5 Ves. 565.

1. Possession is the criterion of title to a personal chattel; the property therefore changed by sale in market overt. That rule adopted by the Bankrupt Law; distinction as to landed possession not even prima facie evidence. Legal title in contemplation of bankruptcy, protected by the previous equitable title. Hiern v. Mill, 13 Ves. 122.

2. A good title may be made to an estate, though the origin cannot be shown by any deed or will; but it must be shown that there has been such a long uninterrupted possession, enjoyment, and dealing with the property, as affords a reasonable presumption that there is an absolute title in fee-simple. Cottrel v. Watkins, 1 Beav. 361.

3. Where title is defective and acquiesced in, with knowledge of its being so, then the possession is quieted. Shine v. Gough, 1 Ball & B. 444.

4. Where the possession of an estate can be referred to a good and valid title, equity will not refer it to a title obtained by fraud or disseisin. Conry v. Caulfield, 2 Ball & B. 255.

5. Grants presumed upon the principle of quieting possession. Hillary v. Wallen, 12 Ves. 252.

6. If a person, having the mere right, obtain possession by contract with him who has it, he cannot be remitted to his mere right, but must hold the possession accordingly as he received it, because it was his folly to take possession in that manner without recovering it by lawful means. Saunders v. Annesley (Lord), 2 Sch. & Lef. 108.

Nonpayment of rent reserved on a lease, though for upwards of twenty years, shall not bar the lessor from recovering possession at the expiration of the term. Id. 106.

7. No decree can be made for a plaintiff who states his title under a deed from one out of possession contrary to the statute 32 Hen. 8, c. 9; but if his suit comprises different portions of equity, it may be bad pro tanto without being affected throughout. If any part of the plaintiff's equity is untouched, he may proceed on so much. Byrne v. Frere, 2 Moll. 157.

8. A verdict being against the will, the heir is entitled, although a new trial is directed, to be left in possession, provided no danger of insolvency to answer for the interim rents and profits, in the event of the will being established. Devisee casually in the occupation of real estate after death of testator, or let into possession by the favour of the occupiers, acquires no right. The heir, on the death of his ancestor in possession, may enter and remove everybody, except the widow, who has a right to stay until her dower is assigned to her. Lloyd v. Trimleston (Lord), 2 Moll. 81.

9. Where a trustee of a term of years, upon the usual trusts for securing annuities, has taken possession of the estates under the trusts, the Court, although all arrears of the annuities may afterwards be paid, will not order possession to be given up to the grantor, except upon such terms as will enable the trustee to resume it, and to receive the rents, the moment the annuities are again in arrear. Jenkins v. Milford, 1 Jac. & Walk. 629.

II. PRESUMPTION OF.

10. Where a conveyance was, inter alia, of four acres and a half, dispersed in the common field of A., in 1784, and a subsequent conveyance was made in 1818, reciting an allotment under an Act passed in 1801, for inclosing part of the parish of A., in lieu of five acres of common field lands:—Held, that, in the absence of anything to raise the presumption of the allotment having been made in respect of other lands, the Court would assume it to have been made in respect of the common lands comprised in the deed of 1784, and the title in 1841 to be unobjectionable. Major v. Ward, 5 Hare 604.

11. When a rent, which was to cease upon payment of a certain sum of money, was charged upon, and payable out of, several denominations of land, and there was evidence to show that it had not been paid by or demanded from the owners of one of those denominations for upwards of a century: but there was nothing to show that it had not been regularly paid out of the other denominations:—Held, that the Court would not presume, either that the redemption money was paid, or that that portion of the land had been released. Warren v. Bateman, Fl. & K. 448.

12. If an executrix sues in that character, she must produce probate, though she could make out her title as legatee of a lease for years. Gleeson v. Cooke, 1 Hog. 294.

13. Where, from the answer itself, there is strong presumption against defendant's title and which is impeached by the bill, Court will grant a receiver. Stitmoll v. Williams, 6 Madd. 49.

14. No presumption of a grant of mines against an express reservation on a sale many years ago, merely from permitting expenditure without claim. Norway v. Rowe, 19 Ves. 156.

15. The Court must govern itself by a moral certainty upon title, for it is impossible there should be a mathematical certainty. Hillary v. Waller, 12 Ves. 252.

16. To make good a title to the residue of an old term, mesne assignments, which cannot be produced, will be presumed even at law. White v. Foljambe, 11 Ves. 350.

17. Land had been in the possession of the parish officers for nearly sixty years, and no evidence that it had ever been in the possession of any other person since the will of the testator, the date of which was unknown. There was some slight evidence of a house which once stood on it having been an almshouse. The Court treated it as parish land, and directed a mortgage to be made to repay funds borrowed for its improvement. Re Dixon's Trust, 1 W. R. 244.

1. Presumption of title need not be founded on what is believed to have happened, but what may have happened. St. Mary Magdalen College (Oxford) v. Att.-Gen., 3 Jur., N. S., 675.

2. The heir and executor of T. having disputed whether certain estates, of which T. died seised or possessed, were real or personal estate, all that appeared was that P., the original owner, through whom both claimed, as far as was known, died seised of the freehold. The heir-at-law of P. having sued T., the litigation was compromised by a deed conveying to T. all the estate and right of such heir, and no other claim was ever heard of, nor was T. disturbed in possession:—Held, that, assuming that P. died seised of the fee, and that all the interests of other claimants were conveyed to T., the presumption was that T. also impliedly acquired the fee. Tudury v. Sacher de Pina, 7 L. T., N. S., 115.

3. In 1586, property was, in consideration of 273*l.*, demised for 2,000 years at a small rent, and the lessor covenanted, if required by the lessees within seven years, to convey the fee to the lessees without further payment. In documents dated in 1664, 1681, and 1690, the property was treated by the persons claiming under the lessees as held in fee simple. But in documents dated in 1716 and 1758, it was considered doubtful whether it was freehold or leasehold, and in 1777 and 1778 it was treated as leasehold:—Held, that the presumption up to 1715 was, that it was fee simple; that such presumption was not destroyed by the subsequent doubts, and a purchaser in 1859 of the fee was held bound to take the title. Jeffreys v. Machu, 29 Beav. 344.

III. PRELIMINARY TO RELIEF IN EQUITY.

4. When a discovery is necessary of the deed under which plaintiffs' title arises, and relief is prayed to have it produced at all trials at law, and to have attested copies, account of profits will be decreed without having the title first established at law. Townsend v. Ash, 3 Atk. 337.

5. Injunction denied to stay an interloper's trading to the East Indies till the validity of the East India Company's patent has been tried. East India Co. v. Sandys, 1 Vern. 127.

6. The Court will not interfere, even to secure the fund, upon the application of a person who does not show any title. Brown v. Duabridge, 2 Bro. C. C. 321.

7. Bill for account of goods landed at a certain quay, the plaintiff claiming a right of toll by prescription. Defendant denied plaintiff's title, and refused to discover the goods:—Held, he was not compellable till plaintiff had established his right at law. Northleigh v. Luscombe, Amb. 612.

8. When a bill prayed an injunction to restrain the defendant from proceeding in an ejectment, on the ground that one of the lives upon which the lease depended still existed; it was dismissed, as plaintiffs had not established their title to the lease. O'Donnell v. Nolan, 4 Dr. & War. 153.

9. Where the whole right of the plaintiff depends on the execution of a contract which he has entered into, that right must be first established by him before he can make it a foundation for proceedings to enforce a right against another person. Demurrer allowed, with liberty to amend. Fryer v. Cooke, 12 L. J., N. S., Ch., 487.

10. On bill stating intent of defendant to encroach on plaintiff's land, etc., by building; defendant by answer claiming the title to land himself; motion for injunction was refused, not being sufficient to try title on. Bateman v. Johnson, Fitzg. 106.

11. Injunction granted to prevent the obstruction of ancient lights against a lessee of an ecclesiastical corporation, subject to the plaintiffs establishing their right to the easement in an action. Sutton v. Montfort, 4 Sim. 559.

12. Where there is a fair doubt, whether the law would give damages for the piracy of a work, a court of equity will not maintain an injunction granted ex parte, but will leave the plaintiff to establish his legal right, before it interferes in his behalf. Byron (Lord) v. Dugdale, 1 L. J., Ch., 239.

13. Where the copyright of a work has been assigned by the author to the plaintiff, and the plaintiff and author swear that A. (a stranger to the suit) has only a qualified interest in the work, but A., in an affidavit filed by the defendant, swears, that, under a bargain between him and the author, he has the entire copyright of the work, but does not state any deed of assignment; the plaintiff cannot obtain an injunction till he has established his right at law. Lovndes v. Duncombe, 1 L. J., Ch., 51.

14. Bill stated the plaintiff to be lessee of an ancient mill, and that defendant had erected flood gates and other works on the river, which obstructed plaintiff's mill, and prayed that defendant might be decreed to pull down these works, and be restrained from erecting new ones, such works having been erected above three years. Such a bill will not lie until the right be established at law, and a demurrer for want of equity is good. Weller v. Smeaton, 1 Cox 102; 1 Bro. C. C. 572.

15. The Court will not generally, in doubtful cases, restrain by injunction the infringement of an asserted legal right, until its validity has been established by an action at law; but secus, where there has been long uninterrupted enjoyment under a patent, that being regarded as prima facie evidence of title. Stevens v. Keating, 2 Ph. 333.

I. CUSTODY.

1. Title deeds are incident to the possession under a freehold title. Strode v. Blackburne, 3 Ves. 225.

2. Deeds which relate to two distinct properties will not be delivered to the owner of the largest property, unless he exonerates the previous holder by an unqualified covenant to produce them. The original covenantee not a necessary party to a suit for the purpose of obtaining such a covenant. Ruscoe v. Richards, 1 Jur. 304.

3. Bill for delivery of title deeds, and injunction to restrain setting up of outstanding term, to which no affidavit as to title deeds was annexed. Plea overruled, because it should have been confined to so much of bill as related to outstanding terms, and because that part of bill which related to title deeds should have been demurred to for want of affidavit. Hook v. Dorman, 1 Sim. & S. 227.

4. F. and W., as solicitors for the tenant for life, held the title deeds, which afterwards passed into the possession of W. and C., their successors. The tenant for life died, and the estate then stood limited, first to F. and W. for five hundred years to secure a sum of 2,000*l.*, with remainder to trustees for six hundred years to secure a jointure and portions, with remainder to A. B. in tail. A. B. being an infant, a suit was instituted on his behalf, in which the 2,000*l.* was raised on the security of the term. Upon that occasion, F. and W. covenanted with the mortgagees to produce the title deeds from time to time, and not to part with them; but they were relievable from the covenant on certain terms. A receiver was appointed in the suit, and the Court directed the costs of the solicitors of the suit to remain charges upon the estate at interest. W. and C. were solicitors in the suit for A. B. Hotham v. Somerville, 5 Beav. 360; 6 Jur. 861.

A. B., upon coming of age, presented a petition for the delivery of the title deeds:—Held, that (independently of the covenant) W. and C. held the deeds for A. B., and not for the termors; but the covenant having been entered into for the benefit of the infant, F. and W. were not bound to part with the deeds until released from their covenants:—Held, also, that W. was not entitled to hold the deeds for the trustees of the term of six hundred years, or for any costs other than those of seeing himself properly released from the covenant, and that he had no right to require them to be delivered to the receiver in the cause. Id.

5. One lends money on a security, which he is advised by a lawyer to be a good one, yet if it proves otherwise, and he has notice that another made title to it, he must deliver up all the writings relating to it, but not the mortgage deed, for there may be covenants in that for the payment of the money. Opie v. Godolphin, Pre. Ch. 548.

6. A. devised 10,000*l.* to trustees in trust, to be laid out in land, and to be settled on B. for life, without waste; remainder to trustees and their heirs for the life of B. to support contingent remainders, with a power to B. to make a jointure; remainder to the heirs of the body of B.; remainders over; and by the same will, devises lands to B. to the same uses, and dies, leaving C. executor. B. sues C., the executor, for the deeds relating to the lands that are in his hands, and to have the money laid out in lands and settled. Decreed, by the Master of the Rolls, that B. had but an estate for life in the lands, and so not entitled to the deeds, but that they were to be brought into court, and that the lands to be bought with the money were to be settled on B. for his life only; remainder to his first, etc., sons: but by the opinion of Ld. Ch. King, B. was decreed to have an estate tail in the lands devised, and consequently to be entitled to the deeds relating thereto, though, as to the lands to be purchased, that being executory and in the power of the Court, B. was to be but tenant for life, with remainder to his first, etc., sons. Papillon v. Voice, 2 P. W. 471; 2 Kel. 27. But see 1 Sch. & Lef. 223.

7. The Court will not take a trust deed out of the possession of the bankrupt's trustees. Exp. Holder, 3 Dea. & Ch. 276; 2 L. J., N. S., Bk., 64.

8. Where the plaintiff in a suit is the personal representative of a person who could not have sued, and through her of one who was entitled to sue, the bill will not be dismissed on that ground. Carter v. Sanders, 2 Eq. Rep. 891.

The personal representative of a person may maintain a suit regarding the title deeds of the testatrix's real estate. Id.

A deposit of title deeds by the heir at law of a testatrix to secure a private loan will not prevent the creditors of the deceased person from proceeding against the deposites. Id.

Where an executrix borrows money, saying that part of it was wanted for the administration of the estate, the onus is thrown on the lender of showing how much was wanted for such purpose. Id.

9. Where there was a devise to S., a single woman, who was appointed executrix for life, and a gift to trustees for sale, in the event of her death or marriage; the Court, on the application by the trustees for the custody of the title deeds, or that S. should be ordered to give an undertaking, refused to make any order. Taylor v. Sparrow, 9 Jur., N. S., 1226; 9 L. T., N. S., 438.

1. A testator devised his real estate in strict settlement, giving to trustees a power of sale and exchange, to be exercised with the consent of the person entitled in possession, if of full age; and he bequeathed his residuary personality to the trustees upon the trusts declared concerning the moneys to arise from sales under the power. Shortly after his death a decree was made at the suit of the first tenant for life, then an infant, for the execution of the trusts of the will. Parts of the estate were sold under the power, and the money paid into court, and a large fund was there applicable to the purchase of real estates. After the tenant for life came of age inquiries were directed as to the investment of part of the funds in real estate, and as to the propriety of applying for a private estate Act, which inquiries were still being prosecuted. Shortly after this the tenant for life applied to the Court, that the trustees might be ordered to deliver to her the title deeds of the estate, subject to the limitations of the will, which application was refused by Stuart, V.-Ch.:—Held, that as a suit affecting the estates was being prosecuted, the custody of the deeds did not depend on the question who had the legal right to them, but on the question what custody was most convenient for the purposes of the suit; and that the Court of Appeal would not interfere with the discretion of the Vice-Chancellor on the subject. Stanford v. Roberts, 6 L. R., Ch., 307; 19 W. R. 552.

2. A person who is out of possession, and whose ultimate right to obtain and keep possession of the title deeds depends on the validity of his title, may maintain a suit for the delivery up to him of the title deeds, if the evidence of his title is not in his own power, and depends on the production of the deeds of which delivery is prayed. Whittingham v. Cusack, 6 Ir. R., Eq., 451.

A suit by a person claiming a legal title to land, praying discovery and delivery up of the title deeds, against a person who had the deeds, and merely claimed to hold them as a stakeholder for whoever had the legal title, the deeds having been brought into court on an interlocutory motion, and another suit having been subsequently instituted in which the questions as to the title of the lands could be decided, the plaintiff in the first suit offered the defendant to consent that the deeds in court should be transferred to the second suit, and the first dismissed with costs; the defendant having declined to consent, and put the plaintiff upon terms to bring the first suit to a hearing:—Held, that the plaintiff in that suit should pay the costs of it up to the service of the notice of consent, and the defendant those incurred afterwards. Id.

3. Marriage articles destroyed, made good by decree. Bates v. Heard, Dick. 4.

5. Deeds destroyed, plaintiff decreed to hold and enjoy. Garland v. Radcliffe, Dick. 11.

6. Same in case of a will destroyed. Hayne v. Hayne, Dick. 18.

7. Will destroyed, but decreed as set forth in bill. Hampden v. Hampden, Dick. 26.

8. Heir destroys will decreed to convey estate to plaintiffs, as by will stated. Woodroffe v. Wood, Dick. 32.

9. If a bond is taken away fraudulently and cancelled, the obligee shall have the same benefit as if it were existing. Savage v. Browne, Finch 184.

10. Copy of a note, taken by one who had been entrusted with the note, and was since dead, on which was written an acknowledgment that nothing was due, allowed to be read as evidence, though not proved to be a true copy, and though the defendant had sworn there was no such acknowledgment on the note, it appearing, when the note was produced, that the bottom of it was torn off. Winne v. Lloyd, 2 Vern. 608.

11. An account touching a personal estate being decreed, the defendant endeavoured to charge the plaintiff with a great debt, due to the estate, but defendant having opened a bundle of papers relating to that demand, which had been sealed up and left in his hands, and altered them so that it could not be known what papers might have been taken out, the defendant's demand was for that reason disallowed. Wardour v. Beresford, 1 Vern. 452.

12. A. devises lands to several persons, and after his death, one who was a friend to the heir at law snatches the will out of the executor's hands, and tears it in pieces; the pieces being gathered up and stitched together, a bill is brought to establish the bill, and decreed the devisees to hold and enjoy, and the heir to convey to them. Haines v. Haines, 2 Vern. 441.

13. A., by answer, confessed he had in a passion burnt his marriage articles, but it being proved that he had produced them after the time he said they were burnt, he was committed, and though he made oath he had them not, and could not produce them, yet the Court would not discharge him, till he consented to admit the articles to be as in the bill. Sanson v. Ramsey, 2 Vern. 561.

14. Where deed is wilfully destroyed, everything is to be presumed against the party in odium spoliatoris, and therefore, parol evidence of the person who prepared the draft, though at the distance of several years, is admissible, to prove the general contents of it. Delany v. Temison, 3 Bro. P. C. 659.

15. In taking account before the Master, one of the parties is charged with 4,000*l.* as the value of a note which he had wilfully destroyed. The Master, by his report, allows this charge; and upon an exception being taken to the report for so doing, the Court first allowed, and afterwards overruled, the exception: but upon an appeal, an issue was directed to try the fact of spoliation and what damage was sustained thereby. Borrett v. Goodere, 4 Bro. P. C. 679.

16. Where a bond is burnt or cancelled by accident or mistake, or where it is procured to be delivered up by fraud, equity will set it up against a surety, though extinguished at law. Skip v. Huey, 3 Atk. 93.

1. Though in a personal legacy, where the will is destroyed or concealed, the rule is to cite the executor into the Ecclesiastical Court, yet the legatee may properly go into equity on the head of spoliation and suppression; and there are several cases where, if spoliation or suppression be proved, it will change the jurisdiction, and give the Court of Chancery a jurisdiction which it had not originally, as in Hunsdon's (Lord) case, Hob. 109, where the title was merely at law; yet, this being a suppression of the title deeds, the plaintiff had a decree in equity for possession and quiet enjoyment. Tucker v. Phipps, 3 Atk. 360.

2. Evidence, the same here as at law, on a casual destruction of deeds, but otherwise where a spoliation. Cookes v. Hellier, 1 Ves. 234.

3. Bond by husband, to permit wife to dispose, and cancelled by him, subsists in point of law, and the benefit of it decreed for her executor. Pawlett v. Delaval, 2 Ves. 670.

III. SUPPRESSION.

4. Defendant suppresses a marriage settlement, whereby a remainder in tail is limited to plaintiff's father, all prior estates being spent:—Decreed, plaintiff to hold and enjoy the estate. Eyton v. Eyton, 2 Vern. 380; Pre. Ch. 116.

5. Where a deed or will is suppressed by the heir, the party claiming under such deed or will, decreed to hold and enjoy, and the heir or suppressor of the deed, etc., to convey. Dalston v. Coatesworth, 1 P. W. 731. Affirmed 3 Bro. P. C. 550.

6. The defendant suppresses a settlement, but upon proof that it came to his hands, the party entitled shall hold and enjoy the lands, according to the settlement. Eyton v. Eyton, 4 Bro. P. C. 149.

7. Suppression of deeds, tantamount to spoliation, in respect to presumption against the party suppressing. Bowles v. Stewart, 1 Sch. & Lef. 209.

A renewal taken by tenant for life of a lease for lives, is a trust for the benefit of those in remainder; and a fine levied by the heir of such tenant for life, keeping possession of the title deeds, will not bar those in remainder; nor will any length of time during such a suppression of deeds. Ib.

A principal is answerable for the act of his agent, in concealing or suppressing deeds, though not done with the knowledge of the principal. Ib.

10. The Act of Toleration, 1 Will. & M., c. 18, was made to protect persons of tender consciences, and to exempt them from penalties; but to extend it to clergymen of the Church of England, who act contrary to the rules of discipline of the Church, would introduce the utmost confusion. Trebec v. Keith, 2 Atk. 501.

12. Plaintiffs having first established their title to tolls at law, equity will decree account of such as are subtracted. Reading (Mayor) v. Winkworth, 5 Price 473.

13. A private Act of Parliament imposed a duty of 2s. per chaldron upon all coal "imported and landed at the town of H., or otherwise brought or delivered within the limits of the town." The Act gave a remedy against the shipowner by distraining the ship and tackle as well as the coals in default of payment. At the time that the Act was passed no coals were brought into H. except by sea:—Held, that coals brought into the town by railway were liable to the duty, and not only sea-borne coals; and that the railway company, as the persons who brought the coals into the town, were primarily liable to pay the duty. Great Eastern Railway Co. v. Harwich (Mayor), 41 L. T. 533.

TOLZEY COURT.

16. An attachment of the goods of the defendant in an action of debt in the Tolzey Court of Bristol is only a process to compel the appearance of the defendant, and does not make the plaintiff a secured creditor within the meaning of s. 16, sub-s. 5 of the Act of 1869. The effect of an attachment in the Tolzey Court being the same as that of a foreign attachment under the custom of the Mayor's Court of London. Exp. Sear, Re Prior, 17 L. R., Ch. D., 74; 44 L. T. 887; 51 L. J., Ch., 448.

TONTINE.

1. In 1792, 32,000*l.* were raised by way of tontine, viz. by subscribers, who were to receive during the lives of cestui que vient nominated by them annuities proportioned to the amounts subscribed, which were secured by conveying to trustees freehold lands, upon trust to raise an annuity of 880*l.*, and divide it among the subscribers during the lives of their cestui que vient. Each subscriber had a debenture handed to him, in which the amount of his subscription and of his annuity at that date, and the name and age of the cestui que vie were set forth; and it was expressly provided in the deed, that any person holding the debenture might give a receipt for the annuity due on the debenture, and that no payment could be made to any subscriber without his producing the debenture at the time of payment:—Held, that the annuity to which a subscriber was thus entitled was an interest in lands which could not pass by delivery of the debenture, but required a deed, and in the case of a married woman required a fine (before 1833). Re O'Hara's Tontine, 3 Jur., N. S., 1145; 6 W. R. 45.

The provision, that any person holding the debenture should have power to give a receipt, only operates so as to discharge the trustees, and does not enable the right itself to pass by delivery. Ib.

2. A tontine is a contract for value, and therefore within the exceptions of s. 17 of the 16 & 17 Vict., c. 51. Oldfield v. Preston, 8 Jur., N. S., 107; 31 L. J., Ch., 256; 10 W. R. 257; 5 L. T., N. S., 650; 3 De G. F. & J. 398.

An interest accruing immediately under a tontine does not create the relation of predecessor and successor, so as to make succession duty payable in respect of the accrued interest. Ib.

Where a father subscribed to a tontine in the names of three of his children, two of whom died before the time appointed for the commencement of the Act, but the third survived it:—Held, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that such surviving child took, not by succession, but in its own right, by way of advancement, and that no duty was payable in respect thereof. Ib.

3. The circumstance that policies of a life insurance company are still in force, and that the liabilities of the company upon them cannot be settled for many years, is not sufficient to render it inexpedient to make an order for winding-up such a company under the provisions of the Winding-up Acts. *Exp. 1. Reasonableness and Consideration.

1. Contracts entered into between two persons, to restrain one of them from setting up, or exercising a particular trade or employment, within a certain limited district, and for a valuable consideration, are valid. Chesman v. Nainby, 1 Bro. P. C. 234. And see Whittaker v. Home, 3 Beav. 383.

2. Contract with the proprietors of a theatre not to write dramatic pieces for any other, legal, as a similar restraint of a performer would be; not resembling a covenant restraining trade generally. Morris v. Coleman, 18 Ves. 437.

Covenant restraining trade within particular limits, or partners from carrying on the same trade for their private benefit, good. Id.

3. Specific performance of agreement to sell goodwill of trade, and exclusive use of secret therein. Bryson v. Whitehead, 1 Sim. & S. 74; 1 L. J., Ch., 42.

Trader may sell secret in trade, and restrain himself generally from use of it. Id.

4. Upon the sale of the business of a general merchant in a country place, the vendor agreed to give a bond for a sum of 1,600*l.* as liquidated damages, if he should be thereafter concerned in any "trading establishment" within a neighbouring district, comprising a considerable section of the county of Cornwall:—Held, that this was not too general a restraint of trade, and specific performance of the agreement was decreed at the suit of the vendor. Avery v. Langford, 1 Kay 663; 18 Jur. 906; 23 L. J., Ch., 837; 2 W. R. 615; 2 Eq. Rep. 1097.

In construing the condition of such a bond, a court of law would take into consideration the surrounding circumstances at the time of executing the bond, and would consider the words "trading establishment" to mean an establishment for any trade likely to interfere with the goodwill, which was the subject of the sale. Id.

5. A. agreed to take B. as his servant, "at such wages as might from time to time be agreed on," and B., on his part, agreed to serve A., and not to set up trade for himself within a limit of three miles, and for two years after being employed or leaving the service of his master, his successors, or assigns. B. accordingly entered into and continued in A.'s service, at the wages agreed on:—Held, that there was a good and valuable consideration to support the agreement as against B., and the Court enforced it. Bennell v. Inns, 24 Beav. 307; 26 L. J., Ch., 663.

6. A. having become bankrupt, and his assignees being about to sell his stock in trade, B. agreed to purchase the same, and to carry on business in partnership with his son, and to employ A. in the management of the business, in consideration of A. executing a bond. The agreement was duly carried out:—Held, that there was good consideration for the bond, and A. was restrained from carrying on business contrary to the terms of the bond. Clarkson v. Edge, 10 Jur., N. S., 871; 33 L. J., Ch., 443; 12 W. R. 618; 33 Beav. 227; 3 N. R. 283.

7. A covenant by a vendor of a business not to carry on the same business within 200 miles of a certain place is not unreasonable, as in restraint of trade, if by reason of the character of the business such a limit of exclusion is necessary for the protection of the purchaser. Harms v. Parsons, 9 Jur., N. S., 145; 32 L. J., Ch., 247; 11 W. R. 250; 7 L. T., N. S., 815; 32 Beav. 328; 1 N. R. 175.

Upon a sale by the defendant to the plaintiffs of a business of a horsehair manufacturer, the defendant agreed not to buy, sell, manufacture, or directly or indirectly interfere in the trade or business of a horsehair manufacturer, except for the benefit of the plaintiffs; and subsequently, in a deed of assignment (executed in pursuance of the previous contract) the defendant covenanted that he would not, directly or indirectly, carry on the business of a horsehair manufacturer within 200 miles from B., without the consent in writing of the plaintiffs, except for their benefit and at their request. The defendant, besides being a manufacturer of horsehair, was, at the time of the sale, a general dealer in unmanufactured horsehair; he also purchased and sold manufactured horsehair, which was usual both with dealers and manufacturers:—Held, upon evidence as to the mode of carrying on the business, that the limit of 200 miles was reasonable; also that the defendant had sold so much of the business as belonged to that of a horsehair manufacturer, though forming part also of the business of a horsehair dealer; and that he must be restrained from the purchase and sale of manufactured horsehair. Id.

8. W. entered the service of C. as a shopman at weekly wages, and covenanted not to carry on business within one mile of the shop at any time thereafter. The business was afterwards moved to another shop close by, and sold by C. to J., together with the goodwill and beneficial interest thereof. W. then left the shop, and set up business within a mile of the old shop:—Held, that the covenant was not unreasonable, and endured for the life of W., though the original covenantee should cease to carry on business altogether, and that the covenant was not affected by the removal of the business to another shop near at hand, though it might have been otherwise if the business had been removed to quite a different neighbourhood:—Held, also, that such a covenant added to the value of the goodwill, and, therefore, was part of the goodwill, and assignable with it, and did, in fact, pass by the sale of the goodwill and beneficial interest to J., so as to give him a right of action. Jacoby v. Whitmore, 49 L. T. 335; 32 W. R. 18.

9. The plaintiff, a brewer, sold a piece of land to the trustees of a freehold land society, who covenanted with him that he, his heirs and assigns, should have the exclusive right of supplying beer to any public-house erected on the land, but the plaintiff did not enter into any covenant to supply it. The defendant, a member of the society, who was also a brewer, acquired a portion of the land with notice of the covenant, and erected on it a public-house, which he supplied with his own beer. The plaintiff filed a bill in equity to restrain the defendant from supplying beer, alleging that the plaintiff had always been ready to furnish a sufficient supply of good beer at a fair price:—Held, that the covenant was not void either for uncertainty or want of mutuality, or as being an unreasonable restraint of trade, or because it purported to be perpetual, and that, though it was in terms positive, it was in substance negative, and that the Court could interfere by injunction to restrain the defendant from acting in contravention of it. Catt v. Tourle, 4 L. R., Ch., 654; 21 L. T., N. S., 188; 38 L. J., Ch., 665; 17 W. R. 939.

1. Although public policy requires that every man shall be at liberty to work for himself, and shall not deprive himself or the State of his labour, skill, or talent, it is equally a principle of public policy that a man shall be enabled to sell to the best advantage anything that he has acquired by his labour, skill, or talent, and when that advantage requires him to enter into stipulations he may do so, provided such stipulations, however restrictive upon himself, are not unreasonable, having regard to the subject matter of the contract. Leather Cloth Co. v. Lonsont, 9 L. R., Eq., 345; 39 L. J., Ch., 86; 18 W. R. 572; 21 L. T., N. S., 661.

Upon the formation of a company for the purchase and working of a process of manufacture introduced into this country from America, the agreement for the purchase contained a provision that the vendors "will not directly or indirectly carry on, nor will they, to the best of their power, allow to be carried on by others, in any part of Europe, any company or manufactory having for its object the manufacture or sale of productions now manufactured in the business or manufactory of the vendors, and will not communicate to any person or persons the means or processes of such manufacture, so as in any way to interfere with the exclusive enjoyment by the purchasing company of the benefits hereby agreed to be purchased":—Held, that the restriction contained in this clause was not greater, having regard to the subject matter of the contract, than was necessary for the protection of the purchasers, and was capable of being enforced against the vendors. Ib.

2. The Taff Vale Railway Company covenanted with the Bute Dock trustees, first, that the company would, as far as they were able, cause all goods carried along the Taff Vale Railway, or any branch thereof, to be shipped or unshipped in the Bute Dock; and second, that, for all goods carried over the Taff Vale Railway, or any branch thereof, which should be shipped or unshipped in "any dock, canal, or cut whatsoever other than" the Bute Dock, the company would pay the trustees the wharfage and dockage dues to which they would have been entitled if the goods had been shipped or unshipped in the Bute Dock. The Taff Vale Company subsequently took a lease of the Penarth Harbour and Dock Railway, and used this harbour and dock for the shipment and unshipment of goods which passed along the Penarth Railway, and along the Taff Vale Railway:—Held, that the above covenants were not in restraint of trade. Taff Vale Railway Co. v. Macnabb, 6 L. R., H. L., 169; 42 L. R., Q. B., 153; 22 W. R. 65.

3. Agreements in restraint of trade are against public policy and void, unless the restraint they impose is partial only, and reasonable in relation to the objects of the contract; and also unless they are made upon a real and bonâ fide consideration. Collins v.

Where the object of an agreement is to parcel out the stevedoring business of a particular port amongst the parties to it, and so to prevent competition at least amongst themselves, and also, it may be, to keep up the price to be paid for the work:—Held, that such agreement is not invalid if carried into effect by provisions reasonably necessary for the purpose, though the effect of them might be to create a partial restraint upon the power of the parties to exercise their trade. Ib.

A provision that if a particular merchant named in the agreement should refuse to allow the stevedoring of any ship to be done by the party entitled to it under the agreement, and should require one of the other parties to do it, such party so required should give an equivalent to the party who lost the stevedoring, is not unreasonable either as regards the party entitled or as regards the merchant. Ib.

But a provision that in the case of ships passing out of the hands of merchants named in the contract into the hands of other merchants, who should not choose to employ the party entitled under the agreement, all the parties thereto are deprived of the work, cannot be justified. It is obviously detrimental to the public, is entirely beyond anything the legitimate interests of the parties required, and is utterly unprofitable and unnecessary, at least for any purpose which can be avowed. Ib.

A clause which stipulates that all matters in difference which should arise touching the agreement should be submitted to arbitration, and prohibits any action being brought in respect of the matters actually submitted to arbitration, is a collateral and independent agreement, and an award thereunder is not a condition precedent to such action, except as regards such sums as under the agreement are not payable until the amount thereof has been ascertained by such award. Ib.

4. W. was engaged by a firm of brewers at Burton as a servant. Before entering their employment he signed an agreement that he would not, "from two years from his quitting their service, either directly or indirectly, sell, procure orders for the sale, or recommend, or be in any wise concerned or engaged in the sale or recommendation, either on his own account, or for any other person or persons, of any Burton ale, or beer, or porter, or of any ale, or beer, or porter brewed at Burton," other than that brewed by them. In a suit by the firm to enforce the agreement against him:—Held, that as the restriction was unlimited as to space, and also that as it was greater than was necessary for the firm's protection, the agreement was void, as being in restraint of trade, and against the policy of the law. Allsopp v. Wheatcroft, 21 W. R. 162; 15 L. R., Eq., 59; 42 L. J., Ch., 12; 27 L. T., N. S., 372.

5. There is no absolute rule that a covenant in restraint of trade is void if it is unlimited in regard to space. The question in each case is whether the restraint extends further than is necessary for the reasonable protection of the covenantee. If it does not do that, the performance of the covenant will be enforced, even though the restriction be unlimited as to

1. A covenant in restraint of trade, although it is unrestricted in respect of space, is reasonable, and therefore good in law, if it relates to the use of a trade secret. Hagg v. Darley, 38 L. T., N. S., 312; 47 L. J., Ch., 567.

The purchaser of the business of certain manufacturers and sellers of well-known disinfectants by his statement of claim alleged that the mode by which those disinfectants were manufactured was a secret; that the vendors of the business (of whom the defendant was one) had, at the time of the sale, entered into a several covenant not to carry on the business of manufacturers or sellers of such disinfectants, or other articles of a similar kind, within fourteen years from that date, and that the defendant had infringed this covenant. A demurrer to so much of the statement of claim as related to this covenant, on the ground that the covenant was too general, and therefore bad in law, was overruled. Ib.

2. In determining whether a contract is a hard bargain, the Court will not (if there be valuable consideration) consider whether the consideration is sufficient, but whether one party has taken an unfair advantage of the position of the other party. In consideration of A. employing B. at a weekly salary of 21s. to go about London and sell oil for him, B. agreed that he would not, for twelve calendar months after the determination of the agreement, which was determinable on a week's notice on either side, sell oil within a radius of eight miles from the General Post Office. After a year's employment B. determined the agreement, and then commenced selling oil on his own account within the prohibited area:—Held, that the agreement not being a hard bargain, and being for valuable consideration, A. was entitled to an injunction. Middleton v. Brown, 47 L. J., Ch., 411; 38 L. T., N. S., 334.

3. A legal consideration of any value is sufficient to support a contract in partial restraint of trade; and the Court will not inquire as to its adequacy. Gravely v. Barnard, 43 L. J., Ch., 659; 18 L. R., Eq., 518; 30 L. T., N. S., 863.

The plaintiff, a surgeon, engaged the defendant (who was not qualified to practise, but was studying with a view to pass the necessary examination) to assist him in his practice, the engagement being terminable at the will of either party. Subsequently the defendant, previously to going up to pass his examination, executed, at the request of the plaintiff, a bond which was conditioned to be void if the defendant should not practise within certain limits, but which contained no express agreement on the part of the plaintiff to continue the defendant's employment. The defendant remained in the employment for about three months afterwards, and was then dismissed. He subsequently commenced practising within the prescribed limits, and a suit was instituted to restrain him from so doing:—Held, that an agreement by the plaintiff to continue the defendant's employment on the old terms could be inferred; that there was consideration to support the bond; and that the plaintiff was entitled to an injunction. Ib.

Held, also, that the point was one that ought to be decided on motion without waiting for the hearing. Ib.

4. In April 1870 A. agreed with B., a milk seller, to serve him at weekly wages for a certain time, and not to carry on the same business on his own account within two miles of his house for two years after quitting his service. At the time of the execution of the agreement A. was a minor, but he represented himself to be of age, and he attained his majority eighteen months before leaving B.'s service. He left it in April 1872, and immediately afterwards set up in business within the prescribed limits, and obtained many of B.'s customers:—Held, that B. was entitled to an injunction to restrain him. Cornwall v. Hawkins, 26 L. T., N. S., 607; 41 L. J., Ch., 435; 20 W. R. 653.

2. Breach.

5. A. agreed to act as assistant to B. in his business of surgeon and apothecary, and by deed covenanted with him that he would not at any time after he should cease to act as B.'s assistant, and whether the deed should be in other respects determined or not, carry on or exercise the profession and business of a surgeon and apothecary in the town of C., or within the compass of five miles therefrom. The deed contained a proviso that it should be lawful for A., by giving one month's notice, to determine the deed and the covenants and agreements therein contained, subject nevertheless and without prejudice to any rights of action which might have accrued, or which might accrue thereafter to B., by virtue of the deed, and for the true performance of the covenants therein before contained, on the part of A., not to carry on the profession or business of a surgeon and apothecary at C. A. by due notice determined the deed "and the covenants and agreements therein contained," and then proceeded to practise as a surgeon and apothecary at C. An injunction to restrain him was granted in the terms of the covenant. Giles v. Hart, 5 Jur., N. S., 1381; 1 L. T., N. S., 164.

6. Agreement, by which, in consideration that plaintiff would purchase defendant's premises and stock of wine, and would pay 2,000*l.* as a premium for the goodwill of defendant's business of a wine merchant, defendant agreed that he would not, by himself or agent, or otherwise howsoever, either directly or indirectly set up, embark in, or carry on the business or trade of a wine and spirit merchant at C., or at any other town or place within the three counties of C., A., and M.:—Held, that defendant had broken the agreement by supplying wine to persons, resident in C. and in other towns and places within the counties of C., A., and M., and solicited by him, within C. and the other towns and places, personally, and by his agents, though he had no place of residence, warehouse, cellars, or place of business within C. or the other towns and places. Turner v. Evans, 17 Jur. 1073; 2 De G. M. & G. 740.

7. A. undertook to manage the business of B., a chemist, and agreed that he, A., would not carry on the business of a chemist either in his own name or for his own benefit, or in the name or names or for the benefit of any other person, within seven miles of the place. He afterwards solicited orders for another chemist within the seven miles:—Held, that this was not a breach of his agreement. Clark v. Watkins, 9 Jur., N. S., 142; 11 W. R. 319; 8 L. T., N. S., 8; 1 N. R. 342.

1. A covenant not to be engaged in a specific trade, "or in any matter or thing whatsoever in anywise relating thereto," within a given district, does not prevent the covenantor from lending money to a person engaged in such trade within the limits, upon mortgage of his trade premises, although he may know that the mortgagor has no means of paying the debt except out of the profits of the business. Bird v. Lake, Bird v. Turner, 1 Hem. & M. 338.

A mortgagor expressly charging the debt upon such profits, would be a breach of covenant. Ib.

Semble, also, there is nothing in such a covenant to prevent the covenantor from buying any number of houses within the district, fitting them up and selling them for the purpose of the trade in question, provided he has no direct interest in the businesses carried on in them after such sales respectively. Ib.

2. In granting an injunction the Court is bound to consider the amount of injury which may be thereby inflicted on strangers to the suit and third parties. Maythorn v. Palmer, 11 L. T., N. S., 261; 13 W. R. 37; 11 Jur., N. S., 230.

A plaintiff filed a bill for an injunction to restrain the defendant from setting up or entering into business, on his own account or otherwise, within a specified distance from the plaintiff's place of business, and in contravention of a covenant into which he had entered with the plaintiff to that effect. The defendant was, after leaving the plaintiff's service as a coachmaker in 1862, employed by a Mr. W. as his foreman; and on the occasion of his being so taken into service, viz., in January 1863, Mr. W. wrote to the plaintiff, who replied "that the defendant would not suit him as a foreman." Mr. W. nevertheless engaged him as such, and he remained in his service nine months before proceedings were instituted by the plaintiff. Mr. W. was not a party to the suit, which was instituted in December 1863:—Held, that the bill must be dismissed; but, as the defendant had improperly disputed the question of the distance, without costs. Ib.

3. The defendant agreed to sell his business premises and goodwill to the plaintiff, and not to set up in the same business in the neighbourhood, the plaintiff agreeing to employ the former. The sale was carried out, the defendant employed for a short time, and then dismissed for alleged neglect of his work. Some months afterwards the defendant committed a breach of the negative covenant. A bill having been filed for specific performance of such covenant, the Court, at the hearing, granted an injunction to restrain the breach, but, not being satisfied as to the bona fides of the dismissal and the evidence of neglect, without costs. Daggett v. Ryman, 16 W. R. 302; 17 L. T., N. S., 486.

4. D. sold his business, goodwill, fixtures, etc., to N., and covenanted not to carry on or be concerned or interested in the business of a tailor within five miles of the former shop. D. then engaged himself to his nephew, carrying on the same trade within a quarter of a mile of the former place of business, and whose name was the same as his own, as a journeyman, at a weekly salary:—Held, that this was within the spirit and letter of the covenant, and an injunction was granted. Newling v. Dobell, 19 L. T., N. S., 408; 38 L. T., N. S., 408.

5. An agreement by a man not to carry on a particular business, directly or indirectly, either alone or in partnership with, or with the assistance of, any other person, is broken by his carrying it on as manager to another person. Dales v. Weaver, 18 W. R. 993.

6. A restrictive covenant that the covenantor will not carry on a certain business in his own name or that of any other person is not violated by his acting as manager at a weekly salary to another person carrying on the same business. Allen v. Taylor, 39 L. J., Ch., 627; 22 L. T., N. S., 651; 18 W. R. 888. Affirmed 19 W. R. 35.

On the sale of his business the vendor agreed that he would not exercise or carry on the trade, either in his own name or that of any other person or persons, in a particular town:—Held, that his managing the business of another person in the same trade in the town, at a weekly salary, was not a breach of the agreement. S. C. 19 W. R. 556; 24 L. T., N. S., 249.

7. A. agreed to act as traveller for B. during a certain period, and during that time not to engage in any other business, with liberty for either party to determine the agreement, on giving six months' notice, and paying 500*l.* to the other. A. gave six months' notice, but refused to pay the sum:—Held, that the agreement was not determined, and an injunction was granted to restrain A. from acting contrary to his agreement. Thornton v. Kendall, 1 N. R. 391; 11 W. R. 352.

8. A covenant not to carry on, or be concerned in carrying on, either directly or indirectly, the business of a saddler, or sell any goods in any way connected with that trade within a distance of ten miles from C. under a penalty of 100*l.*, to be paid by way of liquidated damages for every such offence, is broken by selling goods as a journeyman in the employment of a person carrying on the particular trade in C.; and the breach will be restrained by injunction. Jones v. Heavens, 4 L. R., Ch. D., 636; 25 W. R. 460.

9. A., for valuable consideration, covenanted with B. that he would not carry on certain businesses within ten miles of the town of O., and would not "by publication, advertisement, circular, or otherwise hold himself out to have been, nor seek to induce others to believe him to have been, formerly connected in trade, either as partner, manager, or servant, with B." A. and B. had carried on business in copartnership at M. and O.; and B. still continued to carry on business at those places:—Held, that the covenant was not unnecessarily wide for B.'s protection, nor in general restraint of trade; and that an advertisement issued by A., in which he described himself as "late of O. and formerly of M.," was a breach of the covenant. Wolmershausen v. O'Connor, 36 L. T., N. S., 921.

3. Distance. How measured.

1. Under a contract not to carry on business within a given distance, the distance is to be measured in a straight line upon a horizontal plane, and not by the nearest practicable mode of access. Duignan v. Walker, 1 Johns. 446; 28 L. J., Ch., 867; 7 W. R. 562; 33 L. T. 266.

4. Assignment.

2. A milkman carrying on business in three places, took the defendant into his service. The defendant agreed, as regarded the milkman, his assignees, and successors, not to carry on a similar trade within certain limits. A. sold his branch business at one of the three places to the plaintiff, who retained the defendant in his service:—Held, that the plaintiff, as assignee and successor of part of the business, was entitled to the benefit of the defendant's contract. Bennell v. Inns, 24 Beav. 307; 26 L. J., Ch., 663.

5. Payment of Penalty or Damages.

3. The condition of a bond contained a recital that W. had agreed to become the managing clerk of H., a solicitor at A.; and that it was thereupon agreed that W. should enter into a bond not to practise as a solicitor at or within fifty miles of A., and that if he did so, then, if he should pay to H. 1,000*l.* as liquidated damages, the bond should be void. On breach by W.:—Held, that it was not intended to be satisfied by the payment of the sum named, and that the Court would therefore interfere by injunction. Howard v. Woodward, 10 Jur., N. S., 112; 34 L. J., Ch., 47; 13 W. R. 132; 11 L. T., N. S., 414.

4. A surgeon at W., upon taking an assistant, required him to give his bond in a penalty not to practise at W. Afterwards he discharged the assistant, who thereupon commenced practice at W. The surgeon filed a bill to restrain him, to which the defendant demurred. The Court overruled the demurrer, holding that, notwithstanding the pecuniary penalty, the plaintiff was entitled to a remedy in equity. Fox v. Soard, 33 Beav. 327.

See also PENALTY.

6. Proceedings.

5. An injunction to restrain a man in the exercise of his trade refused before answer. Jackson v. Barnard, Ridgw. 259.

6. Undertaking upon sale of the goodwill of a trade, not to carry on the same business, and to use the best endeavour to assist the purchaser, etc. The remedy for the breach is an action of issue quantum damnificatus; and an injunction against proceeding under a judgment for the consideration, upon affidavits before answer, was refused. Shackel v. Baker, 14 Ves. 468.

7. Bill for an account, under covenant upon sale of goodwill not to carry on the trade; the usual course a bill of discovery for an action. Scott v. Mackintosh, 1 Ves. & B. 503.

8. On a sale by a wine merchant of his stock in trade and business, he covenanted that he would not set up or carry on at C., or in any other place within the counties of C., A., or M., the business of a wine and spirit merchant. The vendor gave up his place of business at C., and had no place of business within the prescribed district, but he solicited and obtained orders within it:—Held, that the question, whether this was a breach of the covenant, was too doubtful to entitle the plaintiff to an injunction without bringing an action. Turner v. Evans, 2 De G. M. & G. 740.

9. The plaintiff, a surgeon, engaged the defendant (who was qualified to practise, but was studying with a view to pass the necessary examination) to assist him in his practice, the engagement being terminable at the will of either party. Subsequently the defendant, previously to going up to pass his examination, executed, at the request of the plaintiff, a bond which was conditioned to be void if the defendant should not practise within certain limits, but which contained no express agreement on the part of the plaintiff to continue the defendant's employment. The defendant remained in the employment for about three months afterwards, and was then dismissed. He subsequently commenced practising within the prescribed limits, and a suit was instituted to restrain him from so doing:—Held, that an agreement by the plaintiff to continue the defendant's employment on the old terms could be inferred; that there was consideration to support the bond; and that the plaintiff was entitled to an injunction. Gravely v. Barnard, 18 L. R., Eq., 518; 43 L. J., Ch., 659; 30 L. T. 863.

Held, also, that the point was one that ought to be decided on motion without waiting for the hearing. Id.

II. TRADE NAME AND STYLE.

1. In General, 6762.
2. Colourable User by Defendant of his own Name, 6763.
3. Right to on Dissolution of Partnership, 6764.
4. Right to of Patentee when Patent expired, 6765.

1. In General.

10. The plaintiff in cases relating to trade names has not any property in the particular title, but he has a right to prevent others from personating his business by using such a description as would lead customers to suppose they were trading with the plaintiff. Boulnois v. Peake, 13 L. R., Ch. D., 513. n.

11. Before the Court will interfere to prevent one trader from making fraudulent use of the name of another, it requires to be satisfied not only that the course taken by the defendant is calculated to deceive the public, but that representation has been made to him by the plaintiff that it will have that effect. Williams v. Osborne, 13 L. T., N. S., 498.

12. In England the assumption of a name, the patronymic of a family, by a stranger, who has never before been called by that name, is not the subject of a civil action, as by the English law there is no right of property in a person to the use of a particular name, to the extent of enabling him to prevent the assumption of his name by another. Du Boulay v. Du Boulay, 2 L. R., P. C., 490; 17 W. R. 594; 38 L. J., P. C., 36; 6 Moo. P. C., N. S., 31; 22 L. T., N. S., 228.

Aliter, as to the exclusive use of a name in connection with a trade or a business, which right is recognized, and a party assuming it, colourably or otherwise, being an invasion of another's rights, is a fraud, for which a remedy lies either at law or equity. Ib.

1. Representations contained on the blinds and brasses of a shop front, calculated to induce the public to believe that the owner is connected in business with a firm of established reputation, will be considered upon the same principles as govern rights in trade marks. Glenny v. Smith, 2 Dr. & Sm. 476; 11 Jur., N. S., 964; 13 W. R. 1032; 13 L. T., N. S., 11; 6 N. R. 363.

Therefore, where a tradesman, in addition to his own name upon his shop front, placed upon his sun blind and upon his brass plate the words "From T. & G." (in whose employment he had been), the Court, being of opinion that this was done in such a way as to be likely to mislead, and there being evidence that persons had been actually misled, granted an injunction to restrain such a use of the name of the firm "T. & G." Ib.

2. A trader, who has been a manager or a partner in a firm of established reputation, has a right, on setting up an independent business, to make known to the public that he has been with that firm; but he must take care not to do so in a way calculated to lead the public to believe that he is carrying on the business of the old firm, or is in any way connected with it. Hookham v. Pottage, 20 W. R. 720; 26 L. T., N. S., 755. Affirmed 21 W. R. 47; 27 L. T., N. S., 595; 8 L. R., Ch., 91.

An old-established tradesman of the name of Hookham took Pottage into partnership; the firm went under the name of Hookham and Pottage; differences arose, and the partnership was dissolved. Pottage set up for himself in the same line of business only seven doors off Hookham's shop, and put over his door, "S. Pottage, from Hookham and Pottage." A perpetual injunction, restraining him from using the name of Hookham, as it was calculated to deceive, was granted. Ib.

3. The mortgagee of stock in trade and goodwill, and of the right to use a name, never having used the name, and not intending to use the name, cannot obtain an injunction to restrain persons claiming under the mortgagor from using the name. Beazley v. Soares, 22 L. R., Ch. D., 660; 52 L. J., Ch., 201; 31 W. R. 887.

4. The use for many years of two words of common use,—Newcastle Chronicle,—as the name of a newspaper, does not give the owner of the newspaper an exclusive right to the use of one of the words,—Chronicle,—so as to entitle him to restrain the defendant from publishing in the same town a newspaper having for its name the word Chronicle, in conjunction with another, that is to say, Sporting Chronicle; the appearance and contents of the two papers being dissimilar, there being no evidence of any one having been deceived, and no apparent intention to deceive on the part of the defendant. Cowen v. Hulton, 46 L. T. 897.

5. B. was the owner of and worked all the collieries in the parish of Radstock, in Somersetshire, and owned all the coal in that parish, with a small exception. She carried on the business of working the collieries and selling the coal in her own name, adding to it on her waggons and bill-heads the words "Radstock Collieries." The defendants, from 1868, carried on at Radstock the business of coal merchants as the "Radstock Coal Company," having depôts at various railway stations in the south and west of England, at which they sold different kinds of coal. They became in 1876 the lessees of and worked a colliery outside the parish of Radstock, but in a district or basin in which coal was raised similar to that raised within the parish; coal raised in the district, but outside the parish, being known in the market as Radstock coal. In 1873 the defendants began to sell coals at G., in Surrey, by means of a local agent, and in 1875 they bought the goodwill of a retail coal dealer named C. at G., who had become bankrupt. They then advertised themselves in the Surrey newspapers, and otherwise in the neighbourhood, as "The Radstock Colliery Proprietors and Factors, Coal and Coke Merchants (late C. & Co.)," and offered to supply coal of every description direct from the collieries:—Held, that the defendants were not entitled to use the name "The Radstock Colliery Proprietors," unless and until they should acquire a colliery within the parish of Radstock, or to use any style implying that their coal came from the parish of Radstock, unless and until they should become authorized to sell coals raised from a colliery within that parish. Braham v. Beacham, 7 L. R., Ch. D., 848; 47 L. J., Ch., 348; 38 L. T., N. S., 640; 26 W. R. 654.

Held, also, that the acts of the defendants being calculated to induce purchasers to believe that the defendants were selling the plaintiffs' coal, it was not necessary for the plaintiff to prove any instance of actual deception, or any actual damage. Ib.

2. Colourable User by Defendant of his own Name.

6. The plaintiff, Thomas Holloway, sold a medicine as Holloway's pills. The defendant, Henry Holloway, commenced selling pills as H. Holloway's pills, but in boxes, etc., similar to the plaintiff's, and with a view of passing off his pills as the plaintiff's. He was restrained by injunction. Holloway v. Holloway, 13 Beav. 209.

7. A blacking manufactory had long been carried on under the firm of Day and Martin, at 97, High Holborn. The executors of the survivor continued the business under the same name. A person of the name of Day having obtained the authority of one Martin to use his name, set up the same trade at 90½, Holborn Hill, and sold blacking as of the manufacture of Day and Martin, 90½, Holborn Hill in bottles and with labels having a general resemblance to those of the original firm. He was restrained by injunction. Principles on which the Court interferes with the use of trade marks. Croft v. Day, 7 Beav. 84.

1. Where the manufacturer of an article of trade sells it under his own name, and the article attains great celebrity in the market under that name, the manufacturer does not thereby acquire such an exclusive right in the use of the name or title under which the article has been sold as to prevent the use of it, without fraud, by another person having the same name, in the sale of a similar article manufactured by himself. Burgess v. Burgess, 3 De G. M. & G. 896; 17 Jur. 292; 22 L. J., Ch., 675.

Therefore, where a father had for many years exclusively sold a sauce under the title of "Burgess's" sauce, the Court would not restrain his son from selling a similar article under that name, no fraud being proved. Id.

Delay from October to March in appealing from the refusal of a motion for an injunction held fatal to the appeal. Id.

2. Any person who by fair means has gained the knowledge of a trade secret, may, after the death of the original inventor, make and sell the article under the name of the original inventor, provided such person does nothing to induce the public to believe that the article sold by him is made by the successor of the original inventor. James v. James, 20 W. R. 434; 13 L. R., Eq., 421; 41 L. J., Ch., 353; 26 L. T. 568.

A member of the family of R. J., the original inventor of a secret preparation, having by fair means become possessed of the original receipt, made and sold the article by the name given to it by the original inventor, under the signature of R. J., his own name being R. J. J.:—Held, that he was not entitled, as against the successor of the original inventor, to sell the article under the signature of R. J. singly, or to represent that his was the only genuine preparation. Id.

3. Right to on Dissolution of Partnership.

3. Upon the dissolution of a partnership, which had been carried on for a considerable time by J. D. and others, as stuff merchants, under the style or firm of "J. D. & Co.," J. D. assigned all his shares, rights, and interests in the business, and the goodwill thereof, to his late partners and another, who thereupon proceeded to carry on business under a new style or firm, consisting of their own names with the addition of the words "late J. D. & Co." Upon a bill filed by them, J. D. was restrained by injunction from resuming or carrying on the business of a stuff merchant at or in the immediate neighbourhood, either alone or in partnership with any other persons whatsoever, under the style or firm of "J. D. & Co.," or in any other manner holding out that he was carrying on the business of a stuff merchant, in continuation of or in succession to the business carried on by the late firm of J. D. & Co. Churton v. Douglas, 1 Johns. 174; 28 L. J., Ch., 841.

4. E. and H. were partners under articles. One of the terms was, that on the decease of either partner his personal representative should have the power, within three months, of electing to continue the share of the deceased partner; and if he declined, then the business, stock in trade, etc., were to be valued, and the surviving partner was to take the whole, giving security for the moiety late belonging to the deceased partner. E. died:—Held, that during the three months, or until E.'s personal representative should elect, the survivor H. was to be prevented by injunction from carrying on the business in any other form than what had been used in the life of E. Evans v. Hughes, 18 Jur. 691.

5. A. and B. carried on the business of a pencil maker, under the firm of A. and L. A. died, and B. carried on the business, under the firm of B. & Co., successors to A. and L. A.'s executor having commenced the same business, under the firm of A. and L., an injunction was granted to restrain him from using that firm until the right should have been tried at law. Lewis v. Langdon, 7 Sim. 421.

6. A partnership was carried on for fourteen years between B. and G. under the style of "B. & Co." On the dissolution, the assets were divided, but no arrangement was come to as to the style:—Held, that the name or style of "B. & Co." formed an undivided asset of the partnership which belonged to the partners in common after the dissolution, and that B. was not entitled to prevent G. using the style of "B. & Co." in his business. Banks v. Gibson, 34 Beav. 566; 34 L. J., Ch., 591; 11 Jur., N. S., 680; 13 W. R. 101; 6 N. R. 373.

7. R. Scott and W. Scott carried on business at N. and G., in partnership, under the firm of R. and W. Scott. By an agreement for dissolution, it was agreed that one of the partners should remain at N., but there was no stipulation by which either party bound himself not to continue the business, but only that they would not carry it on together. There was no disposition of the goodwill to the partner who remained at N. Neither party was to use the name of the firm except so far as might be necessary in winding up the partnership affairs. Shortly after the date of the agreement W. Scott retired from the business and set up business for himself at T., near N. The inscription used by the firm over the door of their place of business at G. had been "R. and W. Scott, of N." R. Scott made over his business at N. and G. to the defendants, who, at their premises at G., made use of the inscription, "Scott and Nixon, late R. and W. Scott, of N." On the application of W. Scott, the Court granted an injunction restraining them from using such an inscription, inasmuch as it amounted to a representation that they had succeeded to the business of the late firm. Scott v. Scott, 16 L. T., N. S., 143.

8. On a dissolution of partnership the whole of the stock in trade was purchased at a valuation by one of the partners, but no assignment was made of the goodwill of the business:—Held, that the outgoing partner was entitled to an injunction to restrain the use of his name in the style of the firm. Scott v. Rowland, 26 L. T., N. S., 391; 20 W. R. 608.

9. A trader who has been a partner in a firm of established reputation is entitled on setting up a separate business to tell the world that he has been with that firm, but he must not do so in a way calculated to lead the public to believe that he is carrying on the business of the old firm. Hookham v. Pottage, 21 W. R. 47; 8 L. R., Ch., 91; 27 L. T. 595. Affirming 26 L. T. 755; 20 W. R. 720.

An old-established tailor took his foreman into partnership, and the business was carried on under the name of H. and P. The partnership was afterwards dissolved by a decree of the Court, in which it was provided that the business of the partnership should belong to master. The master accordingly kept up the shop under the name of H. & Co. Subsequently the foreman set up a shop only a few doors from the master's shop, and painted over the door the words "P., from H. and P."—Held, that, having regard to the manner in which the names were painted up, the foreman had done that which was calculated to lead the public to suppose that he was still connected with the old firm, and that the master was entitled to an injunction. Id.

1. Two ladies, V. C. and M. W., carried on business in London in partnership under the firm of C. and W. V. C. married L. After this a decree for dissolution was made, and it was ordered that "the said partnership business, and the leasehold premises, trade fixtures, stock-in-trade, goodwill, and business," should be sold as a going concern to M. W. or to L. and wife, whichever should be the highest bidder. M. W. became the purchaser of all the property directed to be sold. L. and wife, who carried on business in Paris under the firm of C. et Cie., commenced an action to restrain M. W. from carrying on the business under the style or firm of C. and W.:—Held, that L. and wife had no right to restrain M. W. from using the name of the old firm. Levy v. Walker, 10 L. R., Ch. D., 436; 48 L. J., Ch., 273; 27 W. R. 370; 39 L. T. 654.

4. Right to of Patentee when Patent expired.

2. The Court will restrain the use by a third party of an arbitrary name, which a plaintiff has invented and applied to a particular class of goods as sold by him, and which has thus become identified with the plaintiff's goods, where the sale of that class of goods is open to the world. Young v. Macrae, 9 Jur., N. S., 322.

But where the class of goods is a patented article, no such protection will be afforded; for the name becomes identified with the goods, not because they are the plaintiff's but because he alone, as patentee, can make and sell them; and if the goods are the same, but made or manufactured in a totally different way and from a totally different natural source, so that there is no infringement of the patent, a third party may use the name fixed upon by the patentee. Id.

3. A trade-mark describing the articles on which it is impressed as "patented," is a proper one, if the statement was true at the time the mark was adopted, though the patent has been allowed to drop before its expiration. Leather Cloth Co. v. Hirschfeld, 1 N. R. 551; 1 Hem. & M. 295; 11 W. R. 933.

4. Where the inventor of a new substance has given to it a name, and, having taken out a patent for his invention, has, during the continuance of the patent, alone made and sold the substance by that name, he is nevertheless not entitled to the exclusive use of that name after the expiration of the patent. Linoleum Manufacturing Co. v. Nairn, 9 L. R., Ch. D., 834; 47 L. J., Ch., 430; 38 L. T., N. S., 44; 26 W. R. 463.

A company, under patents, made floor cloth of a new substance marked with the word "linoleum":—Held, that "linoleum" being the only name of the new substance, the company, at the expiration of the patents, was not entitled to the exclusive use of that word. Id.

5. In 1862 a patent for improvements in filters was taken out by S. C. in the name of himself and of his son G. C., aged seventeen. After his death in the same year, the business was carried on by the son, who made and sold filters under the title, and marked with a label as "S. C.'s Improved Patent Gold Medal Self-cleaning Rapid Water Filters." The patent of 1862 was allowed to lapse in 1865. In 1867 the son, who had then attained twenty-one, altered his label to "G. C.'s Improved Patent Gold Medal Self-cleaning Rapid Water Filters," above which was a medallion containing the royal arms, surmounted by the words "By Her Majesty's Royal Letters Patent." W. & Co., who had been in his employ, set up in business in the same town in 1876 as makers and sellers of filters, which were similar in appearance to those of G. C., and inscribed with "S. C.'s Patent Prize Medal Self-cleaning Rapid Water Filters, Improved and Manufactured by W. & Co."—Held, first, that the label used by G. C. was not a trade mark, but only a description of the article as made according to S. C.'s patent, which was common to all the public. Cheavin v. Walker, 5 L. R., Ch. D., 850; 46 L. J., Ch., 686; 36 L. T., N. S., 938. Reversing 46 L. J., Ch., 265; 33 L. T., N. S., 757.

Held, secondly, that there was nothing in W. & Co.'s label calculated to mislead the public by a fraudulent imitation of G. C.'s label. Id.

Held, thirdly, that G. C.'s label, coupled with the medallion of the royal arms, constituted a false representation that the patent was still subsisting, and disentitled him to relief by injunction. Id.

6. T. took out letters patent, which expired in 1844, for the manufacture of solid-headed pins, and carried on the business, under the firm of "T. & Co.," till 1838. In such business T. used parti-coloured labels, in pink and green, in which the pins were described as "patent pins," exclusively manufactured by T. & Co.; and had engraved plates and blocks for striking off such labels. In 1838 T. assigned the letters patent, together with his business and goodwill, and the right to use the plates, labels, etc., and the name of "T. & Co." to S. In 1839 S. became bankrupt. His assignees carried on the trade till 1841, when they agreed to assign the business, patent, plates, labels, etc., and the right to use the name of "T. & Co." to E., the plaintiff, who ever since carried on the business accordingly, and used the said labels. In 1853 E. discovered that V., the defendant, was using labels in palpable imitation of the plaintiffs:—Held, first, that E. was entitled to restrain such palpable imitation by V. Secondly, that E.

was not disentitled to sue by reason that the representations on his labels were no longer accurate, although the pins were not now protected by patent, nor manufactured strictly according to the patent, nor exclusively or at all by T., who had long since retired. Thirdly, that V. was not to be precluded altogether from representing that his pins were manufactured according to T.'s patent (now expired), but he was not to do so in a manner liable to mislead. Edleston v. Vick, 18 Jur. 7; 11 Hare 78; 1 Eq. Rep. 413.

Where there is a strong resemblance in matter, colour, and arrangement, the Court will presume that it is not fortuitous, but that it was intentional, with a view to mislead purchasers. Id.

1. When articles of a particular kind have become generally known in commerce by the name of an original manufacturer (or patentee as the case may be), any person has a right, after the expiration of the patent, to manufacture such articles and sell them under that name; but he may not by inscribing the name as a proper name, on his shop-front, or otherwise, lead the public to believe that he is selling as the agent for the original manufacturer. Wheeler and Wilson Manufacturing Co. v. Shakespeare, 39 L. J., Ch., 36.

III. LIBELLOUS AND MISLEADING CIRCULARS AND ADVERTISEMENTS.

2. The plaintiffs and defendants carried on business of a similar description. On the expiration of the term in a lease of certain works to the plaintiffs, where they had carried on their business, the defendants, fifteen months afterwards, had procured a lease of the same works, with the exception of certain mines of clay. The defendants issued a circular and card tending to lead the public to suppose that the defendants had succeeded to the business of the plaintiffs, and were working the same material as the plaintiffs had formerly used:—Held, that, although the words of the circular and card might be literally true, yet, if they tended to mislead the public, the Court would restrain them from further circulating or issuing such or any similar circular or card. Harper v. Pearson, 3 L. T., N. S., 547.

3. A circular was issued by parties recently in the employ of a firm of manufacturing engineers, which informed the trade and the public that they had commenced business on their own account, and made precisely the same goods as their former employers, with great improvements in the same, and could sell them at a much reduced price as being satisfied with smaller profits. It appeared that several customers of the former firm had been deceived by this circular, and removed their custom to the new firm:—Held, that the facts contained in the circular not being such as there stated, the same was a deceit upon the trade and the public, and, as such, an injunction granted to restrain the further issuing of the circular, sale, etc. Stevens v. Paine, 18 L. T., N. S., 600.

4. In an action to restrain the use by the defendant of the plaintiffs' trade name the issues were whether the name was a designation of machines of the plaintiffs' manufacture, or of machines of a particular kind of construction; whether the defendant had used the name for the purpose of appropriating the reputation acquired by machines manufactured by the plaintiff company or not; and whether the defendant had by using the name induced purchasers to believe they were buying machines manufactured by the plaintiff company. Defendant, who sold (as wholesale agent in London of a company in Berlin) to persons in the trade only, described his machines in his circulars and price list as machines manufactured on the "Singer" system, or the "Singer improved system," and by his statement of defence alleged that, as the plaintiffs' patent had long since elapsed, they were not entitled to any monopoly of the right of advertising or selling machines manufactured on what was known in the trade as the "Singer system":—Held, that the plaintiff company had no exclusive right to use the word "Singer" as applied to sewing machines, and that there was nothing in the defendant's circular, price lists, and invoices calculated to deceive and induce purchasers to believe they were buying machines manufactured by the plaintiffs. Injunction overruled. Singer Manufacturing Co. v. Loog, 18 L. R., Ch. D., 395; 44 L. T. 888; 29 W. R. 699. Affirmed 8 L. R., App. Cas., 15; 52 L. J., Ch., 481; 48 L. T. 3; 31 W. R. 325. And see Singer Manufacturing Co. v. Wilson, 3 L. R., App. Cas., 376; 47 L. J., Ch., 481; 26 W. R. 664; 38 L. T., N. S., 303.

5. To obtain an interlocutory injunction restraining the defendant from issuing circulars, etc., stating the wrongful user by the plaintiff upon his manufactured articles of labels claimed by the defendant, and from threatening the plaintiffs' customers with legal proceedings for selling his articles bearing the labels in question, the plaintiff must satisfy the Court that the statements in the circulars, etc., complained of are in fact untrue. The fact that the defendant, having commenced actions against the plaintiff and his customers for injunctions restraining the wrongful user of the labels in question, had not thought fit to move for interlocutory injunctions:—Held, to be no ground by itself for granting the plaintiff the injunction sought for. Anderson v. Liebig's Extract of Meat Co., 45 L. T. 757.

6. Joseph Thorley died in 1876, having for years carried on the manufacture of a condiment well known as "Thorley's Food for Cattle." His executors continued his business. In 1877 a company was formed for manufacturing the same article, and employed a brother of Joseph Thorley who was acquainted with the secret of the manufacture. The executors published in the newspapers an advertisement warning the public that any food purporting to be Thorley's food for cattle, and not signed "Joseph Thorley," was not the manufacture of the establishment carrying on business as Joseph Thorley, the proprietors of which were alone possessed of the secret for compounding the food. The executors also issued a circular to their customers warning them against the course pursued by the company "in seeking to foist upon the public an article which they pretend is the same as that manufactured by the late Joseph Thorley." The Court came to the conclusion that there was no substantial difference between the food sold by the executors and that sold by the company:—Held, that the advertisement and circular contained untrue representations calculated to injure the company in their trade, and that the issuing of them ought to be restrained by injunction. Thorley's Cattle Food Co. v. Massam, 14 L. R., Ch. D., 763; 42 L. T. 851; 28 W. R. 966. Affirming 41 L. T. 543; 28 W. R. 295.

1. The Court has now jurisdiction to restrain by injunction the publication of a libel injurious to trade. Thomas v. Williams, 14 L. R., Ch. D., 864; 49 L. J., Ch., 606; 43 L. T. 91; 28 W. R. 983.

In order to obtain an injunction in such a case it is sufficient for the plaintiff to show that the libel is calculated to injure his trade; it is not necessary that he should prove actual damage. Ib.

2. The Court has jurisdiction to restrain by injunction a person from making oral statements as well as written statements calculated to injure another person in his business; but with regard to oral statements such jurisdiction will be exercised with great caution. Hermann Loog v. Bean, 26 L. R., Ch. D., 306; 53 L. J., Ch., 1128; 51 L. T. 442; 32 W. R. 994.

3. The defendants, who were the owners of patents in Belgium and England for an invention for making glass lamp globes, by a deed executed in Belgium granted a licence to the plaintiffs to manufacture articles under their invention in Belgium, but not elsewhere. The deed contained a clause for submitting disputes to arbitration. The plaintiffs under this licence manufactured articles in Belgium and sold them in England. The defendants issued a circular warning persons engaged in the trade that the importation and sale of articles made in foreign countries under their invention, except by themselves, would be a violation of their patent. The plaintiffs brought an action to restrain the issue of this circular until the matters in dispute had been determined by arbitration:—Held, that the grant of the licence to use the patent in Belgium did not imply permission to sell the manufactured article in England in violation of the defendant's English patent, Betts v. Willmott, (6 L. R., Ch., 239) distinguished. Société Anonyme des Manufactures de Glaces v. Tilghman's Patent Sand Blast Co., 25 L. R., Ch. D., 1; 49 L. T. 451; 32 W. R. 71.

Held, also, that where a trade circular is issued bonâ fide, an interim injunction will not be granted to restrain it unless it is in violation of some contract between the plaintiff and defendant, however much the balance of convenience may be in favour of granting it. Ib.

IV. TRADE CUSTOM.

4. There being a surplus of a bankrupt's estate, interest allowed to creditors, where by the course of actual trading between the parties and settled accounts, interest was allowed for a certain credit. Accounts made up and delivered from time to time, upon that footing, held good evidence of a contract for the purpose. No allegation of proof of any general custom of trade, could, however, have had that effect; nor anything short of actual evidence of contract between the parties. Exp. Champion, 3 Bro. C. C. 436.

5. A custom, that purchasers of hops shall leave them upon rent in the hop-merchant's warehouse for resale, undistinguished from his stock, will not prevent them from becoming the property of the hop-merchant's assignees upon his bankruptcy, as being in his possession, etc. Thackthwaite v. Cook, 2 Rose 105; 3 Taunt. 487.

6. By the statute 59 Geo. 3, c. 111, navy agents are entitled to make the usual charge for passing accounts before that Act, and to charge commission on the full amount of pay without being limited to the money passing through their hands. The defendants having received a sum as returned premiums, without bringing it to account for many years and alleging that they awaited the final adjustment of average; it was referred to the Master to inquire whether they were entitled to retain it, according to the custom of merchants. Drury v. Atkins, Tam. 76.

7. Teas are sold, to be paid for at appointed days, the sales being made according to the custom of the trade, whereby the goods, when sold, are left as pledge for full payment with the vendor, who in case of non-payment is at liberty to re-sell, and charge the loss to the original purchaser. The purchase money is not paid at the appointed time; the purchaser becomes bankrupt, and the vendor, having sold part of the teas before the fiat and the rest afterwards, gives the estate credit for the clear proceeds of the sales:—Held, that although there was no delivery of the goods, the original sale was a binding contract within the Statute of Frauds, and that the vendors were entitled to prove for the residue of the purchase money unsatisfied by the sale. Exp. Moffatt, Re Tate, 2 M. D. & De G. 170. And see 1 M. D. & De G. 282; 4 Jur. 659.

8. A quantity of tea is sold at a price, which is to be paid at a future day. After the day has elapsed the purchaser pays a sum on account, and writes to the vendors, who have retained the warrants in their possession, requesting them to await the arrival of the overland mail, and on its receipt to dispose of the tea. He afterwards becomes bankrupt:—Held, first, that the vendors have a lien on the tea for the unpaid purchase money; secondly, that an application to the Court for an order for sale is not improper or unnecessary; and thirdly, that the letter is a sufficient memorandum to entitle the vendors to costs. Exp. Twining, Re Coles, 1 M. D. & De G. 691; 10 L. J., N. S., Bky., 60; 5 Jur. 536.

9. By the usage of the iron trade warrants for goods "deliverable (f. o. b.) to A. B., or their assigns, by indorsement hereon, are considered to pass to the holders for value free from vendor's lien. Merchant Banking Co. of London v. Phoenix Bessemer Steel Co., 5 L. R., Ch. D., 205; 46 L. J., Ch., 418; 25 W. R. 457; 36 L. T., N. S., 395.

1. Evidence was admitted of a custom in Liverpool, that a lien on goods for a sum agreed to be paid there as freight continued:—Held, also, that where assignees of the bill of lading were resident in Sydney, in New South Wales, and there was no evidence that they were acquainted with the local usage in Liverpool, such evidence of custom was not admissible for the purpose of explaining the effect of the memorandum in the bill of lading, or of showing the terms on which the goods were shipped, in the construction of such bill of lading. Miedbrodt v. Fitzsimon, The Energie, 32 L. T., N. S., 579; 23 W. R. 932; 6 L. R., P. C., 306; 44 L. J., Adm., 25.

2. A right of general lien can only be established either by contract express, or necessarily implied, or by custom; and such a custom in a particular trade is not established by mere evidence of the popular opinion of the members of that trade that a right of general lien was or ought to be a privilege of their trade. Exp. Provincial Bank, Re Spotten, 11 Ir. R., Eq., 412.

3. By the custom of the London Dry Goods Market a broker who purchases for a principal as broker, but without disclosing the name of the principal, is liable for the price of the goods in case the purchaser does not pay. On the 3rd March 1876, C. sold to D., a broker, for undisclosed principals, eighteen casks of gum sandrac lying at the docks, and signed a delivery order in favour of D. The delivery order was indorsed by D. to B. & Co., his undisclosed principals, who deposited the same with the Imperial Bank as a security for advances. On the 18th March the bank lodged the order at the office of the Docks Company in Leadenhall Street, with a request for warrants, and notice of the order having been lodged was sent to the long room at the dock house. On the same day D., having heard that B. & Co. had stopped payment, paid C. for the goods, and sent his clerk to the long room, who arrived there before notice of the delivery order having been lodged by the bank had been received, and he, in the name of C., applied for a warrant for the goods, which was made out and delivered to him. C. subsequently indorsed the warrant to L., and gave him a second delivery order. On an action by the bank for a declaration that they were entitled to the goods:—Held, that under the circumstances C.'s lien as an unpaid vendor passed to D., and that the warrant in favour of C. having been obtained before the delivery order had been entered at the warrant office at the docks, D. was entitled to the goods. Imperial Bank v. London and St. Katharine Dock Co., 36 L. T., N. S., 233; 46 L. J., Ch., 335.

4. The custom of letting a piano out on hire under an agreement by which upon the payment of the price fixed for the purchase by monthly instalments extending over a period of three years the hirer becomes the owner of the piano, and which is known as "the three years' hire system," is a well-established and good custom, and will, therefore, prevail to take a piano, hired under such an agreement, out of the order and disposition of the hirer on his becoming bankrupt. Exp. Hattersley, Re Blanshard, 26 W. R. 636; 38 L. T., N. S., 619; 8 L. R., Ch., 601; 47 L. J., Bky., 113.

5. An arrangement was made between W.,

R., and G., that W., a manufacturer, should consign cotton cloths to G. in Rangoon, paying him an inclusive commission. The goods were to be exported through R., who acted as shipping agent, and was to see to the goods being finished and packed, for which services he received a commission from G. A particular mark was by arrangement between the three parties adopted for the goods, of which some portions and the general arrangement were new, and other portions consisted of R.'s name and arms, and of a symbol which had formerly been used by G. After goods had been regularly exported for some years under this arrangement, W. ceased to send goods through R., and commenced exporting them to Rangoon through the agency of F., continuing to use the old mark, except that the name and arms of F. were substituted for those of R. At the same time R. commenced exporting other goods under the old mark. Cross actions were commenced for injunctions, in which R. set up an alleged custom in Manchester, giving the right to the trade marks to the shipping agent:—Held, upon the evidence, that no such custom existed. Robinson v. Finlay, Ward v. Robinson, 9 L. R., Ch. D., 487; 39 L. T., N. S., 398; 27 W. R. 294.

Held, also, that neither R. nor W. had any exclusive right to the use of the mark, and that both actions must be dismissed. Th.

6. A firm of merchants, formerly carrying on business at Calcutta, sued a firm at Manchester, who had acted as their agents on commission for the purchase and shipping to India of Manchester goods, to have the settled accounts between the parties, extending back for a period of nearly twenty years, opened; and to obtain repayment of certain alleged overcharges made by the defendants in their accounts with the plaintiffs. The defendants were charged with having bought goods at one price and invoiced them to the plaintiffs at an increased price; that having been instructed to buy white goods, they purchased grey goods and got them bleached, charging the plaintiffs more than the price of the grey goods plus the cost of bleaching; that they had not credited the plaintiffs with the discounts allowed to themselves; that they had charged for insurances that they had never effected; that they had sold their own goods to the plaintiffs at a profit; and that they had overcharged the plaintiffs in other ways. The main defences raised were, that the plaintiffs knew of the charges, and that they were in accordance with the custom of the Manchester trade, and that as regarded the insurances which had been charged for but not effected, the defendants had themselves insured:—Held, that the plaintiffs did not know of the overcharges, and that there was no custom of the Manchester trade to make such overcharges. Williamson v. Barbour, 9 L. R., Ch. D., 529; 50 L. J., Ch., 147; 37 L. T. 698.

7. Although a person who as principal employs a broker to transact business for him in a particular market is bound by the usage of that market, though unknown to him, provided the usage is one that merely regulates the mode of performing the contract, and does not change the intrinsic character of the contract, yet where the usage is one which gives the broker an interest at variance with his duty, as by converting him into a principal instead of a mere agent to establish privity of contract between two principals, such a usage is not binding on a principal who, being ignorant of the usage, employs a broker to whom the usage is known to perform the ordinary and accustomed duties belonging to the office or employment of a broker. The principal is not bound to inquire what the usage may be, or whether there is any particular usage effecting the market in which he proposes to deal. Robinson v. Mollett, 44 L. J., C. P., 362; 7 L. R., H. L., 802.

A Liverpool merchant employed brokers of London to buy tallow for him in the London tallow market. They having other orders, bought in their own name a quantity sufficient to cover all their orders, and by letter they informed the merchant that they had bought on his account so many tons; but they did not mention the name of the seller. A few days after they sent him notice that they were ready to deliver to him so many casks of tallow in fulfilment or part fulfilment of his order, but they did not allude to any third party as the seller. He acknowledged the receipt of these notices without observation. There is a custom on the London tallow market for brokers when they receive orders to contract in their own names, and if their principals refuse to accept or deliver, to buy or sell against them, and charge them with the loss. The merchant was ignorant of this custom. On becoming aware of it, and of the mode in which his orders had been executed, tallow having in the meantime fallen, he refused to take the tallow:—Held, that as the brokers were employed to act as brokers only, the custom which converted them into principals was inconsistent with the employment, and as the merchant was ignorant of it when he gave his orders, he was not bound by the custom. Id.

V. TRADE SECRET.

1. Injunction to prevent a chemist from selling a quack medicine, under a false and colourable representation that it was a medicine of the plaintiff, an eminent physician, refused. Clark v. Freeman, 11 Beav. 112; 17 L. J., N. S., Ch., 142; 12 Jur. 119.

2. Injunction to restrain a defendant from communicating certain recipes for medicines, and vending them, granted, on the ground that he had obtained a knowledge of the mode of preparing them by a breach of trust. Yocatt v. Winyard, 1 Jac. & Walk. 394.

Quere, whether a court of equity, in the exercise of its jurisdiction to decree the specific performance of an agreement, can interfere by injunction to restrain a party from divulging a secret in medicine which is unprotected by patent. In this case an injunction, which had been granted for that and other purposes, was dissolved, upon the affidavit of the defendant (an infant) denying the facts of the case as represented by the plaintiff's affidavit in support of the injunction, and upon the ground that there was no secret in the alleged invention. Williams v. Williams, 3 Meriv. 157.

3. The Court does not recognise property in unpatented articles, and will not interfere to restrain the sale of spurious articles, though described to be the same as those manufactured by another, unless such articles are held out by the imitator to be the manufacture of that other person. Where B. invented and sold a secret medicine called chlorodyne, and F. advertised a spurious imitation of it as "the original chlorodyne," and the evidence showed that F.'s article was not mistaken for B.'s, but only that F. was taken to be the first inventor:—Held, that B. was not entitled to an injunction to restrain F. from issuing such advertisements. Browne v. Freeman, 4 N. R. 476; 12 W. R. 305.

4. An injunction granted to restrain the use of a secret in the compounding of a medicine not being the subject of a patent, and to restrain the sale of such medicine, by a defendant who acquired a knowledge of the secret in violation of the contract of the party by whom it was communicated, and in breach of trust and confidence. Morison v. Moat, 9 Hare 241; 20 L. J., N. S., Ch., 613; 15 Jur. 787. Affirmed 21 L. J., N. S., 248; 16 Jur. 321.

A plaintiff not having the privileges of a patentee may have no title to be protected in the exclusive manufacture and sale of a medicine against the world, but he may, notwithstanding, have a good title to protection against the particular defendant. Id.

The case of a secret acquired by a breach of faith or confidence, but communicated to a purchaser for value, without notice of any obligation affecting it, distinguished from that of a party whose claim of right to use the secret is that of a volunteer. Id.

The Court, in interfering in such cases, upon the grounds of faith or confidence, fastens upon the conscience of the party and enforces the obligation against him as it enforces, against a party to whom a benefit is given, an obligation to perform a promise upon the faith of which the benefit has been conferred, semble. Id.

If a partner in business in which a secret process of manufacture and composition of materials is used, who has not, under the partnership contract, a right to the knowledge of the secret, should openly take part in the manufacture, and should, with the knowledge and concurrence of his partners, be permitted to acquire a knowledge of the process and ingredients; the other partners will be considered to have waived a right to the preservation of the secret for their separate benefit, semble. Id.

The injunction restrained the sale of medicine by the defendant, under the name of the medicine prepared according to the secret prescription, not on the ground of the use of the name alone, but because it was by the name that the defendant was availing himself of the breach of faith and contract. Whether, apart from that ground of interference, the Court would have restrained the use of the name before the plaintiff's right had been established at law, quere. Id.

In June 1823, Morison, the sole inventor and proprietor of a medicine not protected by patent, upon the occasion of entering into partnership with Moat as manufacturers and vendors of the medicine, for the purposes of the partnership communicated to the latter the secret of compounding the medicine. By the partnership deed either partner was empowered to introduce another partner, by deed, to be attested by the other; and by mutual bonds of even date, Morison bound himself not to communicate the secret of compounding the medicine to any person, except a partner so introduced; whilst Moat bound himself not to communicate such secret to any person whomsoever. Morison afterwards introduced his sons, the plaintiffs, into the partnership; and Moat, shortly before his death, in breach of his bond, communicated the secret to the defendant, his son; and then by deed, duly attested by Morison, appointed the defendant his successor in the partnership. Shortly after the death of Moat, the defendant joined Morison and the plaintiffs, who were ignorant that he had obtained a knowledge of the secret, in executing a partnership deed, containing a clause declaring the defendant a sleeping partner, and another clause, by which the partners covenanted not to divulge the secret of compounding the medicines to any person whomsoever. The defendant also afterwards executed deeds reciting that the sole property in the secret was in Morison. Morison afterwards died, having by will bequeathed his property in the secret to the plaintiffs. After the determination of the partnership the defendant made use of his knowledge of the secret communicated to him by his father, in manufacturing medicine, which he sold as the medicine originally manufactured by Morison. Upon the application of the plaintiffs the Court granted an injunction restraining the defendant from selling, under the title or designation of "Morison's medicine," any medicine manufactured by the defendant; and also from compounding any medicines according to the secret mentioned in the plaintiffs' bill, and from in any way making use of such secret. Id.

1. Not against public policy that trader sells secret in trade, and restrains himself generally from use of it. Bryson v. Whitehead, 1 Sim. & S. 74; 1 L. J., Ch., 42.

2. Any person who by fair means has gained the knowledge of a trade secret may after the death of the original inventor, make and sell the article under the name of the original inventor, provided such person does nothing to induce the public to believe that the article sold by him is made by the successor of the original inventor. But he must not assert that his is the only genuine article, or suggest that the article manufactured by the successors of the original discoverer is spurious. James v. James, 13 L. R., Eq., 421; 41 L. J., Ch., 353; 26 L. T. 568; 20 W. R. 434.

A member of the family of R. J., the original inventor of a secret preparation, having by fair means become possessed of the original receipt, made and sold the article by the name given to it by the original inventor, under the signature of R. J., his own name being R. R. J.:—Held, that he was not entitled, as against the successor of the original inventor, to sell the article under the signature of R. J.

3. A covenant in restraint of trade, although it is unrestricted in respect of space, is reasonable, and therefore good in law, if it relates to the use of a trade secret. Hagg v. Darley, 47 L. J., Ch., 567; 38 L. T. 312.

4. Joseph Thorley for many years manufactured and sold extensively an article called "Thorley's Food for Cattle," made according to a recipe communicated to him and not known to the public, and down to his death he was the only person who made it. His executors continued the business. Shortly after his death a company was formed by other persons, under the name of J. W. Thorley's Cattle Food Company, in which J. W. Thorley, a brother of Joseph Thorley, took a 1s. share. J. W. Thorley had been employed by Joseph Thorley, and knew the secret of the manufacture, and was employed by the company to conduct it. The company sold the same article under the name of "Thorley's Food for Cattle":—Held, that the company were not at liberty to use the name "Thorley's Food for Cattle" unless they took such precautions as would prevent purchasers from supposing that the article sold by them was manufactured at the original establishment of Joseph Thorley. Massam v. Thorley's Cattle Food Co., 14 L. R., Ch. D., 748; 42 L. T. 851; 28 W. R. 966; 41 L. T. 543. And see S. C. 6 L. R., Ch. D., 574; 46 L. J., Ch., 707; 36 L. T., N. S., 848.

5. When a man has learnt a trade secret from his employer, and practised it after the employer's death, selling the article under the old name, he will not acquire such a right to the exclusive use of the name as a trade mark as will be protected in a court of equity. Horenden v. Lloyd, 18 W. R. 1132.

6. An article, the secret making of which was known only to one maker, had acquired a trade name. An injunction was granted, restraining the application of that name to a different article of the same class, so as to induce the belief that it was the plaintiffs' article. Siebert v. Findlater, 47 L. J., Ch., 233; 7 L. R., Ch. D., 801; 38 L. T., N. S., 349; 26 W. R. 459.

The plaintiff manufactured a fluid which he sold under the name of "Aromatic Bitters," and it was described by this name upon the wrappers of the bottles in which it was sold. It became, however, generally known in the market by the name of "Angostura Bitters," it having been originally manufactured at the town of Angostura, in Venezuela. The name of this town was afterwards, by a decree of the state, changed to Ciudad Bolivar. After this change had taken place, the defendant began to manufacture in the same town a different fluid, which he at first sold under the name of "Aromatic Bitters," but, having been restrained in an English colony from using that name, he adopted the name "Angostura Bitters," and placed it upon the wrappers of his bottles, also registering his wrapper at Stationers' Hall. His wrappers were very similar to those of the plaintiff, but they contained a statement that the fluid was prepared by the defendant. After this the plaintiff adopted the name "Angostura Bitters," and placed it upon his wrappers, and he brought an action against the defendant, claiming an injunction to restrain him from imitating the plaintiff's wrappers, and from using the name "Angostura Bitters." At the time when the action was brought the plaintiff had ceased to carry on his manufacture at Ciudad Bolívar:—Held, that the defendant had been guilty of an attempt to deceive, and that, though he could not be restrained from using the name "Angostura Bitters," in case he should ever discover the plaintiff's secret, and manufacture the same fluid, yet he must be restrained from using the name so as to deceive the public into the belief that his fluid was the plaintiff's. Id.

It was alleged by the defendant that the plaintiff was dissatisfied to relief, because, at the time of the trial, he was using wrappers which contained a misrepresentation. The plaintiff did not begin to use those wrappers until after the action had been brought:—Held, that there was in fact no misrepresentation in the wrappers in question, but that, even if there had been, a misrepresentation not made till after the commencement of the action would not have affected the plaintiff's title to relief. Id.

VI. TRADE UNION.

1. The defendants, who were officers of a trade union, gave notice to workmen, by means of placards and advertisements, that they were not to hire themselves to the plaintiffs pending a dispute between the union and the plaintiffs. The bill prayed an injunction to restrain the issuing of the placards and advertisements, alleging that by means thereof the defendants had, in fact, intimidated and prevented workmen from hiring themselves to the plaintiffs, and that the plaintiffs were thereby prevented from continuing their business, and the value of their property was seriously injured and materially diminished:—Held, that the acts of the defendants, as alleged by the bill, amounted to a crime, and that the Court would interfere by injunction to restrain such acts, inasmuch as they also tended to the destruction or deterioration of property. Springhead Spinning Co. v. Riley, 6 L. R., Eq., 551; 37 L. J., Ch., 889; 16 W. R. 1138.

2. The rules of a trade union provided that the money arising from the subscriptions of its members should be applicable in various ways for their benefit. They also purported to regulate the affairs of that trade, and provided that any journeyman binding his son in a "foul shop" (being a shop in which non-union men were employed) should be fined, and not be entitled to any benefit until such fine had been paid. The plaintiff, a member of the union, who was alleged to have broken the rule as to apprenticeship, and who, having refused to pay the fine, had been expelled from the union, brought an action against the committee and trustees of the union claiming to be entitled to participate in its benefits, and that the defendants might be restrained from excluding him from such participation:—Held, that as the action was brought to enforce an agreement between members of a trade union "to provide benefits to members," within the meaning of the Trades Union Act 1871, s. 4, which the Court was not by that section enabled to enforce; and as, apart from the Act, the union was an illegal association, the plaintiff was not entitled to any relief. Rigby v. Connol, 14 L. R., Ch. D., 482; 49 L. J., Ch., 328; 42 L. T. 139; 28 W. R. 650.

The foundation of the jurisdiction of the Court to prevent a member of a voluntary association from being improperly expelled is the right of property vested in such member of which he is deprived. Id.

3. The central body of a society brought an action against a branch to restrain the latter from dividing certain funds in possession of the latter. Some of the rules of the society provided for benefits to members, and there were others which were in restraint of freedom of trade:—Held, that the action could not be maintained—(1) as it was brought to enforce an agreement between members of a trade union to provide benefits to members within the meaning of s. 4 of the Trades Union Act 1871; and (2) as the agreement could not have been enforced previously to that Act. Duke v. Littleboy, 49 L. J., Ch., 802; 43 L. T. 216; 28 W. R. 977.

In such cases it makes no difference whether a central society sues a branch, a society sues an individual, or an individual sues a society. Id.

4. By the Trades Union Act 1871, s. 4, it is provided that nothing in the Act shall enable the Court to entertain any legal proceeding instituted with the object of directly enforcing an agreement for the application of the funds of a trade union to provide benefits to its members. The plaintiffs, members of a trade union within the Act, sought for an injunction to restrain other members from applying the funds in a manner contrary to an agreement to provide benefits to members:—Held, that such an injunction would not be a direct enforcement of the alleged agreement, and that the Court might entertain the proceeding. Wolfe v. Matthews, 21 L. R., Ch. D., 194; 51 L. J., Ch., 833; 47 L. T. 158; 30 W. R. 828.

I. Right of Property in.

1. Charles I. having granted a charter to the Cardmakers' Company to use the Mogul stamp on cards, plaintiff, suggesting a sole right, as having appropriated it to himself conformably to the charter, moved for an injunction to restrain defendant; but Lord Chancellor refused it. The objection of the defendant taking away the plaintiff's customers by using the same mark (the Mogul stamp on his cards) is of no more weight than if one innkeeper should set up the same sign as another. But a cloth-worker may maintain an action against another of the same trade for using his mark, where it is done with a fraudulent design to put off bad cloths, or to draw away customers. The Court, however, will never establish a right claimed under a charter only from the Crown, unless the right has been first tried at law. Blanchard v. Hill, 2 Atk. 484.

2. There is no exclusive right in a subject not protected by patent, to prevent sale by another person under the same title, not assuming the name and character of the plaintiff. Canham v. Jones, 2 Ves. & B. 218.

3. There is no copyright in a trade mark. Farina v. Silverlock, 6 De G. M. & G. 214; 2 Jur., N. S., 1008; 26 L. J., Ch., 11; 3 W. R. 532; 4 W. R. 731.

4. A plaintiff and another person, who carried on distinct trades at different places of business, had derived from a common predecessor in their respective businesses the right to use the name of Dent as a trade mark. The defendant having infringed this right:—Held, that the plaintiff, without averring special damage, might sue alone for an injunction, and for the delivery up of the articles so marked to have the name erased. Dent v. Turpin, Tucker v. Turpin, 2 John. & H. 139; 7 Jur., N. S., 673; 30 L. J., Ch., 495; 9 W. R. 548; 4 L. T., N. S., 637.

Held, also, that he might sue alone for an account of profits made by the defendant out of articles so marked, and for payment to the plaintiff of such part of such profits as he should be entitled to. Id.

5. There is no property in a trade mark, but a person who has been in the habit of using a particular mark may prevent other persons from fraudulently taking advantage of the reputation which his goods have acquired, by using his mark in order to pass off their goods as his, to his injury. Collins Co. v. Browne, Collin's Co. v. Cohen, 3 Kay & J. 423; 3 Jur., N. S., 929; 5 W. R. 676.

6. The jurisdiction of the Court, in the protection of trade marks, rests upon property, and fraud in the defendant is not necessary for the exercise of the jurisdiction. Hall v. Barrons, 10 Jur., N. S., 55; 33 L. J., Ch., 204; 12 W. R. 322; 9 L. T., N. S., 561; 4 De G. J. & S. 150; 1 N. R. 543; 3 N. R. 259.

If a name, impressed upon a vendible commodity, passes current in the market as a representation that the commodity has been manufactured by a particular person, the Court would not transfer to another person the right to use the name simply and without addition; but if it sold the business carried on by the owner of the name, it might give to the purchaser the right to represent himself as the successor in business of the first maker, and in that manner to use the name. Id.

Where the name of the first maker, once affixed to a manufactured article, continues to be used after his death, the name in time becomes a mere trade mark or sign of quality, and ceases to denote, or to be current as indicating, that any particular person was the maker, and would, therefore, be protected. Id.

7. An element in the right to property in a trade mark is the fact of the article to which the stamp or mark is affixed being in the market as a vendible article, with the stamp or mark at the time when it is imitated. M'Andrew v. Bassett, 4 De G. J. & S. 380; 4 N. R. 12, 123; 10 Jur., N. S., 550; 33 L. J., Ch., 561; 12 W. R. 777; 10 L. T., N. S., 442.

The essential ingredients for constituting an infringement of a right to a trade mark are—(1) that the mark has been applied by the plaintiffs properly—i.e., that they have not copied any other person's mark, and that the mark does not involve any false representation; (2) that the article so marked is actually a vendible article in the market; (3) that the defendants, knowing that to be so, have imitated the mark for the purpose of passing in the market other articles of a similar description. Id.

Although where a word is chosen as a trade mark which is in fact a geographical designation of a whole tract of country, where the raw material is grown whence a manufactured article is produced, there cannot be property in the word for all purposes, yet property in the word, as applied by way of stamp upon a particular vendible article, does exist the moment the article goes into the market so stamped, and there obtains acceptance and reputation, whereby the stamp gets currency as an indication of superior quality or of some other circumstance which renders the article so stamped acceptable to the public. Id.

8. Where the plaintiff attached to wire manufactured by him tallies marked with an anchor, and the defendant attached to his manufacture similar tallies marked with the device of a crown and anchor:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to an injunction. Edelsten v. Edelsten, 1 De G. J. & S. 185; 9 Jur. N. S., 479; 11 W. R. 328; 7 L. T., N. S., 768.

Negotiations antecedent to a suit (save in a case of bad faith), unless amounting to a release or binding agreement, cannot be regarded. Id.

At law the proper remedy is by an action for deceit, and proof of fraud on the part of the defendant is of the essence of that action; but the Court will act on the principle of protecting property alone, and it is not therefore necessary for obtaining the injunction to prove fraud, or that the credit of the plaintiff was injured by the sale of an inferior article. Id.

An injury by loss of custom is sufficient to support a title to relief, and it is not necessary that proof should be given of persons having been actually deceived, in having bought goods with the defendants' mark, under the belief that they were of the manufacture of the plaintiff. Id.

An owner of a trade mark will not be deprived of remedy in equity, even if it is shown that all who bought goods bearing the mark from the defendant were well aware that the goods were not of the plaintiffs' manufacture. Id.

It is enough if the goods were supplied by the defendant for the purpose of being sold again in the market, nor is it necessary to show that any person was deceived, if the resemblance of the articles is such as would be likely to cause one mark to be mistaken for the other. Id.

1. The inventor of a sauce gave it the name of the Licensed Victuallers' Bellish, and designed a trade mark for labels on the bottles containing it, and employed his son to sell it. He permitted his son to describe himself in his circulars and invoices as the sole proprietor of the sauce. The son became bankrupt, and his trustee sold his interest in the sauce and its trade mark to the plaintiff, who sought to restrain the inventor from infringing the trade mark. The plaintiff did not know the defendant's recipe, but made a sauce which the witnesses deposed to be undistinguishable from the defendant's:—Held, that a trade mark could not exist in gross, and that as the plaintiff did not know the recipe for the original article, he could not have a right to affix the trade mark to a sham article for the purpose of imposing on the public. Cotton v. Gillard, 44 L. J., Ch., 90.

2. Though there is no exclusive ownership of the symbols which constitute a trade mark apart from the use or application of them, yet the exclusive right to use such mark in connection with a vendible commodity is rightly called property, and the jurisdiction of a court of equity to restrain the infringement of a trade mark is founded upon the invasion of such property, and not upon the fraud committed on the public. Leather Cloth Co. v. American Leather Cloth Co., 10 Jur. N. S., 81; 33 L. J., Ch., 199; 12 W. R. 289; 4 De G. J. & S. 137; 9 L. T., N. S., 558; 2 N. R. 481; 3 N. R. 264.

The Court will not interfere for the protection of a trade mark, unless the mark used by the defendant is applied by him to the same kind of goods as the goods of the plaintiff, and is such that it may be, and is mistaken in the market for, the trade mark of the plaintiff. Id.

Where a company having a patent for tanned leather cloth was in the habit of stamping as part of their trade mark the words "Tanned Leather Cloth, Patented," on all their goods, whether tanned or not:—Held, that the use of those words on goods not tanned disentitled the company to relief against an infringement of the trade mark. Id.

Where a trade mark contained an emblem, with such a collocation of words as amounted to an advertisement of the character and quality of the goods, and contained statements which, though true as regarded the original adopter of the trade mark, were calculated to deceive the public when used by his assignee, the assignee is not to be entitled to protection in the use of such trade mark. S. C. 11 Jur. N. S., 513; 35 L. J., Ch., 53; 13 W. R. 373; 12 L. T., N. S., 742; 11 H. L. Ca. 523; 6 N. R. 209.

Therefore, where a firm of manufacturers, "A. B. & Co.," using truly the stamp or mark of "A. B. & Co., makers," together with other representations, have sold the right to use their name and stamp to another firm, "C. D. & Co." (the stamp or mark not being a mere designation of the quality or shape of the article, but consisting of words containing representations which are no longer true), the purchasers will not be protected in a court of equity in the exclusive use of the name and mark. Id.

The right to a trade mark resembles copyright as a subject of property. The right which a manufacturer has in his trade mark is the exclusive right to use it for the purpose of indicating where, by whom, or at what manufactory the article to which it is affixed was made; and, as an accessory of property, a trade mark may be sold and transferred upon a sale and transfer of the manufactory of the goods on which the trade mark has been used to be fixed, and may be lawfully used by the purchaser. Semble. Id.

A trader may mark his own manufacture either by his name or by using any symbol or emblem; and if such symbol or emblem comes by use to be recognized in trade as the mark of the goods of such trader, no other trader has a right to stamp it upon his goods of a similar description, and as the usage of trade does not confine the name of a firm to the original partners only, but extends it to subsequent partners and transferees, the use of the trade mark by the new partners or successors of the original adopters is no fraud on the public, but only a statement that the goods are the goods of the firm whose trade mark they bear. If, however, the trade mark contains statements materially affecting the value of the goods, such statements must be judged as if made in separate labels or advertisements; the test being whether they are material misstatements, and calculated to deceive the public. Semble. Id.

Although a trader may have a property in a trade mark, giving him a right to exclude all others from using it, if his goods derive their increased value from the personal skill or ability of the adopter of the trade mark, he cannot give any other person the right to affix his name or mark upon their goods, for the effect thereof would be to give them the right to practise a fraud upon the public. Ib.

Semble, a paper descriptive of a trade does not constitute a trade mark. Ib.

Where an advertisement or a trade mark states that which is not true, it cannot be made the subject of protection by the Court of Chancery. Ib.

Partnership.] 1. When in the judgment of the Court certain initial letters, surmounted by a crown, had, although originally representing the names of certain partners, become and were a trade mark; that is, a brand which had reputation and currency in the market as a well-known sign of quality:—Held, that as such the trade mark was a valuable property of a partnership constituted by successors to the original partners, but not having the same initials, as an addition to their works, and might be properly sold with the works, and therefore properly included as a distinct subject of value in the valuation to the surviving partner. Hall v. Barrons, 4 De G. J. & S. 150; 10 Jur., N. S., 55; 33 L. J., Ch., 204; 12 W. R. 322; 9 L. T., N. S., 561; 1 N. R. 543; 3 N. R. 259.

2. Upon the formation of a partnership with a person entitled to the benefit of a trade mark, the mark, in the absence of express provisions in relation to it, becomes an asset of the partnership. Bury v. Bedford, 4 De G. J. & S. 352; 10 Jur., N. S., 503; 33 L. J., Ch., 465; 12 W. R. 727; 10 L. T., N. S., 470; 4 N. R. 180. Affirming 9 Jur., N. S., 956; 32 L. J., Ch., 741; 11 W. R. 973; 8 L. T., N. S., 847; 1 N. R. 5.

3. B., an outgoing partner, claimed that by the terms of the deed of dissolution between himself and L., he was entitled to manufacture a particular article from an original recipe, the property of the late partnership, and to sell it as "L.'s soap" prepared by B.:—Held, that he was entitled to use the old trade name of the article as his trade mark, and to have it registered, although identical with that of the successors of the old firm. Benbow v. Low, Low v. Benbow, 44 L. T. 875; 29 W. R. 837.

4. H. Bollmann Condry and Mitchell carried on business together under the style of "Bollmann Condry & Co.," manufacturing and selling a disinfectant known as Condry's Fluid. After the dissolution of the partnership H. Bollmann Condry set up a business for the same purpose, under the name "H. Bollmann Condry," and Mitchell afterwards set up a similar business under the name of "The Condry's Fluid Company." H. Bollmann Condry sought to restrain Mitchell from using the name of Condry in connection with the article he sold as Condry's Fluid:—Held, that both the partners had an equal right to the use of the trade name of "Condry's Fluid"; and that Condry's contention failed because he had not shown fraud on the part of Mitchell such as to mislead the public into the belief that the article he sold was in reality manufactured by Condry. Condry v. Mitchell, 26 W. R. 269; 37 L. T., N. S., 766. Affirming 37 L. T., N. S., 268.

Alien.] 5. The plaintiffs, who were a company formed in the United States for manufacturing edge tools, which they exported to different countries, sought to restrain the defendant, a manufacturer in England, from the use of their trade mark:—Held, upon demurrer, that every alien friend was entitled to apply to the Courts of this country for the restraint of a deceitful and fraudulent use of his trade mark practised in England. Collins's Co. v. Cohen, Collins's Co. v. Brown, 5 W. R. 676; 3 Kay & J. 423; 3 Jur., N. S., 929.

6. An alien may sue in this country to restrain this fraudulent appropriation of his trade mark, although the goods to which such trade mark applies are not usually sold by him in this country. Collins's Co. v. Reeves, 6 W. R. 717; 4 Jur., N. S., 865; 28 L. J., Ch., 56.

II. What Marks Protected.

7. M. & Co. were manufacturers of liquorice, and having made in this country a new description of goods from a mixture of juice extracted from roots obtained from Anatolia and Spain, they stamped upon the manufactured article the mark "Anatolia," and sold it to the public, and acquired a reputation for it in the market. This was the first use of the word in this way, though juice had previously been imported from Anatolia. The mark was immediately afterwards imitated by B., at the request of a customer, and attached to their liquorice made from Spanish roots:—Held (affirming 10 Jur., N. S., 492; 10 L. T., N. S., 65), that the word "Anatolia" so used was a trade mark, and that there had been a sufficient user and adoption of it by M. & Co. to give them a property in it as such. McAndrew v. Bassett, 10 Jur., N. S., 550; 33 L. J., Ch., 561; 12 W. R. 777; 10 L. T., N. S., 442; 4 De G. J. & S. 380; 4 N. R. 12, 123.

8. The name of the place of origin of an article may become a trade mark. Radde v. Norman, 14 L. R., Eq., 348; 41 L. J., Ch., 525; 26 L. T. 788; 20 W. R. 766.

An injunction will be granted on an interlocutory motion to restrain the use or imitation of the name of a place, used as a trade mark, if the plaintiff proves prima facie that such name in the market has come to mean his article obtained from such place. Ib.

9. The Court will not grant an injunction to restrain the issue of goods bearing labels containing a false representation, when such falsehood is not an infringement of any right vested in the plaintiff. Batty v. Hill, 1 Hem. & M. 264; 11 W. R. 745; 8 L. T., N. S., 791; 2 N. R. 265.

The persons to whom prize medals have been awarded by the Commissioners of the International Exhibition have not ipso facto any special property in the nature of a trade mark in the words "prize medal." Ib.

Therefore, where a person who had not obtained such a medal issued his goods with labels affixed to them bearing the words "prize medal, 1862," the Court refused to interfere at the instance of a person who had obtained such a medal. Ib.

10. An adjective, merely describing the quality of a manufactured article, will not be protected by the Court as a trade mark. Raggett v. Findlater, 29 L. T., N. S., 448; 22 W. R. 53; 17 L. R., Eq., 29; 43 L. J., Ch., 64.

Therefore, when the plaintiff, who dealt in malt liquors in London, sold stout, which was subjected by him to a particular treatment, under the name of "Nourishing London Stout":—Held, that he was not entitled to an injunction restraining the defendant from selling stout under the name of "Nourishing Stout." Ib.

1. The word "Patent" having come to be applied in common language to various manufactured articles as descriptive of a particular quality, without any reference to letters patent, the use of the words "patent thread" as part of the trade mark on an unpatented article, will not prevent a court of equity from protecting such trade mark. Marshall v. Ross, 39 L. J., Ch., 225; 8 L. R., Eq., 651; 17 W. R. 1086; 21 L. T., N. S., 260.

2. In 1847 Baron von Liebig discovered and published a process for making an extract of meat. The extract was made extensively at the Royal Pharmacy, Munich, and sold there, with the permission of the baron, as Liebig's extract of meat from 1861 to 1864. It became generally known in Germany and other countries, and the term Liebig's extract of meat became used as a term of art in scientific treatises. In 1864 Baron Liebig gave the Fray Bentos Company the right of using his name in connection with the extract of meat manufactured by them. In 1864 a company bought the business and property of the Fray Bentos Company, and by a deed-poll, dated the 12th April 1866, the baron granted to the plaintiff company the exclusive right and privilege to use his name in connection with the extract manufactured by them. The defendants, who had previously sold extract manufactured by the Fray Bentos Company, in 1866 began to sell as "Liebig's extract of meat" an extract manufactured by Mr. Tooth, in Australia, after Liebig's process. On a suit being instituted by the plaintiff company to restrain the defendants from so using the name Liebig's extract of meat:—Held, that the term having been used as a term of art to designate a well-known process long before 1861, the defendants were fully justified in using it, and the bill was dismissed with costs. Liebig's Extract of Meat Co. v. Hambury, 17 L. T., N. S., 298.

3. The plaintiffs purchased from a firm established in the United States knowledge of a secret mode of making crucibles, which had acquired a reputation in America as "Patent Plumbago Crucibles," although the process never had been patented:—Held, that they could not maintain a bill to restrain others from pirating this designation. Morgan v. M'Adam, 36 L. J., Ch., 228.

4. "Reading sauce" was first invented and introduced to the public by one James Cocks, but subsequently many manufacturers by unrestrained usage acquired the right to call their articles the "Reading sauce":—Held, that the description "the original Reading sauce" applied only to that made by James Cocks, and those claiming under him, and that they had a right to restrain other parties from using that designation without showing that any purchaser was actually deceived. Cocks v. Chandler, 40 L. J., Ch., 576; 11 L. R., Eq., 446; 19 W. R. 593; 24 L. T., N. S., 379.

5. The user by a dealer or a manufacturer in connection with an article of manufacture of a single word, being a material part of a particular title to which as a trade mark another manufacturer has a right in connection with the same article, may be an infringement of the trade mark. Ford v. Foster, 41 L. J., Ch., 682; 7 L. R., Ch., 611; 27 L. T., N. S., 219; 20 W. R. 818.

The test whether a "fancy name" adopted by a manufacturer as a trade mark for certain goods has become publici juris is the question whether the use of it by other persons in connection with the same goods is calculated to deceive the public, so as to induce them to believe that in purchasing the goods so named they are purchasing goods of the original manufacturer. Consequently, a trade mark may have become publici juris among a certain class, as between the wholesale and retail dealers who will not be deceived by it, and yet may not have become publici juris as between the retail dealers and their ordinary customers. The misrepresentation, such, for example, as falsely calling himself a patentee, which will disentitle a person to relief in equity in respect of an infringement of his trade mark, must be such a misrepresentation as would prevent him from recovering nominal damages in an action brought to establish his right to the trade mark. Ib.

Since a misrepresentation, not forming a part of the trade mark itself, although used in connection with the trade mark, and with the article to which the trade mark applies, would be no answer to an action of a party to establish his title at law, neither will such a misrepresentation disentitle him to relief in equity. Ib.

Ford, a shirt manufacturer, gave the name Eureka to a particular shape of shirt invented by him, and stamped all such shirts with the words "Ford's Eureka Shirts," and with a statement that such words were his trade mark. He advertised the shirts, falsely calling himself the patentee of them, and he falsely described himself on his bill heads, etc., as patentee of the shirts. Shirts of the particular shape came to be commonly known in the trade as Eureka. Certain wholesale shirt manufacturers made shirts of the same shape, and stamped them in the same part of the shirts as "Eureka Shirts":—Held, that Ford was entitled to an injunction to restrain the wholesale manufacturers from using the word "Eureka" as applied to shirts not of Ford's manufacture, except that they were to be at liberty to advertise their shirts as "Eureka" in their trade lists. But having regard to his misrepresentations the account against them was confined to the time from the filing the bill. Ib.

6. In order to constitute a ground for interference by a court of equity to protect a manufacturer against the use, by another person, of the particular name of his manufactured article, it is not necessary that there should be a mala mens towards the first purchaser of the article thus imitatively designated. The fault of the imitator is, that the first purchaser may be enabled, through this unwarranted designation, to retail a simulated article at a lower price than would be demanded for the original article, and so the original manufacturer may be injured. Wotherspoon v. Currie, 5 L. R.,

A name may become a trade denomination, and as such the property of a particular person who first gives it to a particular article of manufacture. The employment of the name by another person for the purpose of describing an imitation of that article is an invasion of the right of the original manufacturer, who is entitled to protection by injunction. Id.

W. had been for many years a manufacturer of starch at a small hamlet in Scotland, called Glenfield, where there was a stream of water particularly suited for use in the manufacture. Under the name of "Glenfield starch" his goods had acquired a great reputation. He continued to use this name, though he removed his manufactory from Glenfield, and on the labels which were placed on the packets of his starch it was called the Glenfield starch. In 1868, C. set up starch works at Glenfield, and sold starch in packets labelled "Currie & Co., starch manufacturers, Glenfield." In colour these labels resembled those of W., but this colour was used by most starch manufacturers. C.'s agent represented his starch as "Glenfield starch," and he thereby obtained an increased sale for the article:—Held, that W. was entitled to an injunction to restrain C. from using the word "Glenfield" on his labels, and from representing his starch as Glenfield starch. Id.

1. Long user of a trade mark gives such a property in it to the owner that another person cannot adopt the same device, even though it is his "family crest." Standish v. Whitwell, 14 W. R. 512.

2. A trader may establish a trade mark by the use of a "crest," and anything which amounts to an imitation of the crest as a trade mark would be restrained by the Court. But the use of a different crest by another trader, if not accompanied by other indicia to make it a colourable imitation of the trade mark of the plaintiff, will not be restrained. Beard v. Turner, 13 L. T., N. S., 746.

3. A firm having adopted the letters "L. L." to designate a peculiar quality of whiskey sold by them, acquire an exclusive right to the use of those letters as a trade mark, though they were always preceded by the name of the firm upon the labels issued by them. Kinahan v. Bolton, 15 Ir. Ch. R. 75.

4. The name of a manufacturer, or "a system of numbers" adopted and used by him in order to designate goods of his make, may be the subject of the same protection in equity as an ordinary trade mark. Ainsworth v. Wamsley, 1 L. R., Eq., 518; 12 Jur., N. S., 205; 35 L. J., Ch., 352; 14 W. R. 363; 14 L. T., N. S., 220.

5. The plaintiffs and the defendants were bottlers of beer for export. The plaintiffs' label consisted of a bulldog's head on a black ground surrounded by a circular band, on which were the words "Read Brothers, London. The Bull Dog Bottling." The defendants' label represented a rough terrier's head on a black ground, surrounded by a red circular band, on which were the words, "Celebrated Terrier Bottling, E. Richardson." The plaintiffs' beer was well known in the colonies as the "Dog's Head" beer, and they alleged that the defendants, by exporting to certain colonies beer with the terrier's head label, led to their beer being substituted and taken for the plaintiffs' beer:—Held, that the plaintiffs were entitled to an interim injunction restraining the continuance of the terrier's head in the label on the bottles of beer exported to such colonies by the defendants. Read v. Richardson, 45 L. T. 54.

6. A company under a grant from the owners acquired the exclusive right of importing and selling in Great Britain the mineral water produced by a natural spring called "Apollinaris," at Ahrweiler, in Prussia, which had for some years been known and sold in the English market under the name of "Apollinaris Water," and advertised and sold the same as "Apollinaris Water." Subsequently the defendant made and sold an artificial mineral water, being the chemical equivalent of the natural water, under the name and description of "London Apollinaris Water," possessing all the properties of the natural water:—Held, that the company was entitled to an interim injunction to restrain the use of the words "London Apollinaris Water," or of any other name of which the word "Apollinaris" so formed part as to be calculated to mislead the public. Apollinaris Co. v. Norrish, 33 L. T., N. S., 242.

7. Where A. introduces into the market an article which, though previously known to exist, is new as an article of commerce, and has acquired a reputation therefrom in the market by a name not merely descriptive of the article, B. will not be permitted to sell a similar article under the same name; and this, although the peculiarity of the name has long been in common use as applied to goods of a different kind. And it will make no difference that the plaintiff has also a trade mark which has not been taken by the defendant. Braham v. Bustard, 1 Hem. & M. 447; 11 W. R. 1061; 9 L. T., N. S., 199; 2 N. R. 572.

The word "Excoelsior" is one in which an exclusive right of user as a trade mark may be obtained. Id.

8. There may be a trade mark in a "title of a book," and an action for fraud will lie against a person using the title of a book already published for the purpose of passing off such book as that of a former author. Dicks v. Yates, 18 L. R., Ch. D., 76; 50 L. J., Ch., 809; 44 L. T. 660.

9. A manufacturer who has produced an article of merchandise, e.g., a new pattern of cloth, and applied to it a particular "fancy name," and sold it with a particular mark, under which name and mark it has obtained currency in the market, acquires an exclusive right to the use of such name and mark, and is entitled to restrain all other persons from using such name and mark to denote articles similar in kind and appearance, although he may have no exclusive right of manufacturing the article. Hirst v. Denham, 14 L. R., Eq., 542; 41 L. J., Ch., 752; 27 L. T., N. S., 56.

If the use of such name and mark, by any other person than the first inventor, has been adopted for the purpose of selling goods of an inferior quality, though of similar external appearance, so that purchasers may be misled into the belief that they are buying the goods of the first inventor, the injury to the first inventor is one for which he is entitled to compensation in damages, and relief by injunction. Ib.

III. Assignment of.

1. A corporate trade mark, granted by the Cutlers' Company at Sheffield to a person not free of the company, is, so far as the special acts governing the company are concerned, assignable. Bury v. Bedford, 4 De G. J. & S. 352; 33 L. J., Ch., 465; 10 L. T., N. S., 470; 12 W. R. 726; 10 Jur., N. S., 503; 4 N. R. 180. Affirming 9 Jur., N. S., 956; 32 L. J., Ch., 741; 11 W. R. 973; 8 L. T., N. S., 847; 1 N. R. 5.

The question, how far by the general law a trade mark is assignable, depends greatly upon the nature of the mark and the mode in which it has been used. Ib.

Whether a trade mark granted by the Cutlers' Company be legally assignable or not, a person who has purported to assign it for valuable consideration cannot dispute the validity of the assignment. Ib.

If a personal trade mark is in any respect less assignable than one referring to locality only or a mere device, the distinction must be limited to mere cases where the mark is so clearly personal as to import that the goods bearing it are manufactured by a particular person; and, semble, even in that case, the objection is rather to the right of using the mark than to its assignable quality. Ib.

B., being a non-freeman of the Cutlers' Company, acquired by grant from that company a corporate trade mark, consisting of the figure of a lion, and the letters J. B. O. S.; he also acquired by purchase from William Ash, the right to the exclusive use of a trade mark, "Wm. Ash & Co." He subsequently entered into partnership, and by the articles executed, the corporate trade mark, used with such other mark as might be agreed upon, should be a partnership asset. It was also agreed, that at the expiration of the partnership, the several partners should have the free use and enjoyment of the corporate trade mark for the remainder of their lives, either alone, or in partnership with any other persons. The firm, after carrying on business, in the course of which both the corporate trade mark and the mark "Wm. Ash & Co." were used, fell into difficulties, and the partners assigned all their estate and effects, both joint and separate, to trustees, for creditors. By the deed, the trustees were empowered to sell the trade, plant, etc., as a going concern. They accordingly afterwards sold the concern to H. B., and assigned to him the partnership property, and the corporate trade mark and the other marks of the firm, so far as they lawfully could. Shortly afterwards, B. entered into an arrangement with B. & Co., by which he authorized them to use the corporate mark, and he also used the corporate mark, and the mark "Wm. Ash & Co." himself. Thereupon, H. B. filed a bill to restrain him from so doing;—Held, that he was entitled to the exclusive use of both trade marks, and an injunction was granted accordingly. Ib.

2. A company purchased all the property, utensils, goodwill of business, and trade marks of a manufacturer; this purchase would authorize the company, really carrying on business at the same place, to continue the use of the manufacturer's name and marks, so as to be protected therein against the infringement of the same. Leather Cloth Co. v. American Leather Cloth Co., 11 H. L. Ca. 523; 35 L. J., Ch., 53; 13 W. R. 873; 12 L. T., N. S., 742; 6 N. R. 209; 11 Jur., N. S., 513. And see S. C. 10 Jur., N. S., 81; 33 L. J., Ch., 199; 12 W. R. 289; 4 De G. J. & S. 137; 9 L. T., N. S., 558; 2 N. R. 481; 3 N. R. 264.

There may be a property in a trade mark which, on the sale of the right to manufacture the goods which it designates, may also be sold and transferred. Ib.

Persons of the name of Crockett manufactured leather cloth, and put on it a stamp, describing it as manufactured by them at New Jersey, U. S., and West Ham, Essex, and as being patented, and being tanned. A company bought their manufactured articles, their materials for manufacture, goodwill, and premises, at West Ham, and their trade marks. Semble, that on such a purchase, the continued use by the purchaser of Crockett's original label was not a fraud on their part; and if the use of it had been infringed, it might have been protected. Ib.

3. In substance there is no distinction between the sale of a business and goodwill by a trader himself, and a sale by his assignees in bankruptcy. Hudson v. Osborne, 39 L. J., Ch., 79.

Therefore, on sale of a business by a trader's assignees in bankruptcy, the trader has no right, upon setting up a fresh business after his discharge, to use the trade marks of his old business, or in any other way to represent himself as carrying on the identical business which was sold, although he has a right to set up again in business of the same kind next door to his old place of business. Ib.

In such a case it is no objection to the purchaser coming for the assistance of the Court, that he has continued to use the name of the old business which he found there. Ib.

4. Although the fact that a man has sold the goodwill of a business does not prevent him from setting up again immediately in the same trade, the Court will nevertheless restrain him from sending special solicitations to the customers of the old house asking them to deal with him at his new place of business, and it will not justify his conduct that he is not in any way holding himself out as continuing to carry on the old business. Labouchere v. Dawson, 13 L. R., Eq. 322; 41 L. J., Ch., 427; 25 L. T. 894; 20 W. R. 309.

I. GENERAL PRINCIPLES.

5. The essential ingredients for constituting an infringement of a right to a trade mark are—(1) that the mark has been applied by the plaintiffs properly, i.e., that they have not copied any other person's mark, and that the mark does not involve any false representation; (2) that the article so marked is actually a vendible article in the market; (3) that the defendants, knowing that to be so, have imitated the mark for the purpose of passing in the market other articles of a similar description. M'Andrew v. Bassett, 4 De G. J. & S. 880; 4 N. R. 12, 123; 10 Jur., N. S., 550; 33 L. J., Ch., 561; 12 W. R. 777; 10 L. T., N. S., 442.

1. Injunction against imitating a blacking label granted, though the difference appeared on a careful reading. Day v. Binning, C. P. C. 489.

2. In cases of alleged colourable imitations of trade marks, the Court has not to consider whether manufacturers could distinguish between the articles, but whether the public would probably be deceived by the alleged spurious imitation. Shrimpton v. Lait, 18 Beav. 164.

3. In an alleged infringement of a right to trade marks, the Court must ascertain whether the resemblances and the differences are such as naturally arise from the necessity of the case, or whether, on the other hand, the differences are simply colourable, and the resemblances such as are obviously intended to deceive the purchaser. Taylor v. Taylor, 23 L. J., Ch., 225; 2 Eq. Rep. 290.

The Court will restrain by injunction a trader from using such trade marks as, from their resemblance to the trade marks of another firm, are obviously intended to deceive the purchaser into the belief that he is buying the manufactures of this other firm, the differences being merely colourable, and not made bonâ fide for the purpose of distinguishing the articles. Ib.

4. In deciding the question of piracy of a trade mark, the colour of the marks cannot be taken into account, and the only test is a comparison of the uncoloured diagrams. Nuthall v. Vining, 28 W. R. 330.

5. The Court does not interfere to prevent the infringement of a trade mark, unless, in the first place, it has evidence that the public has been actually deceived, or is from inspection satisfied, that there is either an intention to deceive, or a probability of deception. Cope v. Evans, 22 W. R. 453; 18 L. R., Eq., 188; 30 L. T., N. S., 292.

Evidence of skilled witnesses, that in their opinion the public is likely to be deceived by the similarity of two trade marks, is not of itself sufficient evidence of infringement. Ib.

6. To entitle a trader to relief against an illegal use of his trade mark, it is not necessary that the imitation should be so close as to deceive persons seeing the two marks side by side; but the degree of resemblance must be such, that ordinary purchasers proceeding with ordinary caution are likely to be misled. Seiwo v. Provezondo, 1 L. R., Ch., 192; 12 Jur., N. S., 215; 14 W. R. 357; 14 L. T., N. S., 314.

The actual physical resemblance of the two marks is not the sole question for the Court, for if the plaintiffs' goods have, from his trade mark, become known in the market by a particular name, the adoption by the defendant of a mark or name which will cause his goods to bear the same name in the market, is as much a violation of the plaintiffs' rights as the actual copy of his mark. Ib.

Although the defendant may have some title to the use of a name or mark, he will not be justified in adopting it, if the probable effect of his so doing is to lead the public to suppose, that in purchasing his goods they are purchasing those of the plaintiff. Ib.

7. Where, in a stamp used by the defendant as a trade mark, the form of the printed words, the words themselves, and the pictured symbol introduced among them, so much differed from that of the plaintiffs, that any person with reasonable care and observation must see the difference, and could not be misled into taking the one for the other:—Held, that there had been no infringement. Leather Cloth Co. v. American Leather Cloth Co., 11 H. L. Ca. 253; 13 W. R. 873; 35 L. J., Ch., 53; 12 L. T., N. S., 742; 6 N. R. 209; 11 Jur., N. S., 513. And see S. C., 10 Jur., N. S., 81; 33 L. J., Ch., 199; 12 W. R. 289; 4 De G. J. & S. 137; 9 L. T., N. S., 558; 2 N. R. 481; 3 N. R. 264.

8. The Court will not restrain the use of a label on the ground of its general resemblance to the trade mark of another manufacturer, if it is different in the points which a customer would look at in order to see whose manufacture he was purchasing. Blacknell v. Crabb, 36 L. J., Ch., 504.

9. When a trade mark is not actually copied, the existence of a fraudulent intention is a necessary element in the consideration of a case of this description. The party complained of must be proved to have done the act with the fraudulent design of passing off his own goods as those of the complainant. It is not necessary, however, to show an exact resemblance between the original and the counterfeit—it is sufficient if there is such a resemblance as will mislead an unwary purchaser. Wotherpoon v. Currie, 5 L. R., H. L., 508; 27 L. T., N. S., 393; 42 L. J., Ch., 130. Reversing 18 W. R. 942; 22 L. T., N. S., 443.

10. Fraud is not necessary to be averred or proved in order to obtain protection for a trade mark. Singer Manufacturing Co. v. Wilson, 47 L. J., Ch., 481; 3 L. R., App. Cas., 376; 26 W. R. 664; 38 L. T., N. S., 303.

11. Where there is a strong resemblance in matter, colour, and arrangement between the trade mark and its imitation, the Court will presume that this is not fortuitous but intentional, with a view to mislead purchasers. Edelston v. Vick, 18 Jur. 7; 11 Hare 78.

12. No trader has a right to use a trade mark so nearly resembling that of another trader as to be calculated to mislead incautious purchasers. The use of such a trade mark may be restrained by injunction, although no purchaser has actually been misled; for the very life of a trademark depends upon the promptitude with which it is vindicated. Johnston v. Orr Ewing, 7 L. R., App. Cas., 219; 51 L. J., Ch., 797; 46 L. T. 216; 20 W. R. 417. Varying S. C. sub. nom. Orr Ewing v. Johnston, 13 L. R., Ch. D., 434; 31 L. T. 67; 28 W. R. 220.

Quere, whether a ticket, which was a right-ful and bonâ fide trade mark of a trader using it, could be excluded by injunction from particular markets (though unimpeachable everywhere else) merely because in those markets it might be liable to be called by a name which the mark of another trader had already acquired there. Ib.

If the goods of a trader have acquired in the market a name derived from a part of the trade mark which he affixes to them, a rival trader is not entitled to use a ticket which is likely to lead to the application of the same name to his goods, even though that name is not the only name by which the goods of the first trader have been known, or though it has been always used in conjunction with some other words. Ib.

Where a trader has a right to a trade mark on goods sold in a foreign market, an injunction will be granted to restrain the export of goods under another trade mark which may deceive the ultimate purchasers, although it would not deceive Englishmen or the dealers in the foreign market. Ib.

Injunction against the use of trade mark by defendant was made general, although the plaintiff had never used his trade mark except in the Indian market. Ib.

1. The test of the infringement of a trade name or trade mark is whether the acts alleged as an infringement are likely to mislead the public into dealing with the alleged infringer under the belief that they are dealing with the person who first used the name or mark. Lee v. Haley, 18 W. R. 181; 21 L. T., N. S., 546. Affirmed 39 L. J., Ch., 284; 5 L. R., Ch., 165; 18 W. R. 242; 22 L. T., N. S., 251.

The doctrine of the Court on this point will not be restricted by any technical rules as to the name or mark in which the tradesman has property. Ib.

When a name denotes a special article to persons in a particular trade, but is used vaguely by persons not in the trade, it is not a misdescription to sell by that name, to persons not in the trade, articles popularly included under the name, but not strictly within the meaning of the word as used in the trade. Ib.

L. & Co., coal merchants, established a branch business, and carried it on in Pall Mall as the "Guinea Coal Company." H. was their manager, known personally and by his peculiar handwriting to their customers. He left their service, and set up as "The Pall Mall Guinea Coal Company" in the Strand, and on being remonstrated with added "N.B. No connection with L. & Co." Subsequently H. removed to Pall Mall, with "Pall Mall Guinea Coal Company" on his blind, and numerous instances were in evidence of persons giving orders at his office for that of L. & Co. H. claimed the right to use the name "Pall Mall Guinea Coal Company." On motion to restrain the use of the name "Pall Mall Guinea Coal Company," the injunction was granted. Ib.

2. The office of a trade mark is to denote that the article bearing it was manufactured by the owner of a trade mark; and a man has no right to affix a trade mark to an article not manufactured by himself, except for the purpose of showing that the article was selected or examined, or certified by himself. Hirsch v. Jonas, 45 L. J., Ch., 364; 3 L. R., Ch. D., 584; 35 L. T., N. S., 228.

H., a London cigar dealer, registered a label at Stationers' Hall, and communicated the same to a manufacturer of cigars at Havannah, who supplied H. with a particular description of cigars under that label, with the addition of the manufacturer's name and address. Afterwards the manufacturer commenced to sell the same description of cigars under the same label through a London agent. Upon motion by H., who alleged that he had an exclusive right, in the nature of trade mark, to the label:—Held, that the trade mark was the manufacturer's; and in the absence of evidence of a contract binding him to supply cigars of the particular brand to no one but H., the Court refused to grant an interim injunction to restrain the London agent from selling the cigars under the same label. Ib.

II. IN PARTICULAR CASES.

Colourable Imitation.] 3. The plaintiff invented and sold a medicine under his own name. The defendant also made and sold a similar medicine, and on his labels he used the plaintiff's name and certain certificates given of the efficacy of the plaintiff's medicine in such an ingenious manner as prima facie, though not in fact, to appropriate and apply them to his own medicine:—Held, that although there were other differences in the mode of selling, the proceeding was wrongful, and the defendant was restrained by injunction. Franks v. Weaver, 10 Beav. 297.

4. Injunction granted to restrain the defendant from running an omnibus having upon it such names, words, and devices as to form a colourable imitation of the words, names, and devices on the omnibuses of the plaintiffs. Knott v. Morgan, 2 Keen 213.

5. Injunction to restrain a party from making and sending to Turkey watches having the plaintiff's name or the word "warranted," engraved thereon in Turkish characters, in imitation of plaintiff's watches. Gout v. Aleploglu, 6 Beav. 69. n.

A man cannot acquire a property merely in a name or mark. Ib.

6. A. and B. filed their bill, alleging a right to a trade mark in the word "Ethiopian" upon black cotton stockings, acquired by A. and a former partner, deceased, praying an injunction and account of profits. Defendants denied plaintiffs' right to the mark as a trade mark, stating that other parties used the word prior to A. and his partner, but admitted that they (defendants) had copied the mark from plaintiffs' stockings, and denied any fraudulent intent in so doing. The evidence as to plaintiffs' right to the mark as a trade mark was very unsatisfactory;—Held, refusing a motion to dissolve an injunction, that defendants having made so complete a copy of plaintiffs' mark, the difference being only nominal, must be taken to have done so with an intent to gain an advantage to which they were not entitled:—Held, also, that, although the personal representative of A.'s deceased partner might have a right to participate in the property (if any) of the mark, A. had such an interest as to entitle him to file this bill. Hine v. Lart, 10 Jur. 106.

7. A trader produced and sold an ink which he designated "Stephens' Blue Black," and it was shown to the public in a label in white capital letters of large type. The defendant sold an ink in bottles similar in size, designated as Steelpens Blue Black," also in white capital letters of large type:—Held, that this was a colourable imitation of the trade mark, and the defendant was restrained by injunction from the further use of it. Stephens v. Peel, 16 L. T., N. S., 146.

1. Schweitzer sold a preparation of cocoa labelled "Schweitzer's cocoatina." Atkins, who had been in his employ, set up business in partnership with a man also named Schweitzer, and sold a similar preparation of cocoa, labelled "Schweitzer, Atkins & Co.'s cocoatina":—Held, that this was a fraudulent and colourable imitation, and an injunction was granted accordingly. Schweitzer v. Atkins, 37 L. J., Ch., 847; 16 W. R. 1080; 19 L. T., N. S., 6.

2. B. & Co. for many years affixed a label or a trade mark to the bottles in which their ale was sold. D. & Co. adopted a label bearing a general resemblance to that of B. & Co., but differing from it in several particulars. Bill by B. & Co. to restrain D. & Co. from using such label dismissed with costs. Bass v. Damber, 19 L. T., N. S., 626.

3. The trade mark of the plaintiff consisted of the representation of an anchor. The defendant used the device of an anchor surmounted by a crown:—Held, to be a colourable imitation. Edelsten v. Edelsten, 1 De G. J. & S. 185; 9 Jur., N. S., 749; 11 W. R. 328; 7 L. T., N. S., 768.

4. When a name, whether of a place or of a person, has, by user by a particular maker of a particular article of manufacture, acquired a secondary signification in connection with that manufacture, and has obtained currency and value in the market as the trade denomination of that particular maker's goods, it becomes in connection with that manufacture the property of that maker as his trade mark or as part of his trade mark. Wotherspoon v. Currie, 42 L. J., Ch., 180; 5 L. R., H. L., 508; 27 L. T., N. S., 393. Reversing 18 W. R. 942; 22 L. T., N. S., 443.

The user of that name by another maker in connection with that manufacture will be prohibited, even though he may not copy the whole of the first maker's trade mark, whatever means such other maker may devise for the purpose of availing himself of the name; provided the Court is satisfied that those means are adopted in order to obtain a colourable right to use the name, and that the object and the probable result of such user would be to deceive unwary purchasers of such other maker's goods into the belief that they were buying the goods of the party to whom the right to use the name belongs. Id.

W., having acquired in connection with starch a property in the name of a small place, Glenfield, where he at one time made his starch, removed his works elsewhere, but continued to call his starch Glenfield Starch. C. went to Glenfield and also made starch there which he called Royal Palace Starch, but he printed on his labels conspicuously the word Glenfield as the name of the place where his starch was made. This starch was pushed in the trade as Glenfield Starch. As regards the first purchasers, the retail dealers, there was no deception; they well knew that in buying C.'s starch they were not buying that made by W.; and W.'s was the original Glenfield Starch:—Held, that this was a fraudulent use of the word "Glenfield," and an infringement of W.'s trade mark. Id.

5. The plaintiffs registered a trade mark for worsted goods described as "a white selvage on each side of the piece having a red and white mottled thread interwoven the full length of the selvage between the edge of the piece and the edge of the selvage," and deposited a specimen at the Patent Office Museum. The specimen so deposited was undyed, and the selvage was white, the warp being white cotton and the woof white mohair, and nearly in the middle of the selvage was a compound warp thread composed of a thread of white cotton and a thread of Turkey red cotton twisted together. When the goods were dyed black the cotton threads took the dye imperfectly, so that the warp threads in the selvage became grey, while the woof became black, so as to make the selvage dark grey, with a dark red mottled line running along it. The defendants sold black mohair goods with a dark grey selvage of nearly the same shade as that of the plaintiffs, with a twisted thread running along its inner edge, which thread was originally white, red, and yellow, but in the course of dyeing the white became dark grey, and the yellow a dark olive, which could hardly be distinguished. The plaintiffs sought to restrain the sale of these goods as an infringement, and moved for an injunction. There was evidence that the selvage, though not actually white, was what was known in the trade as a white selvage:—Held, by Jessel, M. R., that as the plaintiffs' selvage was not white, and the mottled thread of the defendants was different, and in a different position from that of the plaintiffs, there was no infringement, and that an injunction must be refused. But held by the Court of Appeal, that the principles according to which the Court acts in preventing a man from passing off his goods as those of another are not altered by the Trade Marks Registration Act, and that the question could not be disposed of by simple inspection of the patterns without considering whether the selvage was not, according to the understanding of the trade, a white selvage, and if it was, then whether the differences in quality and position of the defendants' mottled thread were sufficient to distinguish the defendants' goods from those of the plaintiffs, so as to prevent purchasers from being misled, and that as there was a conflict of evidence on these points the motion must stand over till the trial, the defendants undertaking to keep an account. Mitchell v. Henry, 15 L. R., Ch. D., 181; 43 L. T. 186.

User of Plaintiff's Boxes or Labels. 6. The boxes of tin plates made at particular works at Carmarthen were, for a long series of years, branded with the mark "M. C. S." A lessee of those works, who had used that mark, subsequently removed his manufactory to other works, at a distance of forty miles, and there used the same mark. The Carmarthen works were, for some years, unoccupied; but afterwards D., and others as co-partners, having taken a lease of them, carried them on, and branded their boxes with the mark "M. C.," and styled themselves the "The M. C. Tin Plate Company." S. then obtained an injunction to restrain D. and his partners from using the mark "M. C." or the designation of "The M. C. Tin Plate Company"; but upon appeal the injunction was dissolved, with liberty to S.

to bring an action. Motley v. Downman, 3 Myl. & C. 1; 6 L. J., N. S., Ch., 308.

Principles and rules upon which the Court interferes, by injunction, in such cases. Id.

1. A., the inventor of a medicine, employed B., a foreigner residing abroad, to manufacture it for him there, and sold it in England for his own sole profit; a label and seal, denoting that the medicine was manufactured by B., and sold by A., were affixed to each of the bottles in which it was sold. The defendants imitated the labels and seals; demurrer allowed to a bill by A. and B. to restrain the imitation, and for an account of the sales of the spurious labels and seals, A. having no interest. Delondre v. Shaw, 2 Sim. 237.

2. A defendant sold tobacco-pipes packed in boxes or cases, upon which were labels or descriptions of a similar character to those of the plaintiff, using the plaintiff's name as being the real manufacturer, the defendant having a person in his employ of that name:—Held, that such colourable imitation and use of the labels and descriptions could be restrained by injunction. Southorn v. Reynolds, 12 L. T., N. S., 575.

3. A defendant was restrained from selling or exposing for sale, fireworks, not manufactured or sold by the plaintiff, in boxes bearing the plaintiff's labels. Barnett v. Leuchars, 14 W. R. 166; 13 L. T., N. S., 495.

4. A perpetual injunction will be granted to restrain a trader from filling and sending out to the public articles of his own manufacture in bottles, casks, or other receptacles having indelibly impressed thereon the name of another trader who manufactures an article of a like description, even although such trader places on such bottles, casks, or receptacles a label having his own name thereon. Rose v. Loftus, 47 L. J., Ch., 576; 38 L. T., N. S., 409.

5. The plaintiffs made and sold soda water in their own bottles, marked in the glass with their own name, followed by the words "Genuine Superior Aerated Waters," and pasted over the corks with reddish labels, bearing a royal crown and their own name. They charged the bottles and contents in one price per dozen to their customers, and allowed 3s. per dozen for the empty bottles. The bottles only cost them 1s. 6d. per dozen. The defendant, who had been a customer of theirs to some extent, being asked for a dozen of soda water by the plaintiffs' agent sent for that purpose, supplied twelve bottles, seven of which were not stamped in the glass with the plaintiffs' name, and about which no deceit or mistake could arise. The remaining five bottles so supplied bore the plaintiffs' name on the glass, and had been originally made and supplied by the plaintiffs, but to whom in particular did not appear. The labels on all the bottles so sold were similar in colour to the plaintiffs' labels, and had a royal crown, but had not the plaintiff's name on them. The water was not the plaintiffs' water. They, on such purchase, without asking for any explanation, filed a bill for an injunction to restrain the use, or vending, by the defendant of the plaintiffs' bottles generally, and obtained an ex parte injunction:—Held, that the ex parte injunction must be dissolved with costs, the Court being of opinion, upon the evidence, that the defendant was not shown to have used the bottles either with an intention, or so as, in fact, to mislead the public. Welch v. Knott, 4 Kay & J. 747; 4 Jur., N. S., 330.

But the use of such bottles, so as in fact to mislead the public, although unintentionally, would be restrained. Id.

It is a serious error to allege, in a bill to restrain the improper use of a trade mark, that the trade mark complained of is "similar," when it is in fact the same, or vice versa. Id.

[By Wholesale Manufacturer.] 6. Where A. is ordered by B. to manufacture an article, and stamp it with a trade mark not B's, that alone leads to suspicion; but A., having caused the article to be manufactured, and admitting having casually heard of the party entitled to use such trade mark, must submit to a perpetual injunction, and pay costs. Collins Co. v. Walker, 7 W. R. 222.

7. An American company, incorporated, was established and located in the United States, for manufacturing edge tools of a superior description. The company used particular trade marks and labels on their manufactures, for which they obtained a great reputation. The company discovered that their manufactures were being imitated, and their marks and labels used, by manufacturers in England; and by the defendant, a manufacturer as Birmingham, and the company thereupon filed a bill against him, alleging that he had been for some time past in the habit of making and selling tools bearing a fraudulent imitation of their marks and labels. He, before putting in his answer, submitted to an injunction, and in his answer admitted the use of the trade marks complained of, but, by way of rebuttal of the charge of fraud, stated, that in so using the trade marks, he had only followed a custom prevalent at Birmingham for manufacturers of goods of the kind sold by the company, to affix on the goods ordered by merchants a particular trade mark, relying on the respectability of the merchant, when known to them, for the fact that those merchants had authority to act as agents of, or by way of licence from, the person entitled to the exclusive use of the trade marks; and that he had been informed that the company themselves had ordered goods to be manufactured at Birmingham, with their own trade mark upon them, for the purpose of sale in foreign countries. These statements were left uncontradicted by the company. On motion for a decree the Court ordered the injunction to be continued, the bill to be retained for a year, with liberty to the plaintiffs to proceed at law to establish their legal right to the marks and labels; but if no proceedings at law within that time should be taken, the bill to be dismissed with costs, otherwise further consideration of all matters reserved. Collins Co. v. Reeves, 4 Jur., N. S., 865; 38 L. J., Ch., 56; 6 W. R. 717.

8. Where a manufacturer has the exclusive right to use a particular trade mark, which he has been in the habit of procuring to be printed upon paper labels and wrappers, which he pasted on and wrapped round his manufactures, he may obtain an injunction, upon interlocutory motion, against a printer who has made and printed, and is in the habit of selling, imitations of the plaintiffs labels to persons for the purpose of using them fraudulently, to pass off other goods as those of the plaintiff, although the printer himself makes no such use of them; so also, if the plaintiff alleges that persons bought the labels of the defendant for such a fraudulent purpose, and proves that the defendant was in the habit of selling them to any one who asked for them; and the defendant denies collusion with any one, and also denies the plaintiff's right to the exclusive use of the mark, and insists upon his own right to continue the printing and selling, the injunction will be granted, although the plaintiff does not allege or prove that the defendant sold them with a fraudulent purpose, and does not distinctly prove that any of the labels sold by defendant were in fact made use of to defraud the plaintiff. The ground of this equity is, that the defendant, by knowingly printing labels in imitation of the plaintiffs' trade mark, and selling them to any one who asked for them, was supplying the means of committing, and was thus a party to frauds, which courts of equity would interfere to stop at their source. Farina v. Silverlock, 1 Kay & J. 509; 24 L. J., Ch., 632. And see S. C. 1 Kay & J. 509, 660; 3 Eq. Rep. 883; 3 W. R. 532.

On appeal the Lord Chancellor dissolved the injunction on the ground that as the mark consisted of a label in a certain form, and it was shown that in very many instances labels the same as or similar to it might be sold for a legitimate purpose, the Court, in the absence of any proof of actual fraud, would not restrain the printing and sale of such labels until the manufacturer, who alleged that they were used for a fraudulent purpose, had established his case by an action at law. S. C. 6 De G. M. & G. 214; 2 Jur., N. S., 1008; 26 L. J., Ch., 11; 4 W. R. 731.

Other Cases.] 1. A. discovered a medicine to which he gave the name of chlorodyne, invented by himself as a fancy title, and not previously known in the medical profession. B. advertised for sale a medicine which he called chlorodyne, and sold as B.'s chlorodyne. A. filed a bill against B., but did not press it to a hearing, and obtained an order dismissing it with costs. B. subsequently advertised his medicine as original chlorodyne, asserting that he was the first inventor. Upon motion for an injunction in a second bill by A., to restrain B. from the use of the term original chlorodyne:—Held, that although A., by dismissing his former bill, has abandoned all right to the exclusive use of the term chlorodyne, he would have been entitled to restrain B. from selling his medicine as original chlorodyne, if he had adduced evidence that any one had been misled by the title into buying B.'s instead of A.'s medicine. Browne v. Freeman, 12 W. R. 305.

2. An alien ami manufactured, in his own country, goods which he distinguished by a peculiar trade mark. The goods obtained considerable reputation, both in his own country and in various other foreign countries, and also in some British colonies, but it was not shown that any of such goods had ever been even introduced or imported into England. The defendant was in the habit of manufacturing in, and selling in, this country goods similar in appearance and with an exact copy of the plaintiffs' peculiar trade mark. Some of these imitative articles were sold and used abroad in countries where the alien ami's goods had obtained a reputation:—Held, that he was entitled to an injunction restraining the defendant from copying or imitating the trade mark. Collins Co. v. Browne, Collins Co. v. Cohen, 3 Kay & J. 423; 3 Jur., N. S., 929; 5 W. R. 676.

A man has no property in a trade mark, but he has a right to prevent anybody else from using it, so as to attract custom which otherwise would flow to himself. Id.

Semble, a person on whom an injury is fraudulently committed may have a remedy in the courts of any country where the fraud occurs, and even although he be at the time an alien enemy. Id.

3. J. sold, under a trade mark, a medicine known as J.'s ointment. O., without authority, sold an ointment as J.'s ointment, under an imitation of J.'s label. J. having threatened proceedings against O., an agreement was made, by which, after reciting that O. alleged that his invasion of the rights of J. was inadvertent, and that he had discontinued the same, and agreed not again to infringe on such rights, all claims in respect of the invasion, not only with respect to O., but to include all parties who may have purchased the ointment from him, shall be settled and discharged by the payment of 1,000*l.*, the receipt of which was acknowledged; this agreement also contained an undertaking to execute a formal release of all claims and demands in respect of the infringement. J. having commenced suits against persons who had purchased the ointment from O. previously to the agreement, but retailed it afterwards, O. filed a petition specifically to enforce the agreement, and to restrain J. from proceeding in the suits against the purchasers from O.:—Held, that the agreement did not authorize any sale, after the date of it, of ointment previously purchased from O. Oldham v. James, 14 Ir. Ch. R. 81. Affirming 13 Ir. Ch. R. 393.

Held, secondly, that, even if the terms of the agreement required the construction that J. was to permit ointment previously purchased from O. to be sold under the imitated mark, the Court would not specifically enforce such an agreement, as it would be a fraud on the public. Id.

4. A. being a thread manufacturer of repute, B. bought in the market thread, wound on spools, not made by A., of inferior quality, and cheaper than his, and not bearing his name, but marked with the name of a firm of winders of thread who were known to be accustomed to purchase of A. thread in the hank for the purpose of winding, and selling it when wound. B. sold the goods to a wholesale customer, with the assurance (given, as he said, without knowledge of any misrepresentation) that they were of A.'s make, and invoiced them to the customer under the description of certain numbers which A. had adopted and exclusively used in order to designate his particular manufacture. The customer attached A.'s name to the spools of thread, and retailed it to the public as of A.'s make:—Held, that there was not such a degree of wilful misrepresentation on the part of B. as would justify the Court in granting an injunction, and the bill was dismissed, but without costs. Ainsworth v. Walsley, 1 L. R., Eq., 518; 12 Jur., N. S., 205; 35 L. J., Ch., 352; 14 W. R. 363; 14 L. T., N. S., 220.

1. A manufacturer using, to describe articles made by him, the name of another manufacturer, must justify the use thus made of a name not his own, by showing that such name is understood by the trade and the public to denote a patented or other article of a particular type, structure, or arrangement of parts, and not a mark or sign of a particular manufacturer. It makes no difference in this principle that such name does not appear upon the articles sold, but only in advertisements or price lists; nor that the articles bear the selling manufacturers' own trade mark and labels, stating them to be manufactured by him, and that statements to the same effect appear in the advertisements and price lists. Singer Manufacturing Co. v. Wilson, 47 L. J., Ch., 481; 3 L. R., App. Cas., 376; 26 W. R. 664; 38 L. T., N. S., 303. Reversing 2 L. R., Ch. D., 434; 24 W. R. 1023; 45 L. J., Ch., 490; 34 L. T., N. S., 858.

When the first producer of an article of manufacture has identified with it a particular name, whether his own name or a name which is a word descriptive of the article itself, such name becomes a trade mark, and cannot be adopted and employed by another person in advertising a similar article. Id.

Such adoption and employment will be restrained by injunction. Id.

Singer made a sewing machine, to which he gave his own name; it became known by that name. He afterwards took other persons into partnership with him for the sale of the machines known as the Singer sewing machines, and which were made in great variety, and with many modifications, but though not protected by patents, were established in public favour under that name. W. sold sewing machines, and advertised, among others, Singer sewing machines, but used his own trade mark on the machines; and expressly stated in his advertisements that the machines sold by him were manufactured by himself:—Held, that this, nevertheless, constituted a wrongful invasion of the property of Singer, and that W. might be restrained by injunction. Id.

Fraud is not necessary to be averred or proved in order to obtain protection for a trade mark. Id.

2. An article, the secret making of which was known only to one maker, had acquired a trade name. An injunction was granted, restraining the application of that name to a different article of the same class, so as to induce the belief that it was the plaintiff's article. Siebert v. Findlater, 7 L. R., Ch. D., 801; 47 L. J., Ch., 233; 38 L. T. 349; 26 W. R. 459.

3. A trader has a right to make and sell machines similar in form and construction to those made and sold by a rival trader, and in describing and advertising his own machines to refer to his rival's machines and his rival's name, provided he does this in such a way as to obviate any reasonable possibility of misunderstanding or deception. Singer Manufacturing Co. v. Loog, L. R., App. Cas., 15; 52 L. J., Ch., 481; 48 L. T. 3; 31 W. R. 325. Affirming 18 L. R., Ch. D., 395; 44 L. T. 888; 29 W. R. 699.

III. BY WHARFINGERS OR CARRIERS.

4. The plaintiffs, who were wharfingers, warehoused a quantity of wine branded in imitation of the trade mark of the Veuve Clicquot champagne. The dock warrants passed into the possession of the defendant, who had advanced money upon them. The plaintiffs were afterwards informed that the brand was counterfeit, and that an injunction was about to be applied for, to restrain them from parting with the wine. After the injunction had been granted, but before they had received notice of it, the defendant produced the warrants and demanded the wine on payment of the plaintiffs' charges. The plaintiffs refused to give it up. The defendant sued them at law, and the plaintiffs filed a bill to restrain him from prosecuting the action. Injunction granted. Hunt v. Maniere, 13 W. R. 312; 11 L. T., N. S., 469; 34 Beav. 157; 11 Jur., N. S., 28. On appeal, injunction continued. S. C. 34 L. J., Ch., 142; 11 L. T., N. S., 723.

5. A wine merchant brought an action against another wine merchant to restrain him from pirating his trade mark by branding it on the corks of his bottles. Some of the wine in bottles with the pirated trade mark was in the warehouse of certain wharfingers who were made defendants to the action. In their defence they disclaimed all interest in the matter in dispute, and submitted to act as the Court might direct upon having their charges and costs paid. At the trial they contended at the bar that the plaintiff, if his right was established, ought not to touch the bottles for the purpose of removing the branded corks without first paying their charges:—Held, that the wharfingers had done nothing to disentitle them to their costs of the action; and that if the plaintiff had any lien on the wine for his costs it must be postponed to the wharfingers' lien for their charges. Moet v. Pickering, 8 L. R., Ch. D., 372; 47 L. J., Ch., 527; 38 L. T. 799; 26 W. R. 637. Reversing 6 L. R., Ch. D., 770.

6. Wine marked with a counterfeit of the plaintiffs' brand had been imported into this country, and A. had made bonâ fide advances on the security of the dock warrants. An injunction having been granted to restrain the dock company from parting with it, the Court, on the application of A., ordered the wine to be delivered to him, on the counterfeit brand being removed, but made A. pay the costs of the application:—Held, that the priority of charges on the wine was, first, the expenses of the dock company; secondly, A.'s claim; and, thirdly, the plaintiffs' costs of suit. Ponsardin v. Peto, Exp. Uselli, 33 Beav. 642; 9 L. T., N. S., 567; 10 Jur., N. S., 66; 33 L. J., Ch., 371; 12 W. R. 198; 3 N. R. 237.

7. A firm of forwarding agents in London received from correspondents abroad several boxes of cigars bearing forged brands, which were to be delivered to several persons in England. On application by the makers whose brand had been forged, the agents gave information as to the consignors, and offered either to send back the cigars or to erase the brands:—Held, on a bill for injunction by the makers whose brands were forged, that the fact of the agents being merely carriers was no defence to the suit; but that as they had given sufficient information, and offered to erase the brands, they were not to pay costs. Upmann v. Elkan, 7 L. R., Ch., 130; 41 L. J., Ch., 246; 25 L. T., N. S., 813.

1. An arrangement was made between W., R., and G., that W., a manufacturer, should consign cotton cloths to G. in Rangoon, paying him an inclusive commission. The goods were to be exported through R., who acted as shipping agent, and was to see to the goods being finished and packed, for which services he received a commission from G. A particular mark was by arrangement between the three parties adopted for the goods, of which some portions and the general arrangement were new, and other portions consisted of R.'s name and arms, and of a symbol which had formerly been used by G. After goods had been regularly exported for some years under this arrangement, W. ceased to send goods through R., and commenced exporting them to Rangoon through the agency of F., continuing to use the old mark, except that the name and arms of F. were substituted for those of R. At the same time R. commenced exporting other goods under the old mark. Cross actions were commenced for injunctions, in which R. set up an alleged custom in Manchester, giving the right to the trade marks to the shipping agent:—Held, upon the evidence, that no such custom existed. Robinson v. Finlay, Ward v. Robinson, 9 L. R., Ch. D., 487; 39 L. T. 398; 27 W. R. 294.

Held, also, that neither R. nor W. had any exclusive right to the use of the mark, and that both actions must be dismissed. Id.

IV. EVIDENCE OF DECEPTION.

2. Injunction granted restraining the sale of goods where imitation of trade mark was such as to deceive the public. Semble, the way in which the Court deals with cases of trade marks is not to see whether manufacturers themselves would distinguish them, but whether the public, who may be more easily misled, would probably be deceived. Shrimpton v. Light, 18 Beav. 164.

3. Where the Court is of opinion that the use of a particular mark is likely to deceive, it will not require evidence of actual deception. Braham v. Bustard, 11 W. R. 1061; 9 L. T., N. S., 199; 1 Hem. & M. 447; 2 N. R. 572.

4. Where a trader has innocently adopted a trade mark which is calculated to deceive by its similarity to another person's trade mark, his continuing to use it after complaint has been made is strong evidence of fraud. Orr Ewing v. Johnston, 13 L. R., Ch. D., 434; 41 L. T. 67; 28 W. R. 330. And see S. C. sub. nom. Johnston v. Orr Ewing, 7 L. R., App. Cas., 219; 51 L. J., Ch., 797; 46 L. T. 216; 30 W. R. 417.

If one trader appropriates a material and substantial part of a trade mark which belongs to another trader, he is bound to use such precautions as to avoid the reasonable probability of error and deception, and the onus is on him to show that purchasers of the goods will not be deceived. Id.

5. In suits to restrain the fraudulent use of a trader's name, or of a trade mark, it is not necessary to give proof of actual deception; it is enough if the acts of the defendant are calculated to deceive. Hookham v. Pottage, 26 L. T., N. S., 755; 20 W. R. 720. Affirmed 21 W. R. 47; 8 L. R., Ch., 91; 27 L. T. 595.

6. It is not necessary, in order to give a right to an injunction, that a specific trade mark should be infringed; it is sufficient that the Court should be satisfied that there was on the whole a fraudulent intention of palming off the defendant's goods as those of the plaintiff; but in such a case it is essential that the imitation should be necessarily calculated to deceive; and where it did not appear that any one had been, in fact, deceived, and a material part of the plaintiff's peculiar marks had been omitted, the Court, notwithstanding strong circumstances of suspicion, refused to interfere. Woolam v. Ratoliff, 1 Hem. & M. 259.

7. The Court does not interfere to prevent the infringement of a trade mark, unless, in the first place, it has evidence that the public has been actually deceived, or is from inspection satisfied that there is either an intention to deceive, or a probability of deception. Cope v. Evans, 18 L. R., Eq., 138; 30 L. T. 292; 22 W. R. 450.

Evidence of skilled witnesses, that in their opinion the public is likely to be deceived by the similarity of two trade marks, is not of itself sufficient evidence of infringement. Id.

8. A tradesman may use a name, although he is aware that a neighbouring tradesman intends to use that name. A bootmaker having a shop running up Bedford Street, with the front and entrance in the Strand, wrote up over his shop the words "Civil Service Boot Supply." The Civil Service Supply Association were at that time building a large store at the other end of Bedford Street, in which when finished they opened a general shop, and they afterwards opened a boot and shoe shop in Tavistock Street, which was not far off. One of the customers of the association had gone to the shop of the bootmaker, mistaking it for that of the association. The association brought an action to restrain the bootmaker from using the words:—Held, that under the circumstances there was no intention on the part of the bootmaker to deceive, and that no rational person would have been deceived by the words so used; and action dismissed. Civil Service Supply Association v. Dean, 13 L. R., Ch. D., 512.

In a trade mark case, the fact that one person has been deceived is not conclusive as to the misrepresentation. Id.

V. COMPROMISE OF PROSECUTION FOR.

9. A prosecution instituted by the defendants against the plaintiff under the Merchandise Marks Act 1862 (25 & 26 Vict., c. 88), was by agreement compromised, and the plaintiff gave the defendants a written apology, requesting them not further to continue proceedings against him, and authorizing them to make such use of the apology as they might think necessary. Upon demurrer to a bill to restrain the excessive publication of this apology:—Held, that the Court had no jurisdiction to interfere. Fisher v. Apollinaris Co., 44 L. J., Ch., 500; 23 W. R. 460; 32 L. T., N. S., 628; 10 L. R., Ch., 297.

VI. PROCEEDINGS IN RESPECT OF.

1. Injunction. General Principles, 6785.
2. Breach of Injunction and Committal, 6785.
3. Delay and Acquiescence. Effect of, 6786.
4. Misrepresentation by Plaintiff. Effect of, 6786.
5. Parties, 6787.
6. Discovery, 6787.
7. Account of Profits, 6787.
8. Costs, 6788.

1. Injunction. General Principles.

1. In granting injunctions to prevent the infringement of trade marks, the Court exercises its jurisdiction in aid of courts of law, i.e., where an action could be maintained in a court of law. But it does not exercise an independent jurisdiction. The cases on this subject reviewed and considered. Foot v. Lea, 13 Ir. Eq. R. 484.

2. The ground on which a court of equity protects trade marks is, that it will not permit a party to sell his own goods as the goods of another; a party will not, therefore, be allowed to use names, marks, letters, or other indicia, by which he may pass off his own goods to purchasers as the manufacture of another person. Perry v. Truefitt, 6 Beav. 86.

If a plaintiff, coming for an injunction in such a case, appears to have been guilty of misrepresentations to the public, a court of equity will not interfere in the first instance. Ib.

3. The Court refused to interfere by injunction, on the application of the plaintiff, the owner of a manufactory, to restrain the occupiers of the original manufactory from using a particular mark, but gave him liberty to bring an action at law. Mottley v. Downman, 3 Myl. & C. 1; 6 L. J., N. S., Ch., 308.

In cases of claims to the exclusive right to particular marks on manufactures, the Court exercises a jurisdiction over a legal right, and therefore will not interfere by injunction in the first instance, except in strong cases, and it generally does so by putting the parties on the terms of asserting their legal right by action at law. Ib.

4. The Court will grant a perpetual injunction against the use, by one tradesman, of the trade marks of another, although such marks have been so used in ignorance of their being any person's property, and under the belief that they were merely technical terms. Millington v. Fox, 3 Myl. & C. 338.

5. An injunction to restrain a defendant from using the particular style or title adopted by the plaintiff will not be granted if the Court entertains the slightest doubt of the plaintiff's right to sustain his title at law. Purser v. Brain, 17 L. J., N. S., Ch., 141.

6. It is not necessary in order to maintain a prayer for injunction that the whole of a trade mark should have been imitated. Braham v. Bustard, 11 W. R. 1061; 9 L. T., N. S., 199.

7. In order to constitute a ground for interference by a court of equity to protect a manufacturer against the use, by another person, of the particular name of his manufactured article, it is not necessary that there should be a mala mens towards the first purchaser of the article thus imitatively designated. The fault of the imitator is, that the first purchaser may be enabled, through this unwarranted designation, to retail a simulated article at a lower price than would be demanded for the original article, and so the original manufacturer may be injured. Wotherpoon v. Currie, 5 L. R., H. L., 508; 42 L. J., Ch., 180; 27 L. T. 393.

8. The principles explained on which interlocutory injunctions to restrain infringements of trade marks and names should be granted. Read v. Richardson, 45 L. T. 54.

9. The jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery in the protection given to trade marks rests upon property, and the Court interferes by injunction, because that is the only mode by which property of this description can be effectually protected. Leather Cloth Co. v. American Leather Cloth Co., 33 L. J., Ch., 199; 9 L. T. 558; 12 W. R. 289; 10 Jur., N. S., 81; 3 N. R. 264; 4 De G. J. & S. 137; 2 N. R. 481; 3 N. R. 264. Affirmed 11 H. L. Ca. 523; 11 Jur., N. S., 513; 35 L. J., Ch., 53; 13 W. R. 873; 12 L. T., N. S., 742; 6 N. R. 209.

Where the owner of a trade mark applies for an injunction to restrain the defendant from injuring his property by making false representations to the public, it is essential that the plaintiff should not in his trade mark or in the business connected with it be himself guilty of any false or misleading representation. Ib.

It is not a rule, either of morality or equity, that a person is not answerable for a falsehood in his trade mark, because it may be so gross and palpable as that no one is likely to be deceived by it. Ib.

10. The jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery in the protection of trade marks rests upon property, and fraud in the defendant is not necessary for the exercise of that jurisdiction. Hall v. Barrows, 4 De G. J. & S. 160; 33 L. J., Ch., 204; 9 L. T., N. S., 651; 12 W. R. 322; 10 Jur., N. S., 55; 1 N. R. 543; 3 N. R. 259.

11. W.'s manager, without the personal knowledge of W., affixed tickets with T.'s name printed thereon to certain goods of inferior quality to T.'s and made by another manufacturer. On T.'s complaining of this, W. offered to give an undertaking that he would not use such tickets again, and to pay a certain sum, but declined to make a public admission that he had used the tickets in order to defraud T.:—Held, that, notwithstanding W.'s offer, T. was entitled to an injunction with costs, and also to an inquiry as to damages at his own risk. Tonge v. Ward, 21 L. T., N. S., 480.

2. Breach of Injunction and Committal.

12. In 1847 Joseph R. & Sons obtained an injunction to restrain N. and William R. from using the trade mark "J. R. & Sons." Soon afterwards W. R. entered into partnership with his father, John R., and with a brother, and the three used the trade mark "J. R. & Sons," with a colourable addition. Upon the plaintiffs moving, in 1853, to commit W. R., and denying notice of the breach of the injunction before July 1852:—Held, that they were entitled to the order, and that acquiescence, to constitute a defence to such a motion, must amount to a licence to use the mark:—Held, also, that the plaintiffs might move to commit W. R. without bringing his partners before the Court. Rodgers v. Norvill, 3 De G. M. & G. 614; 17 Jur. 109, 171; 22 L. J., Ch., 404; 1 W. R. 122, 205, 216.

3. Delay and Acquiescence. Effect of.

1. A plaintiff laid by for two years before filing a bill for an injunction, having seen labels of the defendant exhibited publicly, which he now complained of as being colourable imitations of his labels:—Held, that such laches disentitled him to relief. Beard v. Turner, 13 L. T., N. S., 746.

2. The Court will not refuse to grant an injunction to restrain the infringement of a trade mark, on the mere ground that a great number of years has elapsed since it was first infringed by the defendant. But when many years have elapsed before the plaintiff takes steps to restrain the infringement, the Court will require clearer proof than it would otherwise have done that the trade mark was adopted by the defendant originally with fraudulent intent, and will require the plaintiff to prove that he has been actually injured by the infringement. Rodgers v. Rodgers, 31 L. T., N. S., 285; 22 W. R. 887.

3. The plaintiff, who was a manufacturer of an article used as a substitute for hops called "Estcourt's Hop Supplement," employed his son C., as his agent, who thereupon undertook not to disclose the secret of the compound, or at any time be connected with the sale of any article which could be used as a substitute for hops. During the time of his agency C. discovered the secret of the manufacture. He shortly afterwards terminated his agency, and began to sell a practically similar compound, which he called "Hop Essence." A bill was filed against him by the plaintiff to restrain him from continuing the sale, when he submitted and signed an agreement binding himself to observe the former agreement and do the plaintiff no injury in his trade. Subsequently, C. associated himself with Taylor, and circulars were issued advertising the sale of "Estcourt's Hop Essence, sole proprietor James Taylor." A company was formed for the purpose of selling the "Hop Essence" under the name of "Estcourt's Hop Essence." Although the plaintiff ascertained in January 1874 that a circular had been issued by Taylor, headed "Estcourt's Hop Essence Company," he did not apply to the Court until the following August:—Held, that the plaintiff was precluded by delay from any right to relief. Estcourt v. Estcourt Hop Essence Co., 32 L. T., N. S., 80; 23 W. R. 313; 44 L. J., Ch., 223; 10 L. R., Ch., 276. Reversing 31 L. T., N. S., 567.

4. In a suit to restrain the user of names in trade in a fraudulent manner, the right to an interlocutory injunction is lost by a delay in filing the bill of nine or ten months since the discovery of the user. Isaacson v. Thompson, 41 L. J., Ch., 101.

5. In order to prove acquiescence by a firm in the piratical use of their trade mark, knowledge of such use must be proved; and that is not accomplished by the proof of publication of advertisements, which would have been an invasion of the rights of the firm if these advertisements have been issued not steadily or uniformly, but interchangeably with other advertisements in some respects similar, but not infringing the rights of the firm. Kinahan v. Bolton, 15 Ir. Ch. R. 75.

6. The plaintiffs were in August 1869, and had for some time previously been carrying on business under the style of The Guinea Coal Company, their offices being at No. 22, Pall Mall. In the early part of 1869, the defendant, who had formerly managed their business, established a business on his own account under the style of the Pall Mall Guinea Coal Company; his offices being first at Beaufort Buildings, whence, in August 1869, he removed to No. 46, Pall Mall. The defendant solicited orders principally by circular, sending circulars to many of plaintiffs' customers, and succeeded in obtaining orders, which the customers afterwards said they had intended for the plaintiffs:—Held, that they were entitled to restrain him from using the name "The Pall Mall Guinea Coal Company" in Pall Mall. Lee v. Haley, 39 L. J., Ch., 284; 5 L. R., Ch., 155; 18 W. R. 242; 22 L. T., N. S., 251.

The bill was filed on the 24th November 1869:—Held, that there was no laches, inasmuch as the plaintiffs must wait until sufficient proof of the injury they had received was collected. Id.

7. The life of a trade mark depends upon the promptitude with which it is vindicated. Johnston v. Orr Ewing, 7 L. R., App. Cas., 219; 51 L. J., Ch., 797; 46 L. T. 216; 30 W. R. 417.

4. Misrepresentation by Plaintiff. Effect of.

8. Where the plaintiff had used a considerable degree of misrepresentation in statements made to the public respecting the mode of procuring and making up a new description of tea, called "Howqua's mixture," an injunction to restrain the defendant from selling tea under the name employed by the plaintiff, and in a particular kind of package, which the plaintiff had introduced, was refused, until the plaintiff had established his title in a court of common law. Pidding v. Hom, 8 Sim. 477; 6 L. J., N. S., Ch., 345.

9. The test whether a fancy name adopted by a manufacturer as a trade mark for certain goods has become publici juris is the question whether the use of it by other persons in connection with the same goods is calculated to deceive the public, so as to induce them to believe that in purchasing the goods so named they are purchasing goods of the original manufacturer. Consequently, a trade mark may have become publici juris among a certain class, as between the wholesale and retail dealers who will not be deceived by it, and yet may not have become publici juris as between the retail dealers and their ordinary customers. The misrepresentation, such, for example, as falsely calling himself a patentee, which will disentitle a person to relief in equity in respect of an infringement of his trade mark, must be such a misrepresentation as would prevent him from recovering nominal damages in an action brought to establish his right to the trade mark. Ford v. Foster, 7 L. R., Ch., 611; 41 L. J., Ch., 682; 27 L. T., N. S., 219; 20 W. R. 311, 818.

Since a misrepresentation, not forming a part of the trade mark itself, although used in connection with the trade mark, and with the article to which the trade mark applies, would be no answer to an action of a party to establish his title at law, neither will such a misrepresentation disentitle him to relief in equity. Ib.

1. If a plaintiff, coming for an injunction in a trade mark case, appears to have been guilty of misrepresentations to the public, a court of equity will not interfere in the first instance. Perry v. Truefitt, 6 Beav. 66.

2. The use of the word "patent," as part of the description in a label or trade mark of goods not protected by a patent, is not such a misrepresentation as to deprive the owner of his right to be protected against an infringement of his label where the goods have, from the usage of many years, acquired the designation, in the trade generally, of patent. Marshall v. Ross, 8 L. R., Eq., 651; 17 W. R. 1066; 21 L. T., N. S., 260; 39 L. J., Ch., 225.

3. Where the owner of a trade mark applies for an injunction to restrain the defendant from injuring his property by making false representations to the public, it is essential that the plaintiff should not in his trade mark or in the business connected with it be himself guilty of any false or misleading representation. Leather Cloth Co. v. American Leather Cloth Co., 4 De G. J. & S. 137; 9 L. T., N. S., 558; 10 Jur., N. S., 81; 33 L. J., Ch., 199; 12 W. R. 289; 2 N. R. 481; 3 N. R. 264. Affirmed 11 H. L. Ca. 523; 11 Jur., N. S., 513; 35 L. J., Ch., 53; 13 W. R. 873; 12 L. T., N. S., 742; 6 N. R. 209.

It is not a rule, either of morality or equity, that a person is not answerable for a falsehood in his trade mark, because it may be so gross and palpable as that no one is likely to be deceived by it. Ib.

4. The inventor of a sauce gave it the name of the Licensed Victuallers' Relish, and designed a trade mark for labels on the bottles containing it, and employed his son to sell it. He permitted his son to describe himself in his circulars and invoices as the sole proprietor of the sauce. The son became bankrupt, and his trustee sold his interest in the sauce and its trade mark to the plaintiff, who sought to restrain the inventor from infringing the trade mark. The plaintiff did not know the defendant's recipe, but made a sauce which the witnesses deposed to be undistinguishable from the defendant's:—Held, that a trade mark could not exist in gross, and that as the plaintiff did not know the recipe for the original article, he could not have a right to affix the trade mark to a sham article for the purpose of imposing on the public. Cotton v. Gillard, 44 L. J., Ch., 90.

5. Parties.

5. A plaintiff and another person, who carried on distinct trades at different places of business, had derived, from a common predecessor in their respective businesses, the right to use the name of Dent as a trade mark. The defendant having infringed this right:—Held, that the plaintiff, without averring special damage, might sue alone for an injunction, and for the delivery up of the articles so marked to have the name erased. Dent v. Turpin, Tucker v. Turpin, 2 John. & H. 139; 7 Jur., N. S., 673; 30 L. J., Ch., 495.

Held, also, that he might sue alone for an account of profits made by the defendant out of articles so marked, and for payment to the plaintiff of such part of such profits as he should be entitled to. Ib.

6. Two persons, sons of their father, who had originated a manufacture of tobacco pipes, and designated them as "Southorn's Brosely pipes," on the death of their father, manufactured at Brosely, but at separate establishments, and for their separate benefit, pipes of a like character; one of the brothers instituted a suit to restrain the use of this trade mark, the other declining to join in such suit: Held, that the one brother might alone file a bill for an injunction and account. Southorn v. Reynolds, 12 L. T., N. S., 575.

6. Discovery.

7. An action will lie against shipowners who have shipped goods bearing counterfeits of the plaintiff's trade marks for discovery of the names of the consignor from whom the goods were received. Orr v. Diaper, 4 L. R., Ch. D., 92.

8. Where a decree has been made directing the defendant to account for all goods sold by him with a stamp thereon, he is compellable to disclose the names of all persons to whom he has sold any such goods; and if he be unable to give such information precisely, he may then (but not otherwise) be required to disclose the names of all persons to whom he has sold any goods which he will not swear positively were unstamped. Leather Cloth Co. v. Hirschfeld, 1 Hem. & M. 295; 11 W. R. 933; 1 N. R. 551.

9. In a suit to restrain the infringement of trade marks, the defendants refused to disclose the names of their customers, the places to which they had consigned their goods, and the prices which had been paid for them. They also, while producing their books, which confessedly showed orders for goods bearing some of the trade marks claimed by the plaintiffs, sealed up such portions of entries therein as they swore contained orders for the impression of devices other than those claimed by the plaintiffs:—Held, that the defendants need not disclose the names of their customers or the prices of the goods, as such disclosure could not be material to the plaintiffs and might injure the defendants in their business, but that they must make the rest of the disclosure which they objected to, and that where one of a line of trade marks had been disclosed in the order-book, the whole line must be disclosed. Carter v. Pinto Leite, 41 L. J., Ch., 92; 7 L. R., Ch., 90; 25 L. T. 722; 20 W. R. 134.

7. Account of Profits.

10. A defendant is liable, in equity, to account for the profits made by the user of a plaintiff's trade mark, though, at the time of the user, he may have been ignorant of the rights and of the existence of the plaintiff, and, notwithstanding that, to entitle him to recover damages at law, it may be necessary to prove a scienter. Cartier v. Carlile, 31 Beav. 292.

1. If A. has acquired property in a trade mark, which is afterwards adopted and used by B., in ignorance of A.'s right, A. is entitled to an injunction, but not to an account of profits or to compensation, except in respect of any user by B. after he became aware of the prior ownership. Edelston v. Edelston, 9 Jur., N. S., 479; 11 W. R. 328; 7 L. T., N. S., 768; 1 De G. J. & S. 185.

Where a defendant is ordered to account for the profits made by him through a wrongful use of the plaintiff's trade mark, he cannot be charged with bad debts as profits; but on the other hand he cannot charge the plaintiff with the costs of manufacturing the goods in respect of which the bad debts were incurred. S. C. 10 L. T., N. S., 780; 12 W. R. 1026.

2. The plaintiffs had obtained a decree restraining the defendants from the use of a trade mark in sales of cloth, and directing an inquiry whether the plaintiffs had sustained any and what damage. The plaintiffs did not prove any direct damage, but, in the absence of evidence to what extent the defendants had used the trade marks, they claimed damages equal to the profits made by the defendants on all their sales of cloth:—Held, that they had failed to prove any damage. Leather Cloth Co. v. Hirschfeld, 14 W. R. 78; 13 L. T., N. S., 427. And see 11 W. R. 933; 1 Hem. & M. 295; 1 N. R. 551.

3. A person innocently selling goods bearing the spurious trade mark of another person is not, in equity, liable to account for the profits made thereby, but the owner of the trade mark is entitled to an injunction. Moet v. Couston, 33 Beav. 578; 10 Jur., N. S., 1012; 10 L. T., N. S., 395; 4 N. R. 86.

4. Injunction granted to restrain the use of the plaintiffs' trade mark by the defendant, though the scienter was not proved, but an account of profits refused on the ground of delay by the plaintiffs in commencing the suit. Harrison v. Taylor, 11 Jur., N. S., 408; 12 L. T., N. S., 339.

5. Ford, a shirt manufacturer, gave the name Eureka to a particular shape of shirt invented by him, and stamped all such shirts with the words "Ford's Eureka Shirts," and with a statement that such words were his trade mark. He advertised the shirts, falsely calling himself the patentee of them, and he falsely described himself on his bill heads, etc., as patentee of the shirts. Shirts of the particular shape came to be commonly known in the trade as Eureka. Certain wholesale shirt manufacturers made shirts of the same shape, and stamped them in the same part of the shirts as "Eureka Shirts":—Held, that Ford was entitled to an injunction to restrain the wholesale manufacturers from using the word "Eureka" as applied to shirts not of Ford's manufacture, except that they were to be at liberty to advertise their shirts as "Eureka" in their trade lists. But having regard to his misrepresentations, the account against them was confined to the time from the filing the bill. Ford v. Foster, 7 L. R., Ch., 611; 41 L. J., Ch., 682; 27 L. T. 219; 20 W. R. 311, 818.

8. Costs.

6. An offer by defendants after bill filed to discontinue the use of a trade mark, unless it be also accompanied by an offer to pay the costs and expenses up to that time, or to let the case be argued only upon the question of costs, will not relieve the defendants from the payment of the costs of the suit. M'Andrew v. Bassett, 10 Jur., N. S., 492; 10 L. T., N. S., 65.

7. An owner of a trade mark, having asked for an injunction, together with an account of profits, to which he was not entitled, was not allowed any costs of suit. Moet v. Couston, 10 Jur., N. S., 1012; 10 L. T., N. S., 395; 33 Beav. 578.

8. Where an order had been made for an interim injunction to restrain an alleged infringement of a trade mark, and the defendant, wishing to avoid further litigation, agreed to pay all costs, and to give an undertaking not to use the trade mark complained of:—Held, that the plaintiff, persisting in carrying on the suit to a hearing, was not entitled to his costs. Hudson v. Bennett, 12 Jur., N. S., 519; 14 W. R. 911; 14 L. T., N. S., 698.

9. An infant who had sold spurious articles, representing them to have been manufactured by the plaintiff, ordered to pay the costs of suit for an injunction. Chubb v. Griffiths, 35 Beav. 127.

10. A person having in his hands or under his control goods bearing a forged trade mark, is bound, upon the fact being brought to his knowledge, at once to submit to do whatever he might be compelled to do upon a bill filed; otherwise, however innocently the goods may have come to him, he will be liable for the costs of a suit instituted by the person whose right is infringed for the purpose of obtaining relief. Upmann v. Elkan, 12 L. R., Eq., 140; 19 W. R. 867; 24 L. T., N. S., 896; 40 L. J., Ch., 475.

The plaintiffs, in a suit to restrain infringement of their trade mark, are entitled to have a spurious imitation of their mark removed from goods, and to a lien on the goods for costs, provided that the owners of the goods, who were not before the Court, should not see fit to intervene. Id.

But on appeal, held that he was not bound to pay costs, being entirely innocent of the fraud. S. C. 20 W. R. 131.

11. The defendant, who was a china manufacturer, purchased abroad for his own private use a large number of cigars which were consigned to him at the docks here in cases bearing a spurious brand, purporting to be that of the plaintiffs, who were cigar manufacturers. The defendant was not aware that the brand was spurious, nor, except from seeing it on the invoice, that any such brand was in use. Immediately upon the plaintiffs issuing their writ and serving the defendant with notice of motion for an injunction to restrain him from selling the cigars, the defendant stated that he had no intention of selling the cigars, and offered all the relief asked for by the writ, and afterwards at the motion agreed to an undertaking in the terms of the writ, the question of costs being reserved:—Held, that the defendant must pay all the costs of the action. Upmann v. Forester, 24 L. R., Ch. D., 231; 52 L. J., Ch., 946; 49 L. T. 122; 32 W. R. 28.

1. If a trader imitates another person's label or trade mark, and sails so near the wind as just to avoid an injunction, though the Court does not grant the injunction, it will not willingly give him any costs of the proceedings. Bass v. Dawber, 19 L. T., N. S., 626.

2. The Court will give no costs on either side in a case where both plaintiff and defendant are engaged in the manufacture of an article intended to be used to deceive and mislead the public. Estcourt v. Estcourt Hop Essence Co., 32 L. T., N. S., 80; 23 W. R. 313; 44 L. J., Ch., 223; 10 L. R., Ch., 276.

3. A defendant whom the Court held, on the chief point in issue, in a suit for infringement of a trade mark, to have been guilty of a fraudulent misrepresentation, was, though successful on another point, ordered to pay the whole costs. Wheeler & Wilson Manufacturing Co. v. Shakespear, 39 L. J., Ch., 36.

4. The defendant, in a trade mark suit, insisting on an adverse right, after being made aware that the plaintiff had been defrauded through his agency, ordered to pay the costs of all the proceedings, both at law and in equity. Farina v. Silverlock, 4 Kay & J. 650. And see Tonge v. Ward, 21 L. T., N. S., 480.

5. The defendant innocently used the plaintiff's trade marks, and on being served with the bill, he removed the labels, and gave an undertaking not to sell any more, but refused to pay the costs. No application was made to the defendant before suit, and he said he would have desisted if applied to. At the hearing, the account of profits, which were very trifling, was waived, but a perpetual injunction was granted:—Held, that the defendant must pay the whole costs of suit. Burgess v. Hill, 26 Beav. 244; 5 Jur., N. S., 283; 28 L. J., Ch., 356. S. P. Burgess v. Hateley, 26 Beav. 249.

6. An injunction was obtained to restrain wharfingers from parting with goods, on the ground that they had been imported with counterfeit trade marks. U., who was not a party to the suit, had bonâ fide advanced money before bill filed, on the security of the dock warrants. Upon motion by him pro interesse suo:—Held, that he had a priority, in respect of his advance, over the plaintiff's costs of the suit for the injunction, he undertaking to destroy the counterfeit marks, and paying the costs of the motion. Ponsardin v. Peto, Exp. Uzielli, 10 Jur., N. S., 6; 33 L. J., Ch., 371; 12 W. R. 198; 3 N. R. 237; 33 Beav. 642; 9 L. T., N. S., 567.

7. A wine merchant brought an action against another wine merchant to restrain him from pirating his trade mark by branding it on the corks of his bottles. Some of the wine in bottles with the pirated trade mark was in the warehouse of certain wharfingers who were made defendants to the action. In their defence they disclaimed all interest in the matter in dispute, and submitted to act as the Court might direct upon having their charges and costs paid. At the trial they contended at the bar that the plaintiff, if his right was established, ought not to touch the bottles for the purpose of removing the branded corks without first paying their charges:—Held, that the wharfingers had done nothing to disentitle them to their costs of the action; and that if the plaintiff had any lien on the wine for his costs it must be postponed to the wharfingers' lien for their charges. Moet v. Pickering, 8 L. R., Ch. D., 372; 47 L. J., Ch., 527; 26 W. R. 637; 38 L. T., N. S., 799. Reversing 6 L. R., Ch. D., 770.

I. WHAT MAY BE REGISTERED.

- 1. What Marks or Words, 6789.
- 2. Old Marks, 6790.
- 3. Similar or Identical Marks, 6790.

1. What Marks or Words.

8. A single letter cannot be registered as a trade mark under the Trade Marks Registration Act 1875. Re Mitchell, 7 L. R., Ch. D., 36; 26 W. R. 326; 46 L. J., Ch., 876.

9. A word or distinctive combination of letters is not "a distinctive device, mark, or heading" within the meaning of the Trade Marks Registration Act 1875 (38 & 39 Vict., c. 91) s. 10, and cannot be registered as a trade mark under the Act. Exp. Stephens, 3 L. R., Ch. D., 659; 24 W. R. 963; 46 L. J., Ch., 46.

10. A person who had been using for upwards of a year a trade mark bearing the word "registered," it having been registered under the Copyright Act 1862 (25 & 26 Vict., c. 68), applied for its registration under the Trade Marks Registration Act 1875, but the registrar, acting on the instructions of the commissioners of patents, one of whom is the Lord Chancellor, who is empowered by the Act to make general rules as to registration, declined either to register the trade mark with the word "registered," or to allow the advertisements required by the Act before registration to be issued bearing the word "registered" as part of the trade mark. An application under s. 5, for an order directing the registrar to take the necessary steps for the registration of the trade mark in its entirety, was refused. Re Meikle, 46 L. J., Ch., 17.

11. A firm of watchmakers who for many years had been in the habit of using the name "Tod" in Arabic characters as a trade mark for watches sent to a particular firm in the East, applied to have it registered as a trade mark. The registrar, by the direction of the commissioners of patents, refused to register it:—Held, that the mark ought to be registered. Re Rotherham's Trade Mark, 14 L. R., Ch. D., 585; 49 L. J., Ch., 511; 43 L. T. 1. Affirming 11 L. R., Ch. D., 260; 27 W. R. 503; 40 L. T. 387.

A regulation issued by the commissioners of patents forbidding the registration as a trade mark of any word in foreign characters:—Held, to be ultra vires and void. S. C. 11 L. R., Ch. D., 250; 27 W. R. 503; 40 L. T. 387.

1. Where M. applied to register as a trade mark his signature in combination with the descriptive words "Filtre Rapide," he was allowed to register his signature with the above words added, under s. 10 of the Trade Marks Act 1875, but was compelled to pay the costs of the registrar, who was the only other person appearing on the motion. Re Maignen's Application, 28 W. R. 759.

2. Where a manufacturer places on his goods a series of combinations of letters as trade marks, each of which serves to indicate to purchasers (1) that the goods are made by the person using the mark, and (2) the quality of the goods as compared with the goods respectively bearing the other marks in the series, the marks being exclusively used by the manufacturer are valid trade marks and may be registered, notwithstanding that they are indicative of the quality of the goods to which they are applied. Ransome v. Graham, 51 L. J., Ch., 897; 47 L. T. 218.

3. When a mere word, not used as a trade mark before the Trade Marks Registration Act 1875, is put on the register, any dealer who has used the word in his trade in connection with or as descriptive of an article in which he deals is a person aggrieved by the registration within the meaning of sect. 5. Re Trade Marks Registration Act 1875; Rose v. Evans, 48 L. J., Ch., 618.

Semble, user before the Act, of a word as part of a trade mark, is not sufficient to render the word registrable as a mark. Ib.

4. Semble, that the name by which a patented article is generally known, and which is therefore descriptive of it, becomes publici juris at the expiration of the patent, and cannot properly be registered as a trade mark. Re Ralph's Trade Mark, 25 L. R., Ch. D., 194; 53 L. J., Ch., 188; 49 L. T. 504; 32 W. R. 168.

5. In the registration of cotton marks colouring and surrounding lines, edges, and borders will be disregarded. Re Brook, 26 W. R. 791.

2. Old Marks.

6. Old marks, whether cutlery's marks or not, may be registered up to the number of three by different persons in respect of the same goods even if identical; but this does not apply to new marks, and if the same old mark has been used in respect of the same goods by more than three different persons, it is a common mark. Re Jelley, Son, & Jones's Application, 51 L. J., Ch., 639. n.; 46 L. T. 381. n.

A new mark may be registered in respect of some of the goods in a class though a similar old mark is already registered for other goods in the same class, if the goods are distinct. Ib.

A mark which has been used before the coming into operation of the Trade Marks Registration Act 1875 is an old mark only in respect of the goods on which it has been used. In connection with other goods it is to be treated as a new mark, and will not be granted registration if it clashes with another mark which is old in respect of those goods. Ib.

7. A single letter which has been used by a firm as a trade mark before the passing of the Trade Marks Registration Act 1875 is not a trade mark within the definition contained in sect. 10, and cannot be registered thereunder. Re Mitchell, 46 L. J., Ch., 876; 7 L. R., Ch. D., 36; 26 W. R. 326.

8. Whether the scientific name of a particular tree, linetta, is a distinctive word capable of registration as an old mark in respect of lime juice, a product of the tree, or preparations of lime juice, quære. Re Trade Marks Registration Act 1875; Rose v. Evans, 48 L. J., Ch., 618.

9. A new mark may be registered for some of the goods in a class, even though an old mark of a similar kind has been already registered for other goods in the same class, provided that the goods and the trades of the proprietors are sufficiently distinct for no confusion to take place. Re Braby's Application, Re Shropshire Iron Company's Trade Marks, 21 L. R., Ch. D., 223; 51 L. J., Ch., 637; 46 L. T. 380; 30 W. R. 675.

10. P. in 1876 registered "braided fixed stars" as a trade mark for matches, alleging that he had used it as a trade mark before the passing of the Act. He also at the same time registered a label enveloping the boxes in which his matches were sold, which contained the words "braided fixed stars" in two places so as to be conspicuous on each side of the boxes, but also contained a number of other words. It was shown that at the time when P. introduced the term "braided fixed stars" the term "fixed stars" was known in the trade as denoting a particular class of fuseses, and that he had just bought a patent for enveloping the stems of fuseses with wire by means of a braiding machine. This patent expired in August 1881. It appeared from the evidence that P. had not before the Act used "braided fixed stars" separately as a trade mark, or otherwise than as a part of the above mentioned label. In October 1881 an application was made by a rival trader to expunge the registration:—Held, that the registration must be expunged, for that to entitle P. to register these words as a trade mark he must before the Act have used them as such alone, and not merely in conjunction with other words:—Held, further, that if they had been so used alone they ought not to have been registered, for that they were only words properly descriptive of the patented article, and that P. had no exclusive right to their use after the patent had expired. Re Palmer's Trade Mark, 24 L. R., Ch. D., 504; 50 L. T. 30; 32 W. R. 306.

3. Similar or Identical Marks.

11. F. had long used and was the registered proprietor of three trade marks for eau-de-Cologne, consisting of (1) a label with his signature and a seal in the corner, and used for pasting on the side of the bottle; (2) a circular stamp on a strip of paper, used for pasting on the cork and down the neck of the bottle; (3) a label containing a picture of F.'s business premises, "Gegenuber dem Julichs Platz," Cologne, with medals and letterpress, and used for pasting on boxes in which bottles were packed. B., also a manufacturer of eau-de-Cologne, applied for registration in his name of three marks similarly composed, and to be respectively used in the same manner. On motion by F., under s. 6 of Trade Marks Registration Act, for an injunction to restrain B. from proceeding with his application:—Held (1), that the marks were so nearly resembling F.'s marks as to be calculated to deceive, and that the fact that the picture of the house on B.'s label described as "Gegenuber dem Elogius Platz," Cologne, was said to be a correct view of the house in a street leading out of the Elogius Platz, did not prevent B.'s label being a colourable imitation of F.'s registered label, having regard to the similarity in the letterpress and the position of the medals; (2) that the allegation by B. that he had used his marks for several years without interference, did not, prima facie, entitle him to registration, since it was not proved that the original proprietor was aware of such user; and (3) that the injunction must go as to all three marks, notwithstanding that the German Court of Appeal, reversing the judgment of the Court of First Instance, had permitted registration of the label with the picture of B.'s business premises, the question being purely one of fact, as to which the foreign decisions were to be regarded merely as opposite verdicts by special juries. Re Farina, 27 W. R. 456.

1. A coat of arms in a medallion formed an important part of the trade mark of A. This medallion, with the same coat of arms, being proposed for registration by B. as his trade mark, A. sought to restrain the registration. The Court refused relief, on the ground that the simple medallion could not be mistaken for A.'s compound trade mark. Re Farina, 26 W. R. 261.

The question whether registration should be allowed or not ought to depend upon this: whether or not the party opposing registration would, independently of the Registration Acts, have been entitled to restrain the use by the applicant of the mark which he proposes to register. Ib.

2. The plaintiffs had, for fifteen years and upwards, manufactured and sold a medicine under the name of "Reinhardt's Celebrated Family Salve," and in the year 1876 they registered the words "Family Salve" as their trade mark in connection with such medicine, under the Trade Marks Registration Acts. The defendant in 1868 registered at Stationers' Hall a similar preparation under the title of "Spalding's Universal Family Salve," and he had since manufactured and sold the salve under that name. Both salves were sold in packets encased in wrappers bearing the above titles in full, but the wrappers were so folded that until the packets were opened the words "Family Salve" alone were visible. In an action by the plaintiffs for an injunction:—Held, that the words "Family Salve" were both a "distinctive heading," and also "special and distinctive words used before the passing of the Act," within s. 10 of the Trade Marks Registration Act 1875; that the plaintiffs having by the registration acquired a prima facie right to the exclusive use of the two words "Family Salve," the onus lay on the defendant to displace that right; and that the defendant having failed to discharge that onus, an injunction must be granted. Reinhardt v. Spalding, 49 L. J., Ch., 57; 28 W. R. 300.

Semble, when a trade mark is claimed consisting of a device associated with certain words, those words may be regarded in estimating the distinctiveness of the mark. Ib.

3. The applicants, who were iron manufacturers, had for a long period before the passing of the Trade Marks Registration Act 1875 been in the habit of using as trade marks the letters B B H, which were the initials of the firm, and also the same marks coupled with symbols or words common to the trade, denoting the quality of the iron:—Held, that every mark, or combination of marks or words used as a trade mark before the passing of the Trade Marks Registration Act 1875, which would have entitled the proprietor to maintain a suit for infringement against any person imitating it, may be registered as a trade mark under the Act, and a trader is entitled to register a series of such marks which only differ from each other by combining in different modes a mark common to all of them and peculiar to the trader, with words merely indicative of the quality of the goods marked or symbols common to the trade, a note being in such a case entered in the register specifying the portions of the combination as to which no exclusive right is claimed. Re Barrows, 36 L. T., N. S., 29; 125 W. R. 407; 46 L. J., Ch., 450.

Held, on appeal, that the proper mode of registration was to register the trade mark B B H to be used either alone or with any device or words signifying the quality of the iron. S. C. 5 L. R., Ch. D., 353; 25 W. R. 564; 36 L. T., N. S., 780; 46 L. J., Ch., 725.

4. There being registered under the Trade Marks Registration Act 1875 four trade marks, including an anchor, in respect of goods in Class 42 of the first schedule to the rules made under the Act, the Court refused to give leave to register a new trade mark including an anchor in respect of goods in the same class, but different in character from those goods for which the four trade marks had been registered. Re Hargreaves' Trade Mark, 11 L. R., Ch. D., 669; 27 W. R. 450.

5. W. & Co. proposed to register as a trade mark for ale a triangle with a double outline, inscribing within the double outline the words "Beccles Brewery. Established 1830," the inner triangle having within it a conspicuous figure of a church. B. & Co., whose trade mark for pale ale was a plain triangle, which in use was coloured red, applied to prevent the registration of the proposed trade mark as being so similar to theirs as to be calculated to deceive:—Held, that as W. & Co. would be at liberty to print their trade mark in whatever colour they pleased, and if printed on a red ground it would be so similar to that of B. & Co. that a purchaser might be misled, the registration ought not to be allowed. Re Worthington's Trade Mark, 14 L. R., Ch. D., 8; 49 L. J., Ch., 646; 42 L. T. 563; 28 W. R. 747.

6. R. applied for registration of a cotton trade mark, which was coloured, being a gold mohur. It had been placed in the first class by the committee of experts, and had been duly deposited for exhibition, and advertised in the official paper under the Trade Marks Registration Act and rules, and the additional rules with respect to cotton goods. D. was the proprietor of a cotton trade mark, which was a silver rupee, and he opposed the registration of R.'s mark:—Held, that R.'s mark was not calculated to deceive, for in such cases the mark which is protected is the registered mark, which has been deposited, and of which the representation can be seen at the places mentioned in the advertisement. Re Robinson's Trade Mark, 29 W. R. 81.

1. The rule of the Court is to permit registration, under s. 6 of the Trade Marks Registration Act 1875, of identical trade marks up to three, though, if more than three applications are made for the registration of similar trade marks, even though such trade marks are old, registration will be refused on the ground that such trade mark is common property. Benbow v. Low, 29 W. R. 837; 44 L. T. 876.

2. The Court will under r. 19 direct a trade mark to be registered, if satisfied of its dissimilarity to marks actually registered, without inquiring whether it be distinguishable from other marks the subject of pending applications to register. Re Dugdale's Trade Mark, 49 L. J., Ch., 303; 28 W. R. 436.

3. The proper mode of determining questions as to the similarity of trade marks is to compare them as actually used, e.g., impressed on metal goods. Re Jelley, Son, & Jones's Application, 5 L. J., Ch., 639. n.; 46 L. T., N. S., 381. n.

II. CONDITIONAL.

4. W. applied for the registration of an old trade mark for goods comprised in classes 11, 12, and 13, having used the mark in connection with the goods comprised in those classes in a particular manner. His application was opposed by a firm who had for many years used, and had obtained registration of, a similar mark, which they used in a different manner from that in which W. used his mark, but upon the same classes of goods:—Held, that registration should be granted to W. on his undertaking (to be noted on the register) not to use his mark in the manner in which the opposing firm used their mark, nor otherwise than in the manner in which he had previously used it. Re Whiteley's Trade Mark, 43 L. T. 627. n.; 29 W. R. 235. n.

5. Sykes & Company of Edgeley, a firm of calico bleachers, having applied for registration as cotton marks of two marks long used by them, the committee of experts placed the marks in the second class, as not being trade marks within the meaning of the Act. The marks consisted of (1) a shield in outline, containing the figure of a swan and the letters "S. & Co., E.;" it also contained three other letters, subject to variation, being indicative of the date of packing, and the hand employed to pack each particular parcel of calico; (2) a shield in outline, with the letters "R. S. E.," indicative of the former title of the firm, and varying letters as in the other mark. Bleachers' marks are used in a particular mode, being stamped within the fold of the calico before the parcel is stitched up. The committee considered the marks were not trade marks within the Act, on the ground that the letters were not quality marks; swans are common marks in the trade, and borders must be disregarded. On application to the Court:—Held, that registration of both marks ought to be proceeded with, and that with the registration there should be entered upon the register a note of an undertaking by the applicants not to use the marks otherwise than in the limited mode in which they had formerly applied them. Re Whiteley's Trade Mark (29 W. R. 235. n.) followed. Re Sykes' Trade Marks, 43 L. T. 626; 29 W. R. 235.

III. RECTIFICATION OF REGISTER.

6. If a person registers a trade mark to which he was not entitled, although he does so with a bonâ fide belief that he is entitled to it, and after due advertisement in the Trade Marks Journal, and although no opposition is made to the registration, he may have to pay the costs of a motion to rectify the register by removing the mark. Re Hyde, 26 W. R. 625; 38 L. T., N. S., 777; 7 L. R., Ch. D., 724.

On an application under s. 5 of the Trade Marks Registration Act 1875 (38 & 39 Vict., c. 91), to remove from the register a trade mark of H. & Co., who had registered it as an old mark after advertisement in the Trade Marks Journal, claiming forty-one years' user, it appeared that for the greater part of that time the mark had been a common mark, and for about six years had been so to the knowledge of H. & Co., and that the applicants, who had long used the same trade mark, were not aware of the advertisement, and had not opposed the registration:—Held, that the trade mark must be ordered to be removed from the register; that there had been no laches on the part of the applicants, and that the respondent must pay the costs. Ib.

7. Certain trade marks belonging to a foreign firm trading with England had, owing to a mistake on the part of the managing members of the firm, been registered in the name of the senior member as sole proprietor. The senior member having died, and the whole goodwill of the business being the property of the firm:—Held, that the proper course to adopt was for the firm to take an assignment of the trade mark from the legal personal representative in England of the deceased. Re Furina's Trade Marks, 44 L. T. 99. n.; 29 W. R. 391.

8. A trade mark which was the property of a partnership firm was by mistake registered as the property of one of the partners trading under the style of the firm. Upon application to the Court by the firm it was ordered that the register be rectified by cancelling the name of the registered proprietor and registering the names of all the partners trading under the style of the firm. Re Rust's Trade Mark, 44 L. T., 98. n.; 29 W. R. 393. n.

9. The provisions of the Trade Marks Registration Act 1875, for the rectification of the register by the Court, apply only to cases of mistake or error in the original registration, and do not extend to cases where devolution of interest makes it desirable to alter the registration of the name of the proprietor of a trade mark. Re Ward, Sturt, and Sharp's Trade Mark, 50 L. J., Ch., 347; 44 L. T. 97; 29 W. R. 395.

1. M. obtained the registration in his own name of a trade mark belonging to L. without the knowledge or consent of L. Upon application for relief by L.:—Held, that the register could not be rectified by transferring the registration into the name of L. Exp. Lawrence, Re Marier's Trade Mark, 44 L. T. 98. n.; 29 W. R. 392. n.

2. P. registered "braided fixed stars" as a trade mark for matches. After the expiration of five years another manufacturer applied to cancel the registration, on the ground that the words could not be registered as a trade mark, for that "fixed stars" was a name well known in the trade for a particular description of matches before P. used the alleged trade mark, and that the words "braided fixed stars" were only a proper description of a kind of matches made by P. under a patent which had recently expired, and which matches were at the time of the registration well known in the trade by that name, and differed from the "fixed stars" formerly known by having a braided stem, which was the subject of the patent:—Held, that even if the 3rd section of the Trade Marks Registration Act 1875 did not make the lapse of five years conclusive evidence that the alleged trade mark was a proper trade mark, which, semble, it did, it at all events excluded evidence to show that words which prima facie appeared to be fancy words and proper to constitute a trade mark were not capable of constituting one. His lordship therefore declined to hear evidence on the subject, and refused the application. But held, on appeal, that a mark which is not authorized to be registered as a trade mark does not acquire the character of a trade mark by being on the register for five years, and may be removed from the register though that period has elapsed, and that evidence ought therefore to have been admitted which went to show that at the time of the registration the words "braided fixed stars" were merely descriptive of a kind of matches well known in the trade. Re Palmer's Application, 21 L. R., Ch. D., 47; 51 L. J., Ch., 673; 46 L. T. 787.

Whether a person sued for using a name which has been five years on the register as a trade mark can defend himself on the ground that it is not a trade mark, quære. Id.

Where Refusal to register]. 3. An application to the Court by a person aggrieved by the refusal of the registrar to enter his name upon the register as the proprietor of a trade mark under 38 & 39 Vict., c. 91, s. 5, r. 43, may be by way of motion that the register may be rectified by entering his name as such proprietor, two clear days' notice of motion being given to the registrar. Exp. Stephens, 24 W. R. 819.

4. By the Trade Marks Registration Act 1875 the registrar acts under the direction of the commissioners of patents. By their direction the registrar refused to allow an advertisement in which the word "registered" was part of the proposed trade mark to appear in the official journal. The trade mark had in fact been registered under 25 & 26 Vict., c. 68. On a summons by the applicant:—Held, that the Court could not order his name to be inserted on the register, there not having been the necessary advertisement; and that it could not interfere with the direction of the commissioners to the registrar. Re Meikle, 24 W. R. 1067.

IV. OPPOSITION TO.

5. Where an application is made for registration of a trade mark, and such application is opposed by the proprietors of a registered trade mark, and the case stands for the determination of the Court, under the Trade Marks Rules 1876, r. 16, the proper course is for the applicant to apply in chambers for directions as to the mode of trial, and not for the opponent to move to restrain the applicant from registering his mark. Re Simpson's Trade Mark, 15 L. R., Ch. D., 525; 42 L. T. 675; 28 W. R. 760.

6. The defendants in an action for infringement of trade mark having applied for the registration of the trade mark which they had been restrained by injunction from using, an order was made that the manner in which the matter should be brought before the Court should be by motion by the applicants to proceed with the registration, with liberty to either party to use the evidence in the action for infringement, and with further provisions as to evidence. Re Johnston's Trade Mark, 43 L. T. 672.

7. The plaintiffs had, for fifteen years and upwards, manufactured and sold a medicine under the name of "Reinhardt's Celebrated Family Salve," and in the year 1876 they registered the words "Family Salve" as their trade mark in connection with such medicine, under the Trade Marks Registration Acts. The defendant in 1868 registered at Stationers' Hall a similar preparation under the title of "Spalding's Universal Family Salve," and he had since manufactured and sold the salve under that name. Both salves were sold in packets encased in wrappers bearing the above titles in full, but the wrappers were so folded that until the packets were opened the words "Family Salve" alone were visible. In an action by the plaintiffs for an injunction:—Held, that the words "Family Salve" were both a "distinctive heading," and also "special and distinctive words used before the passing of the Act," within section 10 of the Trade Marks Registration Act 1875; that the plaintiffs having by the registration acquired a prima facie right to the exclusive use of the two words "family salve," the onus lay on the defendant to displace that right; and that the defendant having failed to discharge that onus, an injunction must be granted. Reinhardt v. Spalding, 49 L. J., Ch., 57; 28 W. R. 300.

V. COMMITTEE OF EXPERTS.

8. The decisions of the Manchester committee of experts, although entitled to weight on consideration, are not final, and must, if necessary, be reviewed by the Court. Re Dugdale's Trade Marks, 49 L. J., Ch., 303; 28 W. R. 436.

9. It is not the function of the committee of experts to decide questions of title between rival applicants for registration of identical or substantially identical marks, but to consider whether a mark offered for registration contains the particulars necessary to constitute a registerable trade mark. Exp. Ede, 28 W. R. 436.

1. The committee of experts at Manchester, appointed under the Trade Marks Registration Acts, is not a judicial tribunal. It is appointed to consider and give an opinion on technical matters peculiarly within the knowledge of its members. Any person dissatisfied with the opinion of the committee may move the Chancery Division to consider it; and that Court is not bound to adopt the opinion as conclusive, even though the Court may have no reason to think that the committee has proceeded on a wrong principle, or has acted in an improper manner. Great weight is properly to be attributed to the opinion of the committee, but it proceeds ex parte, and the Court may direct a full consideration of the matter before the registrar himself. Observations on the manner in which the Court is to exercise this supervising authority. Orr-Ewing v. Registrar of Trade Marks, 4 L. R., App. Cas., 479; 48 L. J., Ch., 707; 41 L. T. 239; 28 W. R. 17. Reversing S. C. sub nom. Re Orr-Ewing's Trade Mark, 8 L. R., Ch. D., 794; 47 L. J., Ch., 807; 26 W. R. 777; 38 L. T., N. S., 695. Affirming 47 L. J., Ch., 180; 26 W. R. 259; 38 L. T., N. S., 313.

These principles apply when a label for cotton goods, which had been used as a trade mark before the passing of the Trade Marks Registration Act 1875, has been placed by the committee of experts in the second class, as not being a trade mark as defined by the Act. Id.

2. Messrs. B., being manufacturers of cotton sewing thread, applied for the registration of a considerable number of labels and devices used by them for various periods in their trade, and many of which were registered in foreign countries. The Manchester committee of experts divided the marks into two classes. The registrar refused registration to all the marks in the second class, while, of the marks in the first class, he admitted six to complete separate registration, but refused to register more than one of the remainder as representative of the marks in the first class not separately registered. He further offered a certificate of such representative registration. Upon motion for rectification of the register by registration of all the marks:—Held, that as to the marks placed in the second class, the case was governed by Re Orr-Ewing's Trade Mark (8 L. R., Ch. D., 794), and that the Court would not review the decision of the committee: and that, as to the marks in respect of which representative registration was offered, the case was governed by Re Barrows (25 W. R. 407, 564; 5 L. R., Ch. D., 353), and separate registration of each mark could not be granted. Re Brook, 26 W. R. 791.

In the registration of cotton marks, colouring and surrounding lines, edges, and borders, will be disregarded. Id.

VI. PROCEEDINGS BY PARTY AGGRIEVED.

3. When a mere word, not used as a trade mark before the Trade Marks Registration Act, is put on the register, any dealer who has used the word in his trade in connection with or as descriptive of an article in which he deals, is a person aggrieved by the registration within the meaning of s. 5. Re Trade Marks Registration Act 1875; Rose v. Erans, 48 L. J., Ch., 618.

4. The assignee of a patent for a washing machine applied to it the name of "The Home Washer," and registered that name as his trade mark in respect of it. He did not manufacture the machines, or any other goods in the same class, but granted an exclusive right to a manufacturing firm who paid him royalties. They invented and patented various improvements in the machine, and after the expiration of the patent (six years from the registration of the trade mark) they continued to manufacture the improved machines, and to describe them by the old name, but paid no royalties, and the registered proprietors had not, after a year and nine months from the expiration, begun to manufacture, though he had been in negotiation with manufacturers to do so in conjunction with him:—Held, that the former licencees (against whom the registered proprietor was moving for an injunction) were "persons aggrieved" within Rule 33, and that the mark must be removed from the register on the ground that, notwithstanding the negotiations, the registered proprietor was not "engaged in any business concerned in the goods within the same class as the goods in respect to which the mark was registered." Re Ralph's Trade Mark, 25 L. R., Ch. D., 194; 53 L. J., Ch., 188; 49 L. T. 504; 32 W. R. 168.

Semble, that a patentee is "engaged in any business, etc.," so long as he receives royalties under his patent, even though he does not himself manufacture. Id.

5. R. & Co. registered a trade mark for brandy in England. M. & Co., who carried on business at Madras, but neither carried it on nor intended to carry it on in England, applied to rectify the register by striking out the name of R. & Co. and substituting that of M. & Co. as owners of the trade mark, alleging that they, M. & Co., were the owners of the trade mark, and had constructed R. & Co. to register it in the name of M. & Co., instead of which R. & Co. had registered it in their own name:—Held, that assuming M. & Co. to have no right to register the trade mark in England, it did not follow as a necessary consequence that they could not be aggrieved by its being registered here in the name of another person, and that the case must be dealt with on the merits. Re Riviere's Trade Mark, 26 L. R., Ch. D., 48; 53 L. J., Ch., 578; 50 L. T. 763; 32 W. R. 390. Reversing 53 L. J., Ch., 455; 49 L. T. 506.

VII. COSTS.

6. Where an application to register a trade mark is unsuccessful, the applicant may be ordered to pay the costs of persons opposing the application from the time when, under the Trade Marks Registration Rules, r. 16, the matter is deemed to stand for the determination of the Court, i.e., since security for costs was given by the opponent under the Trade Marks Rules 1876, r. 16, but cannot be ordered to pay any costs incurred before that time. Re Brandreth, 47 L. J., Ch., 816; 9 L. R., Ch. D., 618; 27 W. R. 281.

1. The Court of Appeal has no jurisdiction to give costs against the registrar when the latter is unsuccessful. Re Rotherham's Trade Mark, 14 L. R., Ch. D., 585; 49 L. J., Ch., 511; 43 L. T. 1.

2. Where the registrar is served with notice of an application to the Court for leave to be given him to proceed with a registration, and he appears, but does not oppose the application, he must be paid his costs of appearance. Re Orr-Ewing's Trade Mark, 8 L. R., Ch. D., 794; 47 L. J., Ch., 807; 26 W. R. 777; 38 L. T., N. S., 695. Reversing 47 L. J., Ch., 180; 26 W. R. 269; 38 L. T., N. S., 313. See also Re Maignen's Application, 28 W. R. 759.

3. If a person registers a trade mark to which he was not entitled, although he does so with a bona fide belief that he is entitled to it, and after due advertisement in the Trade Marks Journal, and although no opposition is made to the registration, he may have to pay the costs of a motion to rectify the register by removing the mark. Re Hyde, 7 L. R., Ch. D., 724; 38 L. T. 777; 26 W. R. 625.

On an application under s. 5 of the Trade Marks Registration Act 1875 (38 & 39 Vict., c. 91), to remove from the register a trade mark of H. & Co., who had registered it as an old mark after advertisement in the Trade Marks Journal, claiming forty-one years' user, it appeared that for the greater part of that time the mark had been a common mark, and for about six years had been so to the knowledge of H. & Co., and that the applicants, who had long used the same trade mark, were not aware of the advertisement, and had not opposed the registration:—Held, that the trade mark must be ordered to be removed from the register; that there had been no laches on the part of the applicants, and that the respondents must pay the costs. Ib.

VIII. OTHER MATTERS.

4. The books of the registrar of trade marks which show marks the registration of which has been refused, are not evidence that these marks are publioi juris. Orr-Ewing v. Johnston, 13 L. R., Ch. D., 434, 442.

5. Where, under the provisions of the Trade Marks Registration Acts, the registrar cannot proceed with the registration of certain marks without the leave of the Court, and the original order of the Court is varied by the House of Lords, it is necessary that the order of the House of Lords should be made an order of the Chancery Division of the High Court. Re Orr-Ewing's Trade Marks, 28 W. R. 412.

6. A Dutch company moved to restrain a commission agent from infringing its trade mark, and from shipping goods abroad with its trade mark stamped on them. The writ in the action was issued after the time for registration of trade marks limited by the Trade Marks Registration Amendment Act 1876 had expired, and before the Trade Marks Registration Extension Act 1877 had come into force. The company had not before the motion for injunction registered its trade mark:—Held, that registration was not a condition precedent to the company's right to an injunction. Twentsche Stoom Bleekery Goor and John Harper v. Ellinger, 26 W. R. 70.

Applicant carrying on Business Abroad.]

7. Whether, in order to entitle a person to have a trade mark registered, he must be carrying on or intending to carry on business in England, quære. Re Rivière's Trade Mark, 26 L. R., Ch. D., 48; 53 L. J., Ch., 578; 50 L. T. 763; 32 W. R. 390. Reversing 53 L. J., Ch., 455; 49 L. T. 506.

Construction.] 8. Case in which the rule that 9 ft. 6 in. shall intervene between tramway-rail and nearest footpath was departed from by statutory authority. Edinburgh Street Tramways Co. v. Black, 2 L. R., App. Cas. (Sc.), 336.

Relying on certain preliminary agreements, the frontagers of a narrow thoroughfare abstained from opposing the Edinburgh Tramways Bill; but as it turned out that the Act, when passed, allowed the very thing which the frontagers had been most anxious to prevent, they asked and obtained from the Court of Session an interdict against its execution. But the House of Lords recalled the interdict, holding that the question was determined by the statute, which the tramways company was not only entitled to carry out, but bound to obey. Ib.

Held, also, that the same consequences would have arisen in the case of a provisional order from the Board of Trade, when confirmed by parliament. Ib.

When the Act directs compliance with deposited plans and sections, they are regarded as embodied in the statute. Ib.

Fares.] 9. By the Edinburgh Street Tramways Act 1871 (34 & 35 Vict., c. 89) the Edinburgh Street Tramways Company was authorized to construct a system of tramways as therein specified, and the Act fixed a maximum fare per mile, to be charged on such tramways. By the Edinburgh Street Tramways Act 1874, 37 & 38 Vict., c. 68, the company was authorized to abandon some of the lines specified in the former Act, and to substitute omnibuses, and the Act authorized a higher rate of fares "on those routes, and any tramway routes worked in connexion therewith." The omnibuses were worked in connexion with the tramways:—Held, that the second Act did not authorize the company to demand the higher fare from passengers travelling by the tramways only. Edinburgh Street Tramways Co. v. Torbain, 37 L. T., N. S., 288; 3 L. R., App. Cas. (Sc.), 88.

Costs of Provisional Order.] 1. The costs of applications to the Board of Trade for provisional orders under the Tramways Act 1870 are to be taxed on the chancery and not on the parliamentary scale. Re Morley, 20 L. R., Eq., 17.

- II. INJUNCTION AGAINST, 6797.

I. IN GENERAL.

2. In an ordinary estate of copyhold the property in the trees and minerals is in the lord, the possession in the copyholder. If a stranger or the lord cuts trees or takes minerals, the copyholder can maintain trespass. Eardley v. Granville, 3 L. R., Ch. D., 826; 45 L. J., Ch., 669; 34 L. T. 609; 24 W. R. 528.

3. A lessor who, in the absence of express power in the lease, enters upon the demised premises to repair them on breach of the lessee's covenant to repair, even though under a superior lease the lessor is liable to forfeiture for non-repair, and though he enters by leave of weekly sub-tenants, commits a trespass which will be restrained by injunction. Stocker v. Planet Building Society, 27 W. R. 877.

4. One tenant in common cannot maintain trespass or trover against his co-tenant for cutting and carrying away the grass off their land unless there has been an ouster, or unless it is shown that the grass has been destroyed. Jacobs v. Seward, 5 L. R., H. L., 464; 41 L. J., C. P., 221; 27 L. T. 185. Affirming 22 L. T. 690; 18 W. R. 953.

A. and B., being tenants in common of land, B. entered the land, cut the grass, put a lock upon the gate, and carried away the grass. There was no evidence that he kept the gate locked, but there was evidence that he opened the gate for A.'s son to take away the hay of a former year:—Held, that these facts did not amount to an ouster, so as to enable A. to maintain an action of trespass against B., nor to a destruction of the common property so as to entitle him to maintain an action of trover. Id.

Held, also, that the Court was right in refusing to allow an amendment of the declaration by converting the action into an action for an account under 4 Anne, c. 16, s. 27. Id.

5. The lessee of a theatre held it under a lease in which he covenanted not to convert it to any other use than for acting or performing operas or theatrical entertainments. He demised certain boxes and stalls to a sub-lessee, reserving power of access for the purpose of repairing; the sub-lessee covenanted only to use the same for the purpose of viewing and hearing the operas and other entertainments. The underleases contained covenants for quiet enjoyment. The lessee demised the theatre for a term of three months for the purpose of holding religious meetings. To enable these meetings to be held, the stalls were covered with a flooring, the division between the boxes removed, and other temporary structural alterations made:—Held, that a trespass had been committed by the lessee and persons claiming under him in thus entering upon the sub-lessee's boxes and stalls without his licence, and the conversion of the theatre for other than theatrical purposes was a derogation from the grant and a breach of the covenant for quiet enjoyment. Leader v. Moody, 20 L. R., Eq., 146; 44 L. J., Ch., 711; 32 L. T. 422; 23 W. R. 606.

6. Title to property created merely by the act of reducing a thing into possession necessarily implies a reduction into possession effected by an act which is not in any way of a wrongful nature. Such an act, therefore, effected by one who is at the moment a trespasser, cannot create a title to property. Blades v. Higgs, 11 H. L. Ca. 621.

7. The owner of two contiguous houses in the city of London conveyed one of them to B.

by a deed which correctly marked out on a plan the ground site of the house conveyed. Over this site there projected on the first floor a room of the owner's house, which was supported by the other house:—Held, that the right to the vertical column of air over the projection was determined by the ground site, and hence belonged not to the owner, but to B. Corbett v. Hill, 22 L. T., N. S., 263; 9 L. R. Eq., 671; 39 L. J., Ch., 547.

II. INJUNCTION AGAINST.

1. Injunction granted in cases of trespass. Field v. Beaumont, 1 Swan. 208.

Whether, after a verdict at law, in an action of trespass, the Court will grant an injunction against future trespasses, in favour of parties who refused at the trial to produce documents necessary to a fair decision, quære. Ib.

2. Injunction in trespass, where the title was disputed. Kinder v. Jones, 17 Ves. 110.

3. A. demised certain lands to B., and for some years allowed B. and his under-tenants to cut turf out of a bog adjoining the lands demised; some acres of the bog having been reclaimed, B. set them, alleging that they formed part of the lands demised by A. In 1836 A. by notice demanded possession of the land reclaimed, and withdrew the permission to cut turf from the bog. An ejectment being brought for the recovery of the reclaimed lands, and B. still continuing to cut turf as before, pending the ejectment, A. filed a bill for an injunction to restrain him. The injunction was refused, as the case was not one of a sudden and irreparable injury, and therefore the Court would not interfere in a case of trespass. Sandys v. Murray, 1 Ir. Eq. R. 29.

4. The Court will not grant an injunction to restrain a person from committing a trespass, where it is temporary only; otherwise, where it has continued so long as to become a nuisance. Coulson v. White, 3 Atk. 21.

5. On bill stating intent of defendant to encroach on plaintiff's land, etc., by building, defendant, by answer, claiming title to land himself, motion for injunction was refused, not being sufficient to try title on. Bateman v. Johnson, Fitzg. 106.

6. Though the Court will not restrain an action of trespass against a company by a party, through whose estate a canal is cutting, for deviating from the line, because he has laid by and rested upon his legal rights, yet, if he files a bill to restrain their deviating, and then moves to commit them, the Court will not do so without a trial by jury in a disputed case, and directing an issue at law. Agar v. Regent's Canal Co., Coop. 77.

7. On a bill to restrain the continuance of a trespass alleged to have been actually committed, the Court, in putting the plaintiff to his motion, will not require the defendant to admit any fact that enters into the question of trespass, at least unless such fact be clearly and unqualifiedly admitted in the answer. Beaufort (Duke) v. Morris, 2 Ph. 683; 12 Jur. 614.

8. Where a bill was filed praying for an injunction to restrain various acts of trespass committed against the plaintiff, and of annoyance to his tenants, by a pauper defendant, the Court, on demurrer, granted the injunction, as recovering damages at law against a pauper did not constitute an adequate remedy. Hodgson v. Duce, 2 Jur., N. S., 1014.

9. The Court has no jurisdiction to restrain a trespass which does not amount to waste. Turner v. Ringwood Highway Board, 18 W. R. 424.

10. Where after the expiration of a tenancy for years the holder of a bill of sale of the furniture of the late tenant put and continued a man in possession of the furniture upon the premises under a power in his security:—Held, that the landlord was entitled to treat the bill of sale holder as a mere trespasser; and in an action against him by the landlord to restrain him from selling the goods on the premises or continuing in possession, an interlocutory injunction was granted in those terms. Smith v. Brown, 48 L. J., Ch., 694.

11. When the plaintiff's title is not disputed the Court will grant an injunction to restrain acts of trespass without requiring him first to bring an action. Goodson v. Richardson, 43 L. J., Ch., 790; 9 L. R., Ch., 221; 22 W. R. 337; 30 L. T., N. S., 142.

12. Where the legislature has pointed out a special tribunal for determining a question, as a general rule no other Court ought to restrain the proceedings before it; but where the question has come before another Court in independent proceedings in which it is necessary to decide the whole matter between the parties, the Court may in such case restrain the proceedings elsewhere by injunction in order to save expense. Stannard v. St. Giles, Camberwell, 20 L. R., Ch. D., 190; 51 L. J., Ch., 629; 46 L. T. 243; 30 W. R. 693.

A dispute having arisen between the defendants, who were a local authority, and the plaintiff about a drain which the plaintiff had interfered with, the defendants gave notice to the plaintiff that they would enter on his land and reinstate the drain; but they afterwards abandoned their intention, and instead took proceedings against him before the magistrate. The plaintiff then brought an action against the defendants, claiming an injunction to restrain them from trespassing on his land, and from proceeding against him before the magistrate. In the statement of claim the plaintiff did not in terms allege that the defendants threatened and intended to trespass on the land:—Held, that as no intention to commit a trespass was proved or alleged, the plaintiff had not made out his case for an injunction against the trespass; and that being so, the Court had no jurisdiction to restrain the proceedings before the magistrate. Ib.

13. The guardians of the poor, wrongfully claiming a right of way to their relieving office over the plaintiffs' lands, invited paupers to come that way for relief; the trespass by the paupers causing serious injury to the plaintiffs, an injunction was granted to restrain the guardians, their servants, workmen, and agents, from trespassing. Ardley v. St. Pancras (Guardians), 39 L. J., Ch., 871.

In considering the injury, the possible as well as the actual use of the injured premises will be regarded. Id.

1. After a railway company had purchased a piece of land from A., who was mentioned in the book of reference to be the owner of it, B., a neighbouring landowner, part of whose land the company had also taken, claimed to be owner of the piece of land, and filed a bill for an injunction to restrain the company from continuing in possession of it, and from committing waste on it. But the affidavits as to title on both sides being inconclusive, the Court refused the injunction. Webster v. South Eastern Railway Co., 1 Sim., N. S., 272; 6 Rail. Ca. 698; 20 L. J., N. S., Ch., 124; 15 Jur. 73.

2. The Court will, by mandatory injunction, restrain a trespass the continuance of which will inflict irreparable damage upon persons in possession. Damage which it is impossible to measure will be deemed irreparable. London & North Western Railway Co. v. Lancashire & Yorkshire Railway Co., 36 L. J., Ch. 479; 4 L. R., Eq., 174; 17 L. T., N. S., 43; 15 W. R. 810.

A bill was filed to restrain a railway company from placing an obstruction, partly on a public footway and partly on land belonging to the plaintiffs, and a rival railway company, so as to block up the access to a station of the plaintiffs, and alleged that the injury to the traffic by allowing the obstruction to remain would be irreparable, and that the Act was done without any colour of title by the defendants:—Held, that this was one of the exceptional cases in which the Court would interfere to restrain a trespass by a stranger. Id.

TRIAL.

See PRACTICE (TRIAL ON HEARING).

TROVER.

3. A purchaser under the Court, not being able to obtain an account book delivered over to him, to which he was entitled under his contract, brought an action of trover against some parties to the cause. He was restrained by injunction. Stubbs v. Sargon, 4 Beav. 90.

4. Trover will not lie by one tenant in common against his co-tenant for cutting and carrying away the grass of their land unless there has been an ouster on the grass destroyed. Jacobs v. Seward, 5 L. R., H. L., 464; 41 L. J., C. P., 221; 27 L. T. 185. Affirming 22 L. T. 690; 18 W. R. 953.

5. The plaintiffs, who were linen manufacturers at Belfast, received an order for goods, signed "A. Blenkarn & Co.," 37, Wood Street, London, the word "Blenkarn" being so written as to resemble "Blenkiron." The goods were afterwards forwarded and addressed to "A. Blenkiron & Co.," 37, Wood Street, the plaintiffs being under the belief that they were in correspondence with the well-known firm of "Blenkiron & Sons," who carried on business at 123, Wood Street. The goods were ordered and received by Alfred Blenkarn, who had an office at 37, Wood Street, and the plaintiffs were induced by his fraud to send the goods to him. The plaintiffs on discovering the fraud prosecuted Blenkarn for obtaining goods by false pretences, and he was found guilty. Before his conviction he had sold part of the goods to the defendants, who had no knowledge of the fraud, and they had re-sold them to other persons:—Held, that there was no valid contract for the sale of the goods by the plaintiffs, and that they were entitled to recover them from the defendants in an action of trover. Oundy v. Lindsay, 26 W. R. 406; 47 L. J., Q. B., 481; 38 L. T., N. S., 573; 14 Cox C. C. 93; 3 L. R., App. Cas., 459. Affirming 25 W. R. 417; 2 L. R., Q. B. D., 96; 46 L. J., Q. B., 233; 13 Cox C. C. 583; 36 L. T., N. S., 345. Reversing 1 L. R., Q. B. D., 348; 45 L. J., Q. B., 381; 13 Cox C. C. 162; 34 L. T., N. S., 314; 24 W. R. 730.

6. In an ordinary estate of copyhold the property in the trees and minerals is in the lord, the possession in the copyholder. If a stranger or the copyholder cuts trees or takes minerals, the lord can bring trover. Eardley v. Granville, 3 L. R., Ch. D., 826; 45 L. J., Ch., 669; 34 L. T. 609; 24 W. R. 528.

7. G. purchased through his broker Russian and Hungarian scrip; the undertaking in the scrip was to give to the bearer a bond for the money advanced payable with interest in the way there stated. G. left the scrip (to be exchanged for bonds or sold, as he should direct) in the hands of his broker, who fraudulently deposited it with a banker as security for a loan to himself:—Held, that the scrip was a negotiable instrument, transferable by mere delivery; and that the banker, being a bond fide holder for value, was not liable to G., either in trover for the scrip itself, or in assumpsit for the value received upon it. Goodwin v. Roberts, 1 L. R., App. Cas., 476; 45 L. J., Exch., 748; 35 L. T. 179; 24 W. R. 987.

1. Infant Heir or Trustee, 6800.
2. Infant Mortgagee, 6801.

1. Infant Heir or Trustee.

- (a) Who is, 6800.
- (b) Property Abroad, 6801.
- (c) Order to Convey, 6801.
- (d) Conveyance. Form and Contents, 6801.
- (e) Costs, 6801.

(a) Who is.

1. The stat. 7 Ann., c. 19, enabling infant trustees to convey, extends only to plain and express trusts, not to such as are implied, or constructive only. Goodwyn v. Lister, 3 P. W. 387.

2. Infant devisee of land, charged with payment of money, is a trustee in equity, but not within the stat. 7 Ann., c. 19. Anon., 2 Eq. Abr. 521.

3. An infant, the surviving life in a bishop's lease, not beneficially interested, held to be an infant trustee within the statute of 7 Ann. Exp. Hodges, Dick. 737.

4. Where trust to be executed vests in infant, he is not trustee within 7 Ann., c. 19. But must be decreed to convey on suit for that purpose. Riggs v. Sykes, Dick. 400.

5. Infant trustee for sale is not within the stat. 7 Ann., c. 19, though the persons entitled to the produce of the sale are adult, and join in the petition, semble. Exp. Chastaney, Jac. 56.

6. Infant trustee within the stat. 7 Ann., c. 19, notwithstanding an interest as co-executor and co-residuary legatee, entitled to the mortgage money; the receipt and discharge of the other executor leaving the infant a mere trustee. — v. Handcock, 17 Ves. 383.

Infant trustee within the stat. 7 Ann., c. 19, must be a dry trustee. Id. 384.

7. An infant directed to convey charity estates to new trustees, under the Act of 7 Ann., c. 19, he having nothing to do but to make such conveyance; but where infant has any duty to perform as such trustee, beyond the mere conveyance, the case is not within the statute. Att.-Gen. v. Pomfret, 2 Cox 221.

8. Infant heir of messenger to whom in bankruptcy provisional assignment had been made, and who died before choice of assignees: — Held, to be a trustee within 7 Ann., c. 19. Exp. Carter, 5 Madd. 81.

9. A decree having been made for sale of an estate, and that a trustee should join in the conveyance; that trustee dying, his infant heir bound to execute a conveyance under the stat. 7 Ann, c. 19. Such a decree against the ancestor would obviate any doubt as to whether his infant heir were or were not a trustee within the Act. Hankins v. Obeen, 2 Ves. 559.

1. Tenant in tail, with remainder over, by bargain and sale conveyed to B. for the purpose of making him tenant to the præcipe in a recovery. By mistake recovery was suffered before bargain and sale was executed. Tenant in tail died:—Held, infant heir of B. was not a trustee with 7 Ann, c. 19. Exp. Boehm, 5 Madd. 124.

2. Court refused to direct an infant customary heir to surrender copyhold premises to a purchaser, which had been sold and conveyed to him by deceased ancestor of infant for valuable consideration, and for which ancestor had received purchase money in his lifetime, on a motion made to confirm report which found those facts, and that the infant was a trustee within 7 Ann on the ground that it was an ex parte proceeding; and non constat, that ancestor was competent to sell; and therefore Court would not declare infant a trustee within the statute. Re Janaway, 7 Price 679.

3. Infant heir of nominal vendee in trust, being reported to be within the statute, may be ordered to convey to the devisee of the real vendee, as being the cestui que trust. Exp. Vernon, 7 Price 685. n.

The Court will not, on motion or petition, order an infant trustee to convey, unless the trust appear in writing; but in such case will leave the cestui que trust to get a decree by bill. S. C. 2 P. W. 549.

(b) Property Abroad.

4. Infant trustee directed to convey under the stat. 7 Ann, c. 19, though the trust estate abroad. Exp. Prosser, 2 Bro. C. C. 325.

5. An infant trustee ordered to convey an estate in Calcutta under the stat 7 Ann, c. 19. Exp. Anderson, 5 Ves. 240.

(c) Order to Convey.

6. Infant trustee within 7 Ann, c. 19; purchaser to enjoy, and infant to convey at full age. Chandler v. Beard, Dick. 392. S. P. Exp. Benton, Dick. 394.

7. Bill to execute articles for the sale of lands against the devise for life and the infant heir of the vendor:—Decreed to be executed, and that plaintiff should be let into possession and hold against the infant, who should convey when of age, unless cause shown within six months after. Sikes v. Lister, 5 Vin. Abr. 541, pl. 28.

8. Infant trustee refusing, ordered to convey by a given day, and if he still refused, plaintiff to move that he stand committed, unless cause, etc. Re Beech, 4 Madd. 128.

9. Order upon petition, under the stat. 7 Ann, c. 19, for an infant trustee to convey to the persons absolutely entitled, or as they shall appoint, but not to convey to a new trustee, upon trusts to be executed without a bill. Exp. Anderson, 5 Ves. 240.

10. The vendor dying intestate, and leaving an infant heir, the purchase money being paid in a suit for a specific performance instituted after his death, will be retained till the heir attains twenty-one, and conveys. Bullock v. Bullock, 1 Jac. & Walk. 603.

(d) Conveyance. Form and Contents.

11. Assuree dies before assurance, heir unknown. Assurer, on bill of interpleader, ordered to assure to two six clerks, they to re-assure heir, when discovered. Anon., Cary 29.

12. The manner in which infant trustees are to convey the estates devolved on them, pursuant to the Act of Parliament. Anon., Pre. Ch. 284.

13. In a marriage settlement, husband made tenant for ninety-nine years if he so long lived, remainder to trustees during the life of the husband, etc., remainder to the first, etc., son by the marriage in tail male, remainder to the first, etc., son of any other wife, remainder over. A son is born, and of age, the wife dead, and there are no other sons by the second marriage; the trust for preserving contingent remainders descends to an infant; if for the benefit of the family, equity will decree the infant trustee to join in a recovery. Winnington v. Foley, 1 P. W. 536.

14. An infant trustee may levy a fine; but Lord Hardwicke doubted whether he could suffer a recovery without a privy seal. Exp. Bowers, 3 Atk. 164. And see Exp. Johnson, 3 Atk. 559. Exp. Smith, Ambl. 624.

15. Court will, if necessary, order an infant feme covert, being heir or trustee, to levy a fine. Anon., 2 Com. 615.

16. An infant mortgagee or trustee, who is a feme covert, may convey by fine under 7 Ann, c. 19. Exp. Mairs, 3 Atk. 479.

17. Conveyance by infant trustee voidable, as not within the statute; if he would be bound to convey when adult, he would in equity be restrained from setting it aside. — v. Handcock, 17 Ves. 383.

(e) Costs.

18. An infant trustee, ordered to convey under the statute of Ann, is entitled to his necessary costs. The Lord Chancellor said, that in taxing them, the Master would not allow anything that was not necessary; as, for instance, a brief to counsel to consent for an infant, to which no attention could be paid. Exp. Cant, 10 Ves. 554.

2. Infant Mortgagee.

19. The Lord Chancellor and the Master of the Rolls inclined to think the legal estate in mortgaged premises passed by a general residuary devise by the mortgagee to A., who was also executor, his heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns for ever, on the side of his mother. A. being nineteen, the Lord Chancellor would not order him to join in conveyance, under the stat. 7 Ann, c. 19, but ordered the money to be put into the bank, ex parte the infant, and said, when he should come of age, it would be very reasonable that he should join. Exp. Sergison, 4 Ves. 147.

1. An infant mortgagee is within the statute notwithstanding he may be beneficially interested in the mortgage money. Exp. Bellamy, 2 Cox 422.

2. A mortgagee in fee, devised to A., B., and C., and the "survivor, and the heirs of such survivor." The infant heir of the testator was directed to join in re-conveying to the mortgagor, as having the fee in him during the joint lives of the devisees. Re Harrison, 3 Anstr. 836.

3. Mortgagee within the statutes 7 Ann, c. 19, as to infants, and 4 Geo. 2, c. 10, as to lunatics, though entitled as co-executor and residuary legatee to the mortgage money, the discharge of the other executor leaving a naked trust. Exp. Tutin, 3 Ves. & B. 151.

4. Estate in Ireland ordered to be conveyed by an infant mortgagee, under the stat. 7 Ann. The order under the statute for the reference to the Master, as well as that for the infant to convey, must be on petition, not on motion. Evelyn v. Forster, 8 Ves. 96.

II. UNDER THE 4 GEO. 2, c. 10.

Lunatic Trustee.] 5. A trustee found a lunatic, by the Master's report, could not be ordered to convey under the stat. 4 Geo. 2, c. 10, unless a commission of lunacy has issued. Exp. Gillam, 2 Ves. J. 586.

6. Lunatic trustee within 4 Geo. 2, c. 10, must be without interest or duty; therefore, having an interest as creditor, trust being to sell for payment of debts, he is not within the Act. Exp. Tutin, 3 Ves. & B. 149.

7. The heir of one who had covenanted to surrender copyholds to the uses of a settlement on his daughter's marriage being a lunatic, a surrender cannot be made under the stat. 4 Geo. 2, c. 10. Exp. Currie, 1 Jac. & Walk. 642.

Lunatic Mortgages.] 8. One found non compos before the senate of Hamburg a mortgagee within stat. 4 Geo. 2, c. 10, and will be directed to convey. Exp. Otto Lewis, 1 Ves. 298.

—9. Mortgagee is within the statutes 7 Ann, c. 19, as to infants, and 4 Geo. 2, c. 10, as to lunatics, though entitled as co-executor and residuary legatee to the mortgage money, the discharge of the other executor leaving a naked trust. Exp. Tutin, 3 Ves. & B. 151.

Costs.] 10. The costs of a committee of a lunatic mortgagee requisite to enable him to re-convey to the mortgagor under the stat. 4 Geo. 2, c. 10, including the costs of the reference, are to be paid out of the lunatic's estate, whether the application be made by the mortgagor, or by the committee, which is the usual course. Exp. Richards, 1 Jac. & Walk. 264.

If the mortgagor be ready to pay the committee of a lunatic, mortgagee should apply for a reference under the statute, and it seems he would not be allowed to bring an action. Ib.

11. Costs of the committee of a lunatic trustee conveying within the statute must be paid out of the lunatic's estate. Exp. Brydges, Coop. 290.

12. The costs of the committee of a lunatic trustee, conveying under the statute, must be paid by the cestuis que trustent. The estates being vested in the lunatic upon trusts for securing an annuity, and subject thereto upon trust for the grantor of the annuity, were ordered to defray equally the committee's costs of an application by them for a re-conveyance of the estate. Exp. & Re Pearce, T. & R. 325.

III. TRANSFER OF STOCK UNDER THE 36 GEO. 3, c. 90, AND SUCCEEDING STATUTES

1. Under the 36 Geo. 3, c. 90, 6802.

2. Under the 6 Geo. 4, c. 74, 6803.

3. Under the 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 60, 6803.

1. Under the 36 Geo. 3, c. 90.

13. Stock ordered to be transferred, under the stat. 36 Geo. 3, c. 90, the trustee being of unsound mind, though no commission had issued, and having actually refused to transfer, the refusal proceeding from mere weakness of mind. Simms v. Naylor, 4 Ves. 360.

14. Trustees under a foreign will dead, and no personal representation taken out in this country, is a case for relief, by directing a transfer of stock, within the stat. 36 Geo. 3, c. 90. Lee v. England (Bank of), 8 Ves. 44.

15. A lunatic abroad, under a judicial proceeding in nature of a commission of lunacy, is not within the stat. 36 Geo. 3, c. 90, s. 3. Sylva v. Da Costa, 8 Ves. 316.

16. Order for a transfer of stock within the stat. 36 Geo. 3, c. 90, as upon a refusal by a party appearing by counsel, and admitting that she had disobeyed an order to transfer. Rider v. Kidder, 15 Ves. 123.

17. Under 36 Geo. 3, c. 90, on proof that one trustee had become bankrupt, and absconded, and was abroad, and not likely to return, order was made that remaining trustee should transfer stock into name of himself and another as co-trustees. Williams v. Bird, 1 Ves. & B. 3.

18. Where bill is filed under the 36 Geo. 3, c. 90, merely to obtain transfer of stock standing in name of trustee, who is out of jurisdiction of Court, order must be made at hearing of cause, and cannot be obtained on petition. Burr v. Mason, 2 Sim. & S. 11.

19. A trustee, who is in a state of mind which renders him incompetent to the management of business, may refuse to transfer within the meaning of the 36 Geo. 3, c. 90, s. 1. West v. Ayles, T. & R. 330.

20. Construction of the Act 36 Geo. 3, c. 90, s. 3, directing the transfer in certain cases of stock standing in the name of a lunatic or his committee, not to extend to stock standing in the name of another to which the lunatic is entitled as administrator. Exp. Adams, 2 Meriv. 112.

21. Trustee of fund absconding, dividends of fund ordered to be paid to the cestui quo vie. Wharton v. Massey, Dick 429.

2. Under the 6 Geo. 4, c. 74.

1. A. and B., the residuary legatees of a deceased person, obtained administration of and had part of the assets transferred to their names. The letters of administration were afterwards re-called, and administration granted to B., the sole next of kin of the deceased, who was declared to have died intestate. A. was abroad, and B. a prisoner for contempt, for not obeying an order of the Court to transfer to the credit of the cause certain stock, which they had admitted, by their answer, to belong to the deceased. A petition was presented, under the 6 Geo. 4, c. 74, to have the stock transferred; but the Court held, that the Act extended only to express trusts, and refused to make the order. Dem v. Clarke, 4 Russ. 511.

2. The executor of a surviving trustee appointed three executors, who in an adverse litigation procured probate of his will to be decreed to them, but afterwards refused to take out probate. They are legal personal representatives of the surviving trustee, within the meaning of 6 Geo. 4, c. 74, and an order will be made under that Act for the transfer of stock standing in the trustee's name. An affidavit that they refuse to take out probate of the testator's will is not sufficient to ground an order under the Act; it should state that they refuse to take the steps necessary for enabling them to transfer. Exp. Winter, 5 Russ. 284.

3. Under the 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 60.

3. Construction of 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 60, s. 10. Anon., 2 Jur. 886.

4. Construction of 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 60, ss. 10, 11. There must be a clear case of trust to justify the Court in transferring. Crouch v. Crouch, 2 Jur. 773.

5. The request in writing mentioned in the stat. 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 60, s. 10, as to the transfer of stock, means a private request by the party requiring the transfer, and service of an order of Court directing such transfer is not sufficient. Madge v. Riley, 3 Y. & Coll. 425.

6. Bengal government notes are land within the meaning of the Act 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 60. Re Dyce Sombre, 1 Macn. & G. 101; 13 Jur. 218.

7. A decree declared a defendant, against whom the bill had been taken pro confesso, to be a trustee of stock for the plaintiffs; but the Court declined to refer it to the Master to appoint a person to transfer the stock, in the place of the defendant, except upon a petition presented under 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 60. Fellows v. Till, 5 Sim. 319.

8. But where the widow and administratrix of an intestate, who had also left a child, of her own accord had transferred money in the funds into the names of herself and the infant child, it was ordered, under the 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 60, that the child should join in transferring the third to which the widow was entitled. Kidd v. Kidd, 1 Beav. 225. n.

9. A testatrix directed funds to be transferred in the bank books into the names of A. B. and wife, and their children, who were infants, for the benefit of A. B. and wife for life, with remainder to their children. This was done, and a suit being instituted for the performance of the trusts:—Held, that the Court had no jurisdiction, under 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 60, to order the infants to transfer the fund into court. Watts v. Scrivens, 1 Beav. 223.

10. The executor of a surviving trustee declined stating whether he would or would not prove the will, and neglected for thirty-one days after notice to transfer trust-stock standing in the name of the testator:—Held, that he was a trustee within the 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 60, and a transfer was ordered to new trustees. Cockell v. Pugh, 6 Beav. 293.

11. Petition, under the 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 60, s. 10, for the appointment of a person to transfer stock in the place of a trustee refusing. Re Crowther, 3 Jur. 21.

12. A. and B. claimed adversely a sum of stock standing in the names of A. and two other persons as trustees. A. filed an amicable bill to have the rights and interests of himself and B. declared; A. was beyond sea, commanding a merchant vessel on a voyage to India. B. presented a petition, under 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 60, praying that the stock might be transferred into court in the cause. Petition refused, the case not being within the Act. Hutchinson v. Stephens, 5 Sim. 498; 3 L. J., N. S., Ch., 239.

13. Testator gave an annuity to his widow, and the residue of his estate to his children. The executors paid the testator's debts and legacies, and purchased stock in their names to answer the annuity, and paid the dividends to the widow. One of the executors went to reside abroad, and the other died:—Held, that they were trustees of the stock, within 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4. Exp. Dover, 5 Sim. 500.

14. One of two executors appearing, from the proceedings in the cause, to be a trustee, within the meaning of the 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 60, of a fund standing in the testator's name, and it being proved by affidavit that he was living out of the jurisdiction, the Court, without a reference to the Master, made an order under this Act for the transfer of the fund by his co-executor. Parker v. Burney, 1 Beav. 492; 8 L. J., N. S., Ch., 107.

15. Stock was vested in trustees in trust to pay the dividends to persons successively entitled for life. One of the trustees had acted, by joining in a power of attorney to receive the dividends, but, a new power of attorney being necessary, he refused to join in giving it, or in receiving the dividends. There was a power to appoint new trustees vested in the acting trustee of the deed. A petition was presented by the person entitled to the first life interest to have a trustee appointed to receive and pay over the dividends:—Held, not a case within the 10th section of 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 60. Re Byrne, 1 J. & L. 535; 6 Ir. Eq. R. 563.

16. The survivor of four trustees of a sum of stock died intestate, and his sole next of kin refused to administer to him:—Held, that the case was not within the 10th section of 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 60, and therefore the Court could not appoint a person to transfer the stock. Re Lunn's Charity, 15 Sim. 464. S. C. on appeal, 11 Jur. 256.

1. Stock was invested in the names of two persons upon trust, as was alleged, for the petitioners. The only evidence of the trust was the statements in the petition and verifying affidavits of a letter written by the donor for the purposes of the application. One of the alleged trustees being resident in some place unknown, out of the jurisdiction, a petition was presented praying that the stock might be transferred to the petitioners; but the Court refused to make the order in his absence, though it was stated that he declined to act, and the other trustee submitted to act as the Court should direct. Re Dunbar, 2 J. & L. 120; 8 Ir. Eq. R. 71.

2. Upon an application, under the 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 60, for a transfer of stock standing in the name of a lunatic trustee, the Lord Chancellor will not adopt the facts as found in the proceedings in a suit in the Court of Exchequer, but will require them to be ascertained by the usual reference. Re Prideaux, 2 Myl. & C. 640; 7 L. J., N. S., Ch., 82.

3. Where stock is standing in the names of trustees, one of whom becomes a lunatic, and new trustees are appointed in his place, the Court will not order a transfer of the stock to be made to the cestui que trust, but it must be transferred to the old and new trustees. Re Smith, 17 L. J., N. S., Ch., 415.

IV. UNDER THE 6 GEO. 4, c. 74.

Infant Heir or Trustee.] 4. A copyholder covenants to surrender to trustees in trust to sell, and dies before surrender, leaving an infant heir; the covenantees agree to sell the estate, and afterwards file a bill for a specific performance:—Held, that the heir is not an infant trustee within 6 Geo. 4, c. 74, and therefore cannot be ordered to surrender immediately; and the bill was dismissed with costs. King v. Turner, 2 Sim. 549. But see 1 Myl. & K. 456; Coop. temp. Brough, 64.

5. A. contracted to sell a freehold estate to B., and by will gave the purchase money to trustees for certain purposes; and if the contract should not be completed, he devised the estate to the trustees for the same purpose. A. died, leaving a son, who died leaving an only daughter, an infant:—Held, that she was not a trustee within the stat. 6 Geo. 4, c. 74. Re Moody, Taml. 4.

6. Court has no jurisdiction in bankruptcy to declare an infant heir of assignee a trustee of bankrupt's estate; the petition must be entitled under 6 Geo. 4, c. 74. Exp. Kirk, Buck 478. S. P. Exp. Beddam, 1 Rose 310.

V. UNDER THE 11 GEO. 4 AND 1 WILL. 4, c. 60, AND AMENDING ACTS.

1. General Principles, 6804.
2. Infant Heir, Devisee, or Trustee. In General, 6804.
3. Mortgages, 6806.
4. Lunatic Mortgagee, Devisee, or Trustee, 6807.
5. Other Persons, 6808.
6. Order to Convey, 6808.
7. Execution of Conveyance, 6808.
8. Praetice, 6809.
9. Costs, 6809.

1. General Principles.

7. The 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 60, s. 8, applies to cases where conveyances are to be made, and not where sales are to be effected. Re Down, 2 Jur. 886.

8. The 8th section of the stat. 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 60, relates to trusts only, and not to mortgages, and to positive or naked trustees, and not to constructive trustees, or trustees by operation of law. Re Dearden, 3 Myl. & K. 508; 4 L. J., N. S., Ch., 186.

9. The stat. 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 60, intitled "an Act for amending the laws respecting conveyances, and transfers of estates, and funds vested in trustees and mortgagees," applies only to cestuis que trustent who are named in the instruments upon which their title depends, or to persons who claim directly under such cestuis que trustent, as real or personal representatives, or as assignees. Re Merry, 1 Myl. & K. 677.

10. The Act (11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 60) does not apply to lands out of the Queen's dominions; nor is a party having the legal interest in a debt (which he has been decreed to assign) a trustee of such debt within the Act. Price v. Denhurst, 8 Sim. 616. See S. C. id. 279; 8 L. J., N. S., Ch., 267.

11. An exchange of lands, or an exchange of lands where a sum of money forms part of the consideration by way of equality of exchange, is not within the stat. 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 60. Turner v. Edgell, 1 Keen 502; 6 L. J., N. S., Ch., 201.

12. The statute 1 Will. 4, c. 60, does not apply to cases of partition. Re Neashell, 14 L. J., N. S., Ch., 121.

2. Infant Heir, Devisee, or Trustee. In General.

13. Estates were conveyed to A. and B. and the heirs of A. A. died, having devised the estates to C. in tail. C. alone, in B.'s lifetime, conveyed the estates to D., to make him tenant to the praetice; and a recovery was suffered to the use of C. in fee. D. died, leaving an infant heir:—Held, that the heir was not a trustee, for though the recovery did not bar the estate tail, it drew out from D. the whole estate that was vested in him, under the recovery deed. Re Debary, 5 Sim. 283.

14. A testatrix directed funds to be transferred in the bank books into the names of A. B. and wife, and their children, who were infants, for the benefit of A. B. and wife for life, with remainder to their children. This was done, and a suit being instituted for the performance of the trusts:—Held, that the Court had no jurisdiction, under the 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 60, to order the infants to transfer the fund into court. Watts v. Scrivens, 1 Beav. 223.

15. Where the widow and administratrix of an intestate transferred money into the names of herself and infant child, it was ordered, under the 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 60, that the child should join in transferring the third to which the widow was entitled. Kidd v. Kidd, 1 Beav. 225. n.

16. Four co-partners purchased an estate out of the partnership assets, and took a conveyance to themselves as tenants in common in fee. One of them died intestate as to his real estate, leaving an infant heir. The survivors settled with his executors for the value of one-fourth of the estate, and then petitioned, under the 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 60, that the infant might be declared a trustee of one-fourth of the estate, and might join in conveying the estate to a purchaser. The Court refused to make the order, and said that a bill must be filed. Exp. Williams, 11 Sim. 54.

1. In a decree for raising legacies against an infant heir of a devisee, whose estate was charged with the legacies, a sale may be directed, but the infant will not then be declared a trustee, so as to enable the Court to order a conveyance under the 6th and 18th sections of the 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 60. Walters v. Jackson, 12 Sim. 278; 10 L. J., N. S., Ch., 388.

2. A trader, who had freehold, copyhold, and personal estate, died in September 1832, leaving an infant heir. His estate was insufficient to pay his debts and charges. His partners, however, by deed took upon themselves to pay all the debts, and secured the principal part of his property for his family. A suit was instituted for carrying the deed into execution, and the Master found that it would be for the benefit of the infant heir that the real estate should be sold and applied in the manner mentioned in the deed. A decree was made for sale, and the infant was declared a trustee within the 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 60:—Held, that a sale under the decree could not be enforced; that the Court had no jurisdiction to order the sale; that the infant was not a trustee within the Act; that the purchaser was not bound to wait until the error was corrected; and the Court, therefore, discharged him with his costs, charges, and expenses. Calvert v. Godfrey, 6 Beav. 97; 12 L. J., N. S., Ch., 306.

3. Upon a direction for the sale of testator's real estate to pay debts, infant devisees refusing to convey, were declared by the Court to be trustees within 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 60. Warburton v. Vaughan, 4 Y. & Coll. 247.

4. The infant tenant in tail of lands decreed to be sold for an equitable charge is a trustee under the 8th and 18th sections of the 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 60; and if he refuse to execute, the Master will be directed to do so in his name, under 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 60. Semble, the 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 78, s. 8, does not apply to infants. Peyton v. McDermott, 6 Ir. Eq. R. 220.

5. Where an order was obtained on petition against a minor, not a party to the cause, to execute the conveyance, and the minor refused to obey the order, it is necessary, to present a further petition to obtain an order that an attachment should issue against the minor, that a person appointed by the Court should execute in his name. Semble, the 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 78 (Irish Statutes), does not apply to minors. Moore v. Grogan, 9 Ir. Eq. R. 472.

6. Where the Master finds that in a certain construction of a devise the infant therein named is a trustee within the Act 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 60, but that on a different construction another person would be such trustee, the Court may declare the infant to be the trustee, and make the order for conveyance, without sending the case back to the Master. Langford v. Auger, 4 Hare 313.

7. A testator agreed to let land on a building lease, but died before the execution of the lease, having devised the land:—Held, on a bill for specific performance by the intended lessee, that the devisees, including an infant, were trustees for the plaintiff, under the stat. 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 60, for the purpose of executing the lease. Cullum v. Upton, 19 L. J., N. S., Ch., 276; 14 Jur. 187.

8. Bill filed to have a sale of lands, the legal and beneficial estate in which was vested in the plaintiff, an infant. Order for sale made:—Held, that this order was tantamount to declaring that the infant was a trustee for the purchaser within the Act 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 60, s. 18; and upon the petition of the purchaser, the Court ordered an immediate conveyance by the infant, without a previous reference to the Master to inquire whether he was a trustee within the meaning of the Act. Re Blackwell, 7 Jur. 9.

9. Where a freehold estate was vested in an infant trustee on a plain trust, an order for a conveyance was made on a petition presented under the 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 60, without a reference to the Master. Re Trapp, 13 L. J., N. S., Ch., 168; 8 Jur. 437.

10. A petition under the 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 60, stated, that in 1823 the testator devised real estate to a trustee to pay debts, and after payment thereof in trust for the petitioner; that he died in 1824, and thereupon the petitioner entered; that many years ago petitioner and the trustee sold part of the estate, and paid all the debts; that the trustee had died, and that his heir was a minor; and it prayed a conveyance of the real estate. The Court directed inquiries whether the minor was a trustee for the petitioner alone, discharged of debts and the trusts of the will. Re Barry, 2 J. & L. 1.

11. An infant devisee had been ordered to convey real estate sold for payment of testator's debts; and having made default, and not being within reach of process, a person was appointed by the Court, under 1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 60, s. 8, to convey. Thomas v. Gwynne, 9 Beav. 275.

12. The stat. 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 60, does not apply to cases of partition, and an infant will not be directed under the provisions of that Act to execute a conveyance upon a partition, unless the rights of the parties have been previously established by a decree. Re Neachell, 14 L. J., N. S., Ch., 121.

13. After decree in a suit for specific performance against the infant heir of the vendor, a petition must be presented under 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 60, for an order that the infant may convey to the purchaser. The costs of the suit were ordered to be paid out of the purchase money. Prythoroh v. Harvard, 6 Sim. 9.

(a) Mortgages. In General.

1. The devisee of a mortgage is not a trustee for the executors of the testator within 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 60. Exp. Payne, 6 Sim. 644; 5 L. J., N. S., Ch., 259.

2. The 8th section of the 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 60 relates to trusts only, and not to mortgages, and to positive or naked trustees, and not to constructive trustees, or trustees by operation of law. Re Dearden, 3 Myl. & K. 508; 4 L. J., N. S., Ch., 186.

3. Appointment of person to convey for the heir of a mortgagee under the 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 60, s. 8, 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 23, and 1 & 2 Vict., c. 69. Re Wilson, 2 Jur. 987.

4. Mortgagees and the heirs of mortgagees are within the 8th section of the 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 60, explained by the 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 23, s. 2. Exp. Whitton, 1 Keen 278.

5. An order of reference to inquire whether the heir of the mortgagee was a trustee within the Acts 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 60, and 1 & 2 Vict., c. 69, was made upon the petition of the executors of the mortgagee; and the mortgage debt being paid off pending the reference, the Master found that the heir was not a trustee for the petitioners, but for the mortgagee, whereupon the Court allowed the petition to be amended and made the petition of the mortgagor, and then directed the re-conveyance. Re Manifold, 4 Hare 308.

(b) Infant Heir of Mortgagee.

6. The infant heir of a mortgagee, who had obtained a decree for a sale, being out of the jurisdiction:—Held, a trustee within the 8th and 18th sections of 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 60. Prendergast v. Eyre, Ld. & G. temp. Sugd. 11.

7. The executors of a mortgagee in fee who had died intestate, leaving an infant heir, having in exercise of a power in the mortgage deed agreed to sell the estate, the heir was ordered, on a petition presented by the executors under the 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 60, s. 6, to convey the estate to the purchaser. Re Kent, 9 Sim. 501; 8 L. J., N. S., Ch., 169.

8. Form of order upon an application for an infant mortgagee to convey, under the stat. 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 60, s. 6. Re Halliday, Dr. 3.

9. The Act 1 & 2 Vict., c. 69 does not repeal any part of 1 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 60, nor of the 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 23, and therefore, since the passing of the 1 & 2 Vict., according to previous decisions upon the meaning of the 4 & 5 Will. 4, an order will be made for the re-conveyance of the legal estate when the heir of a mortgagee is either an infant or cannot be found. Re Wilson's Estate, Re Gathorne, 8 Sim. 392; 8 L. J., N. S., Ch., 45; and id. 46.

(c) Mortgagee out of Jurisdiction or not to be Found.

10. A mortgagee in fee died intestate as to his real estate, and his heir was not known. The Court had no authority, under the 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 60, s. 8, to appoint a person to re-convey the estate to the party entitled to the equity of redemption on his payment of the mortgage money to the executor of the mortgagee. Re Goddard, 1 Myl. & K. 25; 2 L. J., N. S., Ch., 16.

11. A mortgagee in fee died intestate as to the mortgaged premises, but having bequeathed her personal estate to B. The mortgage money remaining unpaid, B. presented a petition, under 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 60, praying that some person might be appointed in the place of the mortgagee's heir (who could not be found) to convey the premises to him; but the Court refused to make any order. Re Stanley, 5 Sim. 320; 3 L. J., N. S., Ch., 240.

On a further application to the Court:—Held, that his heir was to be regarded as a trustee within the meaning of the 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 60, s. 8, as explained by 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 23, s. 2, and the Court made the order. S. C. 6 L. J., N. S., Ch., 361; 7 Sim. 170.

12. A mortgagee was resident out of the jurisdiction:—Held, that the case was not within the 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 60, the 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 23, or the 1 & 2 Vict., c. 69. Green v. Holden, 1 Beav. 207.

13. The Act 1 & 2 Vict., c. 69 does not repeal any part of 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 60, nor of the 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 23, and therefore, since the passing of the 1 & 2 Vict., according to previous decisions upon the meaning of the 4 & 5 Will. 4, an order will be made for the re-conveyance of the legal estate when the heir of a mortgagee is either an infant or cannot be found. Re Wilson's Estate, Re Gathorne, 8 Sim. 392; 8 L. J., N. S., Ch., 45; and id. 46.

14. The case of a mortgagee leaving an heir, though such heir be unknown, is within the stat. 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 60, s. 8, as expounded by the stat. 4 & 5 Will. 4, s. 23. Re Williams, Exp. Bird, 9 Sim. 642. Reversing id. 426; 9 L. J., N. S., Ch., 353; 4 Jur. 912.

15. The 8th section of 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, as expounded by the 2nd section of 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 23, applies to the case of the heir of a mortgagee being out of jurisdiction of the Court. Re Thompson, 12 Sim. 392.

16. The heir-at-law of a mortgagee, who had never been in possession, was out of the jurisdiction, and the produce of the sale of the mortgaged lands under a decree was sufficient to pay off the mortgage by reason of prior incumbrances:—Held, that the Court had no jurisdiction to make an order for the conveyance of the legal estate to the purchaser either under the 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 60, s. 8, or 1 Vict., c. 69, s. 1. The decisions under these statutes reviewed. Re Thompson (12 Sim. 392) disapproved of. Spunner v. Walsh, 10 Ir. Eq. R. 214.

(d) Mortgagors and Infant Heir of Mortgagor.

1. In a suit by an equitable mortgagee of leaseholds to enforce his security, a decree was made for sale in default of payment, and the premises were sold under the decree; the mortgagor, then out of the jurisdiction, was held not to be a trustee, within the Act 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 60, for the purchaser, but he was held to be a trustee within that Act for the plaintiff, and a person was appointed to execute the assignment in the place of such trustee. King v. Leach, 2 Hare 57.

2. In a creditors' suit for the administration of a testator's estate, a decree was made that the devisees of real estates subject to a mortgage, two of whom were married women, should execute a conveyance of the equity of redemption to the mortgagee, if the latter were willing to release the testator's estate from the mortgage debt. The devisees refused to execute a deed of conveyance, prepared in pursuance of the decree by the mortgagee, and approved of by the Master:—Held, upon petition by the mortgagee, that he was entitled, under stat. 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 60, to an order for the appointment of a person to execute the conveyance in the place of the devisees. Hood v. Hall, 19 L. J., N. S., Ch., 312; 14 Jur. 127.

[Infant Heir of Mortgagor.] 3. In a suit by an equitable mortgagee against infant heir of mortgagor, the estate having been directed to be sold as most beneficial to the infant, the latter was, under the 11th section of the stat. 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 60, directed to convey to the purchaser. Scholefield v. Heafeld, 8 Sim. 470; 7 L. J., N. S., Ch., 4.

4. Where lands are decreed to be sold in a mortgage suit, the infant heir-at-law of the mortgagor is not a trustee within the 8th or 18th section of the 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 60. Goddard v. Macaulay, 6 Ir. Eq. R. 221.

Semble, the Court has jurisdiction, under 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 47, s. 11, to make an order directing such infant heir to execute a conveyance. Id.

He is not within the provisions of the 28 Geo. 3, c. 25. Nor is he a necessary party to the conveyance to the purchaser. Id.

(e) Assignment of Mortgage Debt.

5. The 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 60, being intended only to provide means for conveying the legal interest:—Held, that an assignment of a mortgage debt was not within the Act; nor was it intended to apply to land out of the King's dominions. Price v. Demhurst, 8 Sim. 617; 8 L. J., N. S., Ch., 267; 8 Sim. 279.

4. Lunatic Mortgagee, Devisee, or Trustee.

6. The statute 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 60, applies only to the case of a trustee who, by reason of mental incapacity, is incompetent to the execution of a trust. Re Jones, 6 Jur. 545.

7. The summary jurisdiction given to the Lord Chancellor by the 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will.

4, c. 60, s. 5, for the conveyance of property vested in trustees or mortgagees who are lunatic, but not found so by inquisition, does not apply to cases in which the fact of lunacy is contested. Re Walker, Cr. & Ph. 147; 10 L. J., N. S., Ch., 355; 5 Jur. 571.

8. Where the evidence adduced of unsoundness of mind of a lunatic trustee, but not found such by inquisition, is very strong, the Court will make the order for a conveyance of the trust property in the first instance, without directing a reference to the Master. Re Daniel, 11 L. J., N. S., Ch., 123.

9. Land having been sold under a decree for payment of charges which were prior to the estate of one of the defendants, who was a lunatic, the Court referred it to the Master to appoint a person in his place to convey them to the purchaser. When the sale is under a decree of the Court, the granting parties do not fill the character of vendors within the exception in the 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 60, s. 18. Re Blake, 3 J. & L. 265.

10. Where a lunatic, who had no issue, was seized of an estate tail in possession, with the immediate reversion to himself in fee, and the land had been sold under the 1 Will. 4, c. 65 for payment of his debts, an order was made on the committee to suffer a recovery on behalf of the lunatic, in order to complete the title to a purchaser. Re Brand, 1 Myl. & K. 150; 2 L. J., N. S., Ch., 12.

11. Property, of which a lunatic (not so found) was mortgagee in fee for 1,300*l.*, was sold for 900*l.* His beneficial interest in the mortgage money having been by means of an equitable charge reduced below 700*l.*:—Held, that this case fell within the 5th section of the Act 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 60. Re Sandford, 1 Macn. & G. 538; 2 H. & Tw. 137.

12. R. B. was entitled to a rent-charge for life, and legal estate for life in remainder in lands, decreed to be sold for paramount incumbrances; after decree, he became lunatic, but no commission issued. A conveyance by him to purchase was ordered under s. 5 of the Trustee Act, 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4. Blake v. Blake, 9 Ir. Eq. R. 592.

13. A petition praying that the committee of a lunatic may be ordered to transfer property vested in the lunatic as a trustee ought to be entitled in the lunacy, and need not be entitled in the matter of the Act which authorises the Lord Chancellor to make the order. Re Fowler, 2 Russ. 449.

14. Ad interim committee incapable of conveying under the Act 1 Will. 4, c. 60, s. 3. Re Poulton, 1 Macn. & G. 100; 1 H. & Tw. 476.

15. A., after making an equitable mortgage of freeholds, became lunatic. The mortgaged estate was sold under a decree in a foreclosure suit. The lunatic was held to be a trustee within the 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 60, and a conveyance was ordered to be made by the plaintiff's solicitors in the name of the lunatic, without a reference. Re Rogers, 13 L. J., N. S., Ch., 262; 8 Jur. 229.

16. After a decree in a creditors' suit for the sale of the real estate of the testator, and the application of the proceeds in payment of the debt, and after a sale under that decree, the devisees of the estate, being lunatic or out of the jurisdiction, are trustees of the estate within the statute 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 60, for the plaintiff in the cause, semble. Jackson v. Milfield, 5 Hare 254, 538.

5. Other Persons.

1. A woman who was sole trustee for sale of real property married a man who absconded, and had not been heard of up to the hearing of the cause. The Court decreed a sale, and that the husband should be declared a trustee within the 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 60, s. 19, but declined to appoint a person to convey in his room, under the 8th section, on the ground that he was not the trustee "last known to have been seised," there being a joint seisin in him and his wife. Moore v. Vinten, 12 Sim. 161; 10 L. J., N. S., Ch., 345.

2. Real estate having been applied for a century and a half upon the trusts specified by will, the Court assumed that the will created a trust, and that the heir of the testator became a trustee, and, the present heir not being known, the case was held to be within 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 60, s. 23. Re Gore's Charities, 2 Con. & L. 411; 4 Dr. & War. 270.

3. Devise in 1677 to the use of the poor of the parish of A. The Master was unable to ascertain in whom the estate was vested:—Held, that the case was not within the Trustee Acts. So also where charity money had in 1745 been laid out by a parish in the purchase of an estate for the poor of the parish, and it could not be ascertained in whom it was vested. Att.-Gen. v. Randles, 8 Beav. 185.

4. Tenant for life of estates decreed in a creditors' suit to be sold for payment of debt, is a trustee for the purchaser within the meaning of 1 Will. 4, c. 60, s. 18. Re Milfield, 2 Ph. 254; and see 5 Hare 538.

5. An estate was devised to A., subject to a charge of 5,000*l.*, payable to the executors in a suit to which A. was a party; the estate was sold, and all proper parties were ordered to join in the conveyance. A. refusing to execute the deed, was declared a trustee for the purchaser under the stat. 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 60, and another person was directed to convey in his stead. The petition for the above purposes was presented by a defendant in his character of purchaser; the Court refused to give costs. Robinson v. Wood, 5 Beav. 246.

6. Where the heiress-at-law, a feme covert, declined acknowledging the conveyance upon the sale of an intestate's estate under a decree, semble, that the heir was a trustee within 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 60. Billing v. Webb, 1 De G. & Sm. 717; 12 W. R. 427.

7. The heir of a trustee of the lessee's interest in a lease for lives renewable for ever having been applied to to accept a renewal to him, refused to execute the conveyance:—Held, that the 8th section of the Trustees' Act, 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 60, did not extend to such a case. Fitzgibbon v. Lewis, 6 Ir. Eq. R. 560.

8. A vendor who dies before the completion of the contract is a trustee within the meaning of the 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 23, though expressly excepted out of the 1 Will. 4, c. 60. Re Lowe's Estate, 2 Ph. 690; 17 L. J., N. S., Ch., 430; 12 Jur. 638.

9. The executor of the survivor of three trustees declined to prove his will:—Held, that the case was within the 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Will. 4, c. 60. Exp. Hagger, 8 Beav. 98.

6. Order to Convey.

10. An application, under the 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 60, to appoint a person to convey in the place of an absent trustee, who has been discharged by a decree of the Court, ought to be by motion in the cause in which the decree was pronounced, a petition for that purpose being unnecessary. Callaghan v. Egan, 1 Dr. & Wal. 187.

11. Where an order that the Master or any other person appointed by the Court should convey in the name of a defendant, under the 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 60, s. 8, cannot be made contemporaneously with the decree at the hearing of the cause, in consequence of the party to whom the conveyance is to be made not being then ascertained (e.g., where lands are by the decree directed to be sold), an application, under the 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 60, that the Master should execute a conveyance in the name of such defendant, must be made by petition. Newman v. Fitzgerald, 13 Ir. Eq. R. 65.

12. Under the 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 60, the Master has no power to appoint a person to convey. It is for the Master to "approve," and for the Court to "appoint." Fowler v. Ward, 8 Beav. 488.

13. One of two executors appearing, from the proceedings in the cause, to be a trustee within the meaning of the 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 60, of a fund standing in the testator's name, and it being proved by affidavit that he was living out of the jurisdiction, the Court, without a reference to the Master, made an order, under this Act, for the transfer of the fund by his co-executor. Parker v. Burney, 1 Beav. 492; 8 L. J., N. S., Ch., 107.

14. Where the Court, in any proceeding in a cause, declares a party to be a trustee, within 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 60, it may, by the same order, direct a conveyance to be made. Walton v. Merry, 6 Sim. 328.

15. Where the Court, by its decree, declares that an infant heir is a trustee, and the right of party entitled to a conveyance is established by that decree, the Court will at the same time direct a conveyance from the infant heir, a petition for that purpose being unnecessary. Broom v. Broom, 3 Myl. & K. 443.

16. Where an infant heir is declared, by the decree of the Court, to be a trustee for a purchaser, the Court will direct a conveyance to the purchaser by the same decree, a petition for that purpose being unnecessary. Miller v. Knight, 1 Keen 129; 5 L. J., N. S., Ch., 168.

7. Execution of Conveyance.

17. Where a person has been ordered, under the 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 60, to execute a deed in place of a refusing trustee, it is sufficient that he should execute the same deed that has been tendered to the refusing trustee, it being expressed, in the attestation clause, that he has executed it in place of the trustee, and in pursuance of the order. Exp. Foley, 8 Sim. 395; 8 L. J., N. S., Ch., 56; 2 Jur. 1012.

8. Practice.

1. For the proper form of the reference under the stat. 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 60, see Re Pigott, 2 Russ. & M. 683.

2. Where one of two executors, defendants in an administration suit, was stated by affidavit to be out of the jurisdiction, an order was made for the transfer of a fund, under the 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 60, without a reference, it appearing from the proceedings in the cause, as was stated in the order, that he was a trustee within the meaning of the Act. Parker v. Burney, 3 Beav. 492; 8 L. J., N. S., Ch., 107.

3. Reference directed under 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 60, in a case where the cestui que trust, making the application, claimed in respect of interests devised in remainder after the determination of prior estates tail which had failed. Re De Clifford Estates, 2 Myl. & K. 624.

4. In proceedings under the 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 60, all the circumstances giving the Court jurisdiction should be stated in the petition, as a supplemental affidavit cannot be read. Re Hartford, 1 Con. & L. 394; 2 Dr. & War. 292.

5. Proof of search for a trustee under the 11 Geo. 4, s. 24, and 1 Will. 4, c. 60, s. 24, may be given at the hearing of the cause, by affidavit. Moore v. Vinten, 12 Sim. 161; 10 L. J., N. S., Ch., 345.

6. The title of a petition presented, under an Act of Parliament, as the Trustee Act (11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 60), should contain a reference to that Act, as well as to the matter of the petition. Re Lam, 4 Beav. 509; 11 L. J., N. S., Ch., 118; 6 Jur. 615.

9. Costs.

- (a) Heir or Devisee of Mortgagee, 6809.
- (b) Lunatic Mortgagee or Trustee, 6809.
- (c) Other Cases, 6809.

(a) Heir or Devisee of Mortgagee.

7. The infant heir of a mortgagee is entitled to the costs incurred on the reference, under 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 60. Milton (Earl) v. Trimleston (Lord), Fl. & K. 338.

8. The infant heir of a mortgagee in fee having been found by the Master to be a trustee of the mortgaged estate for the executor of the mortgagee, the executor petitioned that the infant might be ordered to re-convey the estate to the mortgagor on payment of the principal and interest due on the mortgage and costs:—Held, that the costs of the proceeding before the Master must be paid by the mortgagor. Exp. Ommaney, 10 Sim. 228; 10 L. J., N. S., Ch., 315; 5 Jur. 647.

9. The costs of the petition and order, under the stat. 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 60, for the re-conveyance of a mortgaged estate to the mortgagor or his representatives, upon payment of the mortgage money, are to be borne by the mortgagor or his estate, although such proceedings were rendered necessary by the circumstance that the mortgagee had devised the legal estate in the mortgaged premises to three trustees, one of whom could not be found. King v. Smith, 6 Hare 473; 18 L. J., N. S., Ch., 43; 12 Jur. 1083.

(b) Lunatic Mortgagee or Trustee.

10. Costs of the committee of a lunatic trustee, conveying within the statute, must be paid out of the lunatic's estate. Exp. Brydges, Coop. 290.

11. Semble, the expenses of proceedings, under the 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 60, s. 5, for the purpose of obtaining a re-conveyance of a mortgaged estate from a mortgagee of unsound mind, but not found such by inquisition, are to be borne by the mortgagor. Re Marrow, Cr. & Ph. 142; 10 L. J., N. S., Ch., 340.

12. Where it clearly appeared that the lunatic was a trustee of mortgaged premises, and the mortgage deed contained a declaration to that effect:—Held, that the costs of proceedings, under the Act 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 60, to obtain a re-conveyance, must be borne by the mortgagor. Re Lewis, 1 Macn. & G. 23; 1 H. & Tw. 123; 18 L. J., N. S., Ch., 153; 13 Jur. 548.

13. The costs of proceedings of a re-conveyance by the committee of a lunatic of premises mortgaged to the lunatic will be ordered to be paid out of the lunatic's estate, where the lunatic is beneficially interested in the mortgage money, and the petition is presented by the committee. Re Wheeler, 1 De G. M. & G. 434.

This rule, however, will not be acted on if the mortgagor presents the petition, unless in cases where the committee has declined to take that step. Id.

14. Application of the rule as to the costs of proceedings under 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 60, for the purpose of obtaining a re-conveyance of mortgaged premises, to the case of a lunatic mortgagee who was a trustee, and where the existence of the trust did not appear on the mortgage deed. Re Townsend, 1 Macn. & G. 686; 2 H. & Tw. 185; 2 Ph. 348; 16 L. J., N. S., Ch., 456.

(c) Other Cases.

15. If a motion is made to enforce an order under the 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 60, and the order appears to be an improper one, the Court has jurisdiction to give the party resisting it the costs of the motion. Re King, 10 Sim. 605; 9 L. J., N. S., Ch., 257.

16. If a petition is presented under the 10 Geo. 4, c. 56, or under the 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 60, to have a person appointed to convey property in the place of a recusant trustee, the latter ought not to be served with the petition; and if he is served, he will be entitled to costs. Re Third Burnt Tree Building Society, 16 Sim. 296; 12 Jur. 595. And see S. C. 1 Macn. & G. 607; 2 H. & Tw. 44.

17. Upon an order, under the 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 60, for the infant heir of a trustee under a settlement to convey to parties who claimed under the will of a party who claimed under the limitation in the settlement to the right heirs of the settlor:—Held, that such heir need not be served with the order of reference to the Master, or other orders in the matter of the reference; and the petition of such infant, that he might be directed to convey upon the trusts of the settlement, instead of the trusts of the subsequent will, and that he might be served with such orders as aforesaid, being wrong, the petitioner could not have his costs of opposing the cestui que trust. Re Bradburne, 12 L. J., N. S., Ch., 353.

I. JURISDICTION WHERE PROPERTY ABROAD.

1. Where land held in trust is situated in Ireland, the cestui que trust being in England, and a surviving trustee in Ireland, the Court has jurisdiction under the 54th section of the Trustee Act of 1850 (13 & 14 Vict., c. 60) to appoint new trustees and make a vesting order. Re Hewitt's Estate, 6 W. R. 537.

2. A vesting order in the owner of lands in Canada may be made under the 13 & 14 Vict., c. 60, s. 54. Re Groom, 11 L. T., N. S., 326.

A. purchased an estate in Canada, and his conveyance was duly registered there. A mortgage thereon, made in 1837, had also been registered. The conveyance to A. was confirmed by the personal representative of the mortgagee, the mortgage having been satisfied in his lifetime. It subsequently turned out that the mortgage was a mortgage in fee, and the legal estate was outstanding in a grandchild of the mortgagee, an infant. On proof of these facts the Court made an order vesting the estate in A. Id.

[Lunacy.] 3. The Trustee Act 1850 does not give to the Lord Chancellor of Great Britain sitting in lunacy jurisdiction over lands in Ireland. Re Davies, 3 Macn. & G. 278.

4. Where the surviving trustee of property, consisting partly of real estate in Ireland, becomes lunatic, the Court has jurisdiction to make an order, upon a petition presented both in lunacy and in the Chancery Division, appointing new trustees, and vesting the real estate in Ireland in them. Re Lamotte, 36 L. T., N. S., 231; 4 L. R., Ch. D., 325; 25 W. R. 149.

5. One of the trustees of an estate which was being administered by the Court having become of unsound mind, an order was made under the Trustee Act 1850, s. 5, appointing a person to concur with the other trustee in transferring into court certain Irish railway stock standing in the names of the trustees. It being discovered before the order was drawn up that, owing to s. 56 of the Act, such an order could not be made as to Irish stock, an order was made appointing a person new trustee of the Irish stock in the place of the person of unsound mind, and directing him to concur with the other trustee in transferring the stock into court. Re Hodgson (Lord), Kenlis v. Hodgson, 11 L. R., Ch. D., 888.

II. COPYHOLDS.

6. It is not necessary for the lord of a manor to appear in court to consent to a vesting order under the Trustee Act. Ayles v. Cox, 17 Beav. 584.

After a decree for the sale of an intestate's copyhold estate in lots, but before the sale, the infant heir of the intestate was admitted:—Held, that a petition for a vesting order was properly presented by the purchaser, whose money was in court, and that the costs of the order were to be borne by the vendors, and to be paid out of the purchase money of the particular lot, and not out of the fund in court generally. Id.

7. Where the party entitled to the legal estate in copyholds has been admitted, and the legal estate descends on his death to his customary heirs, who disclaim, the consent of the lord will be necessary to a vesting order. Re Howard, 3 Eq. Rep. 846; 3 W. R. 605.

8. The Court will, on a petition to appoint a new trustee under the Trustee Act, direct copyholds to vest in the trustees appointed by the Court without requiring the parties to get the consent of the lord. Re Flitcroft, 1 Jur., N. S., 418. And see Re Boyce, 4 De G. J. & S. 210.

9. Where copyholds of inheritance had been sold by order of the Court in a suit by an equitable mortgagee against the infant customary heir, who had not been admitted, and the personal representative of the deceased mortgagor, the consent of the lord of the manor evidenced either by his appearing and consenting, or by a verified certificate of his consent:—Held, to be a necessary preliminary to the drawing up of a vesting order under the 13 & 14 Vict., c. 60, made upon the petition of the purchaser, the infant heir, and the personal representative of the mortgagor. Cooper v. Jones, 2 Jur., N. S., 59; 25 L. J., Ch., 240.

10. Where a person to whom a trust estate in copyholds is devised disclaims, a vesting order, vesting in a new trustee the estate and interest in the copyholds, which would have vested in the disclaiming trustee if he had accepted the devise, is regular. Puterson v. Puterson, 35 L. J., Ch., 518; 14 W. R. 601; 14 L. T., N. S., 320; 2 L. R., Eq., 41. And see S. C. sub. nom. Briston v. Booth, 5 L. R., C. P., 86.

The consent of the lord is not necessary to a vesting order of copyholds, but his right to his fine is not prejudiced by such an order if made without his consent. Ib.

If the order is to be made without the consent of the lord, he ought not to be served with the petition. Ib.

A., being tenant on the rolls of copyholds held in trust, devised them to B., who disclaimed. The Court having made an order, under the Trustee Act, in the absence of the lord of the manor, vesting the copyholds in a new trustee:—Held, that the order was regular in form, and that it did not prejudice the right of the lord. S. C. 35 Beav. 506; 2 L. R., Eq., 31.

1. A copyhold was vested in a married woman. It was sold under a decree, which ordered all proper parties to join. She stated in writing that she never would surrender:—Held, that the case came within the Trustee Act, and a vesting order was made. Rowley v. Adams, 14 Beav. 130; 20 L. J., N. S., Ch., 436; 15 Jur. 1002.

Whether, where a purchaser has paid his purchase money into court, the petition under the Trustee Act should be presented by the plaintiff or the purchaser, quære. But held, that the objection might be removed by making them co-petitioners. Ib.

The tender of a notice requiring a trustee to surrender a copyhold is not sufficient, within the 17th section of the Trustee Act 1850, but the tender of a deed appointing an attorney to surrender may possibly be sufficient. Ib.

Where an estate is sold in lots under a decree, one petition under the Trustee Act, as to the several lots, is not multifarious. Ib.

2. Form of order appointing a new trustee of a copyhold estate, and appointing a person to complete the assurance of the estate to such new trustee. Re Hey's Will, 9 Hare 221.

3. Covenant by A. to surrender copyholds to the use of B., and in the meantime, and until such surrender should be made, that A. would stand seised of the copyholds "upon trust for, and to surrender the same unto B." A. went out of the jurisdiction without making any surrender. Order made, under the Trustee Act 1850, for the appointment of a person to surrender the copyholds to B. Re Collingwood's Trusts, 6 W. R. 536.

4. A vendor covenanted in the usual way to surrender copyholds to the purchaser, and the purchase money was paid. The vendor died before surrender. His customary heir was of unsound mind. The covenant contained no declaration that the vendor and his heirs would until surrender hold the premises in trust for the purchaser:—Held, that a person might be appointed under the Trustee Act 1850, to convey to the purchaser, without a suit being instituted to have the heir declared a trustee. Re Cuming, 5 L. R., Ch., 72; 21 L. T., N. S., 739; 18 W. R. 157.

5. Copyhold lands were devised to an infant for life, with remainder to his first and other sons in tail. By a decree made in a cause these copyholds were directed to be sold for the payment of the testator's debts, and an order was made under the Act 1 Will. 4, c. 47, directing the guardian of the infant to surrender the lands to the purchaser. The purchaser objected to the surrender of the copyholds in question without a petition presented in the Trustee Act 1850, on the ground that there were contingent rights and interests subsequent to the infant's life estate, which the surrender as proposed would not defeat:—Held, that the purchaser was entitled to an order under the 29th section of the Trustee Act 1850, discharging the contingent rights of the unborn issue of the tenant for life, but that such an order might be made in the suit without a petition entitled in the Trustee Act. Wood v. Beeston, 1 Kay & J. 213; 3 Eq. Rep. 238.

6. A mortgagor of copyholds having refused for twenty-eight days to make a surrender in accordance with his covenant, an order was made vesting the legal estate in the mortgagee, subject to the proviso for redemption. Re Crome, 41 L. J., Ch., 32; 13 L. R., Eq., 26.

7. Copyhold premises were surrendered in 1829 by a debtor to the use of his creditor, his heirs and assigns, upon trust that he, his heirs, executors, administrators, or assigns, should sell the same, and, out of the proceeds, should pay to himself, his executors or administrators, 200*l.* then due, and interest. The creditor died in 1831. In 1851 his personal representative contracted to sell the copyhold premises for 100*l.* The customary heir of the creditor was an infant. On the petition of the personal representative of the creditor, it appeared that the debtor had died intestate, that there was no personal representative, and that proof of the title of the customary heir would be very expensive. The Court made an order vesting the legal estate in the copyhold premises in the purchaser, without any service either on the customary heir or on the personal representative of the debtor. Re Wise, 5 De G. & Sm. 415.

III. DECREES FOR SALE.

8. A decree had been made in a creditor's suit for sale in lots of a testator's real estates, which had been devised to several persons (many of whom were infants and married women) for various interests. Upon the application of the plaintiff in the suit, an order was made appointing the plaintiff's solicitor to convey these lands to the respective purchasers, to save the inconvenience which might arise from a simple vesting order. Hancock v. Spittle, 3 Sm. & G. 478.

9. A testator devised his freehold estates to his granddaughter for life, with remainder to all her children as tenants in common in fee, on their attaining twenty-one. In a suit for the administration of the testator's real and personal estate, certain parts of the real estate had been contracted to be sold by order of the Court, to provide a fund for payment of costs. The only two infant children of the granddaughter were parties to the suit. On their petition in the cause, and under the Trustee Act 1850, praying a declaration that the petitioners and the unborn children of the granddaughter would, on attaining twenty-one, be trustees of the estate devised to children of the granddaughter for the purpose of the decree, and that their respective rights might be vested in the respective purchasers, or that some person might be ordered to convey for them:—Held, that the 29th and 30th sections of the Trustee Act 1850 did not apply, and that the infants were not constructive trustees; and the Court refused to make any order. Weston v. Filer, 5 De G. & Sm. 608; 16 Jur. 1010.

1. Where a sale has been ordered, by decree, of property in which infants and possible unborn children are interested, though such decree was made before the passing of the Trustee Act 1852, and though the purpose of the sale is not confined to the payment of debts, the Court has authority, under both the Trustee Acts of 1850 and 1852, taken together, to make a vesting order. Wake v. Wake, 17 Jur. 545.

2. Where copyholds devised to an infant for life, remainder to his first and other sons in tail, were decreed to be paid to pay the debts of the testator, and an order was made in the cause, and pursuant to the 1 Will. 4, c. 47, that the guardian of the infant should surrender them to the purchaser:—Held, that the purchaser was entitled to require that an order should be made discharging the contingent rights of the unborn issue of the infant, under s. 29 of the Trustee Act 1850. Wood v. Beettlestone, 1 Kay & J. 213; 3 Eq. Rep. 238.

3. A devisee of real estate, subject to payment of debts, became of unsound mind, and was so found by inquisition. A committee was appointed, and an action for the administration of the testator's real and personal estate was commenced, with the sanction of the Master in Lunacy, in the Chancery Division, by the lunatic and his committee, and, the testator's personal estate proving to be insufficient for payment of his debts, an order was made for sale of all the testator's real estate upon payment of the purchase money into court. Under this order the real estate was sold, and the purchaser paid the purchase money into court. He, however, raised an objection to the title of the vendors, on the ground that they could not convey without an order in lunacy:—Held, that, the administration action in which the order for sale was made having been properly commenced with the sanction of the master in lunacy, the lunatic plaintiff was entitled to carry on the action, and was, therefore, also bound by the order for sale made in it; that the lunatic was, therefore, a trustee within the Trustee Extension Act 1852, s. 1, of the real estate, and that his committee should be appointed to convey. Re Stamper, Stamper v. Stamper, 46 L. T. 372.

IV. LEASEHOLDS.

4. A lessee who mortgages his term with the reservation of a day, and covenants to stand possessed of the reversion for the mortgagee and his assigns, is not a trustee within the 13 & 14 Vict., c. 60. Re Roberts's Estate, 1 W. R. 237.

5. Order vesting leaseholds in continuing and new trustees as joint tenants. Re Fisher's Will, 1 W. R. 505.

6. The surviving trustee of leaseholds died intestate, and no administration had been taken out. The Court appointed a new trustee, and made a vesting order in the absence of the owner of the fee. Re Matthew's Settlement, 2 W. R. 85.

7. New trustees had been appointed, under a power, of trust property, comprising freehold, copyhold, and leasehold estates, but the property remained vested in the representatives of a former trustee, who had died abroad. A petition was presented for a vesting order under s. 15 of the 13 & 14 Vict., c. 60; but the Court made an order, under s. 32, re-appointing the trustee who had been already appointed under the power, and ordered that the trust estates should vest in such trustees under s. 34. Re Mundel, 6 Jur., N. S., 880; 8 W. R. 683.

8. Semble, the Court has no jurisdiction to make a vesting order, as to leaseholds, where the surviving trustee, who had died intestate, had not proved the will, or acted in the trusts, and no administration had been taken out to his estate. Re Robinson, 9 Jur., N. S., 885; 11 W. R. 1035; 9 L. T., N. S., 12; 2 N. R. 504.

9. Upon an appointment of A. as a trustee under a settlement jointly with B., certain leaseholds were assigned to a provisional trustee, upon trust to re-assign the same to A. and B. No re-assignment was executed. The provisional trustee died intestate, and no legal representative could be found. Under s. 32 of the Trustee Act 1850, A. was re-appointed a trustee of the settlement; and, under s. 34, the leaseholds were vested in A. and B. jointly. Re Morris's Settlement, 4 N. R. 480.

10. When a trustee of leaseholds has died intestate and has no legal personal representative, and a new trustee has been duly appointed in his place, the Court will not re-appoint him trustee under the Trustee Act 1850, s. 32, merely for the sake of making a vesting order under s. 34. Re Driver, 19 L. R., Eq., 352; 23 W. R. 587.

The Court will, however, appoint an additional trustee under s. 32, and will thereupon make a vesting order under s. 34. Id.

11. When the proving executors of the last surviving trustee and executor of a will were dead, the Court, having appointed new trustees of the will, made an order vesting in the new trustees the leaseholds of the original testator for all the estate therein of the last surviving trustee and executor. Re Rathbone, 2 L. R., Ch. D., 483; 45 L. J., Ch., 531; 24 W. R. 566.

12. When a sole or surviving trustee of leaseholds has died intestate, and has no legal personal representative, and a new trustee has been duly appointed in his place, the Court has power, under s. 34 of the Trustee Act 1850 (13 & 14 Vict., c. 60), to make a vesting order; and the Court will, under s. 32, re-appoint the trustee who has already been duly appointed, for the sake of making a vesting order under s. 34. Re Dalgleish, 35 L. T., N. S., 829; 4

L. R., Ch. D., 143. Reversing 1 L. R., Ch. D., 46; 45 L. J., Ch., 68; 25 W. R. 122; 24 W. R. 53.

2. Jurisdiction. Chancery or Lunacy, where Appointment of New Trustees with or without Vesting Order, 6813.
3. Stook Vested in Lunatic, 6814.
4. Property of Lunatic Abroad. See 1. supra.

1. Jurisdiction. Chancery or Lunacy, where Vesting Order only.

1. Whether the Lords Justices acting in lunacy under the royal sign-manual have jurisdiction to make an order vesting a trust estate, of which a person of unsound mind, who was heir-at-law of a deceased trustee, was seised, the words of the Trustee Act 1850 (13 & 14 Vict., c. 60) being "the Lord Chancellor intrusted by virtue of the Queen's sign-manual," quere. Re Pattinson, 21 L. J., Ch., 280.

2. Semble, that the Lords Justices intrusted by warrant under the sign-manual to make orders in lunacy have jurisdiction to make a vesting order under the Trustee Act, where the heir of the survivor's trustee is of unsound mind; but for the greater certainty, the Lord Chancellor made the order. Re Waugh's Trust, 2 De G. M. & G. 279.

3. Where a trustee is an infant as well as lunatic, the Court of Chancery has jurisdiction to make an order for conveying his estate under the Trustee Act; and recourse need not be had to the jurisdiction in lunacy. Re Arrowsmith's Trusts, Re Thompson, 6 W. R. 642; 4 Jur., N. S., 1123; 27 L. J., Ch., 704.

4. The case of an imbecile trustee is not within the jurisdiction of this Court, and an application to the Lords Justices or Lord Chancellor is necessary. Re Good Intent Benefit Society, 2 W. R. 671.

5. When a decree in a partition suit had declared a lunatic a trustee of an allotted portion of land for the plaintiff:—Held, that the Court of Chancery could make a vesting order under the Trustee Act 1850. Re Molyneaux, Ex p. Spencer, 4 De G. F. & J. 365.

6. One of the two trustees of a will became lunatic, and a new trustee was appointed under a power in the will. A petition was then presented entitled in lunacy, only asking for a vesting order:—Held, that the petition must be entitled in Chancery as well as in lunacy, and must ask for the re-appointment of the new trustee by the Court, as, if the order were made in lunacy only, it would have the effect of severing the joint tenancy. Re Chell, 49 L. T. 196; 31 W. R. 898.

7. The meaning of s. 28 of the Charitable Trusts Act 1853 is to confer on the Master of the Rolls and Vice-Chancellors at chambers the same jurisdiction as before the passing of the Act they could have exercised in a suit regularly instituted, or upon petition. Consequently, where a Vice-Chancellor had in chambers appointed new trustees of a charity, and the surviving trustee was a lunatic:—Held, that he might also in chambers make an order under the Trustee Acts vesting the charity property in the new trustees. Re Davenport's Charity, 4 De G. M. & G. 839.

8. When the legal estate in land sold under the order of the Court is vested in a person of unsound mind, but not found lunatic, an order may be made by the Lord Chancellor on a petition in Chancery, under the Trustee Acts, appointing a person to convey the legal estate so vested. Herring v. Clark, 4 L. R., Ch., 167.

2. Jurisdiction. Chancery or Lunacy, where Appointment of New Trustees with or without Vesting Order.

9. The Court made an order, upon one petition, for the appointment of new trustees in the place of retiring trustees and a lunatic trustee, and that the trust estates should vest in the new trustees; but directed that the order should be intitled both in lunacy and in Chancery, and be entered in the registrar's book. Re Davidson, 20 L. J., N. S., Ch., 644.

10. An appointment under the Trustee Act 1850, of a new trustee in the place of one of unsound mind not so found by inquisition, belongs to the jurisdiction in Lunacy, and not to that of the Court of Chancery. It cannot therefore be exercised by the Court of Chancery of Lancaster. Re Ormerod, 3 De G. & J. 249; 28 L. J., Ch., 55; 4 Jur. 1289.

11. A summary petition under the Acts of 1850 and 1852, for the appointment of a new trustee in the place of one who has become imbecile, though not so found by inquisition, can only be disposed of by the Lord Chancellor sitting in lunacy. Re Burton, 7 L. R., Eq., 270.

12. When a petition is presented under the Trustee Acts 1850 and 1852, for the appointment of new trustees in the place of trustees some of whom are dead and the survivor a person of unsound mind, not so found by inquisition, the petition may be presented in lunacy only, and not in Chancery. Re Owen, 4 L. R., Ch., 782; 17 W. R. 1035.

13. When a trustee of a trust deed registered under the Bankruptcy Act 1861 had become of unsound mind, and there was no power in the deed to appoint new trustees, the Court of Chancery appointed a new trustee under the Trustee Acts. Re Donisthorpe, Re Thompson, 23 W. R. 100; 31 L. T., N. S., 369; 44 L. J., Ch., 536.

14. A testator devised real estate to trustees, their heirs and assigns, upon certain trusts. The surviving trustee devised all estates vested in him as a trustee to three persons, one of whom, after proving his testator's will, became of unsound mind. A petition was presented for the appointment of new trustees, and for the appointment of a person to convey on behalf of the devisees of the surviving trustee:—Held, that the petition was properly presented in lunacy as well as in Chancery. Re Mason, 10 L. R., Ch., 273; 23 W. R. 737; 44 L. J., Ch., 678.

15. A petition under the Trustee Acts 1850 and 1852, for the appointment of new trustees in the place of trustees, two of whom were dead, and one of the surviving two was a person of unsound mind, but not so found by inquisition (not asking for a vesting order), may be presented in Chancery and not in lunacy. Re Vickers, 3 L. R., Ch. D., 112; 24 W. R. 755; 46 L. J., Ch., 16.

1. A petition for the appointment of new trustees and for a vesting order, where the existing sole trustee is of unsound mind and out of the jurisdiction, need not be presented in lunacy as well as in Chancery. Re Gardner's Trust, 10 L. R., Ch., 29; 27 W. R. 164; 40 L. T. 52.

2. The surviving trustee of property, consisting partly of land in Ireland, having become lunatic, an order was made, upon a petition instituted both in lunacy and in the Chancery division, appointing new trustees and vesting the Irish land in them. Re Lamotte, 4 L. R., Ch. D., 325; 25 W. R. 149; 36 L. T., N. S., 231.

3. Where a new trustee of a settlement had been appointed in the place of a trustee who had become of unsound mind, a petition for an order appointing the new trustee by the Court and vesting the real estate, and the right to call for a transfer of the personal property in the new trustee, together with the continuing trustee, was directed by the Court to be entitled in Chancery as well as in lunacy, otherwise the vesting order will sever the joint tenancy. Re Pearson, 46 L. J., Ch., 670; 37 L. T., N. S., 299; 5 L. R., Ch. D., 982; 25 W. R. 853.

Where Trustees have a more Power and no Legal Estate. 4. A testator gave all his real and personal estate to his wife, and after her death he desired the same to be sold by his executors, the proceeds to be divided amongst legatees as directed by his will. He appointed his wife and S. F., his daughter, executors. After the death of the wife S. F. became lunatic, but was not found so by inquisition. Upon a petition being presented by the legatees praying for the appointment of new trustees under the Trustee Acts:—Held, that S. F., as surviving executor, had no power to convey or assign, the interest having descended to the heir subject to her power; and therefore the Court could not make a vesting order under the 3rd section of the Trustee Act 1850. Re Porter's Will, Exp. Franklin, 3 W. R. 583; 3 Eq. Rep. 719.

5. A husband appointed his wife executrix, and A. executor and trustee of his will. He devised his real estate to his wife during her life or widowhood, but in case she should marry again he gave her, by way of legal limitation, an annuity out of his realty, with powers of entry, distress, and sale; and directed his trustee to invest and accumulate the surplus of the rents and profits of his real estate, and on the death of his wife to sell the real estate, with power to execute such instruments and assurances as might be requisite for effecting the sale. The will contained a power to appoint new trustees in the place of any trustee dying, or becoming unwilling or unable to act. The donee of this power having died, and the original trustee having become of unsound mind, although not so found by inquisition:—Held, that the order for the appointment of the new trustees and the vesting order should be drawn up in Chancery, as well as in lunacy. Re Boyce, 4 De G. J. & S., 205; 3 N. R. 396; 33 L. J., Ch., 390; 10 Jur., N. S., 138; 12 W. R. 359; 9 L. T., N. S., 670.

Semble, there is no power under the Trustee Act 1850 to appoint, in lunacy, a new trustee in the room of a lunatic trustee, except where some property is vested in him. Ib.

3. Stock Vested in Lunatic.

(a) Transfer of and Vesting in New Trustees, 6814.

(b) Transfer into Court, 6815.

(a) Transfer of and Vesting in New Trustees.

6. The wife of a lunatic was sole surviving trustee of stock. An order was made appointing new trustees in the place of the married woman and the deceased trustees, and vesting in the new trustees the right to transfer the stock. Re Wood, 3 De G. F. & J. 125.

7. Stock was standing in the name of a person of unsound mind, part of the stock being his own beneficially, and part of it being vested in him as trustee. The Court had made an order appointing new trustees, and vesting in them the right to call for a transfer of the trust stock, and to receive the arrears of dividends. It was found that an order in this form could not be acted on as to the arrears of dividend, since the bank could not pay arrears on part of a sum. The Court, therefore, varied the order, so as to enable the new trustees to receive the past dividends on the whole stock, and to retain, for the purposes of the trust, that portion which had accrued due in respect of the trust stock. Re Stewart, 8 W. R. 425; 2 De G. F. & J. 1; 8 W. R. 297. S. P. Skynner v. Pelkhot, 9 W. R. 191.

8. Out of the four trustees of a settlement, one was a lunatic, so found by inquisition, and another was, through ill health, unfit to act. The Court appointed two new trustees in their room, and made an order that the real estates, subject to the settlement, should vest in the new trustees jointly with the two continuing old ones, and that the right to call for a transfer of some stock, also subject to the settlement, should vest in the same persons. Re Chauncey, 14 W. R. 849.

9. The sole surviving trustee of a sum of stock under a settlement having become of unsound mind, the persons beneficially entitled presented a petition in lunacy for an order vesting in them the right to transfer the stock and receive the dividends:—Held, that such an order ought not to be made, as it would be administering the trust in lunacy; but, on the petition being amended and intitled in the Chancery Division as well as in lunacy, an order was made appointing the petitioners trustees of the settlement, and vesting in them, as such, the right to transfer the stock and receive the dividends. Re Currie, 10 L. R., Ch. D., 93; 27 W. R. 369; 40 L. T. 110.

10. Where one of three trustees was dead, one an absconding bankrupt, and one a lunatic, on a petition being presented intituled both in lunacy and in the Chancery Division, the Court under the Trustee Act 1850, ss. 5, 32, and 35, appointed three new trustees, and vested the right to transfer stock in them. Re Druce's Trusts or Re Duce's Trusts, 46 L. T. 669; 30 W. R. 759.

1. Where one of three executors of the surviving executor of a testator was of unsound mind, an order was made under the 5th section of the Trustee Act 1850, giving the right to transfer a sum of stock belonging to the estate of the original testator, although the stock still remained standing in the name of the original testator. Re Wacker, 22 L. R., Ch. D., 535; 48 L. T. 552.

2. One of the executors of the surviving trustee of a settlement was a lunatic. The other two executors refused to transfer some shares included in the settlement to the person absolutely entitled to them:—Held, that a vesting order could not be made under the Trustee Act 1850, s. 25, but that a petition in lunacy must be presented. Re Nicholl, 18 W. R. 443; 22 L. T., N. S., 323.

3. When one of several trustees of stock becomes lunatic or of unsound mind, the Court, although it may have jurisdiction under s. 5 of the Trustee Act 1850 to make an order vesting the right to transfer the stock solely in the co-trustees, will not do so, but a new trustee in the place of the lunatic must be appointed before a vesting order will be made. Re Nash, 16 L. R., Ch. D., 503; 44 L. T. 40; 29 W. R. 294.

4. One of three trustees of a sum of stock had been found lunatic. The fund having become divisible, a petition, intituled both in lunacy and in Chancery, was presented for the appointment of a new trustee and a vesting order:—Held, that the appointment of a new trustee was unnecessary, and that the petition ought to be intituled in lunacy only. Order made vesting the right to call for a transfer of and to transfer the stock in the two trustees who were not under disability. Re Nash (16 L. R., Ch. D., 503) not followed. Re Watson, 19 L. R., Ch. D., 384; 45 L. T. 513; 30 W. R. 554.

5. Where one of four trustees of stock became lunatic, and there was no difficulty in finding a new trustee to be appointed in his place, the Court, though having discretion under s. 5 of the Trustee Act 1850 to do so, refused to make an order vesting the right to transfer the stock in the three remaining trustees, and ordered a new trustee to be appointed in the place of the lunatic trustee. Re Nash (16 L. R., Ch. D., 503) and Re Watson (19 L. R., Ch. D., 384) considered. Re Ray, 47 L. T. 500.

(b) Transfer into Court.

6. Where stock is standing in the name of a trustee, who is of unsound mind, but not found so by inquisition, and it is desired to bring such stock into court to the credit of a cause, the proper course is for the cause to be heard by the judge to whose Court the cause is attached, and then to present a petition in lunacy, to be heard before the Lords Justices. Re Dawson, Barber v. Dawson, 6 N. R. 346.

7. Where stock is standing in the names of two trustees, in whom alone a power of appointing new ones is vested, and one of the existing trustees is found lunatic by inquisition, the proper course, in order to obtain a transfer of the fund into court, is by petition in lunacy. Jeffries v. Drysdale, Re Drysdale, 7 Jur., N. S., 667; 30 L. J., Ch., 612; 9 W. R. 428; 4 L. T., N. S., 454.

VI. MORTGAGES.

1. Mortgagor out of Jurisdiction, 6815.
2. Mortgagor. Infant Heir or Devisee of, 6815.
3. Mortgagee. Heir of, out of Jurisdiction or Uncertain, 6816.
4. Mortgagee. Infant Heir of, 6816.
5. Joint Mortgagees, 6817.

1. Mortgagor out of Jurisdiction.

8. After a decree for foreclosure, the absconding mortgagor was declared a trustee and an order was made, under 13 & 14 Vict. c. 60, ss. 9, 43, vesting the mortgaged premises in the plaintiff, on non-payment of the principal, interest, and costs. Lechmere v. Clapp, 30 L. J., Ch., 651; 9 W. R. 860; 31 Beav. 578.

9. On making an order of foreclosure absolute, the Court refused to add a declaration under the Trustee Act 1850, that the mortgagor, being out of the jurisdiction, is a trustee, in order to found upon it a subsequent application for a vesting order. Such a declaration can be obtained only on a separate application. Smith v. Boucher, 1 Sm. & G. 72; 16 Jur. 1154; 1 W. R. 51.

10. Leases were granted to A. B. for certain terms of years. He sub-demised to C. D. for the terms, less ten days. C. D. mortgaged to E. F. & Co., for securing money, and sub-demised for the last-mentioned terms, less one day, with a power of sale, and covenanted to assign the last day of each term to a purchaser. The mortgagees (E. F. & Co.) sold to G. H., and assigned the mortgage terms. G. H. then bought of A. B. the improved ground rents, and took an assignment of the leases granted to him. C. D., the mortgagor, being abroad, G. H. petitioned under the Trustee Act (13 & 14 Vict., c. 60), that the Court would declare the last day of each of the terms, created by the underlease to him, vested in the petitioner; but the Court, concurring in the opinion of one of the Vice-Chancellors, dismissed the petition. Re Property's Purchase, 22 L. J., Ch., 948.

2. Mortgagor. Infant Heir or Devisee of.

11. On a claim for foreclosure against the devisees of the mortgagor, one of whom was an infant, the infant did not appear, and the plaintiff obtained an order appointing the solicitor to the fee fund his guardian:—Held, on the hearing, that the plaintiff had a right to have the common decree of foreclosure, with a day for the infant to show cause, there being nothing in the Trustee Act to alter the rights of the infant. Newbury v. Marten, 15 Jur. 166.

In this case, and under the circumstances, the costs of the solicitor to the fee fund were ordered to be taxed and paid by the plaintiff, and added to the debt, as the solicitor only appeared for the convenience of the plaintiff. Id.

1. Vesting order under the 7th section of the Trustee Act 1850, as to the equity of redemption in an infant, against whom, in a foreclosure suit, a decree for sale had been made, refused on the ground that a mortgagee had the legal estate, and that all equities were bound by the order for sale. Re William's Estate, 5 De G. & Sm. 515; 21 L. J., Ch., 437.

2. In a foreclosure action, where the estate of the mortgagor was devised in trust for sale, and had become vested in an infant, who was one of the persons beneficially interested:—Held, that the decree should contain a direction that, in case the mortgagees were not redeemed within six months, the infant should be a trustee for them within the meaning of the Trustee Act, and the executrix of the mortgagor be ordered to convey the estate to the mortgagees on his behalf. Foster v. Parker, 8 L. R., Ch. D., 147.

3. Mortgagee. Heir of, out of Jurisdiction or Uncertain.

3. The 19th section of the Trustee Act 1850 does not enable the Court, on the petition of the administrator of a mortgagee in fee, who has died intestate, and whose heir is unknown, to vest the mortgaged estate in such administrator, subject to the equity of redemption, the mortgage debt remaining unpaid. Re Meyrick's Estate, 9 Hare 116; 20 L. J., N. S., Ch., 336; 15 Jur. 506.

4. Under the 19th section of the Trustee Relief Act (13 & 14 Vict., c. 60) the Court has jurisdiction, upon the petition of the personal representative of a mortgagee in fee, who has died intestate as to the mortgaged premises, and whose heir cannot be found or is unknown, to vest the mortgaged estate in such representative, subject to the equity of redemption, the mortgage debt remaining unpaid. Re Boden's Trust, 1 De G. Macn. & G. 57; 21 L. J., N. S., Ch., 316; 16 Jur. 279; 9 Hare 820.

5. Where a mortgagee, with power of sale, and a trust to pay the residue to the mortgagor, took possession and so remained until his death, giving his estate generally to trustees, but left no heir-at-law, the Court would not make a vesting order under ss. 9 or 10 of the 13 & 14 Vict., c. 60, but under s. 15. Re Keeler, 11 W. R. 62; 9 Jur., N. S., 95; 32 L. J., Ch., 101; 1 N. R. 44.

6. Vesting order made in the executors of a deceased mortgagee in fee, whose heir-at-law was residing out of the jurisdiction. Re Lea's Trust, 6 W. R. 482.

7. When the personal representative of a mortgagee assigns the mortgage, the heir of the mortgagee being out of the jurisdiction, the assignee may, under s. 19 of 14 & 15

Vict., c. 60, obtain an order vesting the legal estate. The relief given by that section is not confined to the case of re-conveyance to the mortgagor. Re Quinlan, 9 Ir. Ch. R. 306.

8. In consideration of money lent, real estate was conveyed to the lender, his heirs and assigns, upon trust, in case the principal money and interest should be re-paid by a given day for the borrower, his heirs or assigns; but in case default should be made, then upon trusts for sale, and the trusts of the purchase money were declared to be for payment of the principal money, interest, and costs, and subject thereto for the borrower, "his executors, administrators, or assigns." Default having been made:—Held, that the trust of the surplus being for the borrower, "his executors, administrators, or assigns," and not for him, "his heirs, or assigns," the deed operated to convert the property as between his real and personal representatives. It was therefore more than merely a security for money; more, that is, than a "mortgage," as defined by the 2nd section of the 13 & 14 Vict., c. 60; it was a deed of "trust" within the meaning of the 15th section; and the lender having died intestate, and it being impossible to find his heir, the Court had power to make a vesting order under that section. Re Underwood, 3 Kay & J. 745; 5 W. R. 866.

9. The Court may, under the 9th section of the Trustee Act, make an order vesting in the executors of a deceased mortgagee in fee, who has died intestate as to trust estate, the legal estate outstanding in the heir-at-law out of the jurisdiction of the Court, though the mortgagee had before her death been in the receipt of the rents and profits of the mortgaged property. Re Skitter's Mortgage Trust, 4 W. R. 791.

10. M., a mortgagee in fee, after directing payment of debts, etc., devised all her real and personal estate to B. upon certain trusts. M. was illegitimate, and had died without issue. The Court made an order vesting the legal estate in the mortgaged premises in a purchaser, the money having been paid off. Re Minchin's Estate, 2 W. R. 179.

4. Mortgagee. Infant Heir of.

11. A mortgagee in fee of lands of gavelkind tenure gave and devised all the residue of his estate, personal and real property, moneys, and securities, and all other effects, which should remain after paying his just debts, funeral and testamentary expenses, to his wife, for her own use and benefit:—Held, that in consequence of the devise by the will, no estate in the mortgage premises remained vested in the infant co-heirs in gavelkind of the mortgagee; and an order was therefore refused, upon a petition presented under the Trustee Act 1850, praying an order vesting in the infant's estate in the petitioner. Re Field's Mortgage, 9 Hare 414; 21 L. J., N. S., Ch., 175; 15 Jur. 1004.

12. Where the legal estate was outstanding in the infant heir of a deceased mortgagee, and the equity of redemption had been devised by the mortgagor to his three daughters charged with a pecuniary legacy, ordered, upon petition under the Trustee Act 1850, that the legal estate should be vested in the daughters subject to the legacy. Re Ellerthorpe, 18 Jur. 669; 2 Eq. Rep. 1146.

1. One of the executors of a deceased mortgagee was a married woman, and the legal estate, as to which there was an intestacy, had descended to the infant heir-at-law of the mortgagee. To save the necessity of an acknowledgment under the Fines and Recoveries Act by the executrix upon a reconveyance to the mortgagor, order made upon petition under the Trustee Act 1850, vesting the legal estate in the executors, their heirs and assigns, to such uses, etc., as they should appoint; and in default of and until appointment, to the use of the executors in fee, subject to the equity of redemption therein. Re Powell, 6 W. R. 136.

5. Joint Mortgagees.

2. A legal estate vested in a mortgagee having descended on two co-parceners, one of whom was out of the jurisdiction, an order was made vesting it in the other alone. Re Templor's Trusts, 4 N. R. 494.

3. The Court has no jurisdiction under the Trustee Act 1850 to appoint a person to convey lands in mortgage for the estate therein of a joint mortgagee out of the jurisdiction of the Court. Re Osborn, 40 L. J., Ch., 706; 12 L. R., Eq., 392; 25 L. T., N. S., 151.

4. One of three joint mortgagees, who were trustees, went abroad, and in his absence the mortgage was paid off, and by a deed, to which he, with the other trustees, was named a party, but which he never executed, the debt and security, except the legal estate outstanding in him, were vested in the transferee of the mortgage. Afterwards a new trustee was by deed appointed a trustee in his place:—Held, that the neglect or refusal of the old trustee to convey the outstanding legal estate brought the case within the Trustee Acts, and that the Court had jurisdiction under those Acts to vest in the transferee the outstanding legal estate. Re Walker, 3 L. R., Ch. D., 209.

1. Refusal to Transfer or Pay Dividends.

5. The surviving trustee of a sum of stock neglected, for twenty-eight days after a request in writing had been made to him by persons who had been duly appointed new trustees, to transfer the stock to them. The Court held, that they were persons absolutely entitled to the stock, within the meaning of the Trustee Act 1850, and ordered the stock to be transferred to them. Exp. Russell, 1 Sim., N. S., 404; 20 L. J., N. S., Ch., 196; 15 Jur. 100.

6. The person entitled for life to the dividends of stock held in trust requested, in writing, two executors of a sole deceased trustee, in whose name the stock was standing in the bank-book, to receive the dividends, and they made default for twenty-eight days in doing so. Upon the petition of the person entitled for life to the dividends, the Court declared that the right to receive the dividends which accrued due prior to such request was vested in the petitioner; but held, that it had no authority to make any order as to any dividends accrued, or to accrue, subsequent to the date of the request. Re Hartnall, Exp. Hodges, 5 De G. & Sm. 111; 21 L. J., N. S., Ch., 384; 16 Jur. 33.

7. Stock was standing in the names of A. and B. upon trust for C. for life, with remainders over. By an order made in a cause instituted by C. against A. and B., with respect to the stock, it was ordered that A. and B. should transfer the stock to the credit of the cause. A. refused to make the transfer. A petition was presented by C. under the Trustee Act 1850, and in that cause, praying that the right to transfer the stock might be vested in B. alone:—Held, that the Court had not jurisdiction to make the order. MacKenzie v. MacKenzie, 21 L. J., N. S., Ch., 385; 16 Jur. 723; 5 De G. & Sm. 338.

8. The 13 & 14 Vict., c. 60, gives power to the Court to make a vesting order in cases where a sole trustee, or one of two or more trustees of stock, shall refuse to transfer the same according to the direction of the person absolutely entitled. Where there were two trustees, and both refused to transfer:—Held, that the Act did not apply. Re Spanforth, 12 W. R. 978; 10 L. T., N. S., 641.

9. On the neglect of old trustees to transfer stock to new trustees appointed by the Court, the Court will, upon motion, vest the right to transfer stock in the new trustees, and that whether the order upon the old trustees was made in a cause or upon petition. Re Holbrook, 29 L. J., Ch., 200; 8 W. R. 3.

10. On the refusal of a trustee to comply with an order directing the assignment of trust property, the Court, after a lapse of twenty-eight days, and on an ex parte application, made an order vesting the property in the person entitled to it. Knight v. Knight, 14 L. T., N. S., 161.

11. One of the three executors of a surviving trustee of canal shares was of unsound mind, and the other two, when applied to by the persons absolutely entitled to the shares, declined to do anything:—Held, that an order could be made vesting the right to transfer the shares in the persons beneficially entitled. Re White, 5 L. R., Ch., 698.

12. One of the executors of the surviving trustee of a settlement was a lunatic. The other two executors refused to transfer some shares included in the settlement to the person absolutely entitled to them:—Held, that a vesting order could not be made under the Trustee Act 1850, s. 24, but that a petition in lunacy must be presented. Re Nicholl, 18 W. R. 443; 22 L. T., N. S., 323.

1. The Court has jurisdiction, under the 23rd section of the Trustee Act 1850, and having reference to the interpretation clause (s. 2) of the Act, to make an order vesting trust property in new trustees, where two or more present trustees improperly refused to transfer it. Re Hyatt's Trusts, 21 L. R., Ch. D., 846; 51 L. J., Ch., 742.

2. A trustee having refused to convey certain shares to new trustees duly appointed, a notice was served upon him under the 24th section of the Trustee Act 1850, and on a petition being afterwards presented which was not served on the recusant trustee, the Court made a vesting order. Re Baxter's Will, 2 Sm. & G. (App.) v.

2. Where no Legal Personal Representative of Surviving Trustee.

3. Stock was vested in the names of three trustees, in trust for the benefit of a lunatic for life, and, after her decease, for her children; the last surviving trustee having died, his widow and executrix refused to prove his will. The Court, upon petition, appointed new trustees, and directed that they should obtain a limited administration to the last surviving trustee for the purpose of procuring a transfer of the stock to themselves. Re Needham, 1 J. & L. 34; 6 Ir. Eq. R. 557.

4. The 13 & 14 Vict., c. 60, held to apply to a case in which the executor of a surviving trustee had not proved the will, and had neglected to transfer stock on the requisitions of new trustees appointed out of Court. Re Ellis, 24 Beav. 426.

The Court directed the circumstances, bringing a case within the Trustee Act, to be inserted in an order vesting the right to transfer stock. Id.

5. Where all the trustees of stock had died, and there was no personal representative of the survivor, and new trustees had been appointed under a power in the settlement, the Court, under s. 32 of the Trustee Act 1850 (13 & 14 Vict., c. 60), re-appointed the same persons trustees, and under s. 35 made an order vesting in them the right to call for the transfer of the stock the subject of the trusts. Re McCarthy, 1 L. R., Ir., 16.

6. When the surviving trustee of a fund, standing in the names of trustees in the books of the Bank of England, died leaving no personal representative, the Court, upon a petition by the person beneficially entitled, appointed him trustee of the fund, and ordered it to be transferred into his name. Re Dickson or Dixon, 27 L. T., N. S., 671; 21 W. R. 220.

7. When the legal personal representative of the last surviving trustee of a settlement was dead, the Court made an order vesting stock standing in the name of the last surviving trustee in the persons entitled thereto. Re Hilliard's Settlement Trust, 42 L. T. 79.

8. The survivor of two trustees of stock under a will having died leaving no legal personal representative, the cestuis que trust- out and two new trustees, who had been appointed under a power in the will, presented a petition asking that the right to transfer the stock—which was then standing in the names of the deceased trustees—might vest in the new trustees, under s. 25 of the Trustee Act 1850. The Court made the order—considering itself bound by Dalglish's Settlement (4 L. R., Ch. D., 143)—but without re-appointing the new trustees. Re Cromie's Trusts, 14 L. R., Ch. D., 304. Corrected, Id. 610; 42 L. T. 822; 23 W. R. 885.

3. Where Trustee Out of Jurisdiction or Uncertain.

9. Husband of executrix out of the jurisdiction held to be a trustee within the Trustee Act 1850, s. 22. Exp. Bradshaw, 2 De G. M. & G. 900; 22 L. J., Ch., 180.

10. The 13 & 14 Vict., c. 60, s. 22, authorises an order vesting the right to receive future dividends. Re Peyton, 2 De G. & J. 290; 4 Jur., N. S., 469; 1 L. T., N. S., 127; 6 W. R. 429.

One of four trustees of stock being out of the jurisdiction, an order was made under the 13 & 14 Vict., c. 60, s. 22, vesting the right to receive the dividends in the other three (4 Jur., N. S., 370; 27 L. J., Ch., 476; 6 W. R. 429; 1 L. T., N. S., 94; 25 Beav. 317); but was, on appeal by the bank, varied by restricting it to the dividends to accrue due during the joint lives of the three. Id.

11. A, the owner of shares in a certain bank, wrote a letter from Calcutta to the manager in England, requesting him to deliver over the shares to the manager of another bank to which A. was indebted, and to pay all dividends on the shares to, and to sell them at, the order of this last-mentioned bank. A. being still in India, the shares were sold under the authority of this letter, and the purchaser applied for an order under the Trustee Act 1850, to vest the shares and dividends in B., for the purpose of enabling the purchaser to obtain a transfer of the said shares and dividends from B. under the authority of the Act. On proof of the signature of A. to the letter, of the sale, and that the debt had ever since existed and was still due, the order was made. Re Angelo, 16 Jur. 831; 5 De G. & Sm. 278.

12. Where a trustee is out of the jurisdiction, and it is uncertain whether he is living or dead, no order can be made under the latter part of the 22nd section of the Trustee Act 1850, in the absence of evidence proving him to be a sole trustee. Re Randall's Trust, 1 W. R. 174. S. C. nom. Re Randall's Will, 1 Drew. 401.

There being three trustees of stock, two die and one is out of the jurisdiction, and it is uncertain whether he is living or dead. Upon the question whether the case was within the 22nd section under the words "sole trustee":—Held, that the case was not within the Act, and the case was ordered to stand over to present a petition under the 32nd section. S. C. 1 W. R. 207.

13. Stock was standing in the names of G. and H., trustees for a lunatic. G. died in 1864, and E. was his executor, H. having died long previously, but no such proof of his death as the bank would act upon could be fur nished. An order was made under s. 22 of the Trustee Act 1850, appointing the officer of the bank to concur with E. in transferring the stock into court:—Held, that such order could not be made on the petition of the committee alone. Re Bourne, 2 De G. J. & S. 426.

1. Husband of executrix out of jurisdiction held to be a trustee within the Trustee Act 1850, s. 22. Re Denison, Exp. Bradshaw, 2 De G. M. & G. 900.

4. Infant Trustee.

2. Before the passing of the Trustee Act Extension (15 & 16 Vict., c. 55) the Court had no authority to make a vesting order with regard to stock held by an infant sole trustee who was out of the jurisdiction of the Court. Cramer v. Cramer, 5 De G. & Sm. 312; 16 Jur. 831.

An infant trustee of stock in the jurisdiction not being, within the Trustee Act 1850, s. 22, an infant and sole trustee out of the jurisdiction, is not a sole trustee of stock out of the jurisdiction within the meaning of the 22nd section. Ib.

3. The sole trustee of money for A. and B. invested it in stock in the joint names of himself and B. (an infant); after the death of the trustee and A., the infant was held to be a trustee within the 13 & 14 Vict., c. 60, and 15 & 16 Vict., 55, s. 3, and a vesting order was made. Sanders v. Homer, 25 Beav. 467; 6 W. R. 476.

4. An infant declared a trustee of stock standing in his own name, and to which he was absolutely entitled, in order to obtain payment of the dividends to his guardians. Re Westwood, 6 N. R. 61.

5. Where an investment in consols has been made by executors, by mistake, in the names of infants, for the purposes of re-investment, the infants must be considered as trustees for the executors, and a declaration will be made by the Court to that effect. Rives v. Rives, 14 L. T., N. S., 351.

6. Money payable under a will to an infant at twenty-one, with maintenance and education, out of the income in the meantime, was invested in stock in the joint names of the executors and the infant. The executors having died:—Held, that the infant was a trustee of the stock within the meaning of the Trustee Acts. Gardner v. Comles, 24 W. R. 920; 3 L. R., Ch. D., 304.

7. Where stock to which an infant was beneficially entitled had been invested in the joint names of himself and another person:—Held, that the Court had jurisdiction under the 3rd section of the Trustee Extension Act 1852 to make an order vesting in such other person the stock to transfer such stock. Re Harwood, 20 L. R., Ch. D., 536; 51 L. J., Ch., 578; 30 W. R. 595.

8. A trustee of property, held in trust for A. B. absolutely, having become lunatic, A. B. presented a petition asking that the property might be vested in himself:—Held, that such an order ought not to be made, but that a new trustee ought to be appointed and the property vested in him. Re Holland, Re Howarth's Trusts, 16 L. R., Ch. D., 672; 50 L. J., Ch., 271; 44 L. T. 561; 29 W. R. 449.

5. Vesting Right to Stock in Beneficiaries.

9. Where a chose in action is vested in two trustees within the jurisdiction, the Court will not make an order vesting it in the cestuis que trustent only. Semble, the same rule applies to the case of an order directing the transfer of shares in a bank. Re Brass's Trusts, 4 W. R. 764.

10. A sum of 500*l.* stood settled on the trusts of a marriage settlement. The trustees were dead; there were no children; the wife was fifty-eight years old, and had assigned all her interest to her husband, who was one of the cestuis que trustent. On the petition of husband and wife, the Court ordered that the right to transfer might vest in the husband, and that he might transfer to himself. Re Ryan, 9 W. R. 137.

11. Husband of executrix out of the jurisdiction held to be a trustee within the Trustee Act 1850, s. 22. Exp. Bradshaw, 2 De G. M. & G. 900; 22 L. J., Ch., 180.

12. A surviving trustee of stock died leaving no personal representative. The person beneficially entitled was appointed trustee of the fund, which was ordered to be transferred into his name. Re Dickson or Dixon, 21 W. R. 220; 27 L. T., N. S., 671.

VIII. TRUSTEE OUT OF JURISDICTION OR NOT TO BE FOUND.

1. In General, 6819.

2. Absent Trustee (Trustee Act 1850, s. 49), 6820.

1. In General.

13. There being a direction in a will to sell real estate without naming the person to sell, and no devise of the real estate, and it not being clear that there was a sufficient legal power of sale (implied) in the executor, or a sufficient charge of debts to enable him to convey the legal estate to a purchaser, the Court, at the hearing, directed a sale, declaring the heir-at-law, who was out of the jurisdiction, a trustee within the meaning of the 13 & 14 Vict., c. 60, and made a vesting order under s. 9. Hooper v. Strutton, 12 W. R. 367.

14. When two persons, of whom both were legally entitled as co-parceners to copyholds, but one only had any beneficial interest therein, were admitted as tenants in common, and the lord afterwards enfranchised to both, their heirs and assigns, the other was held to be "solely seised upon trust" within the meaning of s. 9 of the Trustee Act 1850. Murray v. Spicer, 16 W. R. 332; 5 L. R., Eq. 527; 37 L. J., Ch., 505.

15. After a bankruptcy, and the appointment of assignees, the proceedings were suspended under the Bankruptcy Act 1861, s. 110, reserving the rights and jurisdiction of the assignees; and the Court held, that one of the assignees who had gone abroad was a trustee within the meaning of the Trustee Act 1850. Re Joyce, 2 L. R., Eq., 576.

16. Vesting order made under the Trustee Act 1850, where purchaser entitled to estate of a dower trustee who was in Australia.

Collard v. Roe, 6 W. R. 348; 27 L. J., Ch., 295; 4 Jur., N. S., 431; 4 De G. & J. 525.

Where one Trustee Abroad and New Trustees Appointed.] See IV. III. 4. post.

In other Special Cases.] See other Subdivisions.

2. Absent Trustee (Trustee Act 1850, s. 49).

1. The Court directed a cause to be certified as fit for hearing, although one of the defendants, a trustee, who could not be found, had not entered an appearance. Westhead v. Sale, 6 W. R. 52; 3 Jur., N. S., 1209.

2. The Court ordered a cause to be set down for hearing, notwithstanding one of the defendants, who was a trustee, had not entered an appearance. Burrell v. Maxwell, 25 L. T., N. S., 655.

IX. VENDOR. HEIR OR DEVISEE OF.

3. Two partners in a brewery, part of the property of which consisted of freehold and copyhold estates, covenanted that the survivor should have the option of purchasing the share of the deceased partner in the property of the partnership at a valuation; and the survivor accordingly exercised such option, and paid to the executors of the deceased partner the amount at which his share was valued. The share of the deceased partner and his legal estate, in part of the freehold and copyhold estates of the partnership, descended or became vested in his infant heir; but the Court refused, upon petition or motion under the Trustee Act 1850, without suit, to declare the infant heir a trustee for the surviving partner. Re Burt, 9 Hare 289; 22 L. J., N. S., Ch., 153.

4. The infant heir of an intestate who had died after contracting to sell his real estate is not a trustee within the meaning of the Trustee Act 1850, s. 29 (Trustee Act Extension, s. 1) until the constructive trust shall have been declared by a decree of the Court. Re Carpenter, 1 Kay 418.

5. Where a testator had, in his lifetime, agreed to give an option to his lessee to purchase the fee, and the lessee did not declare for the option until after the testator's decease, an infant tenant in tail of the legal estate under the will is not a trustee for the lessee desirous of purchasing within the meaning of the Trustee Act 1850; but a claim for specific performance was directed to be filed. Re Weeding, 4 Jur., N. S., 707.

6. The Court has no jurisdiction on a petition presented under the Trustee Acts to decide on a disputed question of title. Re Draper, 9 W. R. 805.

7. Where a vendor, after conveying the equitable estate, became seised of the legal estate, and died intestate, and without an heir:—Held, that he was a trustee within the 13 & 14 Vict., c. 60. Re Wilkinson, 10 Jur., N. S., 716; 12 W. R. 522; 10 L. T., N. S., 89.

8. Where a person seised in fee of land, which a railway company was empowered to take compulsorily, entered into a voluntary agreement for sale with the company, and after the purchase money had been paid, and the company had taken possession, and had accepted the title, the vendor died intestate, leaving an infant heir at law:—Held, that the heir at law was a trustee within the Trustee Act 1850, and that an order might be made for a conveyance of the legal estate without a bill filed. Re Russell, 35 L. J., Ch., 461; 12 Jur., N. S., 224.

In such a case service of the petition on the infant is necessary. Ib.

9. A., without devising lands to his executors, L. and G., directs them to sell the lands and to apply the money. A., after date of his will, contracts to sell the land to X., who objects to the title of the executors, and requires the heirs of A. to join in the conveyance. The Court made an order vesting the estate which was in A.'s heirs in the executors of his will. Semble, where two executors are appointed and only one proves, the Court will not make a vesting order in favour of the one who proves, unless the other disclaims. Re Badcock's Trusts, 2 W. R. 386.

10. When the owner of lands agrees to sell to a railway company land which it has power to take for the purposes of its undertaking, and afterwards dies, having devised his real estate to an infant, the infant devisee is a trustee within the meaning of the Trustee Act 1850, and a vesting order may be made on a petition under that Act. Re Lowry, 15 L. R., Eq., 78; 21 W. R. 428; 42 L. J., Ch., 509.

In Case of Copyholds.] See II. supra.

X. VESTING ORDERS. WHEN MADE IN OTHER CASES.

11. The Court has authority to make a vesting order under the Trustee Act 1850 in cases where there is nothing to prevent a conveyance of the trust property to the trustees appointed by the Court. Re Manning's Trusts, 1 Kay (App.) xxviii.

A vesting order made on the appointment of new trustees, two of whom were possessed of the legal estate in the trust property under a previous attempted appointment of them as new trustees, the will creating the trust containing no power to appoint new trustees. S. C. 2 W. R. 289; 2 Eq. Rep. 221.

12. The Court has jurisdiction to make a vesting order of the legal estate in mortgaged lands, where a transfer of the mortgaged debt had been ordered by the Court, and it is doubtful whether the trustees of the debt have power to convey the legal estate. Re Hughes, 2 Hem. & M. 695.

13. A testator having devised to two trustees upon trust to sell, and one of the trustees named being an infant, the Court declined to make an order vesting the whole estate in the other trustee, being adult, but appointed a person to be trustee in the room of the infant, and vested the whole estate in such new trustee with the original adult trustee jointly. Re Porter, 2 Jur., N. S., 349; 25 L. J., Ch., 688; 4 W. R. 217.

14. A married woman who was the legal representative of a testator, in exercise of a power reserved to her by her marriage settlement, made her will, and appointed her husband executor. The husband proved the will, and also obtained letters of administration to all other his wife's personal estate. He also applied for supplemental letters of administration, to enable him to continue the chain of representation to the testator; but they were refused by the Court of Probate. The Court made an order, appointing the husband trustee of the trust funds which were standing in the testator's name, and vesting in him the right to transfer them. Re Herbert, 8 W. R. 272.

1. Lands bought by a father in the name of his son held, under the circumstances of the case, not to amount to an advancement; but the Lord Chancellor declined to make an order to that effect on the petition of the father, though the petition was founded on the certificate of the Master under s. 38 of the Trustee Act 1850. Collinson v. Collinson, 3 De G. M. & G. 409.

2. Upon the sale of an estate which stood limited to the ordinary uses to bar dower, but over which the tenant for life was not entitled to a power, the objection was taken by the purchaser that the dower trustee, who was then in Australia, was a necessary party to the conveyance:—Held, on a bill for specific performance, filed by the vendor, that the purchaser was entitled to such estate as was then vested in the dower trustee. Specific performance was decreed, and a vesting order made under the Trustee Act 1850. Collard v. Roe, 6 W. R. 348; 27 L. J., Ch. 295; 4 Jur., N. S., 431; 1 L. T., N. S., 148; 4 De G. & J. 525.

3. The Court will make a vesting order under 15 & 16 Vict., c. 55, s. 2, to defeat an attempt at extortion on the part of a trustee. Re O'Donnell, 19 W. R. 522.

4. A married woman living separate from her husband invested, in the names of her son and daughter, moneys arising from savings of her separate estate. The mother appointed her daughter her executrix. The son having become lunatic, a transfer to the daughter as executrix was ordered on petition without bill. Re De Visne, 2 De G. J. & S. 17; 12 W. R. 140; 9 L. T., N. S., 668; 33 L. J., Ch., 332.

5. When a trustee and executor has proved the will only, and done no other act, and taken no notice of applications, nor appeared on a petition served upon him, the Court will appoint another trustee in his room, and make a vesting order under the Trustee Act 1850. Re Byrne, 18 L. T., N. S., 631.

Where Trustees have a mere Power and no Legal Estate. 6. The Court of Chancery has not authority, under the Trustee Acts of 1850 and 1852, to make a vesting order of real estate in proposed trustees, where the testator by his will directed his "executors" to sell the estate after the death of one of them, who was also tenant for life; the surviving executor being also a person of unsound mind, not found so by inquisition. Re Porter's Will, Exp. Franklin, 3 W. R. 583; 3 Eq. Rep. 719.

7. The power of appointing new trustees conferred by the 13 & 14 Vict., c. 60, s. 32, applies to the simple office of trustee, and it is not necessary to the exercise thereof that any estate or property should be vested in the trustee. Re Boyce, 10 Jur., N. S., 138; 33

L. J., Ch., 390; 12 W. R. 359; 9 L. T., N. S., 670; 4 De G. & S. 205.

A testator appointed A. B. to be trustee of his will; and after devising all his real estate to his wife for life, he directed his trustee, on the death of his wife, to sell his real estate, with power to sell the same by public auction or private contract, etc., and with power to execute all such instruments and assurances as might be necessary to carry out the sale:—Held, that, whether or not A. B. took any estate in the realty by implication, he was a trustee within the Trustee Act 1850. S. C. 3 N. R. 396.

8. Vesting order prefaced with a statement that A. B. was a trustee within the meaning of the Trustee Act 1850, and died without an heir. Hughes v. Wells, 2 W. R. 575.

9. A vesting order should contain some description of the property intended to be comprised in it. Re Ord's Trust, 3 W. R. 386.

10. A petition was presented under the Trustee Act 1850 for an order to vest the legal estate, which was outstanding, in the infant heir of an intestate mortgagee. The owner of the equity of redemption had devised it to his three daughters, charged with a legacy of 200*l*. The three daughters applied that the estate might be vested in them, subject to the legacy, and the Court made the order. Re Ellerthorpe, 18 Jur. 669; 2 Eq. Rep. 1146.

11. If the Bank of England is required to act upon an order made in pursuance of the 13 & 14 Vict., c. 60, and 15 & 16 Vict., c. 55, the circumstances bringing the case within the Acts must appear upon the order of Court. Re Mainwaring, 26 Beav. 172; 5 Jur., N. S., 52; 28 L. J., Ch., 97; 2 L. T., N. S., 154.

12. Where an order is made under the Trustee Acts, subject to the production of evidence to the registrar, the order will bear date on or after the day of the production of such evidence. Re Havelock, 11 Jur., N. S., 906; 14 W. R. 174.

13. The Court directed the circumstances bringing a case within the Trustee Act 1850 to be inserted in an order vesting the right to transfer stock. Re Ellis, 24 Beav. 426.

14. Form of order on appointment of new trustees where the trust funds are invested on unauthorised securities and it is desired not to transfer them into the names of new trustees, but to sell them and re-invest the funds in accordance with the trusts of the settlement. Re Peacock, 14 L. 2. Limitations in.

1. A mortgagee in fee of real estate having died intestate as to the mortgaged premises, which descended on his death to his infant heir, the Court, upon petition by his executors, one of whom was a married woman, made an order under the 13 & 14 Vict., c. 60, vesting the legal estate in the petitioners to such uses as they should appoint, and in default to the use of petitioners in fee, subject to the equity of redemption, in order to enable them to reconvey to the mortgagor without the necessity of having the deed acknowledged by the married woman under the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 74. Re Powell, 4 Kay & J. 338.

2. Upon a petition presented under the Trustee Act 1850, s. 7, the Court declined, without further consideration, to make an order to vest the legal estate in a purchaser to uses in bar of dower. Such an order was subsequently made by V.-Ch. Kindersley. Re Howard's Estate, 5 De G. & Sm. 435; 21 L. J., Ch., 437.

3. As to limitations in an order under the Trustee Act 1850, vesting the legal estate in a purchaser to uses in bar of dower. See Re Lush, Exp. Grice, 5 De G. & Sm. 436. n.

4. Upon petition presented under the Trustee Act 1850, an order made vesting the legal estate in a purchaser to uses to bar dower. Davey v. Miller, 1 W. R. 465; 1 Eq. Rep. 236; 1 Sm. & G. (App.) xix.; 17 Jur. 908; 22 L. J., Ch., 1054.

See also Next Subdivision.

3. Effect of.

5. A vesting order, under the Trustee Act 1850, will, if consented to by the protector of the settlement, bar all estates in remainder, and not pass a base fee only under the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 74. Powell v. Matthews, 1 Jur., N. S., 973.

6. When, by order under the Trustee Act 1850, the estate of a trustee tenant in tail who is of unsound mind is vested in any person, the order should only direct the land to be vested in such person for all the estate which the trustee could convey, if sane, and need not refer to the execution of a disentailing deed, or to the Fines and Recoveries Act. Mason v. Mason, Re Mason, 7 L. R., Ch. D., 707; 26 W. R. 565.

Section 3 of the Trustee Act 1850 will then free the land from the estate tail. Id.

7. Where copyholds devised to an infant for life, remainder to his first and other sons in tail, were decreed to be sold to pay the debts of the testator, and an order was made in the cause, and pursuant to the 1 Will. 4, c. 47, that the guardian of the infant should surrender them to the purchaser:—Held, that the purchaser was entitled to require that an order should be made discharging the contingent rights of the unborn issue of the infant, under s. 29 of the Trustee Act 1850. Wood v. Beeston, 1 Kay & J. 213; 3 Eq. Rep. 238.

8. Contracts for sale of different parts of an estate held under the same title had been entered into with different purchasers by a father and son, who had a joint power of appointment under a settlement. The son died before the conveyances were executed. The legal estate under the settlement thereupon became vested in the father for life, with remainder in tail to an infant. A bill was filed by one of the purchasers, on behalf of himself and all other purchasers, etc., for the purpose of having the several contracts carried into effect. The cause coming on to be heard before Turner, V.-Ch., he declined to make a decree against the infants in a suit of that form, but suggested his willingness to do so if the bill were amended by making the several purchasers parties as co-plaintiffs, and the defendants undertook not to raise the objection of multifariousness. The bill having been amended accordingly, the decree was now made, and directions given for the completion of the several purchases against the infants and unborn persons claiming under the settlement. Hargreaves v. Wright, 1 W. R. 408.

9. The Court will, upon petition under the Trustee Acts, discharge the contingent rights of unborn children in favour of purchasers under a decree, and make an order vesting in such purchasers the estates of infants and the contingent estates of unborn infants. Wake v. Wake, 1 W. R. 283; 17 Jur. 545.

10. Vesting order as to the equity of redemption in an infant, against whom in a foreclosure suit a decree for sale had been made, refused, on the ground that the mortgagee had the legal estate, and that all equities were bound by the order for sale. Re Williams, 5 De G. & Sm. 515.

11. Foreclosure made absolute, and it appearing that the mortgagor could not be found, he was declared a trustee, and a vesting order was made vesting the property in the mortgagees. Lechmere v. Clamp, 31 Beav. 578.

12. After a sale under a decree for partition in a suit under the Partition Act 1868, it appeared that one-sixth of the estate was vested in B. (one of the parties to the suit), a bachelor, for life, with remainders to his issue in tail, with ultimate remainders to the right heirs of the plaintiff:—Held, that the power (to make declarations as to the interests of unborn persons, and that such persons on coming into existence would be trustees) given by the Trustee Act 1850, s. 30, which is incorporated in the Partition Act 1868, enabled the Court to make an order to appoint a person to convey the legal estate in the one-sixth limited to the right heirs of the plaintiff. Basnett v. Mozon, 44 L. J., Ch., 556; 20 L. R., Eq., 20; 23 W. R. 544. And see Lees v. Coulton, 20 L. R., Eq., 20; 44 L. J., Ch., 556; 23 W. R. 544.

4. Other Matters.

13. An order was made on a petition under the Trustee Act 1850, appointing three new trustees, and vesting property in them jointly with a fourth surviving trustee, but subject to the production of certain evidence. Before this evidence could be obtained the fourth trustee died. Upon motion that the order might be dated on the day it was pronounced:—Held, that the proper course was to make a supplemental order on the petition. Re Havelock, 14 W. R. 26; 13 L. T., N. S., 272; 11 Jur., N. S., 906; 14 W. R. 174.

1. By an order made under the 13 & 14 Vict., c. 60, real estate was inadvertently vested in an alien. The Court declined varying the order, by inserting the name of a natural-born subject, without the consent of the Crown; but the order was made upon a re-hearing. Re Giraud, 32 Beav. 385; 9 Jur., N. S., 862; 11 W. R. 607; 2 N. R. 9.

2. In cases where new trustees are appointed under the Trustee Act 1850, the real estates subject to the trust ought to be conveyed to them by deed, and the vesting order ought only to be resorted to when it is inconvenient to obtain a conveyance. Langhorn v. Langhorn, 21 L. J., Ch., 860.

XII. ORDER TO CONVEY OR TRANSFER INSTEAD OF VESTING ORDER.

3. Real estates devised to married women and infants having been sold under a decree in a creditor's suit, in several lots, upon petition under the Trustee Acts, the Court appointed the plaintiff's solicitor to convey their shares to the several purchasers; form of the order. Hancox v. Spittle, 3 Sm. & G. 478.

4. A testator devised real estates to trustees, upon trust to sell and pay debts, and apply the surplus as therein mentioned. The trustees disclaimed the trusts by deed; the heir-at-law of the testator could not be found:—Held, in a suit for the sale of the estates and administration, that the case fell within the meaning of s. 9 of the 13 & 14 Vict., c. 60; and that an order appointing a party to convey to a purchaser was correct. Wilks v. Groom, 6 De G. M. & G. 205; 2 Jur., N. S., 1077.

The Court has jurisdiction to appoint a person to convey to purchasers under a decree where the trustee of the will had disclaimed, and need not under the Trustee Act 1850, s. 33, appoint trustees in the place of those who have disclaimed. S. C. 4. W. R. 828.

5. Upon a partition, the shares of the parties were very minute and complicated. The Court, to save expense, and instead of directing a conveyance of the several shares, declared each of the parties trustees as to the shares allotted to them, and then vested the whole trust estate in a single new trustee, under the Trustee Acts, with directions to convey to the several parties their allotted shares. Shepherd v. Churchill, 25 Beav. 21.

6. When the surviving trustee of a fund, standing in the names of trustees in the books of the Bank of England, died, leaving no personal representative, the Court, upon a petition by the person beneficially entitled, appointed him trustee of the fund and ordered it to be transferred into his name. Re Dickson or Dixon, 27 L. T., N. S., 671; 21 W. R. 220.

7. A gave all his real and personal estate and effects, of what nature or kind soever, to B., upon trust to pay to his wife for life the rents of this real estate, and the interest on all sums due to him on mortgages, bond, note, or other security, and after her death to get in all debts owing to him on any security, and pay the same over to other persons. B. died intestate, leaving C., his eldest son and heir-at-law, a person of unsound mind and an infant:—Held, that the legal estate in the mortgaged property passed to B., and that he was a trustee; and persons were appointed to convey the property comprised in the mortgages to the purchasers thereof, under ss. 3 and 20 of the Trustee Act 1850. Re Arrow-smith, 4 Jur., N. S., 1123; 27 L. J., Ch., 704; 6 W. R. 642.

8. A donee of a power of jointuring under a settlement was ordered, in a specific performance suit instituted by his wife, to execute the power by a deed to be approved of by the Master, whereby 1,000*l.* per annum was to be appointed as the plaintiffs jointure. On his refusal to obey the decree:—Held, that under the Trustee Acts 1850 and 1852 he might be declared a trustee of all the rights, interests, estates, and property acquired by him under the settlement; and the Court appointed a person to execute the requisite deed in his place, under the Trustee Act 1850. Exp. Mornington (Countess), 4 De G. M. & G. 537. S. C. nom. Wellesley v. Wellesley, 22 L. J., Ch., 966. S. C. nom. Mornington v. Mornington, 1 W. R. 248; 1 Eq. Rep. 368.

XIII. ORDERS WHEN BINDING ON BANK OF ENGLAND.

9. An order discharged, on the objection of the bank as being unauthorised by the Trustee Act 1850; and another order substituted under the 1 Will. 4, c. 65, s. 32. It is the duty of the Bank of England to bring an erroneous order, under which it is asked to act under the notice of the Court. Re Westwood, 6 N. R. 316.

10. If the Bank of England is required to act upon an order made in pursuance of the 13 & 14 Vict., c. 60, and 15 & 16 Vict., c. 55, the circumstances bringing the case within the Acts must appear upon the order of Court. Re Mainwaring, 26 Beav. 172; 5 Jur., N. S., 52; 28 L. J., Ch., 97; 32 L. T. 154.

11. It is of great importance to have the books of the Bank of England clear; and, upon the construction of an Act directing a transfer of stock, if there is room for argument, the strict interpretation of the Act must be followed. Therefore, under the Trustee Act 1850, which authorises the Court to vest in new trustees the right to call for a transfer of stock, forming part of the trust estate:—Held, before the Trustee Extension Act, s. 6, passed, that the order ought to be in that form, and should not purport to vest in the new trustees the right to the stock; and that the bank was not bound to permit the new trustees to make a transfer into their names. Re Smyth's Settlement, 4 De G. & Sm. 499; 15 Jur. 644; 20 L. J., Ch., 255.

12. Stock was standing in the name of a person of unsound mind, part of the stock being his own beneficially, and part of it being vested in him as trustee. The Court had made an order appointing new trustees, and vesting in them the right to call for a transfer of the trust stock, and to receive the arrears of dividends. It was found that an order in this form could not be acted on as to the arrears of dividend, since the bank could not pay arrears on part of a sum. The Court therefore varied the order, so as to enable the new trustees to receive the past dividends on the whole stock, and to retain, for the purposes of the trust, that portion which had accrued due in respect of the trust stock. Re Stenart, 2 De G. F. & J. 1; 8 W. R. 425.

1. In an action commenced by writ for the administration of a testator's estate, an order for accounts was made in chambers under Order XV. (Judicature Act). Subsequently an order was made in chambers directing the plaintiff and defendant to transfer a sum of stock into court. The defendant could not be found, and an order was made in chambers vesting the right to transfer the stock in the plaintiff, and directing him to transfer it into court. The bank objecting to act on this order, on the ground of its having been made in chambers, a motion was made by arrangement for an order directing the bank to act upon it:—Held, by Jessel, M.R., that the judge had jurisdiction to make the order on summons in chambers, and that the bank ought to be ordered to act upon it. Frodsham v. Frodsham, 15 L. R., Ch. D., 317; 43 L. T. 558; 29 W. R. 165; 50 L. J., Ch., 233.

Held, by the Court of Appeal, that, having regard to the 18 & 19 Vict., c. 134, s. 16, Cons. Ord. XXXV., Rule 1, and the course of practice, there was so much doubt as to the jurisdiction as to render it unsafe to make such a vesting order in chambers, and that the order directing the bank to act upon it ought to be discharged. Ib.

XIV. DISOBEDIENCE TO ORDERS. ATTACHMENT.

2. The case of a trustee refusing to obey the order of the Court is not a case provided for by the Trustee Act 1850, but it is a case within the 1 Will. 4, c. 36, s. 15, the 15th subdivision; and any proceeding to obtain the transfer should be taken under that Act. Mackenzie v. Mackenzie, 5 De G. & Sm. 338; 16 Jur., 723; 21 L. J., Ch., 385, 386.

By an order expressed to be made in a cause and in the matter of the Trustee Act 1850, a defendant was directed to transfer stock. Upon an affidavit of service of this order, which was intitled in the cause only, a writ of attachment for disobedience was issued, on which the defendant was in custody. The writ was discharged for irregularity on account of a variance, but the Court declined to give the defendant costs. Ib.

3. When a trustee is ordered to transfer a fund of consols admitted to be due from him and subsequently default is made, a writ of attachment will issue. Digby v. Turner, 21 W. R. 471; 28 L. T., N. S., 296.

4. When a person has been directed to execute a lease, but refuses to do so, the Court can only enforce such execution by attachment, the Trustee Act 1850 having omitted to provide for such a case. Grace v. Baynton, 25 W. R. 506.

XV. PRACTICE.

1. In General, 6824.

2. Parties and Service, 6825.

1. In General.

5. An order under the Trustee Act 1850 may be made in a cause without a petition presented in the Act. Wood v. Beetonstone, 1 Kay & J. 213; 3 Eq. Rep. 238.

6. Upon a petition for the re-conveyance of mortgaged premises, the equity of redemption of which was in trustees, upon the question whether some of several cestuis que trustent sufficiently represented the parties beneficially interested under the Trustee Act 1850:—Held, that irrespective of that Act, the Court has power to adjudicate upon such a petition, under the 15 & 16 Vict., c. 86. Re Sharpley's Trust, 1 W. R. 271; 1 Eq. Rep. 40.

7. The Court will make an order under the 4th section of the 15 & 16 Vict., c. 55, upon motion made in a matter as well as in a cause. Re Holbrook, 5 Jur., N. S., 1333; 1 L. T., N. S., 18.

8. Order made vesting property in a mortgagee in a foreclosure suit without requiring a petition to be presented under the Trustee Act 1850. Harrison v. Smith, 17 W. R. 646.

9. A debtor resident in India pledged shares, held by him in a joint-stock banking company in England, with a creditor in England, with an authority by letter to sell, which was communicated to and recognised by the banking company. The creditor, in exercise of the authority, sold the shares to a purchaser. Upon the petition of the purchaser:—Held, that the shares were "stock," and that the debtor in India, being constructively a trustee, was a trustee for the purchaser within the the Trustee Act 1850; and the Court made an order directing a specified person to transfer the shares to the petitioner. Re Angelo, 5 De G. & Sm. 278; 16 Jur. 831.

Under the 1 Will. 4, c. 60, the Court was prohibited from making any order upon such a petition until the rights of the petitioner had been ascertained by suit; but the Trustee Act 1850 contains no such prohibition. Ib.

10. When a purchaser presented a petition for a vesting order intitled in the cause only, the petition was ordered to be amended by intitling it under the Trustee Act 1850 (13 & 14 Vict., c. 60, s. 43). Gough v. Bage, 25 L. T., N. S., 738.

11. In an action commenced by writ for the administration of a testator's estate, an order for accounts was made in chambers under Order XV. (Judicature Act). Subsequently an order was made in chambers directing the plaintiff and defendant to transfer a sum of stock into court. The defendant could not be found, and an order was made in chambers vesting the right to transfer the stock in the plaintiff, and directing him to transfer it into court. The bank objecting to act on this order, on the ground of its having been made in chambers, a motion was made by arrangement for an order directing the bank to act upon it:—Held, by Jessel, M.R., that the judge had jurisdiction to make the order on summons in chambers, and that the bank ought to be ordered to act upon it. Frodsham v. Frodsham, 15 L. R., Ch. D., 317; 43 L. T. 558; 29 W. R. 165; 50 L. J., Ch., 233.

Held, by the Court of Appeal, that, having regard to the 18 & 19 Vict., c. 134, s. 16, Consolidated Order XXXV., Rule 1, and the course of practice, there was so much doubt as to the jurisdiction as to render it unsafe to make such a vesting order in chambers, and that the order directing the bank to act upon it ought to be discharged. Ib.

Appeal.] 1. Notice of appeals from orders made under the Trustee Relief Act must, according to the true construction of Order LVIII, Rules 9, 15 (Judicature Act), be given within twenty-one days from the perfecting of the order, or, in the case of the refusal of an application, from the date of such refusal. Re Baillie, 25 W. R. 310; 4 L. R., Ch. D., 785; 46 L. J., Ch., 330; 35 L. T., N. S., 917.

2. Parties and Service.

2. Shares in an assurance office were vested in trustees, one of whom refused to assign them to new trustees who had been duly appointed. A notice having been served on the old trustee under s. 24 of the Trustee Act 1850, and a petition having been presented but not served on the old trustee, order made vesting the shares in the new trustees. Re Baxter, 2 Sm. & G. (App.) v.

3. Where a person seised in fee of land, which a railway company was empowered to take compulsorily, entered into a voluntary agreement for sale with the company, and after the purchase money had been paid, and the company had taken possession, and had accepted the title, the vendor died intestate, leaving an infant heir-at-law:—Held, that the heir-at-law was a trustee within the Trustee Act 1850. Re Russell, 35 L. J., Ch., 151; 12 Jur., N. S., 224.

In such a case service of the petition on the infant is necessary. Ib.

4. It is not necessary to serve a petition for a preliminary order, under the Trustee Extension Act 1852, s. 4, upon the trustee. Re Mount, 24 L. T., N. S., 290.

5. The Court has authority to order service upon minors residing out of the jurisdiction of a petition under the Trustee Acts 1850 and 1852 (13 & 14 Vict., c. 59, and 15 & 16 Vict., c. 56); and also a petition under the Trustee Relief Act (11 & 12 Vict., c. 68). Re Wycherley, Re Drunne, 1 L. R., Ir., 12.

6. A petition under the 13 & 14 Vict., c. 60, for the appointment of a person to convey, in the place of an infant heir of a deceased mortgagee, need not be served upon the infant. Re Willan, 9 W. R. 689.

7. A petition for vesting a legal estate outstanding in the infant heir of a deceased mortgagee must be served upon the infant. Re Jones, 22 W. R. 837.

8. A mortgagor devised his real estate to a trustee on trust for sale, the proceeds to be divided amongst certain persons named in the will. The original mortgagee having died, and her heir not being found, a petition was presented by the trustee and one of the cestuis que trustent for a vesting order under s. 19 of the Trustee Act 1850:—Held, that the trustee sufficiently represented the other cestuis que trustent, whose appearance was, therefore, dispensed with. Re Blanchard's Estate, 2 N. R. 386.

9. Real estate was devised by C. D. to trustees upon trust, after paying debts and legacies, and, subject to a certain annuity charged thereon, to convey the same to use of A. A. in fee:—Held, upon petition by the devisee of A. B. for a conveyance by the trustee of C. D.'s will, all the debts and legacies having been satisfied, that the concurrence of the annuitant to this petition was not necessary. Re Winteringham's Trusts, 3 W. R. 578.

10. A petition for an order vesting the trust estate in continuing trustees, and new trustee having been presented:—Held, that service on trustee of unsound mind was not necessary. The power was well exercised. Re East, Re Bellwood's Trusts, 8 L. R., Ch., 735; 42 L. J., Ch., 480.

XVI. COSTS.

1. Lunatic Mortgagee, 6825.
2. Vendor and Purchaser, 6826.
3. Other Cases, 6826.

1. Lunatic Mortgagee.

- (a) Liability of Mortgagee, 6825.
- (b) Liability of Mortgagor, 6826.

(a) Liability of Mortgagee.

11. Where, through the unsoundness of mind of a mortgagee (not found lunatic by inquisition), proceedings under the Trustee Act (13 & 14 Vict., c. 60), are rendered necessary to obtain the re-conveyance of the estate, the costs must be borne by the mortgagee. Exp. Sargeant, 25 L. J., Ch., 656.

12. A mortgage debt having been paid off, the committees of the estate of the mortgagee, who had become lunatic, presented a petition, which they served upon the mortgagor, for an order enabling them to re-convey the mortgaged property. The costs of the mortgagor's appearance were directed to be paid by the petitioners, and allowed to them out of the estate, with an intimation that for the future petitions of the kind ought not to be served upon mortgagors. Re Rowley, 1 De G. J. & Sm. 417; 32 L. J., Ch., 158; 11 W. R. 297; 7 L. T., N. S., 702.

13. The costs of the proceedings for obtaining from the committee of a lunatic a re-conveyance of premises mortgaged to the lunatic, will be ordered to be paid out of the lunatic's estate where the lunatic is beneficially interested in the mortgage money, and the petition is presented by the committee. Re Wheeler, 1 De G. M. & G. 434; 21 L. J., Ch., 759.

This rule will not, however, be acted on if the mortgagor presents the petition, unless in cases where the committee has declined to take that step. Ib.

14. In the case of a lunatic mortgagee, the costs of an order vesting the estate in the mortgagor must be paid by the mortgagee, but the mortgagee may have an order for the committee to convey at the expense of the lunatic's estate. Re Thomas, 1 W. R. 155.

Upon the petition of the committee of a lunatic mortgagee, an order was made vesting the estate in the mortgagor, the costs of the order to be paid out of the lunatic's estate, with the exception of the stamp, which was the order, so as to enable the new trustees to receive the past dividends on the whole stock, and to retain, for the purposes of the trust, that portion which had accrued due in respect of the trust stock. Re Stenart, 2 De G. F. & J. 1; 8 W. R. 425.

1. In an action commenced by writ for the administration of a testator's estate, an order for accounts was made in chambers under Order XV. (Judicature Act). Subsequently an order was made in chambers directing the plaintiff and defendant to transfer a sum of stock into court. The defendant could not be found, and an order was made in chambers vesting the right to transfer the stock in the plaintiff, and directing him to transfer it into court. The bank objecting to act on this order, on the ground of its having been made in chambers, a motion was made by arrangement for an order directing the bank to act upon it:—Held, by Jessel, M.R., that the judge had jurisdiction to make the order on summons in chambers, and that the bank ought to be ordered to act upon it. Frodsham v. Frodsham, 15 L. R., Ch. D., 317; 43 L. T. 558; 29 W. R. 165; 50 L. J., Ch., 233.

Held, by the Court of Appeal, that, having regard to the 18 & 19 Vict., c. 134, s. 16, Cons. Ord. XXXV., Rule 1, and the course of practice, there was so much doubt as to the jurisdiction as to render it unsafe to make such a vesting order in chambers, and that the order directing the bank to act upon it ought to be discharged. Id.

XIV. DISOBEDIENCE TO ORDERS. ATTACHMENT.

2. The case of a trustee refusing to obey the order of the Court is not a case provided for by the Trustee Act 1850, but it is a case within the 1 Will. 4, c. 36, s. 15, the 15th subdivision; and any proceeding to obtain the transfer should be taken under that Act. Mackenzie v. Mackenzie, 5 De G. & Sm. 338; 16 Jur., 723; 21 L. J., Ch., 385, 386.

By an order expressed to be made in a cause and in the matter of the Trustee Act 1850, a defendant was directed to transfer stock. Upon an affidavit of service of this order, which was intitled in the cause only, a writ of attachment for disobedience was issued, on which the defendant was in custody. The writ was discharged for irregularity on account of a variance, but the Court declined to give the defendant costs. Id.

3. When a trustee is ordered to transfer a fund of consols admitted to be due from him and subsequently default is made, a writ of attachment will issue. Digby v. Turner, 21 W. R. 471; 28 L. T., N. S., 296.

4. When a person has been directed to execute a lease, but refuses to do so, the Court can only enforce such execution by attachment, the Trustee Act 1850 having omitted to provide for such a case. Grace v. Baynton, 25 W. R. 506.

The creditor, in exercise of the authority, sold the shares to a purchaser. Upon the petition of the purchaser:—Held, that the shares were "stock," and that the debtor in India, being constructively a trustee, was a trustee for the purchaser within the Trustee Act 1850; and the Court made an order directing a specified person to transfer the shares to the petitioner. Re Angelo, 5 De G. & Sm. 278; 16 Jur. 831.

Under the 1 Will. 4, c. 60, the Court was prohibited from making any order upon such a petition until the rights of the petitioner had been ascertained by suit; but the Trustee Act 1850 contains no such prohibition. Id.

10. When a purchaser presented a petition for a vesting order intitled in the cause only, the petition was ordered to be amended by intitling it under the Trustee Act 1850 (13 & 14 Vict., c. 60, s. 43). Gough v. Bage, 25 L. T., N. S., 738.

2. Parties and Service.

2. Shares in an assurance office were vested in trustees, one of whom refused to assign them to new trustees who had been duly appointed. A notice having been served on the old trustee under s. 24 of the Trustee Act 1850, and a petition having been presented but not served on the old trustee, order made vesting the shares in the new trustees. Re Baxter, 2 Sm. & G. (App.) v.

3. Where a person seised in fee of land, which a railway company was empowered to take compulsorily, entered into a voluntary agreement for sale with the company, and after the purchase money had been paid, and the company had taken possession, and had accepted the title, the vendor died intestate, leaving an infant heir-at-law:—Held, that the heir-at-law was a trustee within the Trustee Act 1850. Re Russell, 35 L. J., Ch., 151; 12 Jur., N. S., 224.

In such a case service of the petition on the infant is necessary. Ib.

4. It is not necessary to serve a petition for a preliminary order, under the Trustee Extension Act 1852, s. 4, upon the trustee. Re Mount, 24 L. T., N. S., 290.

5. The Court has authority to order service upon minors residing out of the jurisdiction of a petition under the Trustee Acts 1850 and 1852 (13 & 14 Vict., c. 59, and 15 & 16 Vict., c. 55); and also a petition under the Trustee Relief Act (11 & 12 Vict., c. 68). Re Wycherley, Re Dunne, 1 L. R., Ir., 12.

6. A petition under the 13 & 14 Vict., c. 60, for the appointment of a person to convey, in the place of an infant heir of a deceased mortgagee, need not to be served upon the infant. Re Willan, 9 W. R. 689.

7. A petition for vesting a legal estate outstanding in the infant heir of a deceased mortgagee must be served upon the infant. Re Jones, 22 W. R. 837.

8. A mortgagor devised his real estate to a trustee on trust for sale, the proceeds to be divided amongst certain persons named in the will. The original mortgagee having died, and her heir not being found, a petition was presented by the trustee and one of the cestuis que trustent for a vesting order under s. 19 of the Trustee Act 1850:—Held, that the trustee sufficiently represented the other cestuis que trustent, whose appearance was, therefore, dispensed with. Re Blanchard's Estate, 2 N. R. 386.

9. Real estate was devised by C. D. to trustees upon trust, after paying debts and legacies, and, subject to a certain annuity charged thereon, to convey the same to use of A. A. in fee:—Held, upon petition by the devisee of A. B. for a conveyance by the trustee of C. D.'s will, all the debts and legacies having been satisfied, that the concurrence of the annuitant to this petition was not necessary. Re Winteringham's Trusts, 3 W. R. 578.

10. A petition for an order vesting the trust estate in continuing trustees, and new trustee having been presented:—Held, that service on trustee of unsound mind was not necessary. The power was well exercised. Re East, Re Bellwood's Trusts, 8 L. R., Ch., 735; 42 L. J., Ch., 480.

XVI. COSTS.

1. Lunatic Mortgagee, 6825.
2. Vendor and Purchaser, 6826.
3. Other Cases, 6826.

1. Lunatic Mortgagee.

- (a) Liability of Mortgagee, 6825.
- (b) Liability of Mortgagor, 6826.

(a) Liability of Mortgagee.

11. Where, through the unsoundness of mind of a mortgagee (not found lunatic by inquisition), proceedings under the Trustee Act (13 & 14 Vict., c. 60), are rendered necessary to obtain the re-conveyance of the estate, the costs must be borne by the mortgagee. Exp. Sargeant, 25 L. J., Ch., 656.

12. A mortgage debt having been paid off, the committee of the estate of the mortgagee, who had become lunatic, presented a petition, which they served upon the mortgagor, for an order enabling them to re-convey the mortgaged property. The costs of the mortgagor's appearance were directed to be paid by the petitioners, and allowed to them out of the estate, with an intimation that for the future petitions of the kind ought not to be served upon mortgagors. Re Rowley, 1 De G. J. & Sm. 417; 32 L. J., Ch., 158; 11 W. R. 297; 7 L. T., N. S., 702.

13. The costs of the proceedings for obtaining from the committee of a lunatic a re-conveyance of premises mortgaged to the lunatic, will be ordered to be paid out of the lunatic's estate where the lunatic is beneficially interested in the mortgage money, and the petition is presented by the committee. Re Wheeler, 1 De G. M. & G. 434; 21 L. J., Ch., 759.

This rule will not, however, be acted on if the mortgagor presents the petition, unless in cases where the committee has declined to take that step. Ib.

14. In the case of a lunatic mortgagee, the costs of an order vesting the estate in the mortgagor must be paid by the mortgagee, but the mortgagee may have an order for the committee to convey at the expense of the lunatic's estate. Re Thomas, 1 W. R. 155.

Upon the petition of the committee of a lunatic mortgagee, an order was made vesting the estate in the mortgagor, the costs of the order to be paid out of the lunatic's estate, with the exception of the stamp, which was to be paid by the mortgagor. S. C. 22 L. J., Ch., 858.

1. Where through the lunacy of a mortgagee not found lunatic by inquisition, a petition under the Trustee Act (13 & 14 Vict., c. 60), is rendered necessary, in order to enable the mortgagor to pay off the mortgage debt, the costs must be paid out of the mortgage debt. There being no committee, but only a receiver of the mortgagee's estate, under the 8 & 9 Vict., c. 100, the costs of the appearance of the heir-at-law and next-of-kin were allowed. Re Biddle, 23 L. J., Ch., 23; 2 W. R. 50; 2 Eq. Rep. 71.

2. A plaintiff in a suit for the administration of a mortgagor's estate, and the purchasers under a decree in the suit, presented a petition under the Trustee Act, seeking an order to vest in the purchasers the legal estate in the purchased property, which was vested in a lunatic mortgagee not found so by inquisition:—Held, that a portion of the costs ought to be paid out of the mortgage money. Re Viall, 8 De G. M. & G. 439.

The rule that a lunatic mortgagee bears the costs of proceedings, under the 13 & 14 Vict., c. 60, occasioned by his lunacy, to obtain a re-conveyance of the estate, applies equally to a person of unsound mind not so found by inquisition; and whether the proceedings are taken in a redemption suit, or in the course of the administration of the mortgagor's estate. S. C. nom. Hamkins v. Perry, Re Viall, 4 W. R. 686.

3. When the committee of a lunatic mortgagee presents a petition under the Trustee Act for a re-conveyance of the mortgaged estate to the mortgagor, the mortgagor is not entitled to his costs out of the lunatic's estate, even though served with the petition. Re Phillips, 4 L. R., Ch., 629; 17 W. R. 904.

4. When a mortgagee becomes of unsound mind, not so found, and the mortgagor applies for a vesting order on payment into court of the mortgage debt, making the mortgagee a respondent to the petition, the Court has no jurisdiction to make an order for the costs to be paid out of the mortgage debt, but each party must bear his own costs. Re Sparks, 6 L. R., Ch., 361; 25 W. R. 869.

5. A trustee having advanced money on mortgage became lunatic. Upon redemption of the estate and a petition to appoint a person to re-convey, it appearing that the mortgagor had no knowledge that the money was trust money, the costs of the application were ordered to be paid out of the trust estate. Re Jones, 1 L. R., Ch. D., 70; 45 L. J., Ch., 688; 34 L. T. 470; 24 W. R. 377.

(b) Liability of Mortgagor.

6. Where a mortgage in fee had been paid off to the mortgagee's executor, and a petition was presented under the Trustee Act 1850 by the mortgagor for a re-conveyance from the mortgagee's heir, who was a lunatic, or for a vesting order:—Held, that the mortgagor must pay the costs of the proceeding. Re Stuart, Exp. Marshall, 4 De G. & J. 317; 8 W. R. 297; 3 L. T., N. S., 495.

7. A mortgagee died intestate as to estates, whereof he was mortgagee, leaving an heir-at-law, who was a lunatic. The costs of obtaining a vesting order, and of all proceedings necessary to effect a re-conveyance, were directed to be borne by the mortgagor. Re Jones, 30 L. J., Ch., 112; 9 W. R. 175; 2 De G. F. & J. 554; 7 Jur., N. S., 115. Affirming 8 W. R. 297; 3 L. T., N. S., 495.

2. Vendor and Purchaser.

8. A vendor agreed to surrender, or procure some person to surrender, and the costs of the surrender were to be paid by the purchaser. It was necessary to procure a surrender under the Trustee Act 1850:—Held, that the costs of the proceedings ought to be paid by the vendor. Bradley v. Munton, 16 Beav. 294.

9. After a decree for the sale of an intestate's copyhold estate, in lots, but before the sale, the infant heir of the intestate was admitted:—Held, that a petition for a vesting order was properly presented by the purchaser, whose money was in court, and that the costs of the order were to be borne by the vendors, and to be paid out of the purchase money of the particular lot, and not out of the fund in court generally. Ayles v. Cox, 17 Beav. 584.

10. Where a vendor dies intestate, leaving an infant heir, and a bill is filed to make him a trustee to convey under the Trustee Act 1850, each party must pay his own costs. Scott v. Scott, 11 W. R. 766; 8 L. T., N. S., 450.

3. Other Cases.

11. See, as to vesting order and costs, Re Fulham, 15 Jur. 69.

12. Where a widow, a sole surviving trustee of a will, married, and her husband was afterwards duly found lunatic, such husband was held a trustee within the 13 & 14 Vict., c. 60, and the costs of his committee, who appeared, were allowed out of the corpus of the trust fund. Re Wood, 7 Jur., N. S., 323; 30 L. J., Ch., 453; 4 L. T., N. S., 104.

13. The costs of applications to the Court, in respect of trust property, necessitated by the lunacy of a bare trustee, will not be ordered to be paid either by or to the lunatic's estate. Re Garden, 34 L. J., Ch., 466.

Where a trustee becomes a lunatic, and consequently an application to the Court in Lunacy becomes necessary for the purpose of obtaining a transfer of the trust funds, no order as to costs will be made. S. C. 6 N. R. 347.

14. Under the Trustee Acts the Court has not jurisdiction to give the costs to a cestui que trust, compelled, in consequence of the assignees of a bankrupt trustee refusing to sign a disclaimer, to apply to the Court to procure a transfer of the trust funds. Exp. Primrose, 3 Jur., N. S., 899; 26 L. J., Ch., 666. But see Re Woodburn, 3 Jur., N. S., 799; 26 L. J., Ch., 522.

15. An equitable mortgagee filed a bill against an infant heir of the mortgagor (upon whom a vesting order had been made under the Trustee Act 1850), for a sale of the property. The proceeds being insufficient to satisfy the mortgage debt and costs:—Held, that the infant heir was not entitled to his costs of the suit, but he was allowed the costs of the vesting order. Wade v. Ward, 29 L. J., Ch., 42; 4 Drew. 482.

III. Appointment of New Trustees Under the Trustee Acts Prior to 1850.

I. GROUNDS FOR APPLICATION TO THE COURT.

1. In General, 6827.
2. Death, 6827.
3. Disclaimer or Refusal to Act, 6827.
4. Lunacy, 6828.
5. Trustee Out of Jurisdiction or Absconding, 6828.
6. Where Power in the Settlement, 6829.

1. In General.

1. Construction of 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 60, s. 22. Re Fairbairn, 2 Jur. 987.
2. A trustee and executor is not within the 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 60, s. 22. Clarke v. Wilson, Hay. & J. 424.
3. The Court will not appoint new trustees under the 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 60, s. 22, except in a plain case, or where there has been a recent creation of trust, and the Court has jurisdiction by reason of disability, or the like. The insecure nature of the property is no ground for the interference of the Court. Whitley v. Fishbourne, Ll. & G. temp. Sugd. 23.
4. The Court has no power to appoint new trustees under the 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 60, unless a case of disability in the present trustees is established. Re Pennesfather, 2 Dr. & War. 292. Harte v. French (Lord), id. 292.
5. The Court will not appoint a new trustee under the 22nd section of the 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 60, where no bill has been filed, and there is no power to do so in the instrument creating the trust, unless a disability exist such as is pointed out by the previous sections of the Act, viz., infancy, lunacy, etc. Exp. Fitzgerald, Ll. & G. temp. Sugd. 20.

Before the Court has jurisdiction under the 22nd section, there must be a case where the party might apply by petition, under the former sections of the Act. Id. 21.

2. Death.

6. Leasehold, as well as freehold, charity estates are within the 23rd section of 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 60, where all the trustees are dead; and a direction will be made under that section for the appointment of new trustees; and that a proper person be appointed to convey and assign the estates accordingly. Re St. Antholin Trust Estates, 7 L. J., N. S., Ch., 269.

7. The Court made the usual order of reference to the Master to appoint new trustees of the will, under the 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 60, s. 22, the devise to the trustees being to them and the survivors of them, and the heirs and assigns of such survivor; and it appearing that the trustees named were both dead, that they had never acted, but had never declined, nor were ever called upon to act, and the heir-at-law of the survivor was resident in Canada. Re Legg, 1 Ir. Eq. R. 374.

8. The Court refused to appoint new trustees, under the 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 60, in the room of trustees who had died, where the trust property consisted both of stock and real estate, no administration having been taken out to the survivor of the said trustees (who died intestate), and his heir-at-law being out of the jurisdiction. Re Anderson, Ll. & G. temp. Sugd. 27.

It was not intended by the 9th and 10th sections to supply the want of a personal representative of a trustee of a chattel interest, or stock. Id. 28.

9. Where the sole trustee in a will, to whom a term was demised, died in the testator's lifetime, the Court referred it to the Master to appoint a new trustee, and to approve of a like demise. Devey v. Peace, Taml. 78.

3. Disclaimer or Refusal to Act.

10. The mere refusal of the trustee to act in the trusts will not bring the case within the 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 60. Re Hartford, 1 Con. & L. 394; 2 Dr. & War. 292.

11. This Court will not appoint a new trustee, under the 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 60, s. 22, instead of a person who appears never to have accepted the trust, and refuses to act. Mitchell v. Nixon, 1 Ir. Eq. R. 155.

12. The Court will not appoint a new trustee, under the 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 60, s. 22, where the old trustee had acted and was within the jurisdiction, but refused to act any longer. Re Hossford, 1 Jones 550.

13. The Court will not appoint a new trustee, under the 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 60, s. 22, in the place of a person, who though named as trustee, has never accepted the trust. Re Quinlan, 1 Jones 549.

14. Application, under the 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 60, s. 22, for the appointment of a new trustee, refused, it not appearing that the party named as trustee in the conveyance had accepted the trusts. Re Clerk, 1 Jur. 737.

15. A trustee of chattels real and of stock, having acted in the trusts, died, and appointed executors resident within the jurisdiction, who proved his will, but never acted and refused to act in the trusts, which were still continuing:—Held, that the Court had jurisdiction to appoint new trustees under the 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 60, s. 22. Muley v. Smiths, 3 Ir. Eq. R. 497; L. & T. 241.

The original trustee having committed a breach of trust, the Court appointed new trustees, the executors of the old trustee undertaking to replace the trust fund. Id.

16. Where the executor of the survivor of three trustees declined to prove his will:—Held, that the case was within the stat. 11

Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 60; and, upon the usual reference, new trustees were appointed. Exp. Haggart, 1 Beav. 98.

1. An estate was devised to A., subject to a charge of 5,000*l.*, payable to the executors in a suit to which A. was a party; the estate was sold, and all proper parties were ordered to join in the conveyance. A., refusing to execute the deed, was declared a trustee for the purchaser, under the 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 60, and another person was directed to convey in his stead. Robinson v. Wood, 5 Beav. 246.

2. One of three trustees under a will had disclaimed, and another had become lunatic:—Held, upon the petition of the sole acting trustee and the cestui que trust, in the matter of the lunacy, that the Court had no jurisdiction to appoint a new trustee in the place of the disclaiming trustee; but the Court appointed two persons trustees in the place of the lunatic. Re Smith, 17 L. J., N. S., Ch., 415.

3. A person was named as a trustee in a marriage settlement of the year 1821, but did not execute or act in the trusts of it. After the death of his co-trustee, he, in 1844, refused to act in the trusts. The Court, upon the petition of the tenant for life, under the 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 60, s. 22, refused to appoint a new trustee in his place. After such a lapse of time, it must, in a petition matter, be presumed that the trustee accepted the trust. Re Uniacke, 1 J. & L. 1.

4. The stat. 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 60, was not intended to sanction a trustee resigning his trust rather than do an act which he deems improper. A trustee in marriage settlement refused to join in lending the trust moneys, because he disapproved of the security. The wife pursuant to a power for the purpose removed him, and appointed a new trustee in his place; and the husband and wife then presented a petition under the Act to compel the old trustee to transfer the funds to the new trustee. The Court refused the application. Pepper v. Tuckey, 2 J. & L. 95; 7 Ir. Eq. R. 572.

5. By marriage settlement a judgment was vested in trustees; and it was declared, that if the wife should, with the consent of her husband, think it advisable to call in the sum secured thereby, the trustees were to permit her to use her discretion as to the re-investment of same. One trustee died; the other was out of the jurisdiction. The wife, with the consent of her husband, called in the money, and she and her husband assigned the judgment to a third person, who advanced the money; but the surviving trustee refused to execute the assignment, and desired to be discharged from the trusts. The Court, thinking that the real object of the parties was not to continue the money in settlement, but, under colour of the power, to get it out of settlement, refused to appoint new trustees. Re Malony, 2 J. & L. 391.

6. Where a trustee, who did not labour under any disability, declined to act, application by petition for a new trustee granted, although some of the cestui que trustent were minors, the funds being small. Plunket v. Smith, 8 Ir. Eq. R. 523.

7. The Court will appoint new trustees under 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 60, s. 22, where the trustees are out of the jurisdiction, and decline to act, although the deed creating the trusts contains no power to appoint new trustees. In every case in which a petition for a conveyance can be presented under a previous section, the Court has power under the 22nd section to appoint new trustees. Re Mayo (Earl), 1 L. & G. temp. Plunk. 118, 126.

4. Lunacy.

8. The Vice-Chancellor has no authority to make an order of reference, under the 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 60, with respect to a lunatic trustee. Re Shorrocks, 1 Myl. & C. 31.

9. The Vice-Chancellor has no jurisdiction, under 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 60, in cases of lunatic trustees or mortgagees, beyond directing the reference to the Master in the first instance. Anon., 5 Sim. 332; 3 L. J., N. S., Ch., 240.

10. Where a trustee is of unsound mind, but not found a lunatic, a reference, under 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 60, to appoint a new trustee, can be made only by the Lord Chancellor. Re Mount, 12 L. J., N. S., Ch., 95.

11. On a petition under the Act 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 60, the Court never interferes in the administration of the trusts, but merely substitutes a trustee in the place of the lunatic. Re Ward, 2 Macn. & G. 73.

12. New trustees appointed on petition, under the Act 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 60, in the stead of a lunatic, not found such by inquisition, to whom, together with two other persons since deceased, a sum of money charged by will upon real estates in the West Indies, and another sum secured by a bond, had been assigned by a deed, dated 1802, upon certain trusts. A person at the same time appointed to assign the sums of money to the new trustees. Re Welch, 3 Myl. & C. 292; 7 L. J., N. S., Ch., 169.

13. When it did not appear that the old trustee, though incapable of managing his affairs, was a lunatic, the Court would not appoint a new trustee, under the 22nd section of the 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 60. Re Wakeford, 1 J. & L. 2.

14. Upon a reference made on a petition for the appointment of a new trustee in the place of an original trustee, who had left this country, the Master found that another of the original trustees had become lunatic. An order was afterwards made for the transfer of the trust funds by the committee, without a second reference in the matter of the lunatic under the 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 60. Re Buckle, 15 L. J., N. S., Ch., 289.

15. One of the trustees under a will had disclaimed and another had become lunatic:—Held, upon the petition of the sole acting trustee and the cestui que trustent in the matter of the lunacy, that the Court had no jurisdiction to appoint a new trustee in the place of the disclaiming trustee; but the Court appointed two persons trustees in the place of the lunatic. Re Smith, 17 L. J., N. S., Ch., 415.

5. Trustee out of Jurisdiction or Absconding.

16. The Court will appoint new trustees under the 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 60, s. 22, where the trustees are out of the jurisdiction and decline to act, although the deed creating the trusts contains no power to appoint new trustees. In every case in which a petition for a conveyance can be presented under a previous section, the Court has power, under the 22nd section, to appoint new trustees. Re Mayo (Earl), L. & G. temp. Plunk. 118, 126.

1. Three trustees, two of whom were creditors of A., joined in making promissory notes for securing to the other creditors of A. a composition on the respective debts, and took a conveyance and assignment of the real and personal estate of A. upon trust, after paying the costs and charges, to indemnify the three trustees in respect of the promissory notes, and then to pay the two trustees, who were creditors, a like composition on their respective debts, and to pay the surplus to A. After two of the trustees had received part of the personal estate of A., and had paid the promissory notes to a larger amount than they had received, the other trustee (who was one of the creditors) went out of the jurisdiction of the Court. There was no power in the deed to appoint new trustees:—Held, on the petition of the two trustees, that the trustee out of the jurisdiction was a trustee within the Act 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 60, for the petitioners and himself, and the Court, without directing a bill to be filed, appointed another trustee in his stead. Re Ryley, 3 Hare 614.

2. Where a rent-charge was, by indenture of 1634, granted to trustees for charitable uses, the last survivor being unknown, the Court, under 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 60, s. 23, on the petition of parties who had administered the rent-charge until it ceased to be paid, appointed new trustees, and a party to convey the rent-charge to them. Re Nightingale's Charity, 3 Hare 336; 8 Jur. 1005.

3. The Court will not direct the appointment of a trustee to convey, in the room of a trustee who is abroad, without a reference to the Master, although there be affidavits of the absence of the trustee. Inquiry also directed whether the absent party was a trustee, although appointed such by the Duchy Court of Lancaster. Fazekerty v. Gillebrand, 7 Jur. 1123.

4. One of two trustees absconded: the other ordered to transfer fund into his own name, and that of another appointed. Re Friendly Society, 1 Sim. & S. 82.

5. Semble, that neither bankruptcy nor occasional residence abroad disqualifies a testamentary trustee to whom the testator has unconditionally confided a large personal discretion in the administration of the trusts, together with power to appoint a receiver of the rents of the trust estates. Archbold v. Commissioners of Charitable Bequests, 2 H. L. Ca. 440. Reversing S. C. nom. Commissioners of Charitable Bequests v. Archbold, 11 Ir. Eq. R. 187.

6. Form of the order for the appointment of a new trustee, under 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 60, in the room of a trustee resident out of the jurisdiction, where the trust fund consisted merely of government stock in the Bank of Ireland. Re Chambers, 3 Dr. & War. 496.

7. A testator who gave a legacy for charitable purposes to be executed in a foreign country, named as one of the trustees of the charity an officer created by Act of Parliament, describing him by his office, and not by his name. The Act of Parliament having been repealed, and the office abolished, the Court referred it to the Master to approve of a proper person to be a trustee in his stead. Att.-Gen. v. Stephens, 3 Myl. & K. 347.

8. One of the three trustees, dismissed under an Act of Parliament, being gone abroad, and having released, there being no provision for the change of trustees, upon a bill, it was referred to the Master to appoint a new trustee. Buchanan v. Hamilton, 5 Ves. 722.

9. The residence of a party interested in trust funds being out of the jurisdiction does not authorise the Court to appoint new trustees without notice being given to such party. Exp. Hardman, Re Molyneux, 3 M. D. & De G. 559.

6. Where Power in the Settlement.

10. Testator directed a new trustee to be appointed, if either should die or become incapable of acting; one absconded, charged with forgery; but was not outlawed: referred to the Master to appoint a new trustee. Mil-lard v. Eyre, 2 Ves. J. 94.

11. Where a deed declaring trusts contained a power to appoint new trustees in case of death, desire to be discharged, or refusal to act of the trustees, and the trustee went to America, and his residence could not be discovered:—Held, that a new trustee might be appointed, under the 22nd section of 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 60, on petition. Re Ledwich, 6 Ir. Eq. R. 561.

12. Although taking up his permanent residence abroad, in a case where there is a power to appoint a new trustee in place of one going to reside abroad, does not ipso facto deprive a trustee of his office, yet it is such a disqualification as entitles the cestui que trust to have a new trustee appointed in his place. O'Reilly v. Alderson, 8 Hare 101.

13. The Act 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 60, does not apply to a case where the event upon which the appointment of new trustees is sought has been provided for by the settlement. Re Laffan, 1 Con. & L. 395. And see id. 396. n.

14. The Court may appoint new trustees under 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 60, s. 22, although the instrument creating the trust contains a power to appoint new trustees. Re Fountleroy, 10 Sim. 252; 8 L. J., N. S., Ch., 367; 3 Jur. 673.

15. The Court may appoint a new trustee on petition, under 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 60, s. 22, although the instrument creating the trust contains a power to appoint new trustees. Re Foxhall, 2 Ph. 281; 16 L. J., N. S., Ch., 498.

II. REFERENCE TO THE MASTER.

1. When Dispensed with, 6829.

2. Exceptions to Report and Confirmation, 6830.

1. When Dispensed with.

16. Court will not change a mere trustee for wife under marriage settlement, without sending it first to Master to see if a proper person is proposed. O'Keeffe v. Calthorpe, 1 Atk. 18.

1. When trustees have a power to appoint new trustees, the Court will not, on their application, direct an appointment without a reference. — v. Roberts, 1 Jac. & Walk. 251.

2. A new trustee appointed under 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 60, without a reference to the Master, the petitioner being the only person interested in the trust property. Exp. Shick, 5 Sim. 281.

3. Upon an application, under the 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 60, for the transfer of a sum of stock standing in the name of a lunatic trustee, the Lord Chancellor refused to adopt the facts as found in a suit in the Exchequer, and directed the usual reference. Re Pri-deaux, 2 Myl. & C. 640; 7 L. J., N. S., Ch., 82.

4. The Court never appoints a new trustee without a reference to the Master. Re Roche, 2 Dr. & War. 287; 1 Con. & L. 306.

5. A new trustee will be appointed by the Court without a reference, on proof of his fitness, and on his consent. Re Robinson's Trust, 15 Jur. 187.

6. The Court, if perfectly satisfied, will make an order to transfer, under the Trustee Act, 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 60, without a reference. Cockell v. Pugh, 6 Beav. 293.

7. The Court will, to save expense, appoint a new trustee without a reference, but it will require strict proof of title. Re Procter, 16 Jur. 233.

8. The Court of Chancery will not take upon itself to inquire into the fact whether a lunatic is a trustee within the meaning of the Trustee Act 1850; there must be a reference to the Master to make that inquiry, according to the former practice. Re Ramshay, 15 Jur. 96.

9. Where a suit was instituted for the administration of the trusts of a will, for an account of the funds, and for the removal of the surviving trustee, and, at the hearing of all parties, waived all the prayer, except the appointment of new trustees, and stated that all parties interested were before the Court, a petition was directed to be presented, supported by a proper affidavit of the fitness of the intended new trustees, and an order to be made for the appointment of the same number as were appointed by the will, without a reference. Buckley v. Buckley, 14 Jur. 189.

10. The Court will not direct the appointment of a trustee to convey, in the room of a trustee who is abroad, without a reference to the Master, although there be affidavits of the absence of the trustee. Inquiry also directed whether the absent party was a trustee, although appointed such by the Duchy Court of Lancaster. Fazakerly v. Gillebrand, 7 Jur. 1123.

11. Where legacy is given for permanent charitable purposes to trustees, not having corporate character, Court will not transfer fund to them, without reference. Wellbeloved v. Jones, 1 Sim. & S. 40; 1 L. J., Ch., 11.

12. Trustees of a charity are never appointed by the Court without a reference, though the amount of the fund be extremely small. Att.-Gen. v. Arran (Earl), 1 Jac. & Walk. 229.

13. The Court will not make an order for the appointment of particular persons as trustees of a charity without a reference to the Master. Re Shrewsbury School, 1 Macn. & G. 85; 13 Jur. 201.

2. Exceptions to Report and Confirmation.

14. A trustee, by his answer, declined to act, and on the hearing it was referred to the Master to appoint new trustees; the original trustee afterwards agreed to act, and on application to the Court, that the trustee might be at liberty to amend his answer in this respect, so as to enable the Court on a re-hearing to vary that part of the decree, the Court refused to do this; but thought the Master was at liberty, on statement of these circumstances, to decline the appointment of new trustees. Miles v. Neave, Cox 159.

15. Exceptions cannot be taken to Master's report approving new trustee; nor will the Court interfere with report where there is no complaint that persons approved of are unfit. Att.-Gen. v. Dyson, 2 Sim. & S. 528; 4 L. J., Ch., 164.

16. Where a reference has been made to the Master to appoint trustees of a charity, it is the rule of the Court to adopt the Master's appointments, unless the persons appointed can be shown to be objectionable, and the Court will not enter into the question of the fitness of other persons whom the Master has refused to appoint. Re Norwich Charities, 2 Myl. & C. 275.

17. A person's name had been submitted to the Master as a new trustee, and he had been approved by the Master, but without any affidavit of his respectability. Such an affidavit was afterwards produced to the Lord Chancellor, and no objection to his respectability was made:—Held, that there was no ground for referring the question of his appointment back to the Master. Re Ludlow Charities, 3 Myl. & C. 262.

18. Where a deed gives a power of appointing new trustees to a particular person, the Court is bound to adopt his nominee, unless he refuses to nominate any but a person wholly unfit; therefore, when the power of appointing trustees was given to H. K. and J. K., and the survivor of them, and J. K. died, and H. K. nominated new trustees, but, in consequence of the interference of R. K., who had become entitled to J. K.'s interest under the deed, it was necessary to file a bill to procure a conveyance of the legal estate; and the Master, under the reference made at the hearing, entered into a general inquiry as to the relative fitness of the nominees of H. K. and R. K., and selected the nominee of the latter:—Held, he was wrong in so doing, although the reference had been made in general terms to select a proper person as trustee. Kennedy v. Turnley, 6 Ir. Eq. R. 399.

Rules of the Court as to controlling the appointment of trustees in such cases. Ib.

19. Where a bill is filed for the appointment of new trustees, the amount of the property being small, the Court will make an order for the Master to appoint the trustees at once under the reference, without the necessity of coming back to the Court. Clinton v. Watkins, 7 Ir. Eq. R. 489.

1. In a suit for the appointment of new trustees, occasioned by the refusal of the surviving trustees to exercise a power of appointment, reference was made to the Master to approve of proper persons. Exceptions to his report on the ground that he had not regarded the right of nomination given to the surviving trustee by the instrument creating the power, but not raising any objections to the fitness of the persons nominated by the Master, were overruled. Middleton v. Reay, 18 L. J., N. S., Ch., 153; 13 Jur. 116.

On a reference to appoint new trustees, where the power is in a party to the cause, the Master need not approve of persons named by him, in preference to others he may consider more eligible. If the party's right of nomination is to be preserved, there should be special directions to the Master, semble. S. C. 7 Hare 106.

2. An order of reference, under the 4 & 5 Will 4, c. 29, as to whether it would be for the benefit of the parties beneficially interested in a settled fund to lend it on the security of freehold estates in Ireland, may be made ex parte; but the Court will not confirm the Master's report, finding that such a loan would be for the benefit of such parties, unless they all, as well those entitled in remainder as those entitled for life, have either been served with the petition, or appeared before the Master. Re Kirkpatrick's Trust, 15 Jur. 941.

3. In this case a reference had been made, under Turner's Act, for the Master to approve of a new trustee. The Master made his certificate accordingly, and a petition was presented, praying that the Master's report might be confirmed. The Vice-Chancellor stated that he had communicated with the other judges, and it was settled that these applications must be made by motion, and not by petition. Re Farmer, 16 Jur. 634.

III. PARTIES AND SERVICE.

4. A party beneficially entitled to part of the dividends of a sum in the funds held to have a sufficient interest to support a petition, under 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 60, for appointment of a new trustee; and by s. 10 the Court may appoint one of the bank officers to receive the dividends and pay them over to the new trustee; and although an order has been made under Act, but irregularly, the Court has jurisdiction to give costs. Re King, 10 Sim. 605; 9 L. J., N. S., Ch., 257.

5. Mode in which a petition presented under an Act of Parliament, by which the Court derives its jurisdiction, ought to be intitled. Re Law, 4 Beav. 509; 11 L. J., N. S., Ch., 118; 6 Jur. 615.

A petition under the 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 60, to obtain a transfer of trust stock from the names of the surviving trustees into the joint names of such trustees and of a new trustee duly appointed, is properly presented by such new trustee. Id.

6. Upon a petition by a mortgagee for the appointment of a new trustee in the room of the infant heir of a trustee for sale under a mortgage deed, the Court, in the absence of the mortgagor, refused the application. Re Green, 2 Colly. 91; 9 Jur. 74.

7. On petition, a trustee of lands with a power of sale sufficiently represents the cestui que trustent. Re Blanchard, 8 L. T., N. S., 603.

8. After a reference to the Master, and a report thereupon, on a petition to confirm the report, under the provisions of the stat. 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 60, and to transfer funds to new trustees:—Held, that all parties interested in the fund, whether in reversion or otherwise, should be served with notice of the petition. Exp. Yates, 16 L. J., N. S., Ch., 72; 11 Jur. 33.

I. WHAT MATTERS WITHIN JURISDICTION ON PETITION TO APPOINT.

9. Upon a separation between the husband and wife, a deed was executed, in which a trustee covenanted that, in the event of the husband allowing the wife to live separate, and have the custody of their children, the trustee would indemnify the husband against the debts of the wife, upon the decease of the trustees:—Held, as the deed contained no power to appoint new trustees, that the Court, under the 13 & 14 Vict., c. 60, and 15 & 16 Vict., c. 55, had jurisdiction to appoint new trustee of the property, but declined to inquire into the validity of the provisions of the separation deed. Re Matthews, 5 Jur., N. S., 184; 28 L. J., Ch., 295; 7 W. R. 224; 32 L. T. 289; 26 Beav. 463.

II. EFFECT OF CONVEYANCING ACT 1881, s. 31.

10. Sect. 31 of the Conveyancing Act 1881, having given a power to appoint new trustees in every case where a trust is subsisting, it is now improper to apply to the Court for the appointment of new trustees under the Trustee Act 1850, s. 32, unless there is some reason making it "difficult, inexpedient, or impracticable to appoint them without the assistance of the Court" other than the mere absence of a power to do so in the instrument creating the trust. Re Gibbon's Trusts, 45 L. T. 766; 30 W. R. 287.

III. GROUNDS FOR APPLICATION TO THE COURT.

1. Death, 6832.
2. Disclaimer or Refusal to Act, 6832.
3. Infancy, 6832.
4. Trustee out of Jurisdiction or Absconding, and Vesting Order, 6833.
5. Where no Original or Existing Trustee, 6833.
6. Where Power in the Settlement Insufficient, 6834.
7. Where Donee of Power Incapacitated, 6834.
8. Other Grounds, 6835.
9. Lunacy and Vesting Orders. See II. v. ante.

1. Death.

1. Where a surviving trustee has been dead for many years, and no administration has been taken out to him, and there is therefore no existing trustee, the Court will appoint a new trustee, upon petition, under s. 32 of the Trustee Act 1850, and s. 9 of the Trustee Extension Act 1852. In such a case it is expedient to appoint a new trustee, but it cannot be done without the aid of the Court. Davis v. Chanter, 6 W. R. 416; 4 Jur., N. S. 272; 27 L. J., Ch., 577; 1 L. T., N. S., 70.

2. Where the trustees of a will are dead, and there is a question as to the party in whom the legal estate is vested, the Court will appoint new trustees, notwithstanding that a receiver has been appointed in the suit, and continue the receiver. Reeves v. Neville, 10 W. R. 335.

3. When the proceedings in a bankruptcy have been suspended by a resolution of the creditors, passed under the Bankruptcy Act 1861, s. 110, and the trustee appointed by the creditors to wind up the estate and effects of the bankrupt has died, the Court of Chancery has jurisdiction, under the Trustee Acts, to appoint new trustees. Re Raphael, 9 L. R., Eq., 233; 39 L. J., Ch., 200; 18 W. R. 247.

4. Pending the proceedings for carrying out a sale directed by an order made under the Settled Estates Act, one of the trustees, who were the conveying parties, died. The Court directed a petition to be presented for the appointment of a new trustee in the place of the deceased trustee. Scott v. Heisch, 24 W. R. 108; 33 L. T., N. S., 498.

5. Upon a petition to appoint new trustees of a separation deed, on the death of the sole trustee, it was objected that the deed was void, in consequence of the father's thereby abandoning his right to the custody of his children. The Court declined deciding as to its validity, but appointed new trustees to protect the property. Re Matthews, 28 Beav. 463; 5 Jur., N. S., 184; 28 L. J., Ch., 295; 7 W. R. 244; 2 L. T., N. S., 289.

2. Disclaimer or Refusal to Act.

6. Two trustees of real estates named in a will disclaimed. On a petition by a person entitled to a pecuniary legacy charged on the estates, to appoint two persons named in the petition as trustees in their place, it was suggested that s. 32 of Trustee Act, 1850 authorised the Court to appoint trustees in substitution for or in addition to existing trustees only, and that the heir of the testator had become the existing trustee:—Held, that the distinction was too narrow; and the Court, upon affidavits of the fitness of the proposed trustees, appointed them in substitution for the trustees who had disclaimed. Re Tyler's Trust, 5 De G. & Sm. 56; 15 Jur. 1120; 21 L. J., Ch., 16.

7. Upon a petition for the appointment of new trustees by the Court, it is not necessary that a disclaiming trustee who has never acted should disclaim by deed, but a disclaimer by his counsel at the bar is sufficient. Forster v. Dawber, 1 Dr. & Sm. 171; 8 W. R. 646.

8. M. and C. being trustees and executors under a will, C. simply renounces, and M. then dies, having left devisees in trust. A petition is presented to appoint new trustees, and for a direction that such devisees might convey. C., by affidavit on the petition, disclaimed; and on the doubt whether the devisees in trust of M. had the legal estate:—Held, that a vesting order would obviate the difficulty. Re Skinner's Trusts, 2 W. R. 130.

9. Semble, disclaimer in court on petition not sufficient to divest an estate; disclaimer should be by deed or of record. Re Ellison, 2 Jur., N. S., 62.

And semble disclaimer by petition is no more than a parol disclaimer, and not like a disclaimer by bill, as a bill is entered of record. Id.

10. Where estates were given to trustees, upon trust (after a trust for one for life, with remainder for his children) to convey to a person in the event of the death of the tenant for life without issue, the Court, under the 13 & 14 Vict., c. 60, appointed trustees in the place of original trustees who refused to act. Re Sheppard, 32 L. J., Ch., 23; 11 W. R. 60; 7 L. T., N. S., 377.

11. Where three executors and trustees of the will of a naturalised British subject renounced probate, and declined to act, the Court, on the petition of the administrator, and of the persons who would, but for the fact of their being aliens, be co-heirs at law, made an order, the Crown not opposing, for the appointment of new trustees, and vesting the real estate in such new trustees. Re Martinez, 22 L. T., N. S., 403.

12. A settlor made a voluntary settlement of real estate, but did not communicate the fact of the settlement to the sole trustee during his lifetime. After the settlor's death the trustee refused to undertake the trusts of the settlement. The settlement contained a covenant for further assurance, and a power to appoint new trustees:—Held, that this was a case in which the Court would appoint new trustees. Jones v. Jones, 31 L. T., N. S., 535.

3. Infancy.

13. Devise to an adult and infant trustee upon trust to sell. New trustee appointed in place of the infant under s. 32 of the Trustee Act 1850, and vesting order granted in favour of the old and new trustees. Re Porter, 4 W. R. 417; 25 L. J., Ch., 482; 2 Jur., N. S., 349.

1. The Court will on petition appoint a new trustee in the room of an infant appointed trustee by the testator together with two other persons, and who has himself a beneficial interest. Re Gartside's Estate, 1 W. R. 196.

2. Where the Court, with a view to carrying out the trusts of a testator's will, appoints a new trustee in the room of an infant trustee nominated by the testator himself, the appointment should be without prejudice to any application by the infant to be restored to the trusteeship on his coming of age. Re Shelmerdine, 33 L. J., Ch., 474; 11 L. T., N. S., 106.

4. Trustee out of Jurisdiction or Absconding, and Vesting Order.

3. Where one of two trustees was residing out of the jurisdiction of the Court, the Court refused to appoint another trustee in his stead under ss. 22 and 32 of the 13 & 14 Vict., c. 60. Re Mais, 21 L. J., N. S., Ch., 875; 16 Jur. 608.

4. A surviving trustee of a settlement of stock having died, his widow took out administration with the will annexed in Ireland. There was no representative in England. A petition was presented for the appointment of new trustees, and for a vesting order, under the stat. 13 & 14 Vict., c. 60, but the order was refused. Re Frost's Settlement, 20 L. J., N. S., Ch., 112; 15 Jur. 644.

5. Order appointing trustees of a settlement, one of the trustees named in it residing permanently abroad, and the other having been wrongly described in the settlement. Re Irvin's Trust, 9 L. R., Ir., 19.

6. The Court has power, under the Trustee Act 1850, s. 32, to appoint a new trustee in place of a trustee who is permanently residing abroad, without his consent. Re Bignold, 7 L. R., Ch., 223; 41 L. J., Ch., 235; 20 W. R. 345; 26 L. T., N. S., 176.

Semble, that a power in a settlement to appoint a new trustee in the place of a trustee incapable to act applies to personal incapacity, and not to simple residence abroad. Ib.

7. A new trustee appointed in the place of a trustee who had become bankrupt, had never surrendered, and had not been heard of for several years. Re Renshaw, 4 L. R., Ch., 783; 17 W. R. 1035.

8. Appointment under one petition in lunacy and Chancery of new trustees, in the place of a person of unsound mind, not so found by inquisition, and of a deceased trustee and a trustee resident abroad. Re Stewart, 8 W. R. 297.

Vesting Order where one Trustee Abroad.

9. Where there are several trustees, one of whom is out of the jurisdiction, and a new trustee is appointed by the Court in his place under the Trustee Act 1850, an order vesting the trust estate in the new and continuing trustees will, under the 10th section of that Act, have the effect of severing the joint tenancy, semble. Re Watt's Settlement, 9 Hare 106; 20 L. J., N. S., Ch., 337; 15 Jur. 459.

10. Where one of several trustees of real estates is out of the jurisdiction, and it is sought to get another trustee appointed in his place, and to vest the trust property in the new trustee and the continuing trustees, the proper course is, not to apply for a vesting order for that purpose, but for an order appointing a proper person to concur with the continuing trustees in conveying the property, so as to vest it in themselves and the new trustee. Re Plyer's Trust, 9 Hare 220; 20 L. J., N. S., Ch., 529; 15 Jur. 766.

Form of order appointing a trustee in the place of a trustee out of the jurisdiction, where there is another and continuing trustee, and the vesting order is not made. Ib.

11. Where one of several trustees is out of the jurisdiction, and a new trustee is appointed in his place, the Court will make an order vesting the estate in the continuing trustees and the new trustee. Re Watt's Settlement (9 Hare 106) overruled. Smith v. Smith, 18 Jur. 1047; 3 Drew. 72; 3 W. R. 95; 24 L. J., Ch., 229; 3 Eq. Rep. 126.

12. Under the 10th section of the 13 & 14 Vict., c. 60, the Court will make an order vesting lands in a new trustee, jointly with continuing trustees, notwithstanding the doubts suggested in Re Watt's Settlement (9 Hare 106) and Re Plyer's Trust (9 Hare 220). Re Bute (Marquis), 1 Johns. 15; 5 Jur., N. S., 487; 33 L. T. 178.

5. Where no Original or Existing Trustees.

13. The Court has no jurisdiction, under the Trustee Act 1850, to appoint a new trustee of a term of which there is no subsisting trustee. Re Hazeldine, 16 Jur. 853.

14. The Court has inherent jurisdiction in a cause to appoint trustees of a will in a case where no trustees were originally appointed by the testator. Dodkin v. Brunt, 6 L. R., Eq., 580.

15. When a testatrix devised real estate on trust for sale, but there had never been a trustee of the will, in consequence of the death in the testatrix's lifetime of the sole trustee named in the will, and it was not known who was the heir of the testatrix:—Held, that the Court had no jurisdiction under the Trustee Act 1850, in the absence of the heir, to appoint a trustee and to make an order vesting in him the real estate descended. Gunsen v. Simpson, 5 L. R., Eq., 332; 16 W. R. 782; 18 L. T., N. S., 78.

16. Executors of a will, which contained no appointment of trustees, set apart a sum of money to answer a legacy; the fund was standing in the name of the surviving executor:—Held, that he was a constructive trustee within the Trustee Acts, and new trustees were appointed on petition. Re Davis, 40 L. J., Ch., 566; 12 L. R., Eq., 214; 19 W. R. 944.

17. The Court will appoint trustees of a will by which property is limited in such a manner as contemplates the intervention of trustees, although none may have been appointed by the testator. Re Gillett, 25 W. R. 23.

18. Where a testator had, by his will, left all his property to his wife for life, and appointed her his sole executrix, and had also left legacies of considerable amount to be paid after her death, but had not constituted any persons trustees thereof:—Held, upon petition intitled in an administration action commenced for the purpose and in the Trustee Act 1850, that upon the retirement of the widow the Court had jurisdiction, under the Trustee Act 1850, to appoint in her place a trustee or trustees to perform the duties incident to the office of an executor. Re Moore, McAlpine v. Moore, 21 L. R., Ch. D., 778; 30 W. R. 839.

1. The Court, sitting in lunacy, has power, under the 9th section of the Trustee Extension Act 1852, to appoint new trustees of the will of a deceased lunatic, where the trustees appointed by the lunatic have died in his lifetime, for the purpose of getting rid of the funds standing in court to the credit of the lunacy. Re Orde, 24 L. R., Ch. D., 271; 52 L. J., Ch., 832; 49 L. T. 430; 31 W. R. 801.

2. When all the trustees of real estate named in a will have predeceased the testator, new trustees may be appointed if the heir of the testator is before the Court. Re Smirthwaite, 40 L. J., Ch., 176; 11 L. R., Eq., 251; 19 W. R. 381; 23 L. T., N. S., 726.

6. Where Power in the Settlement Insufficient.

3. Where a trustee, a bankrupt, had not surrendered, and was proclaimed, the Court refused to appoint a new trustee in his place under a power, in which were the words, "refuse or become incapable to act." Turner v. Maule, 15 Jur. 761.

4. New trustee appointed by the Court where the power to appoint new trustees only contained the words, "die, or decline, or become incapable to act," and where a trustee who had acted was anxious to retire. Re Armstrong's Settlement, 5 W. R. 448.

5. New trustee appointed by the Court where the power to appoint new trustees only contained the words, "shall die, or become incapable, or be unwilling to act," and where two trustees who had acted desired to be discharged from the trusts. Re Woodgate's Settlement, 5 W. R. 448.

6. The words "unable to act" do not apply to the case of a trustee going out of the jurisdiction. Re Harrison's Trusts, 1 W. R. 58; 22 L. J., Ch., 69.

7. By residence for twenty years in America, and establishing in trade there, a trustee held to "become incapable" of acting in respect of leasehold property in England. Mesnard v. Welford, 1 W. R. 443; 1 Eq. Rep. 237.

In 1824 A. was appointed a trustee of leaseholds, situate in Middlesex; and the deed by which he was appointed contained a power for B. to appoint a trustee in the place of A., if A. "should die, or decline, or become incapable to act in the execution of the trusts aforesaid." In 1832 A. went to the United States of America, and had never since returned to this country, and was now settled in trade at New York. B. had appointed a trustee in the place of A. without A.'s consent:—Held, that A. was "incapable to act" as a trustee of the leaseholds in question, and the new trustee was declared to have been properly appointed. An order was made vesting the leaseholds in the new trustee. Id.

8. A settlement contained a power to appoint a new trustee in case any trustee should become incapable of acting. A trustee became of unsound mind. Upon petition, under the Trustee Act, 13 & 14 Vict., c. 60, the Court made an order for appointing a new trustee, and empowering the continuing trustee to transfer the trust fund. Re Cooper, 25 L. J., Ch., 685; 4 W. R. 729.

7. Where Donee of Power Incapacitated.

9. The Court has power, notwithstanding s. 137, 16 & 17 Vict., c. 70, to make an order for the appointment of new trustees, where the power of appointment was vested in a tenant for life, a lunatic, but it declined to do so in the absence of the committee of the lunatic. Re Parke, 9 Jur., N. S., 998; 11 W. R. 655; 8 L. T., N. S., 378. S. C. nom. Re Parker's Trust, 32 Beav. 580.

10. A power for the appointment of new trustees contained in a settlement became vested in a person who had been found lunatic by inquisition. The committee of the person and estate petitioned, under the 16 & 17 Vict., c. 70, for leave to exercise the power for him, and the same was ordered. Re Bowmer, 5 Jur., N. S., 348; 28 L. J., Ch., 618; 3 De G. & J. 658.

11. When the person having power to appoint a new trustee is a lunatic, found so by inquisition, an order appointing a new trustee may be made in Chancery under the Trustee Act 1850, s. 32. Re Sparrow, 5 L. R., Ch., 662; 18 W. R. 1185.

12. Order made under the Trustee Act 1850, appointing a new trustee, and vesting the trust premises in him jointly with the continuing trustees, in a case where one of three trustees was lunatic, and though the will contained a power to appoint new trustees. Re Davis, 3 Macn. & G. 278.

13. Property was left by will to trustees in trust for a person for her life, with remainder as therein mentioned. In the clause providing for the appointment of the trustees the power of appointment was vested solely in the tenant for life during her life. The tenant for life having become lunatic, and one of the trustees of the will having died, the Court, on the petition of the surviving trustee for the time being and the committee of the lunatic's estate, appointed a new trustee in the stead of the trustee who had died. Re Heapfy, 18 W. R. 1070.

14. Application for the direction of the Court as to the appointment of a third trustee in the room of a disclaiming trustee. The parties in whom the power of appointment was vested were in India; they, supposing that only two trustees had disclaimed, appointed two. It appeared that the third had also disclaimed. The petition was ordered to be amended by intitling it in the Trustee Act 1850, and by introducing the above facts; the Court would then appoint under the power in the Trustee Act. Re Humphry's Estate, 1 Jur., N. S., 921.

15. The Court has jurisdiction, under s. 32 of the Trustee Act 1850, to appoint a new trustee in the place of a trustee who has become incapable, as, for instance, through age and infirmity, of acting in the trusts. A will contained a power for the trustees, or the survivors of them, to appoint a new trustee in the place of any trustee who should be "incapable to act." One of the surviving trustees, the testator's widow, having become, through age and infirmity, incapable of acting in the trusts, or of concurring in the appointment of a new trustee, or in a transfer of the trust estate, the Court appointed a new trustee in her place, and made a vesting order. Re Lemann's Trusts, 22 L. R., Ch. D., 633; 52 L. J., Ch., 560; 48 L. T. 389; 31 W. R. 520.

8. Other Grounds.

1. The Court refused to appoint a new trustee on petition, where the object of the parties was to convey an estate to a purchaser, pursuant to a contract for sale, to which the old trustee ought to have been but was not a party. Re Lloyd, 3 J. & L. 255.

2. Held, that this Court has no power, under the Trustee Act 1850, to appoint trustees, where there are trustees de facto acting as such. Exp. Hadley, 5 De G. & Sm. 67; 16 Jur. 98; 21 L. J., Ch., 109.

3. A contingent interest in remainder in trust property gives a right to apply, under the Trustee Act 1850, ss. 32, 33, for the appointment of new trustees. Re Sheppard, 1 N. R. 76; 4 De G. F. & J. 423; 9 Jur., N. S., 59.

Though no case of present danger to such contingent right be shown, it is sufficient ground for an appointment of new trustees that the person who holds the office of trustee might have an interest in neglecting it. Ib.

4. The Court has not jurisdiction, under the Trustee Act 1850, to take away the power of appointing new trustees from the donee of the power, where the donee is capable of exercising, and willing to exercise, the power, although such donee may have disclosed an intention or desire to exercise his power corruptly. Re Hodson's Settlement, 9 Hare 118; 20 L. J., N. S., Ch., 551; 15 Jur. 552.

5. Where a trustee, from ill health, was unequal to the exertion of signing the necessary papers for effecting a transfer into Court of a sum of stock, the Court appointed new trustees of such sum of stock, they undertaking, within a given time, to transfer such sum of stock into the name, and with the privy, of the accountant-general of this court, pursuant to the provisions of the Trustee Relief Act. Re Dawson's Trust, Re Broome, 3 N. R. 397.

6. On petition for vesting order, the Court will also appoint a new trustee, notwithstanding the instrument creating the trust contains a power to appoint new trustees, which might without difficulty have been exercised. Re Cooper's Settlement, 4 W. R. 729; 25 L. J., Ch., 685.

7. The Court has jurisdiction, under s. 32 of the Trustee Act 1850, to appoint a new trustee in the place of a trustee who has become incapable, as, for instance, through age and infirmity, of acting in the trusts. A will contained a power for the trustees, or the survivors of them, to appoint a new trustee in the place of any trustee who should be "incapable to act." One of the surviving trustees, the testator's widow, having become, through age and infirmity, incapable of acting in the trusts, or of concurring in the appointment of a new trustee, or in a transfer of the trust estate, the Court appointed a new trustee in her place, and made a vesting order. Re Lemann's Trusts, 22 L. R., Ch. D., 633; 52 L. J., Ch., 560; 48 L. T. 389; 31 W. R. 520.

8. A suit having been instituted for the purpose of obtaining an order for the transfer, with the consent of all parties, of a fund standing in the books of the Bank of England in the name of an incorporate body, which had ceased to exist, the Court, having ordered the decree to be intitled in the matter of the Trustee Act 1850, appointed two trustees, and empowered and directed them to transfer the fund. Hanoer (King of) v. England (Bank of), 8 L. R., Eq., 350; 21 L. T., N. S., 106.

IV. OVER PART OF PROPERTY AND SEVERANCE OF TRUSTEESHIP.

9. Where part of the trust property had been lost, the Court in appointing new trustees refused to confine the trust to the remaining property, but directed it to be made of the whole comprised in the settlement, and referred it to the Master, whether it would be proper to take proceedings for the recovery of the part lost. Bonnett v. Burgis, 5 Hare 295; 15 L. J., N. S., Ch., 231; 10 Jur. 153.

10. Where by the same will different estates have been vested in the same trustees upon different trusts, and there is only a single power of appointment of new trustees in the usual form, and all the trustees have died, the Court may, with the consent of the representatives of the surviving trustee, appoint new trustees to execute the trusts of one estate, without dealing with the other estates. Re Dennis, 12 W. R. 675; 10 L. T., N. S., 688.

Hereditaments were devised to certain persons upon trust to secure a rent-charge, to be held on certain trusts, and subject thereto the hereditaments were devised in strict settlement, the same persons being trustees to support the contingent remainders. Various other trusts relating to other property were reposed in the same trustees, and the will contained a single power of appointing new trustees in the ordinary form. The estates limited to the trustees having devolved on the co-heiresses of the last surviving trustee, who refused to act in the trusts:—Held, that the Court could not, under the Trustee Act 1850, appoint new trustees of the rent-charge only, and vest the rent-charge in them, without the consent of the co-heiresses. S. C. 3 N. R. 636.

11. A father gave six separate sums in trust for six daughters respectively for life, with remainder for the benefit of their children, respectively at twenty-one or marriage, with ultimate gifts over for the benefit of all his children in certain contingencies. He gave a general power of appointment of new trustees. One of the six daughters married a Canadian; her children were Canadians, and had attained twenty-one or married, and the investments of the sum of money for her benefit were mostly Canadian. One of the trustees of the will retiring as far as regarded that sum, the Court appointed a Canadian trustee of the same jointly with the other trustee of the will. Re Cunard, 27 W. R. 52; 43 L. J., Ch., 192.

1. A testator gave different parts of his property, consisting of freeholds and leaseholds, on substantially similar trusts for different families, with cross-remainders in each case. Many of the cestuis que trustent were not sui juris:—Held, the present trustees of the will and all the cestuis que trustent who were sui juris consenting, that separate sets of trustees might be appointed for the different divisions of the property. Re Grange, Cooper v. Todd, 44 L. T. 469; 29 W. R. 502.

V. PRACTICE AND PARTIES.

1. Who may Petition, 6836.
2. Parties to Concur or be Served, 6836.
3. Affidavit of Fitness, 6837.
4. Other Evidence, 6837.
5. Consent of New Trustees, 6837.

1. Who may Petition.

2. A petition to change the trustees in a settlement ought to be presented by the cestui que trust, and not by the proposed trustees. Re O'Dell, Hayes 257.

3. A person who has a contingent interest in a trust fund has a locus standi to present a petition for the appointment of new trustees under the Trustee Act 1850. Re Sheppard, 4 De G. F. & J. 423; 1 N. R. 76; 9 Jur., N. S., 59.

4. Creditors who have obtained a decree for the administration of the estate of their deceased debtor, under which a contract for sale of his real estate has been entered into, and the purchase money paid into court, are persons "beneficially interested" in the lands comprised in the contract within the scope of the 13 & 14 Vict., c. 60, s. 37, and entitled to apply thereunder. Re Wragg, 1 De G. J. & Sm. 356; 2 N. R. 49.

2. Parties to Concur or be Served.

5. The Master directed to appoint a new trustee, although some of the cestuis que trustent were infants, and another was out of the jurisdiction. Hunter v. Gibson, 16 Sim. 159.

6. On a petition, under the Trustee Act 1850, for the appointment of new trustees of a settlement, the beneficial interests under which had been made the subjects of marriage settlements:—Held, that the original cestuis que trustent, their husbands and wives, and the trustees of their settlements, sufficiently represented all the parties beneficially interested. Re Smyth's Settlement, 2 De G. & Sm. 781.

7. Certain persons interested, being desirous of having new trustees appointed of certain articles of settlement, exhibited a statement before the Master, under the 13 & 14 Vict., c. 60, s. 38, and the Master gave a certificate approving of certain persons as new trustees, all parties interested having appeared before him and consented. On a motion that the certificate might be confirmed, and that an order might be made appointing the persons approved of by the Master trustees of the articles of settlement, the other parties interested did not appear, and the question was, whether it was necessary for them to do so, as they had already consented before the Master. Lord Cranworth thought they must appear and consent, and made the order on the production of consent brief from the other parties. Re Thomas's Trust, 15 Jur. 187.

8. On a petition to appoint new trustees, under the Trustee Act 1850, in place of two who were advanced in years and anxious to retire:—Held, that the two old trustees and all the cestuis que trustent should appear. Re Sloper, 18 Beav. 596.

9. When a chapel was conveyed to trustees upon trust among other things to allow such person to preach as the Wesleyan Conference should appoint:—Held, that the persons representing the Conference might join in a petition for the appointment of new trustees. Re Harden Wesleyan Chapel, 1 W. R. 212.

10. All the cestuis que trustent ought ordinarily to be parties to a petition for the appointment of new trustees, infants by their next friends, as well as adults. Re Fellows, 2 Jur., N. S., 62.

Costs "incidental to and consequent on" inquiry; the words "incidental to and consequent on" ordered to be struck out. Id.

11. Persons entitled to six-seventh parts of a trust fund applied to have a new trustee of the fund appointed:—Held, that, prima facie, all the persons beneficially interested must be before the Court, and that though circumstances might render such an application impossible, yet no such impossibility being suggested, these persons were not entitled to apply, and the Court declined to make the order asked, without service on the person entitled to the remaining one-seventh part. Re Richard's Trust, 5 De G. & Sm. 636.

12. Demise of lands to trustees for 1,000 years on certain trusts. Petition for the appointment of new trustees:—Held, that the reversioner ought to be served with the petition. Re Farrant's Trust, 20 L. J., N. S., Ch., 532.

13. Petition by tenant for life for a vesting order, to vest property in a new trustee appointed in the place of a trustee out of the jurisdiction, must be served on the remainderman. It must be proved by affidavit, inter alia, that the power has been properly exercised, and that the proposed trustee is a fit and proper person. Re Maynard's Settlement, 16 Jur. 1084; 1 W. R. 15.

14. A new trustee was appointed under a power in a settlement in the place of a trustee who was a lunatic. An order was made, under the 13 & 14 Vict., c. 60, for vesting the estate in the new trustee, but the committee of the lunatic's estate had not been served. The registrar declined to draw up the order without service, which the Court directed to be made. Re Saumarez, 25 L. J., Ch., 575; 8 De G. M. & G. 390; 4 W. R. 658.

15. A tenant for life of trust property, with a power of appointing new trustees, was duly found lunatic; but no committee was appointed. On a petition being presented, under 16 & 17 Vict., c. 70, s. 137, for the appointment of new trustees of the property, the Court declined to make an order in the absence of a committee. Re Parke, 9 Jur., N. S., 998; 11 W. R. 655; 8 L. T., N. S., 378; 32 Beav. 580.

16. When a petition is presented for the appointment of a new trustee under the Trustee Act 1850, in place of a trustee of unsound mind not so found, service on the trustee of unsound mind is not necessary. Re Green, Re Murton, 10 L. R., Ch., 272; 23 W. R. 804; 32 L. T., N. S., 446.

1. In petition cases, under the Trustee Act 1850, arising from trustees being out of the jurisdiction, it should be sworn where the trustee is, as service will be required when the absence is only in England. Exp. Hughes, 6 Ir. Eq. R. 559; 1 J. & L. 32.

2. An appointment of a new trustee in place of one permanently residing out of the jurisdiction will be made without service of the petition on the trustee so residing out of the jurisdiction. Re Martin Pye's Trusts, 42 L. T. 247.

3. The service of a petition for vesting in newly-appointed trustees lands which had descended to the infant heir of the former sole trustee upon the guardian of the infant is not necessary. Re Little, 7 L. R., Eq., 323.

3. Affidavit of Fitness.

4. Two trustees of real estate were appointed by the Court in the place of one on petition under the Trustee Act 1850; and, the property being small, without a reference, on an affidavit of the fitness of the two persons proposed as trustees. Exp. Tunstall, 4 De G. & Sm. 421; 15 Jur. 645, 981.

5. On a petition for the appointment of new trustees under the Trustee Act 1850, it was asked that the parties named in the petition might be appointed trustees without a reference to the Master, upon an affidavit of their fitness. Order made on the written consent of the parties proposed to be appointed trustees. Re Battersby's Trust, 16 Jur. 900.

6. The Court will not, as a general rule, receive the evidence of the solicitor in the matter, as to the fitness of persons proposed to be appointed new trustees. Grundy v. Bucheridge, 17 Jur. 731; 22 L. J., Ch., 1007.

7. It is not sufficient to describe a person making an affidavit of the fitness of a new trustee merely as a "gentleman." Re Orde, 24 L. R., Ch. D., 271; 52 L. J., Ch., 832; 40 L. T. 430; 31 W. R. 801.

Reference to Master.] See III. II. ante.

4. Other Evidence.

8. On a petition for appointing new trustees of a will containing gifts to classes, an affidavit of the solicitor was received as sufficient evidence of the persons constituting the classes without the production of baptismal and other certificates. Re Hoskins, 4 De G. & J. 436.

9. On a petition by the cestuis que trustent under a will of real estate for the appointment of new trustees, the will not having been proved:—Held, that the production of the affidavit of one of the attesting witnesses, proving the due execution of the will, would be sufficient evidence. Re Wickens's Trusts, 27 W. R. 880.

10. Affidavits made in a cause allowed to be used as evidence in a petition under the Trustee Act 1850. Re Pickance, 10 Hare (App.) xxxv.

5. Consent of New Trustees.

11. An affidavit by a third party is not sufficient evidence that the proposed trustees will consent to act. Semble, that such consent may be sufficiently shown by the instruction of counsel or by letter. Re Park's Trust, 1 W. R. 477.

12. An intended trustee should not appear to consent by counsel, but should merely signify his assent to the petitioner. Re Draper's Settlement, 2 W. R. 440.

13. Where a trustee declines to act, and it is necessary to appoint a new one in his place, his consent to the new appointment must be obtained. Re Garty, 10 L. T., N. S., 331; 3 N. R. 636.

14. Order for appointment of new trustees or written consent of parties proposed to be appointed. Re Battersby's Trusts, 16 Jur. 900.

VI. COSTS.

15. A court of equity has no jurisdiction to award costs adversely against third parties cited to appear as respondents upon a petition to appoint new trustees under the 13 & 14 Vict., c. 60. Re Primrose, 23 Beav. 590; 3 Jur., N. S., 899; 5 W. R. 508. But see Re Woodburn, 1 De G. & J. 333; 3 Jur., N. S., 799; 26 L. J., Ch., 522.

16. Where an order had been made for the appointment of new trustees under the Trustee Act 1850, and for the payment of the costs out of the trust estate, and it was subsequently shown that the trust estate consisted entirely of realty, the order was amended by the insertion of words authorising the trustees to raise the costs out of the realty by way of mortgage, the mortgage deed to be approved by the judge at chambers. Re Crabtree, 14 W. R. 497.

17. When a legacy had been bequeathed to a sole trustee for a tenant for life, and then for reversioners absolutely, the costs of a petition by the reversioners for the appointment of an additional trustee were ordered to be paid by the petitioners, and not out of the corpus of the legacy. Re Brackenbury, 10 L. R., Eq., 45; 39 L. J., Ch., 635; 22 L. T., N. S., 469.

18. On petition for the appointment of new trustees under the Trustee Act 1850, the Court has no jurisdiction to order payment into court of the trust funds. The costs of a petition for the appointment of new trustees where the petitioner was the tenant for life directed to be paid out of the corpus of the fund, and as regards persons having legal interest in the funds as between solicitor and client. Re Parby's Settlement Trusts, 29 L. T. 72.

19. Under a power in a settlement of real estate, a new trustee was duly appointed in the place of a sole trustee, deceased. The heir of the deceased trustee could not be found, and, on petition, an order was made to vest the estate in the new trustee, and that upon consent he might pay the costs of the proceedings, and that such costs, with interest at 4l. per cent., might form a charge on the inheritance. Exp. Davies, 16 Jur. 882.

20. A bankrupt trustee is entitled to his costs of appearing on a petition for the appointment of new trustees. Turner v. Mul-linex, 9 W. R. 252.

1. On a petition for appointment of new trustees of two trust funds, the costs ordered to be paid out of the two funds ratably. Re Grant, 2 John. & H. 764.

2. Where a petition by a married woman by her next friend, for the appointment of new trustees, contained allegations against the husband of misconduct, and his affidavit denied those allegations, and contained other allegations of misconduct on the part of the parties therein referred to, the Court ordered the next friend to pay the respondent his costs of answering the charges made against him, and the costs incurred in making those charges, and in reference thereto; the respondent to pay the costs incurred by the charges which he first introduced, and the trust property to bear the ordinary costs of a petition for the appointment of new trustees. Re Wills, 9 Jur., N. S. 1225.

3. A trustee who makes an improper opposition to a petition for the appointment of new trustees will have to bear his own costs of the opposition, and will have the costs occasioned to the other parties by his opposition deducted from the costs properly payable to him. Re Wiseman, 18 W. R. 574.

4. Two petitions were presented on the same day for the appointment of new trustees, the Court will order the costs of the more perfect petition only to be paid out of the fund, and notwithstanding that the less perfect petition was presented first. Re Pring, 42 L. J., Ch., 473; 28 L. T., N. S., 467.

I. WHO MAY PAY IN.

1. A. B. purchased an estate subject to a pecuniary charge:—Held, that he was not entitled to pay the amount of the charge into Court under the Trustee Relief Act. Re Buckley's Trust, 17 Beav. 110; 17 Jur. 478; 22 L. J., Ch., 934; 1 Eq. Rep. 18.

A testator directed legacies to be laid out upon real estate, and the interest thereof paid to C. D. for life, and after her death the principal sum divided amongst certain persons. The testator devised the real estate charged with the payment of the said legacies. A portion of the real estate was conveyed to purchasers, and the same was, by arrangement, made subject to the payment of legacies. C. D. having died, the legacies became divisible, but the purchaser of the estate charged with them, not being satisfied that the same were divisible among the parties who claimed, paid the money into court, with an arrear of interest, under the Trustee Relief Act, 10 & 11 Vict., c. 96:—Held, that the case was not within the statute. Ib.

2. A stakeholder may pay money into court under the Trustee Relief Act. Re United Kingdom Life Assurance Co., 11 Jur., N. S., 424; 34 L. J., Ch., 554; 13 W. R. 645; 12 L. T., N. S., 441; 6 N. R. 59.

3. Testatrix, by her will, declared, that every person thereby made tenant for life should have such and the like powers of leasing, selling, and exchanging any part of the devised estate as were by her father's will given to the tenants for life and in tail mentioned in his will, or to the trustees thereof. It appeared that the father's will did not give a tenant for life or in tail any power of the leasing, selling, or exchanging, but gave trustees full power to sell and exchange the hereditaments therein comprised, and to give receipts for the purchase money:—Held, that tenant for life in possession of the estate devised by the testatrix had the same powers of selling and exchanging that estate as were by the father's will given to the trustees, but that such powers did not extend to giving receipts; and semble, that the difficulties which might be met with in exercising such power of sale, in the absence of a power to give receipts, might be removed by paying the money into Court under the Trustee Relief Act, stat. 10 & 11 Vict., c. 96, and that upon such payment the purchaser might safely complete. Cox v. Cox, 1 Kay & J. 251.

4. Bonds of a foreign company were deposited by their agent at a bank in London, together with 5,000*l.* to be divided amongst the bondholders on non-payment of interest. The 5,000*l.* having become forfeited by non-payment of interest, one of the bondholders brought an action against the bankers for his share. Injunction granted to restrain this action, the bankers being trustees for an unascertained class, and therefore entitled to protection against a succession of actions, and not bound at their own risk and expense to ascertain the amount of bonds negotiated at the date of the forfeiture. Semble, that the 5,000*l.* might have been paid into court under the Trustee Relief Act. Hankey v. Morley, 4 Jur., N. S., 234.

5. A banking company having received notice in writing of conflicting claims to moneys placed with them on deposit, paid such moneys into court under the Trustee Relief Act, after first deducting therefrom their costs of payment in. Upon petition by one of the claimants for payment out:—Held, that the proviso in s. 25, sub-s. 6 of the Judicature Act only applied to debts of which there had been an absolute assignment in writing; and that the banking company, not being trustees within the Trustee Relief Act, were not entitled to pay the deposit moneys in court thereunder:—But held, that the petitioner must be taken to have submitted to the jurisdiction under the Trustee Relief Act, by petitioning the Court, and upon the principle of Re Haycock's Policy (1 L. R., Ch. D., 611), the bank were entitled to their taxed costs of payment in and of the petition, and such costs were directed to be taxed accordingly. Re Sutton's Trusts, 12 L. R., Ch. D., 175; 48 L. J., Ch., 350; 27 W. R. 529.

6. The surety in the Probate Court of an administrator who has got money assets of the intestate in his hands may lodge it in court under the Trustee Relief Act. Re Monahan, 8 Ir. R., Eq., 353.

II. BY SURVIVING TRUSTEE OR MAJORITY OF TRUSTEES.

7. Stock standing in the joint names of surviving and deceased trustees may be transferred by the survivors to the accountant-general, under the Trustee Relief Act (10 & 11 Vict., c. 96). Re Parry, 6 Hare 306; 12 Jur. 721.

8. Three trustees were possessed of a fund which it was desirable to pay into court. One of the trustees being invalidated, the other two petitioned, under the Trustee Further Relief Act (12 & 13 Vict., c. 74), for leave to pay in the fund. The order was made. Re Broadwood, 8 L. T., N. S., 632.

III. WHAT SECURITIES MAY BE PAID IN.

9. As to transfer into court of foreign bonds under the Trustee Relief Act. See Re Lloyd, 2 W. R. 371.

10. Railway stock may now be transferred into court under the Trustee Relief Act 1847. Re Ross's Trusts, 28 W. R. 418.

IV. AFFIDAVIT.

11. In an affidavit made upon payment of money into court under the Trustee Relief Act, the sum to be paid in must be expressed in words, and not in figures. Re Watts, 24 W. R. 701; 34 L. T., N. S., 647.

12. If a trustee about to pay money into court under the Trustee Relief Act becomes aware of the existence of a claim after he has filed his affidavit, he must file a supplemental affidavit stating the claim, and in default of so doing, he will be personally responsible for the costs of any application by the claimant necessitated by his neglect. Re Allen's Trusts, 27 W. R. 529; 40 L. T. 466.

By a Sole Trustee.] 1. Order made under the circumstances for the accountant-general to receive a fund under the Trustee Relief Act on the affidavit of one only of two trustees. Anon., 1 Jur., N. S., 974.

V. NOTICE AND SERVICE.

2. When a legacy had been paid into court by trustees, and the persons entitled to it were resident in Canada:—Held, that notice sent through post by registered letter was sufficient notice. Re Merryweather, 22 L. T., N. S., 603.

3. Where the person mentioned in an affidavit on payment into court under the Trustee Relief Act as being the person interested in the fund could not be found, an opinion was intimated as to what would probably be held sufficient notice of the payment in, but the Court declined to give any directions. Re Hardley's Trusts, 10 L. R., Ch. D., 664; 48 L. J., Ch., 335; 27 W. R. 587; 40 L. T. 409.

When Dispensed With.] 4. Where the only person entitled to a trust fund paid into court under the Trustee Relief Act had gone to America, and had not been heard of since 1868, service of the notice of the payment into court required to be given by the trustees was dispensed with. Re Walters, 22 L. T., N. S., 120.

5. Where property was given by will to a person, but should he not return to England within seven years of the testatrix's death then over to other persons, and the executor, the seven years having elapsed, and the legatee having been last heard of four years and a half ago in Australia, paid the money into court under the Trustee Relief Act, the money was allowed to be paid to the persons entitled in default of the legatee's return in seven years, and service upon him of notice of the payment into court was dispensed with. Re Whitaker's Trust, 47 L. T. 507; 31 W. R. 114.

6. On payment into court by trustees of a reversionary fund, which had fallen into possession since the death of a married woman entitled thereto:—Held, that upon production of a full affidavit as to unsuccessful inquiries for the husband, who had gone to Australia in 1850, and had not since been heard of, the Court would dispense with notice to the husband. Re Hansford, 7 W. R. 199.

VI. TITLE OF ACCOUNT.

7. Executors paid money into court under the Trustee Relief Act to an account headed "In the matter of the trusts of the will of S. J." The Court held that the account was too general to enable it to act under this statute. Re Joseph's Will, 11 Beav. 625.

Observations as to the effect of and the proper mode of proceeding under this Act. Id.

8. In order to indemnify a trustee or executor who lodges funds in court under the Trustee Relief Act (11 & 12 Vict., c. 68), the funds must be lodged in the credit of a particular trust. The Court will not make an order where the funds have been properly lodged.

The practice under the said and corresponding English Act stated. Re Godfrey's Trust, 2 Ir. Ch. R. 105.

9. To enable the Court to distribute a fund under the Act 10 & 11 Vict., c. 96, it must stand to an account which separates it from the other assets, and disconnects it from all the other trusts of the will. Re Everett, 12 Beav. 485.

10. A fund bequeathed in aliquot parts, on distinct trusts, ought not to be paid by the trustees to the joint account of the several trusts, but ought to be carried to separate accounts. Re Tillstone's Trust, 9 Hare (App.) lix.

11. Application to have some money paid out of court which had been paid in to an account intitled "The Trusts of the will of J. Robinson, deceased," the application being by the nine children of the testator, all of whom were adult and sui juris, and claimed as residuary legatees. The Court, however, declined to pay out to residuary legatees a sum which had been paid in on so general a trust. After consideration of the will, however, the fund was directed to be carried over to an account intitled "The Account Residue" subject to the particular legacies; and then the residuary legatees claiming would be in their right. Re Robinson's Trust, 1 Jur., N. S., 750.

12. Where a fund is paid into court under the Trustee Relief Act to a general account of a will, the Court will order it to be carried to the separate account of the person (an infant) named in the trustee's affidavit, as the only person entitled to such fund, and it is not necessary previously to change the title of the account. Re Coulson, 4 Jur., N. S., 6.

13. Where under the Trustee Relief Act money is paid into court "upon the trusts of a will," it involves the general administration of the estate, and the Court will not order it to be transferred to a particular account, except at the request and on the responsibility of the trustee. Re Wright's Trusts, 15 Beav. 367.

14. Form of order where cash and stock not admitting of division below 1*l.* are paid and transferred into court to separate accounts. Re Perry, 24 W. R. 433.

15. The surety in the Probate Court of an administrator who has got money assets of the intestate in his hands may lodge it in court under the Trustee Relief Act. Re Monahan, 8 Ir. R., Eq., 353.

The balance of the assets of an intestate, after they have been fully administered, should be lodged to a credit intitled, "In the matter of the 11 & 12 Vict., c. 68, and separate credit of the next-of-kin" of the intestate. Id.

16. A fund paid in under the Trustee Relief Act to an account intitled, "In the matter of the estate of a deceased person," will not be paid out without the presence of his legal personal representative and an admission of assets by him. Re Edwards' Estate, 4 W. R. 801.

VII. EFFECT ON POWERS OF TRUSTEES.

17. There being a question whether a fund should be paid to cestuis que trustent, infants being interested, the trustee pays it into court under the Trustee Relief Act, and the cestui que trust appoint new trustees:—Held, that they could do so, as the payment into court specified a “desire to be discharged,” and therefore it was competent for them to appoint other trustees under their power in that case to nominate and appoint any other persons, etc. Re Bailey's Trust, 3 W. R. 31.

1. A testator gave all his property to trustees, upon trust to pay the income to his widow, and after her death “to make a weekly allowance to the testator's son S., or his children, for his and their maintenance and support, such allowance to be in the discretion of my trustees.” He then gave his trustees a power of advancement, at their discretion, to S. or his children, and concluded, “it being my intention that S., if living, shall have the whole benefit of such moneys, if he shall conduct himself steadily and to the satisfaction of my executors.” S., after the death of the widow, assigned the fund absolutely to A. The trustees, in consequence of doubts raised on the construction of the will as to the nature of S.'s interest, and without any observations favourable or otherwise to the conduct of S., paid the fund into court:—Held, that S. took an absolute interest in the whole fund, which passed to his particular assignee. Re Coe, 4 Kay & J. 199; 4 Jur., N. S., 158.

2. Where under a will the income of a fund was payable for the maintenance of T. G.:—Held, that the trustee by paying the fund into court under the Trustee Relief Act relinquished his discretionary power. Re Tegg's Trusts, 15 W. R. 52.

3. A trustee who had paid money into court under the Trustee Relief Act (10 & 11 Vict., c. 96):—Held, to have retired from his trust. Re William's Settlement, 4 Kay & J. 87.

4. Trustees who have paid a fund into court under the 10 & 11 Vict., c. 96, cannot prevent its being paid out to a cestui que trust absolutely entitled to it, on the ground that he is about to file a bill against them to take accounts of the trust. Re Wright, 3 Kay & J. 419.

5. A testator bequeathed to his executors a sum of 450*l.*, which he directed should be held by them in trust for his brother James's family, and should be by his said executors expended for the benefit of the said family, in such a manner as to them should seem most expedient. The executors having paid the 450*l.* into court under the Trustee Relief Act:—Held, that the payment into court terminated the discretionary power of applying the funds. Re Mulqueen Trusts, Exp. Mulqueen, 7 L. R., Ir., 127.

6. A trustee having a discretionary power as to the application of a trust fund, does not necessarily abandon it by paying the trust fund into court. Re Landon, 40 L. J., Ch., 370.

7. The 10 & 11 Vict., c. 96, by enabling a trustee to pay a trust fund into court, does not deprive him of the right to file a bill to be relieved from the trusteeship, and he will, in a proper case, be allowed his costs of such bill as between solicitor and client. Barker v. Piele, 2 Dr. & Sm. 340; 11 Jur., N. S., 436; 34 L. J., Ch., 497; 13 W. R. 573; 12 L. T., N. S., 50.

9. Quære, whether the Court has jurisdiction to decide a question of election on a petition under the Trustee Relief Act. Exp. Bernard, Re Leigh's Trust, 6 Ir. Ch. R. 133.

10. Where a petition was presented under the Trustee Relief Act, and a question as to sanity of one of the parties arose:—Held, that the Court had jurisdiction to decide the matter as if it were a suit, and if necessary the Court could direct an issue. Semble, also, that where there are creditors or unascertained claims a suit is the proper course. Re Allen's Will, Kay (App.) li.

11. The Court has no jurisdiction on a petition presented under the Trustee Relief Acts to decide on a disputed question of title. Re Draper, 9 W. R. 805.

12. In a case upon the construction of a marriage settlement and the interest of the children of the marriage under it:—Held, that the question raised was a matter which it was competent for the Court to deal with, on petition, under the Trustee Relief Act. Re Dalton, 1 De G. M. & G. 265; 21 L. J., N. S., Ch., 681; 16 Jur. 253.

13. Under the Trustee Relief Act (10 & 11 Vict., c. 96), it is entirely a matter for the discretion of the Court to direct a bill to be filed, if such a mode of proceeding shall appear to be necessary; but the Lord Chancellor has the same jurisdiction upon petition as upon a bill. Lewis v. Hillman, 3 H. L. Ca. 607. And see S. C. in court below sub. nom. Re Bloye's Trust, 1 Macn. & G. 488; 2 H. & Tw. 140; 19 L. J., N. S., Ch., 89; 14 Jur. 49.

On a petition presented under that Act praying for the payment out of court of money then in court, and on cross-petition in opposition thereto, the Court has full power to declare validity or invalidity of any deed on which the claim to that money is vested. Ib. Quære, whether this may not properly be done upon petition alone, without any necessity for filing a cross-petition. Ib.

Such necessity, if it exists, may be dispensed with by consent. Ib.

A. was entitled to a reversionary interest in one-fifth share of certain real and personal estate then held by a devisee for life. A. granted to B. an annuity upon it; the annuity deed, which was registered, contained a power of sale; the annuity fell into arrear, and B. determined to exercise the power of sale. The sale was effected for a sum of 900*l.*; but the purchaser discovered an objection in the memorial registered, which rendered the annuity deed invalid, and he refused to complete the purchase, and obtained a return of his deposit money. The solicitors of B. (acting at the time, as they stated, from motives of kindness to A.) obtained from A., who had not the benefit of any solicitor's advice, an assignment of the reversionary interest to L. for the sum of 900*l.*, and after the reversion fell in by the death of the tenant for life, claimed the property as the purchaser's, alleging that the purchase had been made by L. as their agent and on their behalf. The executors declined to pay them the value of the property, which it was then found amounted to 1,770*l.*, but paid it into court, under the 10 & 11 Vict., c. 96 (the Trustee Relief Act). The solicitors presented a petition to have the money paid out to them as purchasers of the reversionary interest under the deed of assignment to L. A. opposed the payment on affidavits, which set up a case of deception and fraud practised on him. The parties on both sides agreed that the case should be heard on petition and affidavits as if a petition and cross-petition had been filed. The Vice-Chancellor ordered the money to be paid out of court to the solicitors as purchasers. The Lord Chancellor, on appeal, reversed this order, declared the assignment to be invalid, and ordered the money to be paid back into court, reserved the costs, and gave either of the parties liberty to make any further application to the Court:—Held, that the Lord Chancellor's order was correct; that the purchase by the solicitors, who were at the time the solicitors of the vendor, was contrary to the rules of equity, and void; that without any consent the Court had jurisdiction, on petition or cross-petition, under the statute, to declare the deed of assignment invalid, as well as to order repayment of the money; that the consent here given waived any possible necessity for a cross-petition; and that the order was not bad for not directing a return to the solicitors of the money they had paid as purchase money; for that the leave reserved to either party to make any further application to the Court enabled them to obtain a return of this money. 1b.

1. The validity of a deed cannot be impeached on a petition under the Trustee Relief Act. Re Way, 10 Jur., N. S., 1166; 34 L. J., Ch., 49; 11 L. T., N. S., 495.

2. A fund in court which has, contrary to the intention of the parties, clearly proved, been included in a settlement, will only be paid out to the parties entitled under that settlement until it has been reformed; and the Court has no jurisdiction upon petition to reform an instrument. Re Malet, 30 Beav. 407. But see Re Hoare, 4 Giff. 254, and Re De la Touche, 10 L. R., Eq., 603.

3. The testator directed his debts and funeral and testamentary expenses to be paid out of his personal estate. He then devised his freeholds to trustees to be sold, and the proceeds, after deducting costs, to be deemed part of the residue of his personal estate, and to be subject to the dispositions thereafter made of the same. The testator then gave a legacy of 1,000*l.* upon certain trusts, and finally directed all the rest and residue of his personal estate to go to his wife for life, remainder over. The pure personal estate being insufficient to pay all the debts and legacies:—Held, that the legacy of 1,000*l.* ought to be paid out of the moneys arising from the sale of the real estate. There was only one petition presented in the present case, and the petitioner being held not to be entitled, another petition ought to have been presented by the party whose claim was preferred. But in order to save expense, the Court, having under the Trustee Relief Act the same jurisdiction on such a petition as on a bill, made an order for distribution and investment, according to the rights of the parties. Re Woollard's Trust, 18 Jur. 1012.

4. A trustee paying into court a sum of money under the Trustee Relief Act (10 & 11 Vict., c. 96), although such sum may be less than the amount of the trust fund in his hands, is discharged as to the money so paid in, and after such payment the parties beneficially interested can proceed only under the Act to recover the money so paid in, and the ordinary jurisdiction of the Court as against the trustee is confined to the balance which may remain due from the trustee in respect of the trust fund after such payment. Goode v. West, 9 Hare 378; 21 L. J., N. S., Ch., 127; 15 Jur. 1025.

5. The Trustee Relief Act takes away the jurisdiction of the Court by bill against the trustee in respect of the money which he has paid into court. Thorp v. Thorp, 1 Kay & J. 438.

6. A testator devised a freehold to trustees for the benefit of E. for life and for her separate use, and after her death upon trusts for such of the children of E. as, being sons, should attain twenty-one, or, being daughters, should attain that age or marry. E. died after the testator, leaving an infant daughter who did not marry before attaining twenty-one:—Held, that the legal estate was in the trustees, and the daughter of E. took the property on attaining twenty-one, but the interim rents went to the residuary devisee. Re Eddels, 40 L. J., Ch., 316; 11 L. R., Eq., 559; 24 L. T., N. S., 223; 19 W. R. 815.

On a petition for payment out of the interim rents which had been paid in under the Trustee Relief Acts, the Court decided that the legal estate was in the trustees. 1b.

7. Application by person claiming to be entitled to some money which had been paid into court under the Trustee Relief Act 1847, asking for leave to make out his title to it on a bill rather than on a petition, stating that the only point to be decided was, whether a legacy "to the eldest son of my dear sister J." lapsed or not by the decease, in the lifetime of the testator, of the child who was eldest son at the date of the will, refused. Re Harris's Trust, 18 Jur. 721; 2 Eq. Rep 1110; 2 W. R. 442.

8. Where a fund is brought into court under the Trustee Relief Act, and the title one of the claimants is adverse to that of the trustees who brought in the fund, the Court will not decide the case on petition under the Act, but will direct a bill to be filed. Re Fozard's Trusts, 3 W. R. 219; 1 Kay & J. 233, 341; 3 Eq. Rep. 759; 24 L. J., Ch., 441.

1. The surviving trustee under two wills, having gone abroad temporarily, pays the trust fund into court, and a petition is presented by the cestui que trustent to appoint new trustees; and upon the question whether the fund should not remain in court:—Held, that such was not the object of the Trustee Relief Act, but the parties interested must be satisfied with the trustees appointed. Re Lloyd's Trust, 2 W. R. 371.

2. Where trustees pay a fund into court, under the 10 & 11 Vict., c. 96, as the portion of A., the Court will not, upon petition by A. for payment out to him of the fund, entertain any question by third parties as to whether it is the right sum. Re Jenkins, 10 Jur., N. S., 332; 10 L. T., N. S., 58; 3 N. R. 408.

II. TO WHOM PAYMENT WILL BE MADE.

3. A claimant allowed to proceed in forma pauperis under the Act 11 & 12 Vict., c. 96. Re Money, 13 Beav. 109; 20 L. J., N. S., Ch., 274; 15 Jur. 51.

4. A sum of money was paid into court by an executor, in the belief that it was the clear residue. Debts were afterwards discovered to be due from his estate; and on a petition, consented to by the parties beneficially interested, an order was made for payment out to the executor of money to the requisite amount, he undertaking to apply it according to the trusts of the will. Exp. Tournay, 19 L. J., N. S., Ch., 257; 14 Jur. 263; 3 De G. & Sm. 677.

5. A trustee who has paid a sum of money into court under the 10 & 11 Vict., c. 96, may afterwards apply by petition, that the fund may be dealt with as in an administration suit. Re Trower, 1 L. T., N. S., 54.

6. A trust fund paid into the court under the Trustee Relief Act, after the death of the cestui que trust, ordered to be paid to the administrator of the cestui que trust, under a grant of letters of administration by the Archdeaconry Court, obtained after the fund was in the Court of Chancery. Re Spencer, 9 Hare 410; 1 De G. Macn. & G. 311; 21 L. J., N. S., Ch., 314; 16 Jur. 233.

7. The sole surviving trustee of stock was an infant, and was also absolutely entitled beneficially to the fund. The Court ordered the fund to be brought into court under the Trustee Relief Act, and part of the capital to be sold out and applied for the infant's benefit. Re Pitt, 1 Jur., N. S., 1155.

8. Where stock paid into court under 10 & 11 Vict., c. 96, was settled in default of issue of the marriage on the husband absolutely, and he, by his will, there being no children, bequeathed it to his wife, the Court refused to order it, on petition, to be transferred to her until the fact on which her title depended had been found by the Master. Re Woods, 15 Sim. 469.

9. Trustees who have paid a fund into court under the 10 & 11 Vict., c. 96, cannot prevent its being paid out to a cestui que trust absolutely entitled to it on the ground that he is about to file a bill against them to take the accounts of the trust. Re Wright, 3 Kay & J. 419.

10. Stock paid into court under the Trustee Relief Act, and forming the subject of a settlement according to the law of Prussia, under which the husband took no interest, ordered, after the death of the wife, to be paid out to him in his capacity of guardian of the infant child of the marriage, who was entitled to the fund upon the death of her mother. Re Brown, 13 W. R. 677.

11. A wife who has been deserted by her husband for more than twenty years, and has heard nothing of him for more than five years, is entitled to receive a sum of money, paid into court, as though a feme sole. Re Pope, 21 W. R. 646.

12. Funds lodged under the Trustee Relief Act to the separate credit of minors, natives of and domiciled in Scotland, ordered to be transferred to the minors and their curator. Re Ferguson, 8 Ir. R., Eq., 563.

13. When there are conflicting claims to a trust fund, and the trustees have paid it into court to the account of one of the claimants, without giving, at the same time, notice to the Court of the adverse claims, payment of the fund to the person in whose name it stands ordered by the Court, but without prejudice to any question as between the trustees and the adverse claimants. Re Jenkins, 3 N. R. 408; 10 Jur., N. S., 332; 10 L. T., N. S., 58.

14. A person not mentioned in the trustee's affidavit may apply by petition for the payment out of court of moneys paid in under the Trustee Relief Act. Re Puttrel, 7 L. R., Ch. D., 647; 47 L. J., Ch., 11; 37 L. T., N. S., 374.

III. FUNDS OF LUNATICS.

15. Certain stock belonging to a lunatic, though not found so by inquisition, had been paid into court under the Trustee Relief Act. The expenses of the maintenance of the lunatic out of the parish fund had exceeded the value of the fund in court. The stock in court was ordered to be sold, and the produce to be paid to the clerk of the guardians of the poor of the parish. Re Parker, 2 W. R. 139.

16. Order made, on a petition presented by guardians of the poor under the Trustee Relief Act, 10 & 11 Vict., c. 96, for payment to them, out of a fund paid in by trustees in which a lunatic was interested, of sums expended by the guardians in support of the lunatic, the Lord Chancellor holding that, by the Act, the Court was placed in the position of the trustees, and that the trustees might have made the payment under the 7 & 8 Vict., c. 101, s. 27. Re Upfull's Trust, 3 Macn. & G. 281; 21 L. J., N. S., Ch., 119.

17. Expenses incurred by the overseers for the maintenance of a lunatic paid to them upon petition out of his share in a sum of stock paid into court under the Trustee Relief Act. Re Ward, 2 W. R. 406.

18. When a fund belonging to an Englishman residing abroad and found lunatic there under a foreign inquisition is paid into court under the Trustee Relief Act, the Court has a discretion to refuse to transfer the corpus to the foreign provisional committee of the estate of the lunatic, though such committee is duly constituted according to the laws of the country where the inquisition was held, and has power to sue and give valid receipts for the fund. Re Garnier, 41 L. J., Ch., 419; 13 L. R., Eq., 532; 20 W. R. 288; 25 L. T., N. S., 928.

1. A., being entitled to property under an English settlement, and being resident in Jersey, was found of unsound mind by a formal proceeding there, and his brother E. appointed his curator. The trustee of the settlement having paid the fund into court under the Trustee Relief Act, the curator petitioned to have the dividends paid to him, he undertaking to apply them for the benefit of A. Order made on production of official and verified copy of the proceedings in Jersey. Re Albo, 11 W. R. 80; 7 L. T., N. S., 778.

2. Where a person of unsound mind had been maintained in a lunatic asylum by his parish, a portion of the capital of a fund belonging to him, which had been paid in under the Trustee Relief Act, ordered to be applied in defraying the past charges of the parish. Re Buckley, 1 Johns. 700.

The Court has a discretion to order such repayment or not, as it may think most for the benefit of the lunatic. Id.

3. The Court of Chancery, in its ordinary jurisdiction, can entertain applications relating to the property under its control of persons of unsound mind not found lunatic by inquisition. Re Maofarlane, 8 Jur., N. S., 208; 31 L. J., Ch., 335; 10 W. R. 369; 6 L. T., N. S., 154; 2 John. & H. 673.

Stock transferred into court under the Trustee Relief Act, and constituting the entire fortune of a person of unsound mind not found lunatic by inquisition, ordered, with the dividends thereon, to be paid to his father in part discharge of moneys expended for past maintenance, the father undertaking to continue the maintenance in future. Id.

4. The Court ordered a fund of 379*l.* stock and 5*l.* cash paid into court under the Trustee Relief Act, and constituting nearly the entire fortune of a lunatic not found such by inquisition, to be paid to his father in part discharge of moneys expended for past maintenance. Re Lam, 7 Jur., N. S., 410; 30 L. J., Ch., 512.

5. Investment of a fund belonging to a lunatic in an annuity for his life. Re Dods-worth's Trust, 10 Hare 16.

6. Order made by the Master of the Rolls directing the dividends of a sum paid into court under the 10 & 11 Vict., c. 96, belonging to a person of unsound mind, though not so found by inquisition, to be paid to her father for her maintenance. Re Berry, 13 Beav. 455.

7. S., a person alleged to be lunatic, but not so found by inquisition, was entitled absolutely to 720*l.*, which had been paid into court under the Trustee Relief Act. The father of S. presented a petition in his own right, and as next friend, praying that the income of the fund might be paid to him during the life of S., or until further order, he undertaking to apply it towards the maintenance of S. The evidence showed that S. was quite imbecile, and was not entitled to any property other than the 720*l.*, and that the father was not of ability to maintain her. The Court made the order, but directed an application to be made once a year in chambers, showing the state of mind of S., and of what her property then consisted. Re Sturge, 5 Jur., N. S., 423; 7 W. R. 395.

8. When a person of unsound mind, not found lunatic by inquisition, had been maintained in a lunatic asylum by his parish, the whole of the capital of a fund belonging to him, which had been paid into court under the Trustee Relief Act, was ordered to be applied, so far as it would extend, in discharge of the past charges of the parish for maintenance. Re Phelps, 28 L. T., N. S., 350.

9. A pauper lunatic in an asylum at Bethnal Green, but not found lunatic by inquisition, became entitled to a small fund in court. An order was made in 1856 on petition under the Trustee Relief Act by his next friend directing that he should continue at the asylum until further order, and, the guardians of the poor of his parish undertaking to maintain him there, that 31*l.* a year should be raised out of the fund and paid to the guardians in repayment of the sums to be expended in his maintenance. In 1859 he was removed to the new asylum for his county by order of the justices, but without any order of the Court of Chancery. From this time no payments were applied for by the guardians. He remained in the county asylum till his death in 1875. His legal personal representative petitioned for transfer of the funds in court to him. The guardians appeared and claimed maintenance for the past time:—Held, that the guardians could not claim maintenance under the order, which ceased to be operative on the lunatic's removal to a fresh asylum. Re Marman, 8 L. R., Ch. D., 256; 38 L. T., N. S., 797; 26 W. R. 621.

Held, also, that any claim for maintenance independently of the order was merely a debt of the lunatic, payable by his personal representative in due course of administration, and that the Court had no jurisdiction in the matter to order payment of it, but that the whole fund must go to the personal representative. Id.

10. Where a person who has been found a lunatic is entitled to a fund which has been paid into court under the Trustee Relief Act, a petition may be presented in chancery under the Trustee Relief Act and in lunacy, and the Court has jurisdiction to make an immediate order for the transfer of the fund to the account of the lunatic. Re Tate, 29 L. R., Ch. D., 135; 47 L. T. 2.

11. A testator bequeathed one-third of the capital in a fund to A., a married woman. In 1835 (long after the death of the testator) A.'s husband took the benefit of the Insolvent Debtors Act, and assigned all his property, present and future, to his assignee. In 1851 A. died, and the husband took out administration to her estate. In 1852 the husband became an inmate of a county lunatic asylum. In 1854 the annuitant died, and the fund became divisible:—Held, as between the assignee in insolvency of the husband and the overseers of the parish to which his maintenance was chargeable (who have, as to lunatics, a preferential claim to all others), that the assignee in insolvency was entitled to the share of the deceased wife jure mariti. Re Tyler, 2 Jur., N. S., 927.

The fund having been paid into court under the Trustee Relief Act, the assignee in insolvency had presented his petition claiming the fund, which he had served on the overseers; and the latter appeared and argued their claim:—Held, that they were not entitled to costs. Id.

1. Petition or Summons.

1. Applications under the 10 & 11 Vict., c. 96, and the 12 & 13 Vict., c. 74, must be by petition, and not by motion. Re Masselin's Will, 21 L. J., N. S., Ch., 53; 15 Jur. 1073. See also Re Maganley's Trust, 5 De G. & Sm. 1; 15 Jur. 1005.

2. A judge in chambers is not empowered, under the 26th section of the Act (15 & 16 Vict., c. 80), to entertain applications with reference to funds paid into court under the Acts for the relief of trustees (10 & 11 Vict., c. 96, and 12 & 13 Vict., c. 74); such applications must originate in and be founded upon a petition presented to the Court, and applications cannot be made to a judge in chambers under the Act unless subsequently to such petition being presented. Re Hodges, 3 W. R. 151; 4 De G. M. & G. 491; 1 Jur. N. S., 73; 3 Eq. Rep. 123.

3. Semble, that money paid into court under the Trustee Relief Act cannot be included in an order on further directions without a petition. Otte v. Castle, 1 W. R. 64.

4. The Court has not jurisdiction on motion, without a petition, to pay out funds lodged in court under the Trustee Relief Act. Earp. Stock, 5 Ir. Ch. R. 341.

5. Applications for payment out of court of a fund paid in under the Trustee Relief Act must be made by petition, and not by action; and a person not named in the trustees' affidavit may petition for payment out of court. But where an action has been brought the Court may make a declaration of right, leaving the payment to be obtained on petition. Pelling v. Goddard, 9 L. R., Ch. D., 185; 47 L. J., Ch., 646; 26 W. R. 476; 38 L. T., N. S., 811.

6. A trust fund having been paid into court under the Trustee Relief Act by the trustee of a will, a petition was presented by parties interested for an inquiry as to the persons entitled and for payment out to the persons found entitled under that inquiry. Upon the petition coming on for hearing an order was made directing the inquiry, and adjourning the further hearing of the petition in chambers:—Held, that the proceedings having been properly commenced by petition under s. 2 of the Trustee Relief Act, the Court had jurisdiction, under s. 27 of the Masters' Abolition Act 1852 (15 & 16 Vict., c. 80), to adjourn the petition into chambers. Frodsham v. Frodsham (15 L. R., Ch. D., 317) distinguished. Re Moate's Trust, 22 L. R., Ch. D., 635; 31 W. R. 497.

7. When a fund has been paid into court under the Trustee Relief Act, a person not mentioned in the trustee's affidavit can apply by petition to the Court for the distribution of the fund, and need not bring an action. Re Puttrell, 37 L. T., N. S., 374; 7 L. R., Ch. D., 647; 47 L. J., Ch., 11.

8. As to filing cross-petitions. See Lewis v. Hillman, 3 H. L. Ca. 607.

2. Form and Contents of Petition.

9. A petition under the Trustee Relief Act, 10 & 11 Vict., c. 96, ought not to be set out of the whole of the affidavit of the trustee made at the time of paying the trust fund into court. Re Curtois, 17 Jur. 852; 22 L. J., Ch., 1045.

Observations upon the statements and contents of such petition and affidavits. Id.

Petitions for the payment out of court of money which has been paid in under the Trustee Relief Act must set out enough of the affidavit on which the payment was made to show the difficulty which occasioned the payment into court, and who are the parties that claim or are interested in the fund, but not necessarily all the details contained in that affidavit. 8 C. 10 Hare (App.) lxiv.

10. Petitions for the payment out of court of money which had been paid in under the Trustee Relief Act must state the affidavit upon which the payment into court was made. Re Flack's Will, 10 Hare (App.) xxx.

11. On a petition presented under the Trustee Relief Act for payment of trust funds out of the Court, the statements in the affidavits made on payment of the trust money into court should be set out in the petition, as these statements form the only declaration of trust under which the Court can act. Re Levett's Trust, 5 De G. & S. 619; 16 Jur. 1063.

12. The prayer of a petition, and notice thereof under the Trustee Relief Act, should specify the exact order which is sought for and the precise portions of the fund which are to be transferred to the several parties entitled to it. Earp. Bernard, Re Leigh's Trust, 6 Ir. Ch. R. 133.

13. Money had been paid into court under the Trustee Relief Act, and an affidavit of the trustees was intitled, "In the matter of the trusts of the settlement bearing date the 12th July 1812, and made on the marriage of." A petition was presented for payment out of court of part of the money so paid in, and an affidavit in support was intitled, "In the matter of the trusts of an indenture of settlement bearing date the 12th July 1812, and made on the marriage of":—Held, that the variation was not material, and that the affidavit might be received. Re Harris, 8 Jur., N. S., 166.

(a) On Trustees.

1. Where the trustee who has paid the trust fund into court under this Act cannot be found, service on him of the petition for payment out of the fund, at the address given by him in his affidavit on the occasion of his paying in the money, will be deemed good service. Exp. Baugham, 16 Jur. 325.

2. Where a trustee pays money into court, and, in his affidavit, appoints a place for service on him of any legal proceedings, and he is not there to receive service, the Court will not deem such service good unless he cannot be found elsewhere on search made. Re Lawrence, 14 W. R. 93.

3. An administrator paid into court under the Trustee Relief Act, to the separate account of an infant, a sum representing his share of the intestate's estate, as one of his next of kin. The administrator, in an affidavit, stated, that, to the best of his knowledge and belief, the infant was entitled to the fund. The infant having attained his majority, petitioned for a transfer of the fund:—Held, unnecessary to serve the administrator with the petition. Re Beauclerk, 11 W. R. 203.

4. Where the Court has decided a question under a will upon a fund being paid into court under the 10 & 11 Vict., c. 96, and a petition is presented for payment out of court of such fund, the Court will dispense with service upon the trustee. Re Thomas, 11 W. R. 276.

5. A fund having been paid into court by the trustees under the Trustee Relief Act, one-third was carried to the separate account of one of the cestuis que trustent, who was a lunatic. Afterwards a petition was presented in lunacy for a transfer of the one-third belonging to the lunatic:—Held, that the trustees need not be served with notice of the petition. Re Young, 5 W. R. 400.

6. When the house named by trustees on payment into court as their address for service had been pulled down, and the trustees had not been heard of for ten years, service of the petition for payment out of court dispensed with, and an inquiry directed to ascertain who were entitled to the fund. Re Bolton, 18 W. R. 56; 21 L. T., N. S., 413.

7. Semble, that where the title of the tenant for life is clear, the trustees ought not to appear upon a petition simply affecting their income. Re Evans, 7 L. R., Ch., 609; 41 L. J., Ch., 512; 20 W. R. 695; 26 L. T. 816.

(b) On Other Persons.

8. A person claiming a particular share of an aggregate fund brought into court under the Trustee Relief Act, presenting a petition to get that share out of court, ought to serve with the petition all the other persons whom the trustees have stated to be in their belief interested in the fund. Re Manning's Trusts, 3 W. R. 379.

9. Upon an application for payment out of court of a fund paid in under the Trustee Relief Act, one of the persons in consequence of whose claim it was paid into court was found to be out of the jurisdiction, and had not been served:—Held, that no service could be ordered in such a case, and the petition was directed to be proceeded with as if all parties were before the Court. Re Naylor, 28 L. T., N. S., 18.

10. Where money has been paid into court under the Trustee Relief Act, and the Court, in an action brought for the fund, has declared the rights of the person interested, on an application made by the trustee and the person so interested for payment out, it is unnecessary to serve notice of the application on persons who, although stated in the trustee's affidavit as being interested in the fund, have not been declared to be so by the Court. Re Fosbury's Trusts, 39 L. T. 422.

11. Upon petition by tenant for life of a fund paid into court under the 10 & 11 Vict., c. 96, for payment of income to him, the costs of the trustees and remainderman were ordered to be paid out of the corpus. Re Whiting, 7 Jur., N. S., 754; 30 L. J., Ch., 862. S. C. nom. Re Whiting, 4 L. T., N. S., 739.

In such cases it will, as a general rule, be unnecessary to serve the remainderman with the petition. Id.

12. Whether the parties beneficially interested in a fund which had been paid into court under the Trustee Relief Act should be served with petition for payment of an annuity out of the dividends thereof when the petition prays costs out of the corpus of the fund. Re Greenland's Trusts, 1 W. R. 46.

13. On a petition under the Trustee Relief Act for payment out of court of a fund to which numerous parties were entitled, most of whom were not before the Court, a former order having been made directing class inquiries, and the chief clerk having made his certificate, it was ordered that the petitioner be at liberty to serve a copy of the petition, the former order, and the chief clerk's certificate, together with the present order, upon the several persons named in the certificate, and that the petition stand over till such persons had been served. Re Battersby's Trusts, 10 L. R., Ch. D., 228.

14. Where the trustees had paid the fund into court, under the 10 & 11 Vict., c. 96, it was ordered to be transferred to a purchaser from the cestui que trust on the petition being served only on the trustees, and notice given to the assignees of the husband of cestui que trust. Exp. Stuteley, 1 De G. & Sm. 703.

15. As to service on some of a class only under the Trustee Relief Act. See Re Colson, 2 W. R. 11.

(c) Out of Jurisdiction or Substituted.

16. Semble, the Court has not jurisdiction under the Trustee Relief Act to order service of the notice of the petition on parties residing out of the jurisdiction. Exp. Bernard, Re Leigh's Trust, 6 Ir. Ch. R. 133.

17. Upon a petition under the Trustee Relief Act the Court has jurisdiction to order service on a respondent out of the jurisdiction, and also substituted service. Re Bonelli's Electric Telegraph Co., Cook's claim, 43 L. J., Ch., 720; 18 L. R., Eq., 655; 22 W. R. 856; 31 L. T., N. S., 83.

18. The Court has jurisdiction to order service of a petition under the Trustee Relief Act, 10 & 11 Vict., c. 96, on a party out of the jurisdiction. Re Haney, 10 L. R., Ch., 275; 44 L. J., Ch., 272. Affirming 31 L. T., N. S., 645; 44 L. J., Ch., 207.

4. Other Cases.

1. Where a petition, under the Trustee Relief Act, stands over for amendment by adding a next friend on behalf of the petitioner, it is not necessary to re-answer the petition. Re Medow, 10 Jur., N. S., 536.

2. Where money belonging to an infant has been paid into court under the Trustee Relief Act, 10 & 11 Vict., c. 96, a petition must, notwithstanding the Act 15 & 16 Vict., c. 80, be presented in order to enable the Court to make an order for the infant's maintenance. Re Rye's Trust, 3 W. R. 198; 1 Jur., N. S., 222; 3 Eq. Rep. 368.

3. A petitioner under the Trustee Relief Act died pending the results of some inquiries:—Held, that an order of revivor might be made in favour of his executor. Re Staggoll, 15 W. R. 974.

V. ORDER FOR PAYMENT.

4. Some portion of a trust fund, payable by instalments, was paid by the trustee into court, under the Trustee Relief Act. Upon a petition seeking payment of the fund so paid in, the trustee was ordered to pay the future instalments from time to time as he should receive them to the cestui que trust, whose title was clear. Re Wright's Settlement, 1 Sm. & G. (App.) v.

5. When a fund which has been paid into court is settled on two successive tenants for life, an order may be made for payment of the dividends to the first tenant for life, and on proof of his death, to the second, without any further petition. Re Brent, 8 W. R. 270.

6. When, under the Trustee Relief Act, a petition is presented for the payment of the share in an undivided fund of one of several children who has become entitled, the Court will, if the amount is small, reserve liberty to each of the remaining children to apply at chambers in respect of their several shares as they successively become due. Re Tracey, 6 Ir. R., Eq., 271.

Drawing up the Order. 7. Upon a written and reasonable application from claimants residing abroad, the Court will postpone the drawing up of an order for payment out of court of money paid in under the Trustee Relief Act. Re Hodson's Will, 17 Jur. 826; 22 L. J., Ch., 1055.

Appeal and Review. 8. An order under the Trustee Relief Act stands on the same footing as a decree as respects leave to file a bill of review. Re Smyth and Arnold's Estate, 2 N. R. 381.

Trustees of a fund to which a lady was entitled for life, with remainder to her children, on her death paid the fund into court under the Trustee Relief Act, and under orders of the Court three-fourths were paid out. One child then claimed the fund as the only legiti-mate child, and presented a petition for leave to file a bill of review:—Held, that orders under the Trustee Relief Act stood, pro hac, on the same footing as a decree in a suit, and a probable case being put forward, founded on facts discovered since the date of the orders, leave was given. S. C. nom. Re Smyth, 32 L. J., Ch., 779; 11 W. R. 850; 8 L. T., N. S., 599.

9. Notice of appeals from orders made under the Trustee Relief Act must, according to the true construction of the Judicature Act, Order LVIII., Rules 9, 15, be given within twenty-one days from the perfecting of the order, or, in the case of the refusal of an application, from the date of such refusal. Re Baillie, 25 W. R. 310; 4 L. R., Ch. D., 785; 46 L. J., Ch., 330; 35 L. T., N. S., 917.

2. Other Cases, 6849.

1. Whether out of Income or Corpus (Tenant for Life).

10. The costs of an application for payment to the tenant for life of the dividends of a fund paid into court under the Trustee Relief Acts ordered to be paid out of the corpus of the fund. Re Butler's Trust, 16 Jur. 325.

11. Trust money had been paid into court under the Trustee Relief Act, and the tenant for life thereby presented a petition for payment of the dividends:—Held, that the costs of the petition ought to be paid out of the corpus, and not out of the income, of the fund, though the parties entitled in remainder opposed such payment. Re Field's Trust, 16 Jur. 770; 16 Beav. 146.

12. A fund was paid into court under the Trustee Relief Act. The tenant for life petitioned for payment of the dividends. There being no general estate applicable:—Held, that the costs of the petition ought to be paid out of the income, and not out of the corpus. Re Lorimer, 12 Beav. 521; 19 L. J., N. S., Ch., 524; 14 Jur. 1126.

13. Where a trust fund has been paid into court under the Trustee Relief Act, the costs of an application by the tenant for life for payment of the dividends to her ought not to come out of the corpus of the fund. Re Bangley's Trust, 21 L. J., N. S., Ch., 875; 16 Jur. 682.

14. A testator bequeathed a fund to A. B. for life, with remainders over. The fund was paid into court under the Trustee Relief Act.

On a petition by A. B. for payment of the dividends, which was not served on persons claiming in remainder, costs not allowed out of capital of fund. Exp. Fletcher, 17 L. J., N. S., Ch., 169; 12 Jur. 619.

1. Gift by will to trustees of 3,000*l.*, on trust to pay the interest to the separate use of R., and that the same should remain during her life under the direction of the said trustees, as a provision for her, and the interest of it given to her, on her personal appearance and receipt, by any banker. After the death of R. the 3,000*l.* was to be rendered back to the testator's estate. R. married. The 3,000*l.* was paid into court by the trustees, under the Trustee Relief Act. The assignee applied for the dividends:—Held, that the costs of all parties, except R., should come out of the corpus. Re Ross's Trust, 1 Sim., N. S., 196; 20 L. J., N. S., Ch., 293; 15 Jur. 241.

2. Application by the tenant for life of a sum of money which had been paid into court under the Trustee Relief Act, for payment of the dividends to her. The Court refused to order the costs of the application to be paid out of the corpus, but directed them to come out of the income. Re Ingram, 18 Jur. 811; 2 W. R. 679.

3. Costs of an application by tenant for life to obtain payment of the income of funds paid into court under the 10 & 11 Vict., c. 96:—Held, to be payable out of the income, and not out of the corpus. Re Hamersley, 23 Beav. 267.

4. On a petition by tenant for life under the 10 & 11 Vict., c. 96, for payment of the income, her costs were ordered to be paid out of the income, and those of the trustees out of the corpus. Re Hadland, 23 Beav. 266; 4 W. R. 690.

5. On a petition by a tenant for life of a trust fund in court for the payment of the interest of that fund to him for life:—Held, that his own costs of such an application must be paid by himself, the costs of the trustees out of the corpus of the fund. Re Whitting, 4 L. T., N. S., 739.

6. Upon petition by tenant for life of a fund paid into court under the 10 & 11 Vict., c. 96, for payment of income to him, the costs of the trustees and remainderman were ordered to be paid out of the corpus. Re Whiting, 7 Jur., N. S., 754; 30 L. J., Ch., 862.

In such cases it will, as a general rule, be unnecessary in future to serve the remainderman with the petition. Ib.

7. Costs of a petition by a tenant for life to obtain the income of a fund paid into court under the Trustee Relief Act ordered to be paid out of the corpus. Re Leake, 32 Beav. 135; 9 Jur., N. S., 453; 11 W. R. 352; 7 L. T., N. S., 816; 1 N. R. 417; 1 N. R. 417.

Circumstances under which trustees, having paid trust moneys into court, were refused their costs of appearance, upon the petition for payment of the dividends to the tenant for life. Ib.

8. Where money is paid into court under the Trustee Relief Act, and an application is made for payment of the dividends to a tenant for life, the trustees only are entitled to their costs out of corpus; the other costs must be paid out of income. Re Tohitchagoff, 12 W. R. 1100; 10 L. T., N. S., 860.

9. Where a fund has been paid into court under the Trustee Relief Act, the costs of a petition by the tenant for life for the payment to him of the income are payable out of the corpus of the fund. Re Turnley, 1 L. R., Ch., 152; 12 Jur., N. S., 305; 35 L. J., Ch., 313; 14 W. R. 322; 13 L. T., N. S., 662.

10. On the 25th July 1864 an order was made for the payment of the dividends on stock paid into court under the 10 & 11 Vict., c. 96, to the person entitled thereto for life. On the 12th June 1866, the Court, on the application of the tenant for life, made an alteration in the order, by directing the costs of the petitioner to be paid out of the corpus. Re Tanner, 35 L. J., Ch., 689.

11. Costs of petitions by tenants for life for payment of income arising from funds which have been paid into court under the Trustee Relief Act must come out of the income, and not out of the corpus of the estate. Re Marner, 35 L. J., Ch., 58; 15 W. R. 99; 3 L. R., Eq., 432.

12. Costs of trustees who were served with and appeared upon petition by a tenant for life for payment of dividends are payable out of corpus. Re Gordon, 6 L. R., Eq., 335; 37 L. J., Ch., 408.

13. The costs of all parties of a petition for payment to the tenant for life of the income of a fund paid into court under the Trustee Relief Act are payable out of income. Re Muntion, 39 L. J., Ch., 764.

14. Upon petition by tenant for life of a fund transferred into court under the Trustee Relief Act, the costs of the trustee are chargeable on the corpus. Re Knight, 37 L. J., Ch., 409.

15. When a fund has been paid into court by a trustee under the Trustee Relief Act, his costs, charges, and expenses properly incurred in, about, and preliminary to the payment into court, are payable out of the capital of the fund; his costs of appearance on a petition for payment of dividends are payable out of income. Re Whitting, 8 L. R., Eq., 352.

16. Upon a petition by a tenant for life for payment of the income of a fund paid into court, the costs of the trustees are payable out of the income, and not out of the corpus of the fund. Re Smith, 9 L. R., Eq., 374; 18 W. R. 513; 22 L. T., N. S., 220.

17. When a fund had been paid into court on account of the inability of a sole trustee to act, on an application relating solely to the payment of the dividends, the costs of the appearance of the trustee may be properly charged on the corpus. Re Wood, 11 L. R., Eq., 155; 40 L. J., Ch., 179; 19 W. R. 227; 23 L. T., N. S., 586.

18. The costs of a trustee, who was served with and appeared upon a petition by a tenant for life for payment of dividends, were ordered to be paid out of income. Re Mason, Exp. Smithett, 12 L. R., Eq., 111; 24 L. T., N. S., 869; 19 W. R. 1025.

19. When a trust fund has been transferred into court, and a petition is presented for payment of the income to the tenant for life, the costs of the trustees, as well as of all other necessary parties, will be paid out of the income. Re Evans, 7 L. R., Ch., 609; 41 L. J., Ch., 512; 20 W. R. 695; 26 L. T., N. S., 815.

Semble, that when the title of the tenant for life is clear, the trustees ought not to appear upon a petition simply affecting the income. Ib.

1. Upon a petition by tenant for life of stock which had been paid into court under the Trustee Relief Act for payment out of the dividends, the trustee, who appears on the petition after notice from the petitioner's solicitor not to do so, upon the ground that the petition relates to the income only, will not be allowed his costs of the appearance out of the funds representing income. Re Battell, 21 W. R. 138.

2. Other Cases.

2. The intention of the Legislature by the 10 & 11 Vict., c. 96, was merely to relieve trustees, and not to throw any additional burden on the cestuis que trustent, or disentitle them to costs, which before the Act would have been borne by the testator's general estate. Re Sharpe's Trustees, 15 Sim. 470; 17 L. J., N. S., Ch., 395; 12 Jur. 492.

3. Gift by will to trustees of 3,000*l.*, on trust to pay the interest to the separate use of R., and that the same should remain during her life under the direction of the said trustees, as a provision for her, and the interest of it given to her, on her personal appearance and receipt, by any banker. After the death of R. the 3,000*l.* was to be rendered back to the testator's estate. R. married. The 3,000*l.* was paid into court by the trustees, under the Trustee Relief Act. The assignee applied for the dividends:—Held, that the costs of all parties, except R., should come out of the corpus. Re Ross's Trust, 1 Sim., N. S., 196; 20 L. J., N. S., Ch., 293; 15 Jur. 241.

4. Upon a petition for payment out of court of the amount of a particular legacy paid in under the Trustee Relief Act, the Court has no jurisdiction to order payment of any of the costs in the matter out of the testator's general residuary estate. Observations upon the operation of the Act with regard to costs. Re Bartholomew's Will, 13 Jur. 380.

5. A question arose as to whether the next of kin (of which there were sixteen) of the testator's wife were entitled to a sum of money bequeathed to them as a class, or whether only such of the class were entitled as were living at the death of the testator. The trustees paid the amount into court under the above Acts. The Court, having decided that as to five shares such shares lapsed, and went to the residuary legatees, directed the eleven shares to be paid in full, and that the costs of all parties should be paid out of the five lapsed shares. Re Ham's Will, 2 Sim., N. S., 106; 21 L. J., N. S., Ch., 217; 15 Jur. 1121.

6. A legacy of 2,000*l.* being given to H. and D. for life, with remainder to their issue, and in default of issue, to fall into the residuary estate, and H. and D. being dead without issue, the trustees paid it into court, under the Trustee Relief Act, in the names of H. and D. The trustees at the same time paid into court, under the same Trustee Relief Act, another legacy of 5,000*l.*, in which C. was interested. C. presented a petition to have his share of the 5,000*l.* legacy paid to him, and have his costs paid out of the 2,000*l.* legacy, treating it as a residue. There was no suit for the administration of the estate:—Held, that the Court had no jurisdiction to order payment of the costs of the petition out of any other fund than the 5,000*l.* legacy. Re Hodgson, 18 Jur. 786.

7. Where the executors of a will pay money into court in consequence of a difficulty created by the testator himself, the executors may retain their costs out of the residue, but the costs of the parties entitled to the fund must come out of the fund itself. Re Feltham's Trust, 1 Kay & J. 528, 533.

8. Where two distinct legacies have under the Trustee Relief Act been paid in to two distinct accounts, the costs of paying out one of such legacies cannot be obtained out of the other legacy, notwithstanding that in the events that had happened such latter legacy had become residue. Observations on Re Tillstone's Trusts (9 Hare, App. lix.) and Re Everett (12 Beav. 485). Re Hodgson's Trust, 2 W. R. 539.

9. When a particular fund is paid into court by an executor who has the general residue in his hands, the Court has jurisdiction to order the costs of a petition relating to the particular fund to be paid out of the general residue. Re Trick, Exor. Willoby, 5 L. R., Ch., 170; 39 L. J., Ch., 201; 21 L. T., N. S., 739; 18 W. R. 123.

10. Held, that the expenses attending the payment of money into court, under the stat. 10 & 11 Vict., c. 96, must be paid by the executor out of his testator's estate, but those of paying it out by the legatee. Re Camthorne, 12 Beav. 56; 18 L. J., N. S., Ch., 116.

11. A husband and wife resident abroad give a general power of attorney to their solicitor to act for them in this country. The wife is entitled to a legacy, which has been retained for many years by the trustee, who is also residuary legatee. The trustee is dead, and his executor, considering that the solicitor under the power of attorney cannot give him an effectual discharge, pays the legacy into court under the Trustee Relief Act, and, notwithstanding he is requested not to do so, appears by counsel on the petition. On the question whether the costs of the payment into court and of the appearance of the executor are payable out of the legacy:—Held, that the executor is not entitled to the costs of payment in, but is entitled to the costs of appearing on petition. Re Jones, 5 W. R. 336; 3 Drew. 679.

12. Costs occasioned by the fund being paid into court under the Trustee Relief Act, in the case of a trust for maintenance, must come out of the corpus. Re Reid's Trusts, 1 W. R. 13. And see Re Robertson's Trust, 6 W. R. 405.

13. Where a fund in which successive beneficial interests exist is transferred into court under the Trustee Relief Act, the costs incurred by the trustees in proceeding under the statute are payable out of the corpus, not out of the income of the fund. Re Staples' Settlement, 13 Jur. 273.

II. OF CLAIMANTS OR PARTIES SERVED.

14. A petitioner, claiming a fund under the 10 & 11 Vict., c. 96, allowed his costs although his claim failed. Re Birch, 2 Kay & J. 369.

1. A party served with a petition under the 10 & 11 Vict., c. 96, does not necessarily get his costs of appearing at the hearing of the petition. Exp. Fisher, Re Smith, 3 Jur., N. S., 659.

Thus, where assignees in insolvency alleged a claim, but failed to substantiate it, costs of their appearing at the hearing of the petition refused. Ib.

2. On a petition under the Trustee Relief Act to apply a fund, a wife who was a cestui que trust, with her husband and her mortgagees, having appeared and opposed the distribution, the Court properly ordered part of the fund to be applied to the costs of the opposition, and incurred by the husband's proceedings, though under the deed creating the fund it was to be paid to her separate use. Newton v. Ricketts, 7 Jur., N. S., 953; 10 W. R. 1; 5 L. T., N. S., 62.

3. Costs of parties served with or appearing on a petition under Trustee Relief Act. See Re Wilson's Trust, 14 W. R. 161.

4. Mortgagees of the reversionary interest of a married woman not allowed their costs of appearance to a petition for payment out of court of a fund representing such interest which had been paid in under the Trustee Relief Act. Re Insole, 14 W. R. 160.

5. A petition for payment out of a fund paid in under the Trustee Relief Act was served on a party who did not appear on the petition to have any claim, but had sent notice of a claim. She now disclaimed, and was not allowed her costs. Re Parry's Trust, 12 Jur. 615.

6. A testator bequeathed one-third of the capital in a fund to A., a married woman. In 1835 (long after the decease of the testator), A.'s husband took the benefit of the Insolvent Debtors Act, and assigned all his property, present and future, to his assignee. In 1851 A. died, and the husband took out administration to her estate. In 1852 the husband became the inmate of a county lunatic asylum. In 1854 the annuitant died, and the fund became divisible:—Held, as between the assignee in insolvency of the husband and the overseers of the parish to which his maintenance was chargeable (who have, as to lunatics, a preferential claim to all other debtors), that the assignee in insolvency was entitled to the share of the deceased wife jure mariti. Re Tyler, 2 Jur., N. S., 927.

The fund having been paid into court under the Trustee Relief Act, the assignee in insolvency had presented his petition claiming the fund, which he had served on the overseers; and the latter appeared and argued their claim:—Held, that they were not entitled to costs. Ib.

7. The Court has jurisdiction to order an unsuccessful claimant on a fund paid into court under the Trustee Relief Act, 10 & 11 Vict., c. 96, to pay the costs of an application for payment of the fund out of court. Re Armston, 4 De G. J. & S. 454; 10 Jur., N. S., 715; 4 N. R. 450.

8. Respondents who make an unfounded claim to a fund, and so occasion the payment of it into court under the Trustee Relief Acts, will be ordered to pay the costs of getting the fund out of court. Re Benton, 43 L. J., Ch., 715.

III. OF TWO PETITIONS.

9. When two petitions are bonâ fide separately prepared for obtaining payment out of court of a sum paid in under the Trustee Relief Acts, and both raise the same issue, the Court will in general allow the costs of the preparation of the second petition, but where solicitors had been informed that a petition was presented, and they persisted in presenting another for the same object, the costs of the preparation and presentation of the second petition were disallowed. Re Chaplin's Trusts, 3 N. R. 289; 33 L. J., Ch., 183.

IV. PAYMENT IN WHEN JUSTIFIED AND COSTS OF TRUSTEES.

1. Payment in Justifiable. Costs Allowed, 6850.

2. Payment in Improper. Costs Disallowed, 6851.

3. Payment in Improper. Order to Pay Costs, 6852.

4. Where Bill filed on Trustees refusing to Pay in, 6853.

5. Where Bill filed instead of Payment into Court, 6854.

6. Deduction of Costs before Payment in, 6854.

7. Costs of Trustees. Other Cases, 6854.

8. Taxation, 6855.

1. Payment in Justifiable. Costs Allowed.

10. A trustee will be allowed his costs of paying money into court under the Trustee Relief Act where there is a case of bonâ fide responsibility. He is not bound to take upon himself the responsibility of deciding between adverse claimants. Re Headington, 27 L. J., Ch., 175.

H. being entitled in remainder to 500*l.* under a will, makes an assignment for the benefit of his creditors, and becomes insolvent. The legacy falls into possession, and H. sends a written notice to the surviving executor of the will not to pay it to any one but himself. A claim is also made by the trustees of the deed, and the executor pays the 500*l.* into court under the Trustee Relief Act. Upon a petition for payment out of court, asking the costs against the executor:—Held, that he was justified in paying the money into court, and must have his costs. S. C. 6 W. R. 7.

11. Trustees have a right to some sort of discharge from their cestuis que trustent, not, perhaps, a release, unless the instrument creating the trust was under seal; and trustees, between whom and their several cestuis que trustent disputes have arisen as to the amounts actually due to them respectively, are justified in paying into court, to the separate account of each cestui que trust, the sum to which they believe him to be entitled, and may have their costs of making such payment out of the respective funds. Re Wright, 3 Kay & J. 419.

12. A sum of money having been left by will to a married woman, it was agreed by the husband and wife that a settlement should be made. Difficulties subsequently arose, and the parties altered their views, and called upon the trustee of the will to hand over the money to the husband. The trustee declined to do so, and paid the fund into court under the 10 & 11 Vict., c. 96. Upon a petition by the husband and wife that the money might be paid out to the husband, and that the trustee might pay the costs occasioned by his conduct:—Held, that no binding agreement for a settlement had been shown, but that the trustee was justified in the course he had pursued, and his costs must be paid. Re Bendyshe, 3 Jur., N. S., 727; 26 L. J., Ch., 814; 5 W. R. 816.

1. Where a trustee has paid into court a fund to which a married woman is absolutely entitled, he is entitled as of course to his costs between solicitor and client, unless his conduct has been simply capricious or vexatious. Re Swan, 2 Hem. & M. 34; 12 W. R. 738.

Where a fund belonging to a married woman was paid into court under the Trustee Relief Act in order that she might have the benefit of a settlement, the trustees were allowed their costs, notwithstanding repeated expressions by her that she did not desire a settlement. S. C. 4 N. R. 53.

2. Trustees not entitled as of course to their costs of paying a fund into court under the Trustee Relief Act where such payment has been vexatious, and not justified by the possibility of a question as to the title to the fund. Where, however, the person entitled to the fund, and objecting to its being paid in, claims by representation, trustees will have their costs, as the possibility of a disposition by the deceased person through whom the claim is made is not excluded. Re Lane's Trust, 3 W. R. 134.

3. If a trustee entertains bond fide legal doubts as to the parties beneficially entitled to trust funds, he is justified in paying them into court, and he will not be made to pay the costs of payment out of court. Re Wyll, 6 Jur., N. S., 906; 8 W. R. 645; 28 Beav. 458.

4. A trust fund was paid into court by a trustee upon being informed that a new trustee, to whose proposed appointment he had previously objected on the ground that he was unknown to him, and believed not to be a fit and proper person, had been appointed joint trustee with him over the fund:—Held, that the trustee was entitled to receive his costs upon the petition of the cestui que trust for a transfer of the fund to new trustees. Re Williams's Trust, 6 W. R. 218; 4 Kay & J. 87.

5. Payment into court by an executor of a legacy bequeathed to a married woman, not specifically appropriated, the husband and wife being abroad, and the husband requiring it to be paid under a proof of attorney:—Held, that the executor had a right to pay it in; his costs of paying in to come out of the general estate, his costs of appearing on a petition to be paid out of the legacy. Re Jones, 3 Drew. 679.

2. Payment in Improper. Costs Disallowed.

6. Executors being informed that a bill was about to be filed against them by a person entitled to a share of residue, charging them with breaches of trust, paid a sum of money into court under the Trustee Relief Acts, as the share of that person. The bill was afterwards filed, and, on an application for payment out of court by the person entitled, the trustees were not allowed their costs. Re Waring, 21 L. J., N. S., Ch., 784; 16 Jur. 652.

7. Trustees who had paid into court, under the 10 & 11 Vict., c. 96, an alleged balance, the title to which they believed undisputed, the party they believed entitled having previously demanded payment, and offered a discharge pro tanto:—Held, not entitled to costs upon a petition for payment of the fund out of court. Re Heming, 3 Kay & J. 40; 26 L. J., Ch., 106; 5 W. R. 33.

In 1855 H. conveyed property to trustees, on trust to sell and pay debts, and pay the residue (if any) to H. There were the fullest powers to the two trustees to make professional charges, to settle each other's charges, and to retain and indemnify themselves their expenses out of the fund. In July 1856, the trustees, having sold all the property and paid all the debts, handed in their account to H., by which it appeared that a balance was due to him. He protesting against the account, and reserving his right to impeach it, demanded payment of the balance. The trustees refused, unless upon a general release being given, to part with the balance, and they threatened to pay the money into court. On the 29th October he again wrote, offering them the fullest release from the amount which they should pay him, but still reserving his right to impeach their account, which he signified his intention to do. On the 30th October, the trustees, acting on the advice of counsel, paid the money into court under 10 & 11 Vict., c. 96, at the same time filing an affidavit by which they stated, that, except their own claims to an indemnity, no person but H. was interested in the fund:—Held, that inasmuch as by the payment into court the trustees acquired no additional security or discharge beyond that which H. had already offered, they could not receive any portion of the costs incurred by them on H.'s petition to get the money out of court, but that they were nevertheless entitled to the costs of paying it in. S. C. nom. Esq. Hemming, 2 Jur., N. S., 1186.

Acting on the advice of counsel is a favourable circumstance for trustees on the question of costs when the opinion has been taken upon the rights and interests of the cestui que trustent. Secus, where the opinion has been taken solely with regard to the best course for the interest of the trustees themselves. Id.

The Court will not in such a case exercise the discretion vested in it by the Act of causing a suit to be instituted for the purpose of taking accounts, or otherwise ascertaining the rights of parties, although that could not be done on the petition alone. Id.

8. Where a professed nun, while in a French convent, executed a deed, conveying all her real and personal estate to trustees upon trust to sell and pay the proceeds to the superior priest of a certain congregation, for the benefit of the congregation at his discretion, and covenanted to assign all her future property upon the same trusts, and subsequently, upon the nun's becoming entitled to a legacy under a will, the trustees of the will paid the same into court under the Trustee Relief Act, and a petition was presented by the nun and the trustees of the deed praying payment to the latter:—Held, by Romilly, M.R., that the fund ought not, without distinct evidence that the petitioner was her free and unbiassed act, to be paid out of court; but upon appeal, the Court directed the fund to be paid out either to herself or to the trustees she had appointed, and considering that the trustees of the will were not justified in paying the money into court, refused them their costs. Re Metcalfe, 10 Jur., N. S., 287; 33 L. J., Ch., 308; 10 L. T., N. S., 78; 12 W. R. 538.

1. Trustees who, after accepting the trust, had paid the trust fund into court without sufficient reason, refused their costs of an application to pay the income to the tenant for life. Re Leake, 32 Beav. 135; 1 N. R. 417; 9 Jur., N. S., 453; 11 W. R. 352; 7 L. T., N. S., 816; 1 N. R. 417.

A fund was held in trust for A., an unmarried lady, for life, but to cease if "by any means whatever" it should vest in or become payable to any other person. A. afterwards married, and her life interest was settled to her separate use, without power of anticipation, by a settlement to which the trustees purported to be parties, but to which they never assented. The trustees thereupon paid the trust fund into court:—Held, that as the trusts which they had accepted had not been varied either by the marriage or the settlement, they were not justified in paying the money into court, and they were refused their costs of appearing on a petition for payment of the income to the tenant for life. Ib.

2. Trustees paying money into court, upon doubts as to questions of law and fact which the Court thought unreasonable, were disallowed costs of appearing on the petition. Re Pearson, 17 W. R. 365; 20 L. T., N. S., 8.

3. The trustees of a trust fund to which their cestui que trust has become entitled in default of appointment by a tenant for life are justified in paying it over to him on being informed in writing by the solicitor to the parties that he has reason to believe that no appointment has been made, and would be free from liability in doing so. Re Cull, 20 L. R., Eq., 561; 44 L. J., Ch., 664; 23 W. R. 850; 32 L. T., N. S., 853.

Trustees who under such circumstances pay the trust fund into court under the Trustee Relief Act will not, as a rule, be entitled to their costs. Ib.

4. Trustees will not be allowed the costs occasioned by paying money into court under the Trustee Relief Act, 10 & 11 Vict., c. 96, when they do so for the mere purpose of escaping liability, and when there is no reasonable doubt as to the performance of their trust. Re Elliot or Eliot, 15 L. R., Eq., 194; 42 L. J., Ch., 289; 21 W. R. 455.

5. A., the surviving executor of the last surviving trustee of a will whereby a fund was settled upon B. for life, with remainder to the children, who survived her, paid the dividends to B. during her life, and then paid the fund into court:—Held, that A. had accepted the trust, and there being no difficulty in ascertaining what children B. left, the payment into court was unnecessary, and he could not be allowed his costs. Re Abbot, 38 L. T., N. S., 442.

6. Trustees after being warned by their cestuis que trustent that if they paid the trust fund into court under the 10 & 11 Vict., c. 96, the cestuis que trustent would object to the trustees being allowed the costs of paying the fund into and taking it out of court, nevertheless paid the fund into court, stating by their affidavit, not that they had any doubts as to the title of their cestuis que trustent, but that "to the best of their knowledge and belief the cestuis que trustent were the only persons interested in or entitled to the trust fund, and that the facts mentioned in that affidavit were stated upon their own knowledge, and they had acquired such knowledge as trustees." The cestuis que trustent presented a petition for the payment of the fund out of court, and praying that the costs of the petition and of paying the fund into court might be paid by the trustees personally:—Held, that the trustees who had been served with and appeared upon the petition were not entitled to the costs of such appearance, but only to their costs of paying the money into court. Re Corvington, 1 Jur., N. S., 1157; 25 L. J., Ch., 238.

3. Payment in Improper. Order to Pay Costs.

7. Where a trustee has trust moneys in his hands, it is his duty to make inquiries as to the parties entitled, and upon sufficient evidence to pay over the moneys to his cestuis que trustent. Re Knight, 5 Jur., N. S., 326; 28 L. J., Ch., 625; 33 L. T. 54.

Where a trustee, without making reasonable inquiries, and without requiring evidence as to the title of the parties claiming the funds, paid them into court under the Trustee Relief Act, he was ordered to pay the costs of paying them in, and of the application for the payment of them out. Ib.

A trustee is not, in all cases, justified in paying a trust fund into court under the Trustee Relief Act, and where he does so without sufficient reason, he will be made liable for the costs of a petition for getting the fund out of court. 8. C. 27 Beav. 45.

The children of A. were entitled to a specific legacy under a will, and to a portion of a residue under a subsequent deed of compromise. B. was both the legal personal representative and the trustee of the deed. The legacy was paid to the two children on their attaining twenty-one, in 1839 and 1843, in a suit to which the trustee was a party; but the other fund remained unpaid and in the funds until 1858, when, the two sons being in the Austrian military service, the trustee paid the fund into court:—Held, that he was not justified in so doing under the circumstances, and he was ordered to pay the costs of a petition by the sons to obtain payment out of court. Ib.

8. Trustees paid the ascertained share of a residue of a married woman into court, under the Trustee Relief Act. The Court refused to make the trustees pay the costs, observing that it was not desirable to act too strictly in such cases. Re Brocklesby, 29 Beav. 652.

9. A trustee is not justified in paying a fund into court under the 10 & 11 Vict.

c. 96, s. 1, merely because, acting bonâ fide, he entertains a doubt as to the right of the claimant. There must be a reasonable case of uncertainty, or he may be ordered to pay the costs of the petition for payment out. Re Elgar, 11 L. T., N. S., 415.

1. Trustees are not justified, as a matter of course, in paying a married woman's legacy into court, but will be liable for costs if such payment appears vexatious and unnecessary. Re Roberts, 38 L. J., Ch., 708.

2. A. and B., being each entitled to one-fifth of a reversionary fund, mortgaged their shares with a power of sale. B. was a mere surety for A., and A. afterwards assigned his share to B. for his indemnity, with a power to sell and to give receipts for the share and the produce of the sale. The mortgagees sold the reversionary interest, and refused to pay the surplus to B. without the concurrence and release of A., and they paid the fund into court:—Held, that this was improper, and they were ordered to pay the costs of a petition to get the money out of court. Re Folingo, 32 Beav. 131.

3. By a marriage settlement, which empowered the husband and wife, or the survivor of them, to appoint new trustees, a sum of money was vested upon certain trusts in trustees, their executors, etc. The last survivor of the trustees appointed Sir R. de B. and Lady de B. executor and executrix of his will, and died. They proved the will; and afterwards the husband, who survived the wife, by deed, indorsed on the settlement, appointed three new trustees, and required Sir R. de B. and Lady de B. to transfer the trust fund to them. Sir R. de B. requested to have the opinion of counsel, the costs to be paid out of the dividends. This request was refused, on the ground that there was not any difficulty or risk. Sir R. de B. and Lady de B. thereupon brought the trust fund into court. On a petition by the husband for a transfer of the fund to the new trustees:—Held, that Sir R. de B. should pay the costs. Re Wise, 3 Ir. R., Eq., 599.

4. The Court has jurisdiction to order a trustee to pay the costs of an application for payment out of court of a fund paid in by him under the 10 & 11 Vict., c. 96. Re Woodburn, 1 De G. & J. 333; 3 Jur., N. S., 799; 26 L. J., Ch., 522; 5 W. R. 423, 642.

A trustee of a small trust fund, which had become divisible, called upon the claimants for proof of their title. They procured evidence which, though not technically complete, was tolerably satisfactory, and he declared himself ready to pay the fund to them. Afterwards, without assigning any reason, he receded from this determination, and the matter, which had been conducted on his behalf by his country solicitors, was placed in the hands of his London agents, who made various objections to the sufficiency of the evidence. The claimants produced additional evidence, and requested to know what more the trustee required, and offered to produce it. The trustee, however, without waiting for its production, paid the money into court. The applicants petitioned for payment of the fund to them, and made out their title to the satisfaction of the Court:—Held, that the trustee had been properly ordered to pay the costs of the petition. Ib.

The opinion of Wood, V.-Ch., on this point, expressed in Re Hemming or Heming (3 Kay & J. 40; 26 L. J., Ch., 106; 5 W. R. 33; 2 Jur., N. S., 1186) overruled. Ib.

5. A trustee vexatiously paying money into court under the Trustee Relief Act ordered to pay the costs of the petitioner for obtaining payment. Re Cater, 25 Beav. 361.

A trustee paid trust funds into court, under the Trustee Relief Act, merely because other trustees to whom it was payable declined to give a release. He was ordered to pay the costs of getting the money out of court. Id. 366.

6. A married woman having, under a settlement, a general power of appointment by will, appointed the fund, in pursuance of the power, to be divided among five persons, and appointed executors. The trustees of the settlement paid the money into court under the Trustee Relief Act, and the cestuis que trustent presented a petition for payment out, establishing their right to the fund by evidence:—Held, that the trustees should have paid the fund over to the executors of the will for distribution, and they were ordered to pay the costs; but, as the executors were the proper persons to present the petition, the trustees were exempted from payment of so much of the costs as were occasioned by the production of evidence by the cestuis que trustent. Re Hoskin, 5 L. R., Ch. D., 229; 35 L. T., N. S., 935; 46 L. J., Ch., 274.

Semble, on appeal, that the decision of Malins, V.-Ch., on the question of law was right, and that the executor of the donee of the power was the proper person to give a discharge. S. C., 25 W. R. 779; 46 L. J., Ch., 817; 6 L. R., Ch. D., 281.

4. Where Bill Filed on Trustees Refusing to Pay in.

7. Where trustees of a legacy given for the benefit of a lady, with limitations over, one of which trustees being also the residuary legatee under the will, refused to comply with the request of the tenant for life, that they would pay the legacy into court under the provisions of the Trustee Relief Act 1847, although she offered to pay the costs of the proceedings for that purpose, and she consequently instituted a suit and obtained an order for payment of the fund into court, the costs of the suit were directed to be paid out of the residue. Handley v. Davis, 5 Jur., N. S., 190; 28 L. J., Ch., 873.

8. On the sale of real estate part of the purchase money was invested in the names of trustees, who were to hold the fund until sufficient evidence should be produced of the death of a certain person, and on such evidence being produced were to pay the fund to the vendors. The vendors in the following year, thinking that they had sufficient evidence of the death, called upon the trustees either to pay the fund to them, or to pay it into court under the Trustee Relief Act. The trustees having refused to do so, a bill was filed to compel them to pay over the fund:—Held, that the trustees, having caused unnecessary expense by their refusal to pay the fund into court, were only entitled to such costs as they would have got if they had paid the fund into court, and the vendors had presented a petition for the payment of the fund to them. Weller v. Fitzhugh, 22 L. T., N. S., 567.

1. Any trustee who entertains a reasonable doubt or difficulty as to the title of the person who claims to be his cestui que trust should pay the funds into court. Gunnell v. Whitear, 10 L. R., Eq., 664; 18 W. R. 883; 22 L. T., N. S., 645; 39 L. J., Ch., 869.

A trustee who, entertaining such doubt, did not pay the funds into court, but by his conduct caused the institution of a suit, was allowed out of the funds only the costs that he would have been entitled to if he had paid the funds into court and the costs of appearing on the petition. Id.

5. Where Bill Filed instead of Payment into Court.

2. The 10 & 11 Vict., c. 96, by enabling a trustee to pay a trust fund into court, does not deprive him of the right to file a bill to be relieved from the trusteeship, and he will, in a proper case, be allowed his costs of such bill as between solicitor and client. Barker v. Piele, 2 Dr. & Sm. 340; 11 Jur., N. S., 436; 34 L. J., Ch., 497; 13 W. R. 573; 12 L. T., N. S., 50; 5 N. R. 425.

3. Where a trustee has an ascertained sum in his hands which is claimed by opposite parties, the proper course is to pay the money into court under the Trustee Relief Act. Wells v. Malbon, 8 Jur., N. S., 249; 31 Beav. 48.

Where a trustee, instead of so doing, files a bill, he will be allowed only such costs as he would have received if he had paid the money into court under that Act. Id.

6. Deduction of Costs before Payment in.

4. The Trustee Relief Act provides no special means for making the costs, which trustees may deduct before paying money into court under its provisions, the subject of inquiry. Re Bloye's Trust, 1 Macn. & G. 488; 2 H. & Tw. 140; 19 L. J., N. S., Ch., 89; 14 Jur. 49.

5. Upon a petition under the Trustee Relief Act, the Court has no jurisdiction to order the trustees to refund any sum retained by them for their costs. Re Leake's Will, 1 N. R. 417; 32 Beav. 135; 9 Jur., N. S., 453; 7 L. T., N. S., 816; 1 N. R. 417.

6. Where an executor, paying into court a part of a legacy, has deducted his costs of paying it in, the Court has no jurisdiction, under the Trustee Relief Act, to order payment by the executor to the legatees of the amount of those costs. Re Barber, 9 Jur., N. S., 1098; 8 L. T., N. S., 825; 32 L. J., Ch., 709; 11 W. R. 1056; 2 N. R. 571.

7. Trustees, on paying a fund into court, retained a sum for their costs. On a petition to obtain the fund out of court, the trustees obtained the costs of their appearance, but all their costs were ordered to be taxed. Re Hue, 27 Beav. 337; 5 Jur., N. S., 1235; 28 L. J., Ch., 893.

8. Trustees, on paying a fund into court, deducted 4*l.* 1*s.* 6*d.* in respect of their costs. On a petition by the person entitled to the dividends praying that the same might be paid to her, and that the costs of the trustees, who appeared on the petition, might be taxed:—Held, that the costs of their appearance and their costs, charges, and expenses properly incurred in relation to the fund in court, ought to be taxed, and that they ought to be charged with the sum deducted by them on payment into court. Re Sweeper, 19 W. R. 793; 24 L. T., N. S., 413.

9. When a trustee's claim for costs, charges, and expenses is contested, he is not entitled to retain the amount of such claim and pay the balance of the trust fund into court, but should pay the whole fund into court and leave it for the Court to award the proper amount to which he is entitled in respect of his claim. Beaty v. Curson, 38 L. J., Ch., 161; 7 L. R., Eq., 194; 20 L. T., N. S., 61.

10. The sum of 8*l.* is the proper sum to be deducted by trustees in the first instance for the costs of lodging money in court under the Trustee Relief Act. Re Blayney, 9 Ir. R., Eq., 413.

7. Costs of Trustees. Other Cases.

11. Trustees who have paid trust funds into court under the Trustee Relief Act, taking copies of affidavits by parties claiming to be beneficially interested in the fund, will not be allowed the costs of the copies so taken by them. Re Lazarus, 3 Kay & J. 555.

12. Although a trustee may, under the 4th Order of the 10th June 1848, present a petition under the Trustee Relief Act, 10 & 11 Vict., c. 96, as to moneys paid in by himself, the Court, in making an order on such petition, gave him respondent's costs only, even where his petition was presented at the request of one of the parties beneficially interested in the fund. Re Hutchinson, 1 Dr. & Sm. 27; 6 Jur., N. S., 136; 29 L. J., Ch., 356; 8 W. R. 253.

13. Executors, at the request of a legatee, sell out the stock representing the particular legacy. Having learnt that the legatee is an uncertified bankrupt, has been insolvent, and has assigned his legacy, the executors on the 7th December pay the money into court under the Trustee Relief Act, and give notice to the trade and official assignees of the legatee. On the 7th January they present a petition for declaration of the rights and distribution, amongst the parties interested, of the fund representing the legacy. A petition is also presented by the assignees:—Held, that although the Court had jurisdiction to declare the rights and distribute the fund upon the petition of the executors, they were not justified in taking such a proceeding, having discharged themselves from liability by paying the money into court; and they were only allowed such costs as they would have had if they had appeared as respondents. Re Housman's Trust, 4 W. R. 274; 2 Kay & J. 249; 20 Jur. 157.

14. Where trustees, having paid money into court under the 10 & 11 Vict., c. 96, afterwards apply by petition under the 4th Order of the 10th June 1848 for a distribution of the fund, the Court has jurisdiction to make an order upon the petition, and is bound to exercise that jurisdiction. Re Cazneau, 2 Kay & J. 249; 2 Jur., N. S., 157.

But where such a petition was presented by trustees without consent of the parties claiming beneficial interests in the fund, and no cause was shown by the trustees for taking upon themselves to be movers in the matter, the Court, to discourage such applications, allowed them only respondents' costs. Ib.

1. A trustee who has paid funds into court under the Act 10 & 11 Vict., c. 96, and has been served with petition, is entitled to his costs. Re Erskine's Trust, 1 Kay & J. 302; 1 Jur., N. S., 156; 24 L. J., Ch., 327.

2. A fund paid in under the Trustee Relief Act to an account entitled the estate of a deceased person, will not be paid out without the presence of his legal personal representative and an admission of assets by him. Administration having been taken out to remove the difficulty, the trustees were allowed their costs, and the costs of the administration were given out of the fund. Re Edwards' Estate, 4 W. R. 801.

3. Trustees who have lodged money under the Trustee Relief Act will be allowed their costs of appearing on the hearing of a petition to draw it, if the claimant's title be doubtful. Re Blayney, 9 Ir. R., Eq., 413.

4. Trustees who were respondents to a petition under the Trustee Relief Act, and were tendered 42s. for costs under Rules of Court 1875 (Costs), Order VI., Rule 17, will not be allowed their costs of appearance unless they appear for the sake of giving the Court necessary information. Re Sutton, 21 L. R., Ch. D., 855; 46 L. T. 740; 30 W. R. 657.

8. Taxation.

5. An assurance company properly paying money into court under the Trustee Relief Act is entitled to costs as between solicitor and client. Re Webb, 2 L. R., Eq., 456; 12 Jur., N. S., 595; 35 L. J., Ch., 850; 14 W. R. 857; 14 L. T., N. S., 89.

6. Where an insurance company paid insurance money into court under the Trustee Relief Act and the company was afterwards served with and appeared on the petition to pay it out:—Held, that the company was entitled to costs as between solicitor and client. Re Cobbe, 15 W. R. 29; 15 L. T., N. S., 170.

7. Trustees who have paid trust funds into court under the 10 & 11 Vict., c. 96, and take copies of affidavits of parties claiming to be beneficially interested in the fund, will not be allowed their costs of the copies of affidavits so taken by them. Re Lazarus, 3 Kay & J. 555.

II. WHO MAY APPLY.

9. The Court will make an order under 22 & 23 Vict., c. 35, s. 30, on the petition of a cestui que trust. Re Ward, 14 W. R. 96; 13 L. T., N. S., 494.

III. IN WHAT CASES. IN GENERAL.

10. Where an important and difficult question is involved, the proper course is to file a bill instead of presenting a petition under the 22 & 23 Vict., c. 35 s. 30. Re Mockett, Johns. 628; 29 L. J., Ch., 294.

Where the opinion of the Court is sought by petition under 22 & 23 Vict., c. 35, by executors of a will upon which questions of difficulty arise, and the assets are not distinctly ascertained, the Court will not give its opinion unless at the wish, and with the consent, of all parties interested. S. C. 6 Jur., N. S., 142; 8 W. R. 235.

11. The Court will not give its opinion on an hypothesis; therefore when a petition was presented under 22 & 23 Vict., c. 35, to obtain the advice of the Court as to the mode in which calls not yet made on account of shares specifically bequeathed by a testator were to be met, the Court ordered the petition to stand over till the call had been actually made. Re Box, 11 W. R. 945.

12. The Court will, on a petition under 22 & 23 Vict., c. 35, s. 30, sanction the compromise by trustees of a claim depending on foreign law and the accounts of disbursements on an estate in a foreign country, which accounts the trustees have no means of verifying. Re Mackintosh, 42 L. J., Ch., 208.

13. A father bequeathed a share of a fund in trust for his daughter and her children, power being given to the trustees to invest it in the public funds of any colony or dependency of the United Kingdom. The daughter married a domiciled citizen of the Canadian Dominion, and was permanently resident in Canada. It was proposed to appoint two persons, citizens of Canada, trustees, and to transfer the share of the trust fund to them for the purpose of investment in securities in Canada. On a petition under 22 & 23 Vict., c. 35, s. 30, the Court was of opinion that such proposed appointment and transfer might be made. Re Smith, 26 L. T., N. S., 820; 20 W. R. 695.

14. A married woman who was of unsound mind, but not so found by inquisition, was entitled for her separate use to the income of certain trust funds. Her written consent was also required to the investments by the trustees. Upon a petition under Lord St. Leonards' Act (22 & 23 Vict., c. 35, s. 30) for the advice of the Court:—Held, that the Court had jurisdiction to entertain the petition; that the whole income might be paid to the husband on his undertaking to apply it to the maintenance of the wife; and that her consent to the investments might be dispensed with. Re T—, 15 L. R., Ch. D., 78; 29 W. R. 42.

1. Upon a special case presented under the 22 & 23 Vict., c. 35, and the 23 & 24 Vict., c. 38, the Court declined to give power to trustees to grant leases of real estate for a term not exceeding ten years. Re Shaw, 25 L. T., N. S., 22; 12 L. R., Eq., 124; 19 W. R. 1025.

2. The Court will not give an opinion under the 22 & 23 Vict., c. 35, upon matters of detail, which cannot be properly dealt with without the superintendence of the Court and the assistance of affidavits. Re Barrington, 1 John. & H. 142; 6 Jur., N. S., 1073; 29 L. J., Ch., 807; 8 W. R. 577.

Therefore, where trustees of a settlement, having a power of purchasing lands on the request of tenants for life, desired the opinion of the Court as to the propriety of applying 1,200*l.* on such request in repairs and permanent improvement, no answer was given on the petition; but it was intimated that, on a bill filed, there would be no objection on principle to the course proposed to be taken, and subsequently the order was made in a suit instituted for the purpose. Id.

3. The trustees of settled estates presented a petition under s. 30 of Lord St. Leonards' Act 1859, asking the opinion of the Court (1) whether they were justified in applying money in their hands, proceeds of sales, and enfranchisements of the settled estates, towards paying costs incurred by the tenant for life as plaintiff and defendant in a series of actions undertaken by him to resist claims of rights of common over the settled estates; (2) whether they might apply similar sums to be derived from future sales, and towards discharging their costs; (3) whether in discharging these costs they might properly treat them as a solicitor and client costs; (4) whether they might adopt the acts and proceedings of the tenant for life. The petition was also entitled in the Settled Estates Act 1877, under which the trustees prayed that such costs as were not provided for as above might be raised and paid as between solicitor and client by means of a charge on the settled estates:—Held, that the first four questions might be answered in the affirmative, and that the order for raising and paying the residue of the costs as between solicitor and client might be made to the Court under s. 17, although no application had been made to the Court before commencing proceedings. Re De la Warr's (Earl) Settled Estates, 51 L. J., Ch., 407; 46 L. T. 340.

Where proceedings have been instituted (though without the preliminary sanction of the Court), whether by claim in an action, or by defence to an action, for the protection of a settled estate, the Court will, if it sees fit, give permission to the trustees to apply the proceeds of the sale of a portion of the estate in defraying the costs already incurred, and which must necessarily be incurred, by the tenant for life, in instituting such proceedings. S. C. 16 L. R., Ch. D., 587; 50 L. J., Ch., 383; 44 L. T. 56; 29 W. R. 350.

4. The tenant for life of settled estates having successfully opposed a sewage scheme proposed by the sanitary authority of the parish in which the settled estates were situate, on the ground that the works would deteriorate the value of the estate, incurred certain costs. The trustees of the settled estates applied, under 22 & 23 Vict., c. 35, s. 30, for the advice of the Court whether they would be justified in paying these costs out of money in their hands, representing the proceeds of part of the settled estates sold under the order of the Court made in 1874. The petition was entitled in the matter of the Settled Estates Act 1856, and the Amendment Acts of 1858 and 1864, and the Act 22 & 23 Vict., c. 35. The Court was of opinion that s. 30 of the Act 22 & 23 Vict., c. 35 only gave the Court power to advise, and did not empower it to authorise the payment, but that the case came within s. 17 of the Settled Estates Act 1877, and ordered that the petition should be amended by entitling it in the matter of that Act, when, on the amount extended by the tenant for life, not exceeding a sum named, being proved before the registrar, the Court would advise the trustees to pay it. Re Willan's Settled Estates, or Re Twyford Abbey Settled Estates, 45 L. T. 745; 30 W. R. 268.

See also TRUSTS, XIX.

IV. OPINION AS TO INVESTMENTS.

5. On an application under s. 30 of 22 & 23 Vict., c. 35, for the opinion of the Court whether, under a trust for investment in Government or other approved securities, trustees would be justified in investing a trust fund in East India stock or railway debentures, or on mortgage of freehold, copyhold, or leasehold hereditaments, the Court approved of an investment on freeholds in England or Wales, but declined to give any answer sanctioning investments in the other securities mentioned. Re Simson, 1 John. & H. 89; 8 W. R. 388.

6. If an Act of Parliament contains provisions enabling trustees, with the sanction of the Court, to invest trust funds upon securities, neither recognised by the Courts, contemplated by the Legislature, nor sanctioned by the settlor or testator at the time the trusts were created, the Court, in the absence of an express legislative declaration, will not give the Act any other than a prospective operation, or advise trustees under the 22 & 23 Vict., c. 35, ss. 30, 32, to invest the trust funds upon any other securities than those comprised within the provisions of the instrument creating the trusts. Re Mile, 5 Jur., N. S., 1236; 29 L. J., Ch., 47; 1 L. T., N. S., 122.

Trustee of a will of a testator, who died in 1845, had power to invest "real securities in England or Wales, but not in Ireland." The Court declined advising the trustee to invest, under the powers contained in the 22 & 23 Vict., c. 35, s. 32, on a mortgage of Scotch estate. S. C. 27 Beav. 579.

7. A testator lent money on thirteen mortgages of 100*l.* each, granted under an Act of Parliament, on the security of stallage rents, and received 4*l.* per cent. interest. He devised and bequeathed all his realty and personality upon trusts for sale and conversion. After his death the trustees discovered that the mortgagors had exceeded their borrowing powers, and that the mortgages were only worth 74*l.*

each, and they sold five at that price. If the remainder were sold, the income of the beneficiaries would be reduced from 32l. to 20l. per annum. On a petition by the trustees, under 22 & 23 Vict., c. 35, the Court was of opinion that they would be justified in retaining the remaining mortgages in their hands. Re Fanning, 10 Jur., N. S., 307; 10 L. T., N. S., 61.

V. OPINION AS TO CONSTRUCTION OF INSTRUMENTS.

1. The Court declined, upon a petition for its opinion under 22 & 23 Vict., c. 35, s. 30, to decide whether an intestate's estate was liable upon a covenant to be implied in his marriage settlement. Re Evans, 30 Beav. 232.

2. The Court will not, upon a petition presented by a trustee or an executor under s. 30 of the 22 & 23 Vict., c. 35, for the opinion, advice, or direction of the Court, construe an instrument or make any order affecting the rights of the parties to property. Such petitions should relate only to the management and investment of trust property. Re Lorenz, 1 Dr. & Sm. 401; 7 Jur., N. S., 402; 9 W. R. 567; 4 L. T., N. S., 501.

3. Questions of construction affecting capital of considerable amount, will not be decided upon a petition under the 22 & 23 Vict., c. 35, s. 30. Re Bunnett, 10 Jur., N. S., 1098.

4. The Court will not, under 22 & 23 Vict., c. 35, s. 30, give its opinion for the guidance of trustees on the effect of a limitation contained in an instrument. Re Hooper, 29 Beav. 656; 30 L. J., Ch., 795; 9 W. R. 729.

The Court will not, upon a petition under the 22 & 23 Vict., c. 35, s. 30, determine questions of construction, but only advise executors and trustees in matters of discretion vested in them. S. C. 7 Jur., N. S., 595.

VI. INDEMNITY TO TRUSTEES.

5. The opinion of the Court upon a petition under the 22 & 23 Vict., c. 35, gives an indemnity to the trustees only upon the facts stated in the petition, is subject to no appeal, and will not preclude the filing a bill, which would seem the better course under the circumstances above stated. Re Mockett, 6 Jur., N. S., 142; 8 W. R. 235; 39 L. J., Ch., 294; Johns. 628.

VII. PRACTICE ON APPLICATION.

6. Where an application was, under the 22 & 23 Vict., c. 35, s. 30, made in chambers by trustees for the direction of the Court as to certain repairs of a permanent nature proposed to be made on the property mentioned in the will, the Vice-Chancellor directed that the matter should be brought before him in court upon petition, it not being, in his opinion, intended that the Court should deal with questions of this kind without the assistance of counsel. Re Dennis, 5 Jur., N. S., 1388; 1 L. T., N. S., 28.

7. On a petition under the 22 & 23 Vict., c. 35, s. 30, the Court will not direct an inquiry at chambers. Re Mockett, Johns. 628; 29

L. J., Ch., 294; 8 W. R. 235; 6 Jur., N. S., 142.

8. A petition under the 22 & 23 Vict., c. 35, s. 30, ought not, in the first instance, to be served upon any one, but an application should be made in chambers as to the persons upon whom the petition should be served. No affidavits can be read on such petition. Re Muggeridge, Johns. 625; 6 Jur., N. S., 192; 29 L. J., Ch., 288; 8 W. R. 235.

9. When a petition is presented under 22 & 23 Vict., c. 35, the petitioners must serve such persons as they think proper, and must not bring on the petition merely in order to ascertain who ought to be served. Re Green, 6 Jur., N. S., 530; 29 L. J., Ch., 716.

10. On a petition (not served on any person) by English and Irish trustees, under 22 & 23 Vict., c. 35, s. 30 (the domicile of the testator and the tenant for life being Irish and English respectively), for the opinion of the Court as to the power of the trustees to make certain investments, the Court, there having been no application to the Court of Chancery in Ireland, exercised the jurisdiction, and did not require the petition to be served on any one. Re French, 15 L. R., Eq., 68.

3. Secret Trusts in Fraud of the Statute. See CHARITY, V. XII.—WILL.

1. In General.

1. The Statute of Frauds has only imposed a form in declaring the use; the control of the use remains as it was before the statute, the absolute will and declared intent of the owner. Wright v. Cadogan (Lord), 2 Eden 257.

2. Distinction between the 4th section of the Statute of Frauds requiring the agreement to be in writing and signed by the party to be charged, and the 7th section requiring that the trust shall be manifested, not that it shall be constituted by writing. Randall v. Morgan, 12 Ves. 74.

3. All declarations of trust under the Statute of Frauds must be in writing. Willis v. Willis, 2 Atk. 71.

4. A., being in possession of the office of clerk of the Crown, etc., in the King's Bench, in which B. has also an estate for life, procures B. to surrender, and solicits a patent for himself and C., and takes a note from C., promising to declare a trust for A. The patent afterwards is obtained; A. dies in debt, and without calling for a declaration of this trust; this note was held to be a sufficient declaration of trust. Bellamy v. Burrow, Forrest. 97.

5. A lease for years to A., but by parol agreed to be in trust for A. and B. jointly; B. pays a moiety of the rent. If this is within the Statute of Frauds, etc., quære. Riddle v. Emerson, 1 Vern. 108.

6. A declaration of uses by the founder of a charity, presumed from an entry in an ancient book, purporting to be such declaration, but without signature or date, the book being kept by the trustees for entering their proceedings, and containing an order by the trustees dated six years after creation of the trust, that the declaration of the founder be then entered as a discretion to the trustees. Att.-Gen. v. Boulbee, 2 Ves. J. 379.

7. Testator made his will in 1738, whereby he devised to defendants and their heirs, without declaring any trust on the face of the will; but he subscribed a writing, wherein he recommended defendants to see his will performed according to the humble request and the wanted and well disposed charitable disposition of (defendant) C., towards all men, and to bring the whole affair to its desired issue. Testator soon died, and his heirs-at-law brought a bill to set aside his devise, as void by the Act of 9 Geo. II., c. 36. Lord Chancellor said that the declaration of trust must be executed according to the Statute of Frauds, to bring it within the Statute of Mortmain, and observed, that devises to charities had been repeatedly held to be within the Statute of Frauds, though it had been endeavoured to make wills, not executed according to that statute, operate as appointments, but that never could prevail in all cases of charity before the Court. It has been held that the declaration of trust for a charity meant to express as the Statute of Frauds directs, and his lordship added that if a bare parol averment of a trust for a charity upon a will was to be allowed, the Statute of Mortmain would do more harm than good. As to the next consideration whether the paper writing was a sufficient declaration of trust within the statute, Lord Chancellor held it was not, though in the case of a feoffment it might have been a good declaration of a use. His lordship offered to retain the bill that the heir, who was an infant, might bring an ejectment, but the parties chose to have the bill dismissed without costs. Addington v. Cann, 3 Atk. 141.

The Statute of Mortmain has not abrogated the Statute of Frauds, which being made for the public good, ought normam imponere futuris. 8 C. 3 Atk. 150.

The Statute of Frauds, though it does not govern the particular provisions of the Statute of Mortmain, yet it governs the construction of that Act as being a subsequent one. Ib.

The same solemnities required by the Statute of Frauds to dispose of a trust or equitable interest in freehold lands, as of a legal estate in such lands, nor can a testator revoke a trust any more than he can devise it without these solemnities. Ib.

8. The Statute of Frauds does not require that a trust shall be created by writing, but that it shall be proved by writing, which may be subsequent to its commencement; therefore a trust may be raised by implication from letters, and a paper referred to by them in the handwriting of the party, though not signed or dated, and by operation of law from advances of money; but when letters are to raise a trust, there must be a demonstration that they relate to subject; in this case, the Master of the Rolls said, the Court had gone too far, on taking cases out of the Statute of Frauds on the ground of part performance, or the relief ought to be confined to compensation. On appeal, Lord Chancellor affirmed the decree at the Rolls, and determined that this case was not within the Statute of Frauds, the question being a question of fact, whether a partnership subsisted in a colliery; but the evidence from books and papers being admitted, and the interest in the lease of the colliery passing as an incident to the trade, by operation of law, his lordship refused to direct an issue. Foster v. Hale, 3 Ves. 696; 5 Ves. 508.

When letters are to raise a trust, there must be demonstration that they relate to the subject. S. C. 3 Ves. 708.

1. A son conveys an estate to his father nominally as purchaser, but really as a trustee, and in order that the father, who was in better credit than the son, might raise money upon it by way of mortgage for the use of the son. The father died shortly afterwards, and before any money was raised, having, by a will subsequent to the conveyance, made a general devise of all his real estate. The case is within the Statute of Frauds, and parol evidence is not admissible to prove the trust, but the son has a lien on the estate as vendor for the apparent consideration, no part of which was paid. Leman v. Whitley, 4 Russ. 423; 6 L. J., Ch., 152.

2. When the Court is called upon to establish or act upon a trust of lands by declaration or creation, it must not only be manifested and proved by writing, signed by the party by law enabled to declare the trust, but it must also be manifested and proved by writing, signed as required, what that trust is. Smith v. Matthews, 7 Jur., N. S., 378; 9 W. R. 644; 4 L. T., N. S., 266.

The Statute of Frauds (29 Car. 2, c. 3, s. 7) does not by any means require that all trusts should be created only by writing, but that they shall be manifested and proved by writing, so that there may be evidence in writing proving what the trust is. Id.

3. A., by will, gave lands to S., and, having afterwards purchased other lands, he on his death-bed desired B., his heir-at-law, not to hinder S. from enjoying the newly purchased lands, though he had not by any writing declared the trust for S. B. suffered S. to enjoy the lands eleven years, and then pretended he thought the after-purchased lands had passed by the will; declared, that this was out of the Statute of Frauds, and that B. letting S. enjoy it so long was an execution of the trust, and, though no express fraud was proved against B. (as in Lester v. Fowcroft, Colles's P. C. 108), yet the possession of eleven years was a strong presumption that he suffered it in execution of the testator's declaration. Harris v. Horwell, Gilb. Eq. Rep. 11.

4. Though there can be no parol declaration of a trust since 29 Car. 2, yet parol evidence is proper in avoidance of fraud. Hutchins v. Lee, 1 Atk. 448.

5. The Statute of Frauds is not available as a defence to a suit to establish a trust where it would be fraud to deny the trust. Haigh v. Kays, 41 L. J., Ch., 567; 7 L. R., Ch., 469; 20 W. R. 597; 26 L. T., N. S., 675.

The defence that the transaction under which the plaintiff claims was illegal, must be pleaded in distinct terms. Id.

The plaintiff conveyed an estate to the defendant by a deed which purported to be executed on a sale. No money was in reality paid. The defendant, in a suit to obtain a re-conveyance, stated in his answer that the conveyance was executed by the plaintiff in fear of an adverse decision in litigation then pending against him:—Held, that this was not, as pleaded, any defence. Id.

The defendant admitted that the conveyance was upon a verbal understanding that the estate should be re-conveyed when called for, unless in the meantime arrangements for a purchase by him should be completed. He alleged that such arrangement had been completed, and claimed to retain the estate, and he claimed the benefit of the Statute of Frauds as a defence to the case of trust set up by the plaintiff. The evidence did not support the allegation as to the arrangement for a sale being complete:—Held, that the Statute of Frauds afforded no defence. Id.

6. A trust of land may be created by parol, but must be manifested and proved by writing. Davies v. Otty, 10 Jur., N. S., 506; 12 W. R. 682; 10 L. T., N. S., 284; 33 Beav. 540. Affirmed 12 W. R. 896; 10 L. T., N. S., 632; 2 De G. J. & S. 238; 10 Jur., N. S., 506.

A plaintiff filed a bill to obtain from the defendant a reconveyance of land which he had previously granted to him absolutely, on the ground that the defendant was, in fact, only a trustee of the land for him. The plaintiff, however, did not state in his bill that the trust was in writing, and the defendant, therefore, demurred to the bill:—Held, that the demurrer must be overruled, for the Statute of Frauds only refers to the proof of a trust by some writing. Id.

7. In 1857 R., being seised of freeholds, and being also a holder of shares in companies, which he then feared would involve him in heavy liabilities, conveyed the property to H. The deeds conveying the property were in form of purchase deeds: and H. purported to give valuable consideration for it, though, in fact, no money really passed. R. received the rents till his death intestate. H., after R.'s death, executed a deed of trust, declaring that the property had been conveyed to him in trust for R.'s wife. The wife received the rents till her death, when she purported to dispose of the property by her will in favour of her daughters. The heir-at-law of R. claimed the property, and a reconveyance from H.:—Held, that the Statute of Frauds was not satisfied, and that, as no declaration of trust had been executed in the lifetime of R., there was a resulting trust in favour of R. at the time, and consequently that the heir-at-law was beneficially entitled to the property, and to have a reconveyance from H., and an account of rents and profits. Rudkin v. Dolman, 35 L. T., N. S., 791.

1. F., a mortgagee with a power of sale, agreed with K., who was entitled to a reversionary interest in the lands comprised in the mortgage, not to sell without his consent; and afterwards proposed to make a lease for a term to W. at a fine; K. refused to consent, unless the lands were settled on his wife (who was the daughter of W.) and her children after the death of W.; and this being acceded to K. gave his written consent, and thereupon the lease was executed by W., and, upon the occasion of its execution, the following document was signed by W. and K.: "It is agreed by W. and K. that the lease and lands of Largin, after death of W., shall be and become, through his love for her, the property of Mrs. K. in trust for her child or children by K. (if blessed with such), if not, to be for her sole use and benefit":—Held, first, that this was a declaration of trust by W. in favour of Mrs. K. and her children, and that, after W.'s death, his personal representative became a trustee for them. Kelly v. Walsh, 1 L. R., Ir., 275.

Held, secondly, that if it was not a valid declaration of trust, it was an agreement which should be specially performed, upon the ground that, although the consideration expressed was not valuable, yet the consent by K. was a part performance which took the case out of the Statute of Frauds, and that evidence of the real consideration was admissible. Ib.

2. Signature by Person to Declare the Trust.

2. Where lands are held in trust, the declaration of trust required by the 7th section of the Statute of Frauds to be signed "by the party who is by law enabled to declare such trust," must be signed by the beneficial owner, and not by the trustee who has the legal estate. Tierney v. Wood, 19 Beav. 330; 23 L. J., Ch., 895; 2 W. R. 577.

The legal fee in lands was vested in A. in trust for B. B. signed a document addressed to A., directing the lands and other property should, after his death, be held for the benefit of certain persons. The document was not attested:—Held, that this was an effectual declaration of trust, within the 7th section of the Statute of Frauds, by the beneficial owner, and not a testamentary instrument. Ib.

3. When the legal estate in land is vested in a trustee for an absolute beneficial owner, "the party who is by law enabled to declare a trust" of the land, within the meaning of the 7th section of the Statute of Frauds, is the beneficial owner only. Kronheim v. Johnson, 7 L. R., Ch. D., 60; 47 L. J., Ch., 132; 37 L. T., N. S., 751; 26 W. R. 142.

In pursuance of an arrangement by which a settlement should be made on an infant by his grandmother, K., a lease was taken by J. in his own name. Part of the arrangement was that the real transaction should be kept secret, and that the settlement should appear to be made by J. Accordingly a settlement was executed by J., by which the property was settled on the infant, but which, the solicitors not having been instructed as to the real nature of the transaction, contained an ultimate trust in favour of J. In an action by K. to have the property assigned to her:—Held, that the declaration of trust not being made by the beneficial owner was not valid within the 7th section of the Statute of Frauds. Ib.

K. had written a letter, signed with her initials, and in the same envelope was inclosed a postscript headed "supplement," written in the same hand, but on a separate paper and unsigned. The postscript began with the words, "I had quite omitted to tell you and Martin," and was alleged to contain a declaration of trust in favour of the infant:—Held, that the signature did not govern the postscript so as to make it valid as a declaration of trust within the 7th section of the Statute of Frauds. Ib.

II. RESULTING TRUSTS AND TRUSTS BY OPERATION OF LAW.

4. Resulting trusts of copyholds as well as of freeholds, are within the Statute of Frauds and Perjuries. Withers v. Withers, Amb. 152.

5. Mortgage in fee 700l. paid by A., but half of the money was B.'s; yet for want of a declaration in writing, B. was not admitted to read to the proof of it so as to create a trust for him, being against the Statute of Frauds. Newton v. Preston, Pre. Ch. 103.

6. Nothing is a resulting trust under the Statute of Frauds and Perjuries, but what are called trusts by operation of law. Lloyd v. Spillet, 2 Atk. 150.

7. C. lends money upon mortgage of copyhold, but being infirm, etc., surrender is taken in name of D., who executes declaration of trust. C. after purchases equity of redemption, and second surrender is made in name of D. also, but without a declaration of trust:—Held, sufficient trust within the Statute of Frauds, without a second declaration of trust. Acherley v. Acherley, 7 Bro. P. C. 273.

8. A. agrees for beneficial lease of forty-one years; B. advances money towards the fine, etc., and lease is taken in B.'s name without a declaration of trust:—Held, that B. was a trustee for A., and upon being repaid his advance with interest, should assign the lease to A., and account with him for the profits, and pay costs:—Held, also, that trust being proved by letters of B.'s own handwriting takes the case out of Statute of Frauds. O'Hara v. O'Neill, 7 Bro. P. C. 227.

9. The Statute of Frauds does not require that a trust shall be created by writing, but that it shall be proved by writing, which may be subsequent to its commencement; therefore, a trust may be raised by implication from letters, and a paper referred to by them, in the handwriting of the party, though not signed or dated, and, by operation of law, from advances of money; but when letters are to raise a trust, there must be a demonstration that they relate to the subject: in this case, the Master of the Rolls said the Court had gone too far in taking cases out of the Statute of Frauds, on the ground of part performance; the relief ought to be confined to compensation. On appeal, Lord Chancellor affirmed the decree at the Rolls, and determined that this case was not within the Statute of Frauds, the question being a question of fact, whether a partnership subsisted in a colliery; but the evidence from books and papers being admitted, and the interest in the lease of the colliery passing as an incident to the trade by operation of law, his lordship refused to direct an issue. Forster v. Hale, 3 Ves. 696; 5 Ves. 508.

1. A son conveys an estate to his father nominally as purchaser, but really as a trustee, and in order that the father, who was in better credit than the son, might raise money upon it by way of mortgage for the use of the son. The father died shortly afterwards, and before any money was raised, having, by a will subsequent to the conveyance, made a general devise of all his real estate. The case is within the Statute of Frauds, and parol evidence is not admissible to prove the trust, but the son has a lien on the estate as vendor for the apparent consideration, no part of which was paid. Leman v. Whitley, 4 Russ. 423; 6 L. J., Ch., 152.

2. Where a resulting trust is insisted on in opposition to the legal operation of a will, parol evidence may be admitted to rebut the equity. Lake v. Lake, Amb. 127.

3. A plaintiff, believing that he was liable to be convicted for bigamy, absolutely conveyed his real estate to the defendant in consideration of 20*l*. It was proved by parol evidence that the deed was executed in pursuance of an arrangement that the defendant should hold the property at the disposal of the plaintiff. The plaintiff's alarm was groundless, the consideration was never paid, the plaintiff remained in possession, and paid certain sums due to a building society in respect of the property. The defendant denied the trust, and claimed the benefit of the Statute of Frauds:—Held, that the operation of the Statute of Frauds was excluded, first, by the fraud of the defendant in refusing to reconvey; and secondly by reason of a resulting trust within section 8. Davies v. Otty, 34 L. J., Ch., 252; 13 W. R. 484; 12 L. T., N. S., 789; 5 N. R. 391.

4. Where land is purchased with the money of A., in the name of B., the resulting trust to A. may be rebutted as to part of the land, or part of the interest in the land. Where A. took a mortgage in the name of B., declaring that the principal sum should be for the benefit of B., and received the interest during his life, this being personal estate is not within the clause in Statute of Frauds relating to resulting trusts, or the doctrine of resulting trusts under that statute, but the property after the death of A. will belong to B. by force of the parol declaration. Benson v. Townsend, 1 Myl. & K. 506; 2 L. J., N. S., Ch., 215.

5. A., owner of estates in the Bedford Level, wishing to give his son a qualification as bailiff, for which, according to the Bedford Level Act, it is necessary to "have" 400 acres in the Level, wrote to the registrar of the Level, stating his wish, and asking him to find a qualification. The registrar, thereupon, without any further instructions, selected out of A.'s land the smallest lot that exceeded 400 acres, and sent to him a deed, by which he purported to convey it to the son in fee, in consideration of natural love and affection. This deed was at once executed by A., and registered. The son died soon after, without having ever heard of the transaction. It clearly appeared that neither A. nor the registrar intended to consider the transaction to have the effect of making the son beneficial owner, nor intended any fraud or illegality. On a bill being filed by A. to establish his title to the land:—Held, that the letter written by A. to the registrar excluded any defence grounded on the Statute of Frauds. Childers v. Childers, 1 De G. & J. 482; 3 Jur., N. S., 1277; 26 L. J., Ch., 743; 5 W. R. 793. Reversing 3 Kay & J. 310; 3 Jur., N. S., 509; 26 L. J., Ch., 643; 5 W. R. 586.

Held, also, in the construction of the Bedford Level Act, that a mere legal estate was a sufficient qualification, and that, therefore, there was nothing illegal in A.'s design, no intention to represent the son as beneficial owner appearing. Id.

Held, that on the ground of trust, or of mistake, or on both grounds, the plaintiff was entitled to the relief sought. Id.

Held, that this conclusion was not affected by the circumstance, that the legal estate was outstanding under a mortgage in fee not known to the registrar. Id.

Semble, that even apart from the plaintiff's letter the Statute of Frauds would not have been a good defence. Id.

6. A plaintiff in the county court stated that the plaintiff assigned to the defendant the agreement for a lease of certain premises, but it was alleged that there was a parol agreement that part of the premises was to be held by the defendant in trust for the plaintiff. Evidence was given on both sides, but the judge, being of opinion that actual fraud had not been proved against the defendant, and there being no resulting trust in the assignment, decided that the Statute of Frauds was applicable, and dismissed the plaintiff, without coming to any distinct decision upon the evidence:—Held, that the judge ought to have decided that the Statute of Frauds had no application; and the Court, upon a consideration of the evidence, decided that the plaintiff was entitled to relief, and reversed the decree. Booth v. Turle, 16 L. R., Eq., 182.

III. ASSIGNMENT OF TRUSTS.

7. Sect. 9 of the 29 Car. 2, Statute of Frauds, refers to assignments by the cestui que trust. Jerdein v. Bright, 2 John. & H. 325.

I. GENERAL PRINCIPLES.

1. There are three requisites to constitute a trust, viz., sufficient words, a definite subject, and a certain object. Crumys v. Colman, 9 Ves. 323.

2. A trust is, where there is such a confidence between parties that no action will lie, but is a case merely for the consideration of Equity. Sturt v. Mellish, 2 Atk. 612.

3. Trusts may be constituted, not merely by direct declaration of trusts, but also by the constructive operation of the consequences following from the acts of parties. Thus Equity will enforce the execution of a trust, not only against the trustees themselves, but against all persons who obtain possession of the property affected by the trust, provided they had notice of it. Pooley v. Budd, 14 Beav. 34.

4. A declaration of trust has, in a court of equity, the same effect as a transfer of the legal estate, or as the vesting of a legal interest has in a court of law. Collinson v. Patrick, 2 Keen, 123; 7 L. J., N. S., Ch., 83.

5. An instrument may be effectual as a declaration of trust, or tantamount to a declaration of trust, though it does not contain the word "confidence" or "trust," or the word "trustee." Kekewich v. Manning, 1 De G. Macn. & G. 176; 21 L. J., N. S., Ch., 577; 16 Jur. 625.

This Court will under particular circumstances convert an imperfect gift into trust, although not supported by valuable consideration. Id.

Whatever rule there may be against volunteers, it does not apply to the case of a cestui que trust claiming against his trustee, for that which is considered a trust may be created gratuitously, and the absence of consideration for its creation is in general immaterial. Id.

6. It is immaterial for the purpose of establishing a trust of personal property, whether declared orally or in writing; the only question is as to the evidence of its existence. The fact of a person having acted upon the faith of the verbal instructions given to him is immaterial, the real consideration being what the party creating the trust has himself done in the matter. Peckham v. Taylor, 6 L. T., N. S., 487.

7. Where an instrument is in form a complete and an immediate assignment, and of such a nature as to give the assignee a right as between him and the assignor to take or receive the property comprised in it presently, it will, although voluntary, be supported in equity, and considered as a perfect declaration of trust of such of the property as was not assignable at law. Richardson v. Richardson, 36 L. J., Ch., 653; 3 L. R., Eq., 686.

8. The Court, in order to give effect to voluntary settlements, requires, where the settlor is the legal owner, everything to have been done which is requisite to transfer the legal ownership; and where he is the equitable owner, clear and distinct evidence of a declaration of trust in favour of the donee. Bentley v. Mackay, 15 Beav. 12.

9. Some consols belonging beneficially to A. for life, with remainder to B., stood in the names of two trustees, of the survivor of whom B. was the representative. B. voluntarily assigned the stock to A., but no transfer was made. The Court refused either to declare B. a trustee of the stock for A. or to compel her to transfer it. Beech v. Keep, 18 Beav. 285; 18 Jur. 971; 23 L. J., Ch., 539; 2 W. R. 316.

The distinction between an assignment for the benefit of a volunteer, and a declaration of trust in his favour, though very thin, yet pervades the cases. Id.

10. In order to render a voluntary settlement valid and effectual, the settlor must do everything which, according to the nature of the property comprised in the settlement, is necessary to transfer the property, and render the settlement binding upon him; as by actually transferring the property to the persons for whom he intends to provide, or to trustees for the purposes of the settlement, or by declaring that he himself holds the property in trust for those purposes; and if the property is personal the trust may be declared either by writing or by parol; but there is no equity to protect an imperfect gift. Milroy v. Lord, 8 Jur., N. S., 806; 31 L. J., Ch., 798; 7 L. T., N. S., 178; 4 De G. F. & J. 264.

If, however, the gift is intended to take effect by transfer, the Court will not hold the intended transfer to operate as a declaration of trust. Id.

11. It is immaterial by what form of conveyancing, whether by assignment, declaration, etc., the equity of a fund be conveyed. Any of such modes, if everything be done that can be done, and if the intention be clear, will convey the equitable interest in the fund. But a covenant to convey the fund in a certain contingency will not, when that contingency arises, be held to amount to a conveyance of the equitable right. A covenant by a settlor to transfer, convey, and assure property (if any) which he might thereafter acquire, if of a certain value, does not amount either to an imperfect declaration of trust, or to an incomplete assignment of the property (if any) which afterwards came to be acquired, upon which a court of equity will operate. Wilkinson v. Wilkinson, 4 Jur., N. S., 47.

12. Trust to take effect, according to the whole intent or not at all. Mogg v. Hodges, 2 Ves. 54.

1. It has long been settled that the trustees and cestuis que trustent under a voluntary settlement cannot compel the settlor to perform any further act than he has already done, to render such a settlement operative. Denning v. Ware, 22 Beav. 184.

2. A manor having been conveyed upon trust for certain persons, their heirs and assigns, being tenants of certain messuages, etc., an assignee of one of those messuages was held not to have a right to the benefit of those trusts, because none of the assurances by which the property was conveyed to him expressly, mentioned them. Hutchinson v. Morritt, 3 Y. & Coll. 547.

3. When a trust is declared of land for the person entitled thereto, no party can avail himself of this trust without establishing aliunde that he is entitled thereto. Walters v. Webb, 18 W. R. 86.

Charge or Trust.] 4. Every charge on an estate does not create a trust, although it imposes a burden; but it may create a trust, depending on the nature of the charge. If the gift is an express one, and if the person taking the estate is bound to give effect to the gift as a trustee, then it is an express trust. Where a testator gives an estate to one, subject to a charge, the person to pay the charge is the person who is liable to the burden, and this in the case of a charity impresses him with the character of trustee for the charity. Commissioners of Charitable Donations v. Wybrant, 2 J. & L. 182; 7 Ir. Eq. R. 580.

5. Testator devised freeholds and copyholds to his son for life, and after his decease to his first and other sons, paying 10*l.* a year M. C. for life:—Held, that the word "paying" created a charge and not a trust. Hodge v. Churchward, 16 Sim. 71.

Condition or Trust.] 6. Testator gives to his son a public-house and stock in trade, on condition that he pay debts and a legacy. This is a condition and not a trust. If, therefore, the son accept the bequest, he is bound to pay the debts, although they amount to more than the value of the property. Messenger v. Andrews, 4 Russ. 479.

7. A testatrix, after giving several legacies, some of which were legal and others were void, as being contrary to the Mortmain Act, 2 Geo. 2, c. 36, proceeded as follows: "I give, devise, and bequeath to W. all my real estates, both freehold and copyhold, and all the residue of my personal estate and effects, to hold to him, W., his heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, for ever, upon this express condition, that if my personal estate should be insufficient for the purpose, he or they do and shall, within twelve months after my decease, pay and discharge all and every the legacies bequeathed. And I feel confident that he will comply with my wish, it being my particular desire that all the legacies shall be paid. And I charge and make chargeable all my real and personal estate with the payment of the legacies and bequests." The testatrix nominated and appointed S. and C. executors and trustees of her will; and the will contained clauses for the protection of trustees. The personal estate was insufficient for the payment of the legacies, and W. did not, within twelve months after her decease, pay any of them:—Held, that the words "upon express condition" did not create a condition for breach of which the heir might enter; but created a trust which W., taking the legal estate, would in equity be bound to perform. Wright v. Wilkin, 2 B. & S. 232; 31 L. J., Q. B., 196; 10 W. R. 403; 6 L. T., N. S., 221.

8. A testator left all his estate and property, real and personal, except such parts as were otherwise specifically devised, upon trust for the several uses, intents, and purposes therein-after mentioned. He gave to his wife an annuity of 400*l.* to be paid to her out of the profits of his trade, to be carried on by his sons L., J., and S. in trust for the benefit of his wife and children, as in his will directed, "as likewise out of all profits arising from all and every part of my property whatsoever." He left to L., J., and S., on their faithfully performing all matters therein directed, and carrying on his trade, the houses in which he carried it on, and all his stock-in-trade, which he ordered to be increased by the sale of certain lands. He left pecuniary legacies to his children, and house property and the chattel lands of S. to his wife for life, and after her death the houses to J. and S., and the lands of S. to L.; and he directed that all the bequests should "stand good to them, L., J., and S., only on condition of paying, etc., the several legacies, and discharging with fidelity the different trusts by this will committed to them;" and that a schedule of all his property should be taken, and copies given to his wife and all his trustees and executors, and that the property therein contained should go to L., J., and S., on paying and discharging the legacies and trusts in his will, provided that if L., J., and S., or any of them, should refuse to carry on his business, such of them as should so refuse should be paid 5,000*l.* and no more:—Held, that L., J., and S. took the property left to them upon an express trust. Foot v. Cunningham, 11 Ir. R., Eq., 306.

9. Little stress can be laid on the use, in a will making a gift to a charity, of the word "condition;" it may mean the same as "intent and purpose," and may be employed to create a trust and nothing more. Att.-Gen. v. Wax Chandlery Co., 42 L. J., Ch., 425; 6 L. R., H. L., 1; 21 W. R. 361; 28 L. T. 681. Reversing 5 L. R., Ch., 503; 39 L. J., Ch., 782; 23 L. T., N. S., 173; 8 L. R., Eq., 452. And see Merchant Taylors' Co. v. Att.-Gen., 40 L. J., Ch., 545; 6 L. R., Ch., 612; 25 L. T., N. S., 109; 19 W. R. 641. Affirming 19 W. R. 39; 23 L. T., N. S., 480.

Houses were devised to a city company for the intent and purpose and upon the condition, "that the company yearly distributes 4*l.* among the poor of parish A., 2*l.* among the poor of parish B., 3*s.* among the poorest members of the company, and 5*s.* between the master and wardens of the same company." The rest of the profits of the houses the testator willed should "be bestowed upon the reparations of the houses and tenements." If the company should neglect to do the things directed by his will, the testator willed, that his next-of-kin should enter on and hold the houses for ever, upon the condition that he and his heirs should do the things. It was proved, that eight years before the date of the will, the rents out of which these payments were directed exceeded the amount of the payments by only 13s.; sixteen years after that date it was found by inquisition, that the annual value of the property was 16l., or more than double the amount of the payments. The rents having increased to an amount considerably larger than was necessary to meet the payments mentioned in the will:—Held, that this was not a gift upon condition, but upon trust, and as part of the rents was given for charitable purposes, the residue being directed to be applied in maintaining the property, the whole of the rent must be taken to be specifically dedicated to charitable purposes, and not to the purposes of the company, and therefore the whole increased rents must be devoted to charitable purposes. Id.

II. DECLARATION OF INTENTION WITHOUT TRANSFER OF PROPERTY.

1. A mother entitled to a considerable property, under the will of a relation, in a conversation with the executor of that relation expressed an intention to make a settlement of part of that property, which was standing in his name, upon her daughter; and requested the executor to instruct her solicitor to prepare such a settlement. On the prepared settlement being brought to her for execution, she had changed her mind and refused to sign it:—Held, that her intention expressed in the conversation with the executor of her relation, did not amount to a declaration of trust, although the property was personal estate. Bayley v. Boulocott, 4 Russ. 345.

2. A letter written by the trustee to the solicitor of a party who had advanced money for the purposes of the trust, stating that he (the trustee) would exercise all or any of the powers reposed in him by the trust-deed, for the purpose of securing the sum so advanced, will not give such creditor a locus standi in equity to enforce those trusts for his own benefit. La Touche v. Lucan (Earl), 2 Dr. & Wal. 432; 7 Cl. & F. 772. S. C. nom. Lucan (Earl) v. La Touche, 2 Dr. & Wal. 271.

3. Where the owner of an estate charged with an annuity in favour of the lunatic, had acknowledged that she had in hand certain arrears of the annuity, which she was ready to pay to any person on his behalf who could give a good receipt for it:—Held, that this was a declaration of trust, which entitled the curator to sue in equity for those arrears. Scott v. Bentley, 1 Kay & J. 281; 1 Jur., N. S., 394; 24 L. J., Ch., 244.

4. Where a person beneficially entitled to the absolute interest in stock standing in his name deliberately and advisedly executes a deed, declaring himself a trustee of the stock for certain purposes to take effect immediately, and communicates and delivers the deed to the cestui que trust, this Court will not decline to enforce the trusts against their author because he executed the deed voluntarily or without consideration. Kekewich v. Manning, 1 De G. M. & G. 176; 21 L. J., N. S., Ch., 577; 16 Jur. 625.

An instrument may be effectual as a declaration of trust, or tantamount to a declaration of trust, although it does not contain the word "confidence," the word "trust," or the word "trustee." Id.

This Court will, under particular circumstances, convert an imperfect gift into a trust, although not supported by valuable consideration. Id.

5. By a marriage settlement property was settled after the decease of husband and wife upon trust for the children of the marriage as the husband and wife should jointly appoint, and, in default of appointment, to the survivor of husband and wife. There was no issue of the marriage. By a deed-poll the husband and wife appointed the property to the three daughters of the wife's sister. The wife survived, and after the death of her husband appointed a new trustee of the trust funds; and in letters to her sister spoke of the deed as standing, and gave a precise statement of its purport and intended effect:—Held, that the wife had executed a valid declaration of trust in favour of the three daughters of her sister. Re Bennett, 17 L. T., N. S., 438.

6. A testator bequeathed 2,000l. on certain trusts, and he empowered his executor, who was also his residuary legatee, to retain the amount in his hands uninvested, he paying interest thereon. After his death, the executor being satisfied that the testator intended to bequeath 3,000l. and not 2,000l., promised to make it up to 3,000l.; he made no investment, but continued to pay interest on the 3,000l. to his death:—Held, that there was a complete voluntary trust as to the additional 1,000l. which the Court would enforce. Gee v. Liddell, 35 Beav. 621.

7. The consent of a married woman had been given before commissioners, for the transfer and payment to her husband of stock and cash standing in court to her separate account:—Held, that this did not amount to a declaration of trust, and that it was competent to her, at any time before the transfer had been completed, to retract her consent. Penfold v. Mould, 4 L. R., Eq., 562.

8. A person, who occupied a large farm under a lease, and who had by the outlay of capital considerably increased its value, having fallen into difficulties, the lease was surrendered by the trustees, to whom he had assigned it and his effects, to his landlord. His wife's brother then applied to the landlord to become tenant for the remainder of the lease upon the same terms—"with the view," as he stated in the application, "to benefit his sister and her unfortunate family;" and with that view, as the landlord stated in the correspondence and also in his evidence, the lease was granted, and he was allowed for the same purpose, contrary to the usual practice of the same landlord, to have a co-lessee, who was the actual occupier, and also to sublet a part, by which means he derived a clear 100l. a-year above the rent, which was paid by the co-lessee:—Held, in a suit against the executor of the brother, that by means of the letters (which were a sufficient writing within the Statute of Frauds) and the circumstances, there was a trust as to this 100l. a year for the wife of the original tenant and her children as joint tenants. Morton v. Temart, 2 Y. & Coll. C. C. 67.

9. A. and B., partners, being indebted to C. and D., the plaintiffs, A. by letter proposed to assign a claim which A. and B. had upon the estate of P., then the subject of a suit in Chancery. Certain properties of P., having been sold under a decree, were purchased by A. in his own name, but, as he alleged in letters to C., in trust for C. and D. A., having shortly afterwards committed an act of bankruptcy, executed deeds declaring that he held his trust for C. and D. His assignee having obtained a judgment in ejectment against part of the premises, a bill was filed praying that he should be restrained from executing an habere; that he should be declared a trustee for the plaintiffs as to all the premises; and that he should be directed to convey to them:—Held, that the trust was clearly established, and that the plaintiffs were entitled to the conveyance sought. Johnson v. Perrin, Hayes 322.

1. R. signed a memorandum containing these words:—"I authorise my brother to claim as his own, after my death, 150*l.* out of the money lying in the bank at Carlisle, for the service rendered me during my lifetime." R. retained the possession of the document until his death:—Held, that the instrument was a valid declaration of trust, and that the fact of its remaining in R.'s possession up to the time of his death was immaterial. Armstrong v. Timperon, 19 W. R. 558; 24 L. T., N. S., 275.

2. D., who was possessed of leasehold business premises and stock-in-trade, shortly before his death purported to make a voluntary gift in favour of his grandson E., who was an infant and who assisted in the business, by the following memorandum, signed and indorsed on the lease: "This deed and all there belonging I give to E. from this time forth, with all the stock-in-trade." The lease was then delivered to E.'s mother on his behalf:—Held, that there was no valid declaration of trust of the property in favour of E. Richards v. Delbridge, 18 L. R., Eq., 11; 43 L. J., Ch., 495; 22 W. R. 584.

3. A married woman executed a voluntary settlement containing a recital that she had paid 2,000*l.* to the trustee, and declaring trusts of that sum. In point of fact she had not paid and never did pay any money to the trustee. The trustee also executed the deed:—Held, that neither the settlor nor the trustee incurred any obligation whatever in respect of the 2,000*l.* Marler v. Thomas, 43 L. J., Ch., 73; 17 L. R., Eq., 8; 22 W. R. 25.

4. A testator entered in a memorandum-book, and signed memorandum, that he had decided to invest the future proceeds of an annuity which had been absolutely assigned to him by his second son F., and that he intended to leave the proceeds at his death to F.'s daughter. An account, also in the testator's handwriting, was found, of the investments of the annuity, "from the period that I determined thus to appropriate this money." On his deathbed he referred his eldest son to the account-book, and said that he wished the accumulations to be given to the daughter of F., and the annuity at his death to revert to F. The annuity and accumulations were undisposed of by the will:—Held, that there was no declaration of trust, and that the annuity and accumulations went to the next-of-kin. Re Glover, 2 John. & H. 186.

5. A memorandum of a voluntary gift in this form, "I hereby give and make over to M an Indian bond, value 1,000*l.*," was signed by S., and given by him to M., without handing over the bond. S. died, and the residuary legatees under his will claimed the bond:—Held, that the memorandum was a good declaration of trust in favour of M., and that he was entitled to the bond. Morgan v. Malleon, 10 L. R., Eq., 475; 39 L. J., Ch., 680; 23 L. T., N. S., 336; 18 W. R. 1125.

6. Expressions in letters under which a testator was held to have constituted himself a trustee of a fund for the benefit of his children then existing, reserving to himself at the same time the control quâ trustee over the fund, but no further control over it as owner. Vandenberg v. Palmer, 4 Kay & J. 204.

A. V., a merchant in China, directed his correspondents in London to transfer 1,000*l.* from his tea account, and employ it in exchange transactions for the benefit of his children. In subsequent letters he wrote to the same correspondents that "he had declined giving any opinion as to the reinvestment of the fund, as he considered he had no further control over it, as it belonged to his children, and that he had appropriated it to them, and his correspondents were to consider it as theirs." The correspondents accordingly opened a separate account, headed, "A. V., Esq., exchange account on account of children," previously informing him of their intention so to do:—Held, that by the first letter a trust was well created in favour of the children, although the fund was still so far in the control of A. V. as to be liable to his drawing, and notwithstanding A. V., in one of the letters, had desired his correspondents to consider it as subject to the order of his executors in the event of his death. Ib.

7. This Court will not enforce the transfer of stock in favour of a volunteer, to whom it has been merely assigned. Beech v. Keep, 18 Beav. 285; 18 Jur. 971; 23 L. J., Ch., 539; 2 W. R. 316.

Some consols belonging beneficially to A. for life, with remainder to B., stood in the names of two trustees, of the survivor of whom B. was the representative. B. voluntarily assigned the stock to A., but no transfer was made. The Court refused either to declare B. a trustee of the stock for A., or to compel her to transfer it. Ib.

The distinction between an assignment for the benefit of a volunteer and a declaration of trust in his favour, though very thin, yet pervades the cases. Ib.

8. A father who had been in pecuniary difficulties, and was indebted to his son, effected a policy on his own life, in the names of the son and another person, as trustees for the daughters of the father, and paid the premiums. The son accepted the trust, and on the father's death, some years afterwards, he, with the sanction of his co-trustee, received the policy moneys, and purchased from them debentures of a banking company, of which he was a director, and to which he was indebted. The company was wound up, and the son became bankrupt. The same person was appointed official manager of the company, and assignee under the son's bankruptcy. On the daughters claiming to be creditors of the company to the amount of the debentures:—Held, first, that, notwithstanding the state of the accounts between the father and the son, the trust for the daughters ought to be assumed, for the purposes of the application, to have been well created. Boyd's case, 1 De G. & J. 223; 3 Jur., N. S., 897; 26 L. J., Ch., 737. Affirming Jur., N. S., 554.

Held, secondly, that the trust was not determined by the receipt of the money, and the investment in the debentures. Id.

Held, thirdly, that the right of the daughters to the debentures was not affected by the state of the accounts between the bankrupt and the company. Id.

Held, fourthly, that, there appearing no probability of this apparent state of things, on the existing evidence, being altered by further investigation, the official manager was not entitled to have an issue or further inquiry directed. Id.

1. A direction was given by C. to the firm of which he was the head, that an annual reserve of interest upon certain mortgaged estates should be placed to an account entitled "C., for himself, M., and S."—the same to be subject to his control alone, and in the absence of other instructions from him to be considered applicable towards liquidating the account in respect of the mortgaged estates, for which C., M., and S., as proprietors, were responsible. Upon a sale of the mortgaged estates after M.'s death more than sufficient was produced to pay the debt due from the three proprietors. Subsequently to the sale, C. and S. having received each one-third of the reserved interest fund, C. directed the remaining third to be remitted to his agents, "subject to my orders, my intention being to hand it over to the family of the late M. in such manner as I may think proper." C. died without taking any further steps as to this remaining third:—Held, that the fund had not been so permanently impressed with a trust in favour, as to one-third, of M. during his lifetime, that he, or his executors after his death, could have called for a transfer; and that the subsequent declaration by C. of an intention to hand it over to M.'s family did not constitute a complete and binding declaration of trust in their favour, to which the Court would give effect. Forbes v. Forbes, 6 W. R. 92; 3 Jur., N. S., 1206.

2. E., a partner in the firm of S., E., & Co., previously to April 1854, advanced to the firm moneys, some of which were standing in the books to the credit of an account intitled, "E.'s Trustee Account, and others to his private account." M. and C. had in that month sums belonging to them standing in the books of the firm to their credit. On the 4th April 1854 E. transferred 2,700*l.* from his trustee account to M. and C.'s account, by entries in the books of the firm, and on the same day S., E., & Co. signed a promissory note for that amount, which bore interest at 5*l.* per cent., and gave it to E., who placed it in an envelope, upon which he wrote, "This note of hand stands to the credit of M. and F. in the books of S., E., & Co., and is to be the property of Mrs. E." E., in the presence of Mrs. E., told M. that he had a security from his firm for his wife's money; that the note of hand securing it was in the joint names of her and her sister C., and that they were to recollect that it was his wife's money, and not theirs. E., in September 1854, without the knowledge or consent of Mrs. E., or of M. and C., transferred the sum from M. and C.'s account to his own "trustee account," and at the same time wrote across the above memorandum, "The within amount of 2,700*l.* is transferred to E.'s trustee account, but it is to be considered the private property of Mrs. E." E., by will, dated in 1853, after bequeathing an annuity to his wife of 1,000*l.*, gave the residue of his estate to his niece. No reference was made to the 2,700*l.* E. died in 1856, and at his decease only the sum of 2,661*l.* 18*s.* 6*d.* was standing to the credit of his "trustee account" in the partnership books. On a bill filed by Mrs. E., the Court declared that a valid trust had been created for her sole and separate use, and that she was entitled to the 2,700*l.*, with interest at 5*l.* per cent. from the death of her husband. Evans v. Jennings, 4 Jur., N. S., 551; 6 W. R. 616.

3. Mere declaration of trust by the owner of property in favour of a volunteer is altogether inoperative, and a court of equity will not interfere in such a case; aliter where there has been a change of legal ownership, and so a trust is constituted. Scates v. Maude, 6 De G. M. & G. 43; 1 Jur., N. S., 1147; 25 L. J., Ch., 433; 3 W. R. 527; 1 Jur., N. S., 533.

Letters written by a mortgagee to the mortgagor and persons interested under him, containing the expressions, "I now give this gift, to become due at my death, unconnected with my will;" "I hereby request my executors to cancel the mortgage deed, etc.;" "I again direct and promise that my executors shall comply with my former request; that is, to cancel all deeds and papers I may have chargeable on the R. estate":—Held, not to operate either as a declaration of trust or as a valid gift. Id.

Semble, the letters were testamentary, and could have no effect until proved in the ecclesiastical court. Id.

4. A parol declaration of trust in favour of a volunteer may be valid, and may be enforced in equity. The dictum in Scates v. Maude (6 De G. M. & G. 51; 1 Jur., N. S., 1147), that a declaration of trust in favour of a volunteer is invalid, is not good law. Jones v. Lock, 1 L. R., Ch., 25; 35 L. J., Ch., 117; 13 L. T., N. S., 514; 11 Jur., N. S., 913; 14 W. R. 149.

The father of a child, nine months old, put into its hands a cheque for 900*l.*, saying, in the presence of his wife and the nurse, "I give this to baby; it is for himself, and I am going to put it away for him." He then took it back saying again that he was going to put it away for him. About the same time he told his solicitor that he intended to add 100*l.* to the 900*l.*, and invest it for the benefit of his son. The father died suddenly a few days afterwards, without having made any provision for the child, and the cheque was found in his possession:—Held, that there was no complete gift of the cheque to the infant, and no valid declaration of trust in his favour. Id.

5. T. was possessed of certain bonds, found in a box at his house after his death; there was an indorsement on the wrapper enclosing them that five of them were the property of H. D., and this was signed by T. The key of the box was kept by H. D., who had also the general custody of T.'s property, and she by her answer alleged that the bonds were placed in her custody to the intent that she might have the beneficial interest in them. Upon the question whether T. was a trustee of the bonds for H. D., and whether the custody of them was a delivery of them by virtue of the indorsement, and constituted a gift inter vivos.—Held, that he was not a trustee, and that there was no sufficient delivery, and no sufficient gift inter vivos. Trimmer v. Danby, 4 W. R. 399; 25 L. J., Ch., 424.

1. A father who was the owner of a share in a colliery, on the 11th February 1865 wrote to his daughter as follows:—"I have another present to make shortly, one share of Ryhope colliery . . . and you may now consider that you have this yourself from 2nd January to receive dividends upon. I am also giving to Sarah one, the same." On the 17th he attended a meeting of shareholders in the colliery, and signed the following entry in the minute book:—"That Mr. N.'s" (his own) "proposition of transferring two of his shares to the parties undernamed be agreed to, viz." (the daughter and her sister). This signature was not sufficient, according to the regulations of the deed of partnership, to pass the property in the shares. On the 25th February he again wrote to his daughter:—"I have arranged and made all right with the shares for you and Sarah, and dividends will be sent from 2nd January." On the 4th March the testator wrote to her:—"Next meeting (private) we will be enabled to make another dividend, when you and Sarah will be informed." On the 16th March he sent her a cheque for the first dividend, with a letter thus:—"Herewith I enclose cheque for 37l. 10s., which you can receive at the bank . . . first dividend, made this day." On the 18th March he again wrote to her as follows:—"I have yours in reply to the receipt of dividend—long may you live to enjoy it;" and in the same letter, after referring to the meeting of the 17th January he further said: "Well, when I got in, I openly at once asked the question in the presence of" (four persons whom he named), "I was about to give to my two daughters one share each, and which is the way to do it? They were all pleased. It was entered in the minutes of the book":—Held, that these expressions in letters, signature of minute, and gift of dividend, did not amount to a declaration by the testator, nor to proof of an intention and determination on his part, that he would hold the shares for his daughter; but that the testator, having the desire and intention that she should, from and after the 11th February 1865, have the shares as her property, failed to fulfil that desire, and complete that intention. Heartley v. Nicholson, 19 L. R., Eq., 233; 44 L. J., Ch., 277; 22 L. T., N. S., 822.

2. In order to give validity to a declaration of trust of property, it is necessary that the donor or grantor should have absolutely parted with his interest in the property, and have effectually put such interest beyond his own reach. Warriner v. Rogers, 16 L. R., Eq., 340; 42 L. J., Ch., 581; 21 W. R. 766; 28 L. T., N. S., 863.

An unmarried lady, possessed of large property, being under obligations to her servant, called him one day into her room and showed him a box which, having opened it and put a note inside, she locked and handed it to him, telling him to take it into his possession, that it would be of service to him some day, but that he must not open it till after her death. She herself kept the key. She afterwards made her will, whereby she gave the residue of her real and personal estate to a stranger in blood. After her death the box was opened, and found to contain a paper writing dated and signed by the testatrix, and addressed to the servant, to the effect that the contents of the box were a deed of gift to him of certain real and personal estate therein specified and described. In the box were also found title deeds relating to an estate, M., not mentioned in the paper writing, and some other papers, but nothing answering the description of a deed of gift. After the testatrix's death there was found by the servant, in an outhouse, to which the testatrix and he alone had access, another paper writing, dated the day after the date of the former paper, and also signed by the testatrix, and addressed to the servant, to the effect that the title deeds of the real property mentioned in the former paper were to be found in a particular repository, to be handed over to him "free, and all expenses to be paid out of the bulk, and writings of M.":—Held, that these papers were of a testamentary character, and did not amount to a valid declaration of trust in favour of the servant. Id.

III. DECLARATION OF INTENTION COMJOINED WITH TRANSFER TO PROPOSED TRUSTEE.

3. A person, being at the time indebted, effects a policy of assurance on his own life. By deed he assigns the policy, and all benefit thereof, to a third party, by way of mortgage, and causes the mortgagee to write to him a letter, declaring that, after payment of the mortgage debt and interest, he held the surplus upon trust for M., a third party. The mortgagee then writes a letter to M., explaining this arrangement for her benefit, and inclosing the mortgagee's letter, declaring the trust of the surplus:—Held, that this would be prima facie a good trust for M.; but, semble, it would be void against creditors of the insured party whose debts were due at the time of the declaration of trust. Form of order. Re Magawley's Trust, 5 De G. & Sm. 1; 15 Jur. 1005.

4. A partner in a bank opened an account in one of the books of the firm, which was headed as follows: "Dr. Mrs. L. S. (the name of his wife), for the education of Bryan, Lavinia, Herman, and Robert S. (the names of his infant children), Cr.," and he caused an accountable receipt to be signed by his co-partner, on behalf of the firm, purporting to be for 800*l.*, received from his wife for the education of his children, and that sum to be placed to the credit of the account so opened, and his private account with the bank was debited with it:—Held, that the transaction was a complete and irrevocable declaration of trust in favour of the children. Stapleton v. Stapleton, 14 Sim. 186.

1. A person voluntarily gave his promissory note to trustees for his natural child, and deposited with them the title deeds for the purpose of carrying into effect his intention as to the promissory note:—Held, that a valid trust had been created. Arthur v. Clarkson, 35 Beav. 458; 14 W. R. 754.

2. On the 13th November 1857 C., being in his last illness, made payable to his brother G., whom he afterwards appointed one of his executors, a promissory note for 500*l.*, and at the same time stated that he was desirous of making some provision, otherwise than by will, for the plaintiff. C. on the 16th November made his will, and directed his executors to convert the residue of his estate into money. G., after the death of C., mentioned that he had left 500*l.* for the benefit of the plaintiff, and he made several quarterly payments to her in respect thereof, and took her receipts, and then discontinued the payments, on the ground that he was not in law or equity bound to make them:—Held, that G. was a trustee of the note for the plaintiff, and that in the administration of the estate to C. the plaintiff might have liberty to prove for the amount. Lloyd v. Chune, 6 Jur., N. S., 1365; 3 L. T., N. S., 366; 2 Giff. 441.

3. In 1839 B. placed in the W. Bank a sum of 40*l.*, of his own moneys, in the name of J. P., the defendant, stating at the same time to the bank clerk, "I intend this for B. P." (the plaintiff, who was his illegitimate son). The settlor afterwards bequeathed other property to B. P., and died, having retained the property in his own possession up to the time of his death, and received the interest on the deposit. J. P., the defendant, obtained possession of the bank receipt and of the money, which he retained for his own use, denying the title of the plaintiff:—Held, on a claim by B. P., that the trust was well declared by parol in 1839; and order made accordingly, with costs, against J. P. Petty v. Petty, 17 Jur. 646; 22 L. J., Ch., 1065.

4. If property is vested in a trustee under a voluntary instrument, the Court will operate on that property, and compel the trustee to execute the trust; but where property is not so vested, the Court will not act against the author of the trust. Walrond v. Walrond, 4 Jur., N. S., 1099.

5. M. was adopted by C., her deceased mother's first cousin, and lived with her twelve years. C. then wrote to T., informing him of her intention to invest 1,800*l.* on mortgage in his name, saying, "It is, after six months of my decease, dear M.'s property." The next day she instructed her solicitors, by letter, to prepare the mortgage, inclosing a cheque for the amount, on the counterfoil of which she wrote, "In trust for M." Twelve days after, she had an interview with T., of which she entered this memorandum in her diary, "T. came, and agreed to take charge of 1,800*l.* for dear M.":—Held, that these several documents, in the handwriting of C., combined with the relationship and adoption of M., constituted a complete and final declaration of trust in favour of M., which could not admit of any parol variation by T.'s present recollections of what passed at the interview. Re Cane, 36 L. J., Ch., 744; 17 L. T., N. S., 112.

6. B., in 1842, transferred to three persons a debenture, without any declaration of trust other than an expression in a letter written by him to his solicitor shortly before the transfer, in which the three persons were named as trustees, and the trusts of a proposed settlement of the debenture were stated to be "for my niece C. M. and her children":—Held, that a valid trust was declared by the letter in favour of C. M. for life, and afterwards of her children as joint tenants. Re Bellasis, 12 L. R., Eq., 218; 24 L. T., N. S., 466; 19 W. R. 699.

The transferees of the debenture were already trustees of a will, which contained limitations for the benefit not only of C. M. and her children, but of the issue of deceased children, and from contemporaneous entries in a solicitor's book it appeared that, after the date of the letter, B. said he had made up his mind to transfer to the same three persons, "without stating any trust or condition;" also that B. was advised to take a letter from them that they held the debenture upon the same trusts as the will; but no trace of any such letter appeared. The trustees paid the income to C. M. during her life, and upon her death transferred the fund into court. There was issue of deceased children of C. M.:—Held, that a trust for the issue of the deceased children had not been sufficiently declared. Id.

7. It is immaterial for the purpose of establishing a trust of personal property, whether declared orally or in writing; the only question is as to the evidence of its existence. The fact of a person having acted upon the faith of the verbal instructions given to him is immaterial, the real consideration being what the party creating the trust has himself done in the matter. Peckham v. Taylor, 6 L. T., N. S., 487.

A lady refused to make a will, but told D. that she wished to dispose of all her property in her lifetime in a manner, which she stated to him. She gave him some money to carry out her instructions, and executed a power of attorney for the sale by him of stock belonging to her. D. in her lifetime distributed a part of the money given to him; but she died intestate before the stock was sold. After her death other moneys came to the hands of D., and there was also money in the possession of P. belonging to the deceased. Upon a bill filed to obtain a declaration whether a valid trust had been created of the whole, or any, or what part of the intestate's property, or in the alternative for the administration of her estate, in accordance with the above principles:—Held, that there was a valid trust of so much of the property as she gave to D. in her lifetime; but not as to the rest. Id.

8. A., being about to leave this country, indorsed a promissory note due to B., and directed B. to recover the sum thereby secured and hold the same until A. should write for it; but in case A. should die before the amount was recovered, then to hold the amount in trust for M. It was subsequently arranged between A. and B. that B. should retain, out of the sum secured by the note, a debt due from A. to B. A. died before the note was paid to B.:—Held, that no irrevocable trust was created in favour of M. Maguire v. Dodd, 9 Ir. Ch. R. 452.

Held, also, that A.'s personal representative was entitled to recover at law, but not in equity, from B. the amount recovered by B., on foot of the note, subject to a deduction for the debt due by A. to B. Ib.

IV. ORDERS ADDRESSED BY CREDITOR TO HIS DEBTOR OR DEPOSITEE OF FUND.

1. Where, on a debt becoming payable, the creditor, by parol communication through a third person, desired the debtor, the defendant, to hold it in trust for the plaintiff, which he consented to do, and paid over a part, an injunction was granted to restrain the payment by the defendant to the administrator of the creditor in a suit for establishing the trust; sed quære, if sufficient to create a trust. M'Fadden v. Jenkins, 1 Hare 458; 11 L. J., N. S., Ch., 281; 6 Jur. 501. Affirmed on appeal, and trust, though voluntary, held binding on creditor's estate. S. C. 1 Ph. 153; 12 L. J., N. S., Ch., 146; 7 Jur. 27.

2. A creditor directed his debtor to transfer the debt in the debtor's books to the joint account of himself, the creditor, and his wife, stating that he wished her to have it after his death, and he cancelled the debtor's promissory note which he held for the amount of the debt, and took a new one in the joint names of himself and his wife. The wife survived:—Held, that there had been a trust created in her favour, and that she was entitled as survivor to the note. Gosling v. Gosling, 3 Drew. 335.

3. P., being indebted to J. in a sum of 300*l.*, to be repaid by instalments, drew up, but did not sign, a memorandum, which was signed by J., by which J. directed the instalments to be invested as therein mentioned, and the dividends to be paid, after the decease of J., to and among the children of P. M. and E. his wife; and when the youngest attained the age of twenty-one years, then the whole fund was to be divided among such children. If any child died before the youngest attained twenty-one years, his share was to go to the survivors in the same manner. This memorandum was never made known to the parties interested, but only to P. and J. Afterwards J. executed another memorandum, in effect revoking the direction in the first memorandum for investing the instalments, and directing payment of the instalments to herself:—Held, that the first instrument amounted to a full and complete declaration of trust, and was, therefore, not revocable. Paterson v. Murphy, 17 Jur. 298; 22 L. J., Ch., 882.

P., the trustee, had paid several instalments to the testatrix after the date of the second memorandum:—Held, that the cestui que trust under the first memorandum could not recover these payments in the present suit, which was a suit by P., the executor, for the administration of the estate of J. Ib.

4. A testator, who had lent 300*l.* to S. on his promissory note, payable on demand, directed him, after her death, to pay the interest to her sister for life, and afterwards to divide the principal among her sister's children, which S.

agreed to do. She died without having demanded payment of the note, which was found, uncanceled, among her papers at her death:—Held, that as she had not parted with her legal title to the money, the direction did not create a trust. Re Caplen, Bulbeck v. Silvester, 45 L. J., Ch., 280.

5. Where the testatrix, having by will given to the defendant a legacy of 100*l.*, afterwards gave a cheque on her bankers in favour of J. C. for 150*l.*, with verbal directions to apply so much of it as, with the legacy, would purchase a share in a railway company, which she wished to give instead of the legacy, but that she did not wish to alter her will; after the amount of the cheque was credited to J. C., and the account of the testatrix was thereby overdrawn to that amount; in a suit for the administration:—Held, that no trust was created by the transaction in favour of the legatee in the sum of 150*l.* Hughes v. Stubbs, 1 Hare 476; 6 Jur. 831.

6. Where A., having certain funds standing to his credit at his bankers', by letter directed them to carry some parts of such funds to the account of certain persons as trustees for his wife, and, after her decease, for his son, and other parts thereof to the account of certain persons as trustees for his son; and such sums were accordingly carried over by the bankers to the account of such persons in their books, and the dividends were from time to time carried to the same accounts, but the testator never communicated the facts to the trustees, and there was some evidence that the testator had directed the transfer under an impression that he should be able by that means to evade the legacy duty, and that he had shown an intention to exercise some acts of ownership over the funds: the Court held, that the appropriations were void, and that the testator might at any time have revoked them. Gaskell v. Gaskell, 2 Y. & J. 502.

7. Where an instrument set up as a declaration of trust, or a gift, shows that something more must be done, and is contemplated by the person said to have made the declaration of trust or gift to be done in order to perfect and complete it, the Court will not give effect to the instrument as either a declaration of trust or a gift, but will regard it as merely a promise of a future bounty, having no direct or immediate operation. Accordingly, where a mortgagee gave to the mortgagor a paper to the following effect, viz., "I now give to N. (the mortgagor) this gift, to become due at my death, unconnected with my will. I hereby request my executors to cancel the mortgage deed, bond, indentures, and all papers I may have chargeable on R. (the mortgaged estate) at my death, and give [the same] to N. or his daughters or daughter then living for their own use":—Held, that this instrument was a promise entirely de futuro, and was intended to operate as a mandate to the writer's executors, and therefore was not valid as either a declaration of trust or a gift, and consequently was not a bar to a suit for foreclosure by the mortgagee's executors. And so of another instrument to the following effect, viz., "You shall have all my former promises made good. You must present the gifts and papers to my executors. I again direct and promise that my executors shall comply with my former request, that is, to cancel all deeds and papers I may have chargeable on R. at my death, also make good all other gifts for your sister and yourself, the second mortgage deed for your own use. I request all the before-named gifts to be transferred to you and your sister," etc. Soales v. Maude, 3 W. R. 527; 1 Jur., N. S., 583; 6 De G. M. & G. 43; 1 Jur., N. S., 1147; 25 L. J., Ch., 533.

1. A., being legatee of a residue in trust for his daughters, mixed up with it 1,000*l.* of his own, and, upon an account being rendered to his daughters, directed his solicitors in writing to include such 1,000*l.* as part of the trust fund:—Held, that a trust was created as to the 1,000*l.* Thorpe v. Owen, 5 Beav. 224; 11 L. J., N. S., Ch., 129.

2. A testator who had bequeathed two legacies of 50*l.* and 200*l.*, afterwards, in order to avoid legacy duty, revoked the legacies, and verbally instructed F., who owed him 300*l.* secured by a deposit of title deeds, to pay similar sums to the legatees, adding that one of the donees was to "hold the writings." F. accepted the trust, but the deeds remained in the custody of the donor:—Held, notwithstanding the retention of the deeds by the donor, that a valid trust was effectually created in favour of the donee. Parker v. Stones, 38 L. J., Ch., 46; 19 L. T., N. S., 259.

See also EQUITABLE ASSIGNMENT.

V. VOLUNTARY COVENANTS OR PROMISES TO TRANSFER OR ASSIGN.

3. Mother gave bond to son conditioned to surrender copyhold to him, for which she was heiress:—Held, that she became trustee for son. Alison's Case, 9 Mod. 62.

4. A bond voluntarily given after marriage, to settle a jointure, decreed in specie, because under hand and seal, though voluntary. Beard v. Nuttall, 1 Vern. 427.

A voluntary bond by the husband after marriage, to settle a jointure, which he settles accordingly; he dies, and the jointress is evicted; the wife, as administratrix, shall retain as much as her dower fell short of the value of the jointure. Id.

5. A father having, by a voluntary settlement, conveyed certain freehold, and covenanted to surrender certain copyhold, estates to trustees, in trust for the benefit of his daughters, afterwards devised part of the same estates to his widow, who, after his death, was admitted to some of the copyholds. A suit having been instituted by the daughters to have the trusts of the settlement carried into effect, and to compel the widow to surrender the copyholds to which she had been admitted, a decree was made for carrying into effect the trusts, as far as they related to the freeholds, the plaintiff's title to them being complete; but as to the copyholds, the bill was dismissed with costs. Jefferys v. Jefferys, Cr. & Ph. 138.

6. Agreement parol by a feme whilst sole, that if she died without issue, she would leave her heir-at-law the land or 500*l.* Agreement decreed to be executed. Goilmere v. Battison, 1 Vern. 48. And see Maynard v. Mosely, 1 Ch. Rep. 233, where such an agreement, after an estate tail, was decreed.

7. A voluntary contract in favour of a mother and her children:—Held, to be executory only as related to the children, and executed as to the mother, and therefore enforced for the benefit of the mother absolutely. Burrows v. Greenwood, 4 Y. & Coll. 251.

By the contract for sale it was agreed that 600*l.* part of the purchase-money, should be paid after the vendor's death to such uses as she should direct for the benefit of J. B. and her children. By the conveyance that sum was made payable to the executors, etc., of the vendor, or as she should appoint by her will; she appointed it to J. B. absolutely:—Held, that the settlement, being executory only as to the children, could not be enforced, and that J. B. took absolutely. Id.

8. A father, who had four natural daughters and a legitimate son, entered into an agreement with his son, evidenced by certain deeds, whereby the father covenanted to transfer the sum of 20,000*l.* to a trustee, for the benefit of his four natural daughters, and the son covenanted to pay the debts of the father. The son paid some of the father's debts, and died before the covenant on the part of the father was performed, having by his will given the whole of his property to his father, who became the son's personal representative. A demurrer to a bill filed by one of the natural daughters, and praying to have the agreement executed against the estates of the father and son, was allowed. Colyear v. Mulgrave (Countess), 2 Keen 87; 5 L. J., N. S., Ch., 335.

9. A wife in extremis, and having just been delivered of a child, appointed by will real property to her husband in fee. After her death the husband gave a bond to trustees conditioned for securing 3,000*l.* to the infant; which bond recited, that he had, upon the execution of the will, given his wife an assurance that he would make provision for the child:—Held, that the 3,000*l.* was a lien on the estate. Exp. Atkins, Re London & Southampton Railway Act, 2 Y. & Coll. 536; 1 Jur. 332.

10. A trustee executed a settlement declaring trusts of 2,000*l.* belonging to the settlor (a married woman), which sum was thereby untruly recited to be in his hands, upon the faith of a promise by her to pay to him the sum out of her separate estate. The sum was never paid:—Held, that neither the trustee of the settlement, nor a volunteer under it, could enforce the promise. Marler v. Tommas, 17 L. R., Eq., 8; 43 L. J., Ch., 73.

11. A., having nine children, by his will gave all his property to one of them, who, at the funeral, said he would divide the property equally between his brothers and sisters and himself, and that the whole should be sold, that it might not be said he had taken any more than the others. He subsequently acted in respect of a portion of the property according to the intention thus expressed; and with the assent of the other children, and at a valuation approved by them, he became the purchaser of a house and premises, part of the estate:—Held, with regard to the property which remained undivided, that the expressions of the devisee were no more than a promise to give and devise it amongst the brothers and sisters, and that as such promise it was nudum pactum, and did not amount to a declaration of trust in their favour. Dipple v. Corles, 11 Hare 183.

1. Where a father, being the heir of a lunatic, who might be induced to make a disposition of his estate injurious to him, was in embarrassed circumstances, and incapable of bearing the expenses of suing out a commission, agreed, in consideration of his son's prosecuting it, that in the event of the lunacy being established, and the estate descending unto him, he would execute a settlement in favour of his son and issue, regard being had to the ages and relative situation of the parties, and to the benefits secured by the issuing of the commission, there was some, and not very inadequate consideration. Perse v. Perse, 7 Cl. & F. 279; West 110; 4 Jur. 358.

2. A covenant by a settlor to transfer, convey, and assure property (if any) which he might thereafter acquire, if of a certain value, does not amount either to an imperfect declaration of trust, or to an incomplete assignment of the property (if any) which afterwards came to be acquired, upon which a court of equity will operate. Wilkinson v. Wilkinson, 4 Jur., N. S., 47.

A., by a post-nuptial settlement, in consideration of natural love and affection, and for divers other good causes and considerations, covenanted to transfer, and convey, and assure all property to which he might thereafter become entitled "at any time or times, by gift, descent, succession, or otherwise, from or through his mother," if of a certain amount in value at any one time, to trustees upon the trusts of that settlement. At the date of the settlement he was entitled to interests in remainder, subject to his mother's life interest. Afterwards he became entitled in reversion to another fund, subject to a life interest given to his mother; and, lastly, his mother died, leaving him property by will.—Held, that none of all these funds were in equity affected by the trusts of the settlement by virtue of the covenant. Ib.

It is immaterial by what form of conveyancing, whether by assignment, declaration, etc., the equity of a fund be conveyed. Any of such modes, if everything be done that can be done, and if the intention be clear, will convey the equitable interest in the fund. But a covenant to convey the fund in a certain contingency will not, whatever contingency arises, be held to amount to a conveyance of the equitable right. Ib.

3. By a voluntary settlement the settlor assigned a mortgage, and purported to convey copyholds; he also covenanted for quiet enjoyment and for further assurance. He died without having surrendered the copyholds:—Held, that the Court would not render its assistance to compel the voluntary settlement to be perfected. Denning v. Ware, 22 Beav. 184.

It has long been settled that the trustees and cestuis que trustent under a voluntary settlement cannot compel the settlor to perform any further act than he has already done, to render such a settlement operative. Ib.

4. A. B. and C. D. were married at Malta. Shortly after their marriage a paper was sent out from England by the advisers of C. D., the wife, headed as "proposals for a settlement upon the intended marriage of A. B. and C. D.," and containing certain terms upon which

C. D.'s fortune was to be settled; amongst others, that if no child of the marriage, the property to be disposed of by C. D. by will; if no disposition by her will, to go to her next-of-kin. This paper was signed by A. B. and C. D., but nothing further done by way of settlement. Soon after the marriage C. D. died intestate, without having had a child:—Held, that A. B., who had taken out administration to C. D., and possessed himself of her property, in which was included a reversionary interest, was entitled to it for his own benefit, no declaration of trust in favour of the next-of-kin having been created by this agreement to execute a future instrument. Pownall v. Anderson, 4 W. R. 407.

5. Where a testator in advanced years and ill-health induced his niece to reside with him as his housekeeper on the verbal representation that he would leave her property by his will, which he accordingly caused to be prepared and executed, but subsequently by a codicil revoked, the Court directed the trusts of the will to be performed. Loffus v. Man, 3 Giff. 592; 82 L. J., Ch., 49; 8 Jur., N. S., 607; 6 L. T., N. S., 346; 19 W. R. 513.

A gift made by a revocable instrument in pursuance of a verbal representation, whereby the donee is influenced, and on the faith of which he confers a benefit on the donor, becomes irrevocable. Ib.

6. An intestate induced a woman to serve him as his housekeeper without wages for many years, and to give up other prospects of establishment in life by a verbal promise to make a will leaving her a life estate in land, and afterwards signed a will, not duly attested, by which he left her the life estate:—Held, that there was no contract, and that even if there had been, and although the woman had wholly performed her part by serving till the intestate's death without wages, yet her service was not unequivocally and in its own nature referable to any contract, and was not such a part performance as, to take the case out of the operation of the Statute of Frauds, s. 4; and that she could not maintain an action against the heir for a declaration that she was entitled to a life estate in the land. Loffus v. Man (3 Giff. 592) disapproved. Maddison v. Alderson, 8 L. R., App. Cas., 467; 52 L. J., Q. B., 737; 49 L. T. 303; 31 W. R. 820. Affirming S. B. sub. nom. Alderson v. Maddison, 7 L. R., Q. B. D., 174; 50 L. J., Q. B., 466; 45 L. T. 334; 29 W. R. 556.

7. By a post-nuptial settlement executed in 1814, after reciting that S., the husband, had before marriage agreed to settle 1,000*l.*, and had paid that sum to G.; G. covenanted that he would stand possessed of the money upon trust with the approbation of S., to invest it in the names of S. and G., and trusts were declared of the fund for the benefit of the husband and wife successively for life, with remainder to the children of the marriage. By the same deed S. covenanted with G. to pay to him a further sum of 1,000*l.*, to be held upon the same trusts as the first-mentioned 1,000*l.* Neither of the two sons was, in fact, ever paid. S. survived his wife, and died in 1868. In a suit instituted for the administration of the estate of S., the children of the marriage claimed to rank as creditors for both sums:—Held, that, as to the first-mentioned sum, S. had constituted himself a trustee of the settlement, and that his estate was liable for the amount; but that the claim to the other sum rested upon a mere legal obligation which was barred by the Statute of Limitations. Stone v. Stone, 39 L. J., Ch., 196; 5 L. R., Ch., 74; 22 L. T., N. S., 182.

1. A testator bequeathed 2,000*l.* on certain trusts, and he empowered his executor, who was also his residuary legatee, to retain the amount in his hands uninvested, he paying interest thereon. After his death, the executor being satisfied that the testator intended to bequeath 3,000*l.* and not 2,000*l.*, promised to make it up to 3,000*l.*; he made no investment, but continued to pay interest on the 3,000*l.* to his death:—Held, that there was a complete voluntary trust as to the additional 1,000*l.* which the Court would enforce. Gee v. Liddell, 35 Beav. 621.

VI. ASSIGNMENT OR SETTLEMENT BY LEGAL OWNER BY DEED.

2. Voluntary deeds good against representatives, if they amount to a complete conveyance or transfer. Att.-Gen. v. Whorwood, 1 Ves. 535.

3. The Court, in order to give effect to voluntary settlements, requires, where the settlor is the legal owner, everything to have been done which is requisite to transfer the legal ownership; and where he is the equitable owner, clear and distinct evidence of a declaration of trust in favour of the donee. Bentley v. Mackay, 15 Beav. 12.

4. A father having, by a voluntary settlement, conveyed certain freehold, and covenanted to surrender certain copyhold, estates to trustees, in trust for the benefit of his daughters, afterwards devised part of the same estates to his widow, who, after his death, was admitted to some of the copyholds. A suit having been instituted by the daughters to have the trusts of the settlement carried into effect, and to compel the widow to surrender the copyholds to which she had been admitted, a decree was made for carrying into effect the trusts, as far as they related to the freeholds, the plaintiff's title to them being complete; but as to the copyholds, the bill was dismissed with costs. Jefferys v. Jefferys, Cr. & Ph. 138.

5. H., by a voluntary settlement of personality, assigned to trustees certain particulars of property, described in the schedule to the deed, upon the trusts therein mentioned. He then covenanted to perfect all assignments and transfers, and do all necessary acts where they had not been done; and afterwards it was declared, that until such full and complete transfer and vesting could be effected, he should stand possessed thereof upon the trusts, etc., thereinbefore declared. The particulars of the schedule comprised: first, stock standing in the testator's own name, and which had not been transferred; secondly, a sum of 29,400*l.* standing in the name of other trustees, under an old settlement, to the beneficial interest in which the testator was solely entitled; thirdly, certain securities, principally foreign, which passed by delivery from hand to hand, without any written transfer; fourthly, railway shares and debentures, etc., requiring a particular transfer by deed; and fifthly, mortgage securities, and the moneys secured thereon, and a beneficial lease of a mansion. The bonds, shares, title deeds, etc., representing the particulars under the third, fourth, and fifth of these heads had been, shortly before the execution of the settlement, delivered to one of the persons named trustees of the settlement. The settlor died before anything more was done:—Held, that all the particulars passed by the deed, and therefore none of them formed any part of his personal estate at the time of his decease. Donaldson v. Donaldson, 1 Jur., N. S., 10; 2 W. R. 601.

6. P., in April 1837, bequeathed the residue of his estate to trustees, to sell and convert the same, and to stand possessed thereof in trust for his daughters C., J., and E., in equal shares, as tenants in common, for their sole and separate use. On the 31st July following P. executed an indenture, whereby he assigned to trustees all his estates, except such part as had been devised, stock standing in his name, and cash in the hands of bankers, upon trust, after his decease, to settle the same for the benefit of his daughters, C., J., and E., during their lives, in equal shares, for their separate use, and without power of anticipation; and after the decease of each, for the benefit of her children, but subject to trusts in the nature of cross remainder between C., J., and E., and their respective child or children, in case they or either of them should die without leaving any child who should attain a vested interest. P. died on the 12th August 1837, at which time the consols were standing in his name, and the balance in the hands of the bankers amounted to more than the sum mentioned by him. On petition presented by E., praying that it might be declared that the consols and cash were not validly settled by the deed of 1837:—Held, that the trusts of the voluntary settlement were binding upon the sums in question. Airey v. Hall, 2 Jur., N. S., 658; 3 Sm. & G. 315; 4 W. R. 587.

7. Where, in a voluntary deed containing a clear declaration of trust of real estate, and professing to operate by appointment to trustees in exercise of a power, the limitation and conveyance were to the trustees, their executors, administrators, and assigns, omitting the word "heirs":—Held, that the real estate was impressed with the trust, and the court declared the heir-at-law of the settlor a trustee for the cestui que trust. Dilrom v. Bone, 3 Giff. 538; 8 Jur., N. S., 276; 10 W. R. 437; 6 L. T., N. S., 71; 31 L. J., Ch., 417.

8. A voluntary deed, purporting to assign mortgage moneys, notes of hand, and household effects upon certain trusts, with a power of attorney to trustees:—Held, to be valid. Parnell v. Hingston, 3 Sm. & G. 337.

Aliter, in cases where there is no actual assignment by deed, and no sufficient declaration of trust. Id.

H., by indenture of settlement in 1844, assigned to his brother W. mortgages, debts, notes, moneys, securities for money, benefit and advantage of a contract for the purchase of an estate, together with the balance of the purchase money, a sum in the bank, household goods, and all other his goods, chattels, and effects, upon trust to permit J. H. to receive the interest thereof for his own use during his life; and after his death, and within six months, to pay P. and other persons mentioned therein certain sums of money; and subject thereto, the mortgages, debts, notes, moneys, securities for money, household furniture, personal estate, and effects were for the use and benefit of W. The indenture, which contained a power of attorney to enable W. to receive payment of the mortgage and other debts, was upon its execution delivered to W., and had ever since remained in his possession, except for a few weeks. All the mortgage and other debts, except one debt and one mortgage debt secured upon estate A., were paid to and received by W. or by H., and the equity of redemption of estate A. was purchased and paid for by H. out of the settled moneys. The purchase of estate W. was completed, and conveyed to H., and paid for out of the settled moneys. He by his will, dated in 1862, after giving legacies, bequeathed all his personal property, money, securities for money, and effects, the estate purchased subsequent to the date of the indenture and paid for out of the settled moneys, and all his real and personal estate, unto trustees, to uses and trusts in which P. took no interest. H. died in July 1864. On bill filed by P. alone, for the purpose of having the trusts of the indenture performed:—Held, that it was unnecessary to have before the Court the other parties interested in the property; that as to the benefit of the contract for the purchase of the real estate, there being no trusts declared, it resulted in favour of the settlor, and could not be made subject to P.'s demand; but that as to all the rest, the trusts declared were clear and distinct, and there was sufficient authority to show that the deed was a valid declaration of trust to bind the property in the hands of the settlor, and P. was therefore entitled to a decree. 8 C. 2 Jur., N. S., 854.

1. A. was entitled to 5,000*l.* charged on a freehold. It was secured by the legal estate vested in her, but no one was personally liable to pay it. A. executed a voluntary settlement, by which she assigned the money to trustees, and gave them a power of attorney to recover it; but she retained the legal estate:—Held, that as the money could only be recovered upon a re-conveyance of the legal estate to the owner which the trustees were unable to procure, the voluntary settlement was incomplete, and could not be enforced against the settlor, or her estate. Woodford v. Charnley, 28 Beav. 96.

2. Where an instrument is in form a complete and an immediate assignment, and of such a nature as to give the assignee a right as between him and assignor to take or receive the property comprised in it presently, it will, although voluntary, be supported in equity, and considered as a perfect declaration of trust of such of the property as was not assignable at law. Richardson v. Richardson, 36 L. J., Ch., 653; 3 L. R., Eq., 686; 15 W. R. 690.

E., by a voluntary deed, in 1858, assigned certain specific property, and "all other the personal estate, whatsoever and wheresoever, of her, E., to R. absolutely"; and appointed him, his executors, administrators, and assigns her attorney and attorneys in her name, but for the sole benefit of R., to sue for and recover the assigned premises, and to do and execute all such acts and deeds as should be necessary for deriving the full benefit of the assignment. At the date of the assignment, E. was possessed of certain promissory notes, given to her to secure the repayment of advances made by her. These were not specifically mentioned in the deed. Upon R.'s death, in 1864, these notes were found in his possession, but not indorsed to him. There was no evidence as to any delivery of the notes by E. to R.:—Held, that the property in the notes passed by the deed to R., on the principle that the deed of assignment operated as a complete declaration of trust by E. of all her property in favour of R. Id.

3. M. executed a voluntary deed purporting to assign fifty of his shares in a bank to L., to be held by him upon certain trusts for the benefit of the plaintiffs. The shares were transferable only by an entry in the books of the bank; but no such transfer was ever made. L. held at the time a general power of attorney authorising him to transfer M.'s shares, and M., after the execution of the settlement, gave him a further power of attorney, authorising him to receive the dividends on his shares in the bank. M. lived three years after the execution of the deed, during which period the dividends on the shares were received by L., and remitted by him to the plaintiffs, sometimes directly, and sometimes through M.:—Held, that it was not the intention of the settlor to constitute himself a trustee of the shares, but to vest the trust in L.; there was no valid trust of the shares created in the settlor. Milroy v. Lord, 4 De G. F. & J. 264; 8 Jur., N. S., 806; 31 L. J., Ch., 798; 7 L. T., N. S., 178.

Held, also, that no valid trust of the shares was created in L.; for although he held a power of attorney under which he might have vested the shares in himself, he did not do so, and was not bound to do so without directions from the settlor, since he held the power only as agent for the settlor, and that, therefore, the disposition of the shares failed, as being an imperfect voluntary gift. Id.

4. A settlement whereby lands are assured to a trustee to the use of the settlor for life, and afterwards in trust for volunteers, and which is not communicated to the trustee until after the settlor's death, is valid, notwithstanding the disclaimer of the trustee. A power to appoint new trustees contained in the indenture is therefore exercisable. Jones v. Jones, 23 W. R. 1.

5. A., being seised in fee, executed a deed-poll, whereby he voluntarily granted it to his wife as her sole and absolute property for ever:—Held, that this was an imperfect voluntary gift, and that the relation of trustee and cestui que trust had not thereby been created, and that a court of equity would not interfere to assist either party. Price v. Price, 14 Beav. 598; 21 L. J., N. S., Ch., 53. Affirmed 1 De G. M. & G. 308.

6. By a deed-poll, a husband, reciting his desire to settle leasehold property on his wife, purported to "settle, assign, transfer, and set over" the same to his wife as though a single woman, her executors, administrators, and assigns. The wife entered immediately, and received the rents until the husband's death. There was a memorandum in his writing stating the particulars of the property belonging to his wife, and the income to which she was entitled, in which the leaseholds were enumerated:—Held, that though the attempted assignment from husband to wife was void, he had constituted himself a trustee of the property for his wife. Baddeley v. Baddeley, 38 L. T., N. S., 906; 9 L. R., Ch. D., 113; 26 W. R. 850.

1. A husband, by three letters written and signed by him and handed to his wife, gave her furniture and other articles for her sole and absolute use. He afterwards made his will, bequeathing certain legacies and making other dispositions of his property, and giving the residue of it to trustees in trust for his wife for life with remainder to six nieces absolutely. The furniture and other articles were at the time of the husband's death in the house which had been occupied by him and his wife, and the whole had been used by them in the ordinary way:—Held, that there was no declaration of trust, but that the furniture, etc., formed part of the husband's estate. Baddeley v. Baddeley (9 L. R., Ch. D., 113) and Fox v. Hawks (13 L. R., Ch. D., 822) observed upon, and Milroy v. Lord (4 D. F. & J. 264) followed. Re Breton's Estate, Breton v. Woolloen, 17 L. R., Ch. D., 416; 50 L. J., Ch., 369; 44 L. T. 337; 29 W. R. 777.

VII. ASSIGNMENT OR SETTLEMENT OF EQUITABLE INTEREST BY BENEFICIAL OWNER.

2. A person, who was entitled to a certain stock standing in the names of two trustees, gave instructions to his attorney to prepare a settlement of it for the benefit of A., B., and C., and to procure from the trustees a transfer for the purposes of settlement. The settlement was prepared, and a power of attorney for the transfer of the stock executed by both the trustees, but the intended settlor died without having seen the settlement, and before the stock was actually transferred:—Held, that no trust of the stock was constituted for A., B., and C. Cunningham v. Plunkett, 2 Y. & Coll. C. C. 245.

3. A direction given by deed by a cestui que trust to her trustee to pay a certain portion of the interest of the trust fund to A., with a covenant to indemnify the trustee for such payment:—Held, to constitute an irrevocable trust, which was not affected by the fund being brought into court. Ryecroft v. Christy, 3 Beav. 238; 4 Jur. 599.

4. M., who, in the event of surviving her daughter, and of that daughter dying without issue, would, as next-of-kin, be entitled to a fund which was vested in trustees, executed a voluntary assignment of her interest in the fund to the husband of the daughter, and declared the trusts of the assignment as to part for the benefit of M. herself, and as to another part for the daughter's husband absolutely. No notice of the assignment was given to the trustees. The daughter afterwards died without issue, and the husband filed his bill against the trustees and M. to compel performance of the trust:—Held, that the voluntary assignment did not create a trust which a court of equity would enforce, and the bill was dismissed. Meek v. Kettlewell, 1 Hare 464; 11 L. J., N. S., Ch., 293; 6 Jur. 550. Affirmed 1 Ph. 342; 13 L. J., N. S., Ch., 28; 7 Jur. 1120.

5. Semble, where the cestui que trustent convey their beneficial interest in a portion of the property to a purchaser, the purchaser may file a bill against the trustee for a conveyance of the legal estate, without making the cestui que trustent, who sold to him, parties to the suit. Goodson v. Ellison, 3 Russ. 583.

6. A., having vested interest in a portion of a trust fund subject to the life of B. therein, executes a voluntary deed of assignment of her expectant interest in reversion to C., and gives notice to D., the trustee of the fund:—Held, that although the assignment of this reversionary interest was purely voluntary, the instrument operated as an actual assignment transferring the equitable right from A. to C., and not as a mere agreement or executory instrument. Voyle v. Hughes, 2 W. R. 143; 2 Sm. & G. 18; 23 L. J., Ch., 238; 18 Jur. 341; 2 Eq. Rep. 42.

7. A., by a voluntary settlement, assigned land, held by him under an agreement for a building lease, to trustees, upon trust for himself for life, with remainder for his children and grandchildren. Shortly afterwards A. obtained a lease of the land, but he did not assign the legal estate to the trustees. There was no evidence that A. could have obtained the lease at the time when he executed the settlement:—Held, that the settlement was complete, and that the cestui que trustent were entitled to have it enforced against a person in possession of the legal estate, who derived his title through A.'s will. Gilbert v. Overton, 4 N. R. 420; 2 Hem. & M. 110; 10 Jur., N. S., 721; 33 L. J., Ch., 683; 12 W. R. 1141; 10 L. T., N. S., 900.

8. A trustee cannot prevent the cestui que trust from making an effectual gift of his interest in the trust property, or any part of it. Kechewich v. Manning, 1 De G. M. & G. 176; 21 L. J., N. S., Ch., 577; 16 Jur. 625.

Whatever rule there may be against volunteers, it does not apply to the case of a cestui que trust claiming against his trustee, for that which is considered a trust may be created gratuitously, and the absence of consideration for its creation is in general immaterial. Id.

9. On a voluntary assignment of an equitable reversion, there being no power in the assignor to deal with the legal interest, notice to the trustees is not necessary to the validity of the assignment. An unmarried woman, the owner, subject to a settlement, of a reversionary equitable interest in a sum of stock, assigned it by deed to volunteers. No one except her solicitor, who was also the solicitor to the trustees of the settlement, was informed of the assignment. She kept the deed in her possession, and afterwards destroyed it, and subsequently dealt with the fund by will:—Held, that the assignees were entitled to the fund as against the beneficiaries under the will. Re Way's Trusts, 5 N. R. 67.

10. The Court, in order to give effect to voluntary settlements, requires, where the settlor is the legal owner, everything to have been done which is requisite to transfer the legal ownership; and where he is the equitable owner, clear and distinct evidence of a declaration of trust in favour of the donee. Bentley v. Mackay, 15 Beav. 12.

A father being entitled, during the life of his son, to the dividends on funds standing in the names of himself and three other trustees, directed two of the trustees to pay over the dividends for the future to his son. They acted on the direction, and the testator afterwards recognised the gift:—Held, that there was a valid and effectual voluntary settlement, which this Court would give effect to. Ib.

1. A., by voluntary deed, two days before his death, grants, assigns, and transfers to trustees all his personal property not effectually vested in them, to be held upon certain trusts, with a declaration by A. that, in the meantime and until the trust premises should be duly transferred to, and vested in, the trustees, he would thenceforth stand possessed of and interested in such property upon the trusts already declared. Part of the property was vested in the trustees of A.'s marriage settlement, in trust for him absolutely. As to this portion no transfer was made previous to A.'s death, and no notice had been given to the trustees in whom it was vested:—Held, that the assignment was effectual to pass the property, there having been a complete declaration of trust, which the Court would execute in favour of the donees. Donaldson v. Donaldson, 2 W. R. 691; 1 Jur., N. S., 10.

2. If the beneficial owner of stock standing in the name of trustees, assign it in favour of a volunteer, and notice is given to the trustees, who act upon it, equity will enforce the performance of the trust in favour of the volunteer. Bridge v. Bridge, 16 Beav. 315; 16 Jur. 1031; 1 W. R. 4; 22 L. J., Ch., 189.

Voluntary settlement of an equitable interest in real estate held ineffectual, the legal estate not having passed to the trustees thereof. Ib.

The plaintiff being entitled to shares in companies, foreign bonds, consols, cash, and real estate, which were vested in the trustees of his uncle's will, executed a voluntary deed, whereby he granted the realty to A. and B. to the use of himself and A. and B., upon trust to sell, and he directed that the produce and the bonds, etc., should thenceforth be considered vested in him and A. and B. on certain trusts for volunteers:—Held, that the deed was valid as to the shares and bonds, which had been transferred to the plaintiff and A. and B., but ineffectual as to foreign bonds, stock, and cash, of which there had been no transfer, and no acceptance of the trust by the trustees of the uncle's will, in whom they were vested, and ineffectual also as to the realty, the legal estate not having passed. Ib.

VIII. EVIDENCE AND BURDEN OF PROOF.

3. Parol evidence not admissible to raise an equity, that a pension granted by the Crown to the defendant was in trust for the plaintiff, against the oath of the defendant in his answer. Fordyce v. Willis, 3 Bro. C. C. 577.

4. Parol evidence admissible of declaration of devisee, to prove her only a trustee. Strode v. Winchester, Dick. 897.

5. Where a person sets up a case of declaration of trust, the onus probandi is upon him, and the evidence must be clear and distinct; the Court must determine according to the evidence on both sides, having special regard to the consideration on whom the burden of proof lies. Roberts v. Roberts, 12 Jur., N. S., 971; 11 Jur., N. S., 992; 14 W. R. 123; 13 L. T., N. S., 492.

6. T., having certain gas shares, wished to give them to his sister, but was alleged to have abstained from making a will, because his father promised that she should have them. T. died, and the father, as his administrator, possessed the shares and died, having bequeathed them to his second wife, who refused to hand them over to the daughter and her husband. They filed a bill, nineteen years after she came of age, alleging a trust and constant recognition by the father of the daughter's right, but the allegation rested on their evidence alone, and the bill was dismissed with costs. Poole v. Framell, 13 W. R. 199.

7. An illiterate woman having wrongfully possessed herself of bonds belonging to the estate of a testator, whose executor the plaintiff was, was ordered to repay the proceeds of the sale of the bonds, although there was much doubt as to the equitable jurisdiction of the Court in such a case. Inglis v. Pasco, 27 L. T., N. S., 818.

It was alleged by the defendant that the testator, by whom she had several illegitimate children, had shown her an envelope containing the bonds and bearing an indorsement to the effect that they were to be delivered to her as the property of her and her children. The envelope was lost, and the testator had always retained possession of the bonds:—Held, that there was some foundation of truth in the story of the plaintiff, though uncorroborated, and that such an indorsement would have created a trust for her and her children, which, though a slight equity, might give the Court jurisdiction. Ib.

IX. OTHER CASES.

8. Grandmother buys an annuity in 14l. per cents. for 100l., in the grandchild's name; child's father gives the grandmother a bond to repay the 100l. if the child dies before the grandmother, who receives the income and keeps the tally; the grandchild making no claim; this no trust for the grandchild. Lloyd v. Read, 1 P. W. 607.

9. A. B., after depositing in his own name in a savings' bank to the full extent allowed, made further deposits to another account in the name of himself and sister, but nominally as trustee for her. By the terms of the Act of Parliament he retained a control over the fund:—Held, that the sister was not entitled, the Court thinking that the object was to evade the Act, and not to create a trust in favour of the sister. Field v. Lonsdale, 13 Beav. 78; 19 L. J., N. S., Ch., 560; 14 Jur. 995.

10. A. devised his real estate to trustees to the use of his wife for life, with remainder to his son for life, with remainders over. A. afterwards gave the H. estate to his son, and signed a memorandum as follows: "H., together with my other freehold estates, are left in my will to my wife; but it is her wish, and

I hereby join in presenting the same to our son for the purpose of furnishing him with a dwelling-house." The son took possession of the H. estate, and with the approbation of his father expended money on the erection of a building-house thereon. Upon his death:—Held, that the son was entitled to have a conveyance to himself of the fee simple of the H. estate. Dillwyn v. Llewellyn, 31 L. J., Ch., 658.

1. The sum of 2,000*l.* was, by the direction of H. O., carried by her bankers to an account, in the joint names of herself, as trustee for the plaintiffs, and the plaintiffs; the bankers gave a promissory note for the amount, payable in fourteen days, with interest at 2½ per cent., to H. O., trustee for the persons therein named. After the death of H. O., her executors received from the bankers the sum secured by the promissory note:—Held, that this amounted to a complete declaration of trust, and that executor was a trustee for plaintiff, in whose favour trust was declared. Wheatley v. Purrr, 1 Keen, 551; 6 L. J., N. S., Ch., 195; 1 Jur. 133. See Hornby v. Hunter, 1 Russ. 89.

2. A., having lent B. 1,000*l.*, without taking any security for it, states to C. and his family that the money had been held by him (A.) in trust for C. Afterwards B. becoming embarrassed in his circumstances, and unlikely to repay the money, A., at the urgent solicitations of C., gives the latter his promissory note for the amount. Subsequently B. dies insolvent, and without having repaid the money. Then A. dies. In a suit for the administration of A.'s assets (there being no evidence to rebut the trust):—Held, that C. may prove the note against A.'s estate as a valuable security. Burkitt v. Ransom, 2 Colly. 395; 15 L. J., N. S., Ch., 174; 10 Jur. 193.

3. A testatrix gave to A. and B., in trust for the benefit of C., her sister, a sum of 2,000*l.* 3*l.* per cent. consols. She afterwards expressed to B., whom she also appointed her executrix, an intention that C. should have a further sum of 2,000*l.* consols, but she did not alter her will. A. died in her lifetime; after her death B., the surviving trustee and executrix, sold 2,000*l.* consols, and invested the produce in her name in the 3*l.* per cent. reduced, and shortly afterwards she invested a further sum of 2,000*l.* 3*l.* per cent. reduced in her name; she was proved to have declared frequently her intention of carrying out the testatrix's intention:—Held, that the second sum of stock was duly impressed with a trust in favour of C. Gray v. Gray, 2 Sim., N. S., 273; 21 L. J., Ch., 745.

4. A. lent B. 100*l.* in October 1843, on which occasion B. wrote and signed the following document: "Received of A. for the use of C. 100*l.*, to be paid to her at A.'s death, but the interest, at 4*l.* per cent., to be paid to A." Underneath was written, "I approve the above," which was signed by A. This document was given to C. The money was not paid to A. in her lifetime. In June 1845 A. died:—Held, that B. was a trustee for C. of 100*l.* at the death of A. Moore v. Darton, 20 L. J., N. S., Ch., 626; 4 De G. & Sm. 517.

5. A bond debt being assigned to trustees on trust for such persons as A., a feme covert, should appoint, and, in default, for her separate use, she appointed it to a creditor of her husband, to secure an existing debt. No other consideration appeared on the face of the deed:—Held, that this was an "executed trust" in favour of the creditor, which the Court would effectuate, notwithstanding the apparent want of consideration. Collinson v. Patrick, 2 Keen 123; 7 L. J., N. S., Ch., 83.

6. B. granted to six persons annuities, payable out of his life interest in an estate. He then executed a deed, called a receivership deed, to which the six annuitants and A. and B. were parties, by which he appointed A. and B. receivers of the rents; and it was declared that they should hold the rents in trust to pay the annuities, and then to pay the surplus to B. or his assigns. The receivers accepted the trust. By another deed B. conveyed his life estate to a trustee on trust for securing the six annuities, and subject thereto in trust for himself. He afterwards granted annuities to three other persons, and by a deed called a deed of direction, to which the three annuitants were parties, he directed the receivers and the trustee to pay the three annuitants out of the rents. Notice of this deed was immediately served on the receivers and the trustee:—Held, that the deed of direction made the receivers and the trustee express trustees for the three annuitants, subject to the rights of the six annuitants. Knight v. Bowyer, 2 De G. & J. 421; 3 Jur., N. S., 968; 26 L. J., Ch., 796.

7. A. B. voluntarily assigned to trustees bonds and promissory notes amounting to 600*l.*, in trust for himself and his wife and children, and he handed over the securities. The trustee gave no notice to the debtors. A. B. received 200*l.*, part of the 600*l.* (the securities for which had been returned to him), and the remainder was lost by the insolvency of the debtors. A. B. invested the 200*l.* with other moneys of his own on freeholds, and by writing acknowledged the 200*l.* to be trust property. He afterwards deposited the title deeds with the trustees as a security for the whole 600*l.*:—Held, that the equitable mortgage was valid to the extent of 200*l.*, but no further. James v. Bydder, 4 Beav. 600; 5 Jur. 1076.

8. A. and B., father and son, executed deeds for the settlement of some of their family estates, and for payment of the debts of A. Estates were conveyed to trustees, with a power to sell, on the consent in writing of A. and B., or the survivor, and to apply the produce in payment of debts therein specified. A. was indebted to D., as trustee for an infirmity, and A. and B. had given joint and separate warrants of attorney to secure the debt. Separate judgments had been entered up against A. and B. The amount of the sums thus due was stated in the deed. D. had some legal interest in the estates themselves; he was a party to the deed, and executed it:—Held, that this deed created a trust in favour of the infirmity of which it was a trustee. Montefiore v. Browne, 7 H. L. Ca. 241.

9. A lease was granted to W., who afterwards committed an act of bankruptcy, and then executed a deed, stating that his name had been used in the lease in trust for R., and declaring a trust accordingly; a bill was filed on behalf of the creditors of W. under the commission, claiming the lease as part of his estate; and the Court directed an issue to try whether W.'s name was used in the lease as a trustee for R.:—Held, that the issue was properly directed. The jury having found a verdict in the affirmative:—Held, that the declaration of trust was valid, though executed after bankruptcy, and that the lease did not pass to W.'s assignees. Gardner v. Rome, 5 Russ. 258; 7 L. J., Ch., 2. Affirming 2 Sim. & S. 346; 3 L. J., Ch., 220.

1. In 1858, on the marriage of A., the eldest son of F., it was agreed by the marriage articles, to which A. and F. were parties, that certain lands, and all the stock, crops, etc., thereon, should be held by F. and A. until out of the profits they should have "suitably provided" for certain younger children of F. After the death of F., one of the children instituted a suit against A. and the executor of F. to have the trust carried into execution:—Held, that the suit was maintainable; that the term "suitably provided for" was not too uncertain to be given effect to by the Court, and that performance of the agreement should be enforced. Brenan v. Brennan, 2 Ir. R., Eq., 266.

2. W., landlord to P., having the power to distrain for rent in arrear, and having distrained for part, and being a creditor of P. for money lent, as well as for rent in arrear, upon P.'s representing to him that he is also indebted to G. to the amount of about 900*l.*, for which he is in fear of arrest, and about to leave the country, undertakes that, if P. will give up to him the farm and execute an assignment of all his property, he will pay G.'s debt in the first instance out of the proceeds, and apply the residue in satisfaction of his own demand, and pay the surplus (if any) to P., who executes a bill of sale to W. accordingly on the faith of such undertaking. Upon the bill of G. and P., this agreement was enforced against W. to the extent of 900*l.*, the alleged amount of G.'s debt, but no further, the actual debt having proved to exceed that amount; and not prevented from having effect, either by the circumstance that P.'s property fell short of the estimated amount, or of P.'s being at the time indebted to other persons besides G. and W., which formed no part of the consideration for the agreement, although noticed in W.'s undertaking as having been represented otherwise. The engagement to pay G. in the first instance not being made directly to G., but through the medium of P., by whom also the consideration was furnished, P. was held, in a court of equity, to be a trustee for G. But, quære, if the plaintiffs could recover at law upon such agreement. Gregory v. Williams, 3 Meriv. 582.

3. The plaintiff, being entitled to an annuity of 300*l.* charged upon plantations in the West Indies belonging to K., entered (as agent for K.) into an agreement with D., by which D., in consideration of having the produce consigned to him until his advances were satisfied, was to ship supplies to the plantations, and honour bills drawn upon him (D.) by K. for the expenses of management, and also to pay the plaintiffs annuity. The consignments were made, and D. paid the plaintiffs annuity for one year, and then discontinued the payment, although he received subsequent consignments. The bill prayed that D. might be ordered to pay the annuity so long as he continued to receive the consignments:—Held, on demurrer, that without deciding whether the plaintiff could, with reference to the decision in the case of Garrard v. Lauderdale (Lord), sustain a suit to enforce the agreement as against D., D. could not, after the payment of the annuity which he made under the contract, withhold from the plaintiff the benefit of the contract for the further payment of the annuity. Kirnan v. Daniel, 5 Hare 493; 16 L. J., N. S., Ch., 191; 11 Jur. 235.

4. An agreement recited that a sum of money, alleged by A. to be due to him from the plaintiff, was deposited in the Bank of England in the joint names of A. and B., on behalf of the plaintiff, and that A. agreed to forthwith commence and duly and diligently prosecute an action for the recovery of the money; and it was declared that the money was held in trust for the plaintiff in case no such action should be brought within one month, or in case the same should be brought within one month, but should not be duly and diligently prosecuted with effect. An action was brought and tried. Subsequently a rule was obtained, directing a case to be stated for the opinion of the Court; but the proceedings were, as alleged, not duly and diligently prosecuted by A. The plaintiff prayed that it might be directed that the money deposited in the bank should be paid to him. A. demurred to the bill for want of equity, and submitted that until the result of the action was known, the plaintiff was not a cestui que trust; but the demurrer was overruled. Portugal (King of) v. Russell, 7 Jur., N. S., 1143; 31 L. J., Ch., 34; 10 W. R. 36; 5 L. T., N. S., 277.

5. Where a son had in his possession moneys belonging to his mother, and she, in her last illness, drew an order upon the son in favour of his wife and retained it in her custody, but subsequently handed it to him and directed him to invest the amount for the benefit of his wife and children, and the son, after the mother's death, made the investment in the joint names of himself and his wife:—Held, that in consequence of the uncertainty of the objects of bounty, neither a complete gift had been made nor a valid declaration of trust created. Roberts v. Roberts, 11 Jur., N. S., 992; 14 W. R. 123; 13 L. T., N. S., 492; 12 Jur., N. S., 971.

6. A testator by his will gave his property in a certain newspaper in trust, out of the residue of the profits thereof to pay an annuity to his daughter for life. By a deed, to which the daughter was not a party, made upon the introduction of a new partner, it was agreed that a certain proportion of the profits should be annually set apart with a view to forming a capital fund of 1,000*l.* for the purpose of answering the said annuity, whereby the partnership property would be cleared of the same; and certain sums were so set apart accordingly:—Held, that the relationship of trustee and cestui que trust was created by the above deed, and that the daughter was entitled to the 1,000*l.* Burton v. Jackson, 4 W. R. 271; 2 Jur., N. S., 224.

7. C., M., and J. in 1829 mortgaged estates and plantations, of which they were joint owners in equal shares, to F. & Co., of Bombay, as a security for advances, with interest, the repayment being further secured by the joint and several covenants of C., M., and J. The estates were for a long time not cultivated at a profit. In 1830 the firm of F. & Co. was reduced to two partners only, C. and J. In 1836 the interest charged in the books of F. & Co., in account with the proprietors of the estates, was directed to be divided under two heads, one being carried to an account called "Reserved Interest Account," and the amount of the balance of this account was to be held subject to the instructions of C. Both the partners concurred in these directions thus given to F. & Co. In 1837 both the partners concurred in another letter to F. & Co., of Bombay, directing that as to the portion of the interest passed to the "Reserved Interest Account," part of it should be carried to a new account, to be intitled "C., for himself, M. and J.," and in such letter it was directed that the balance of such new account was to be subject to the control of C. alone, and that in the absence of other instructions from C. it was to be applicable towards the liquidation of the account of the proprietors of the estates for which C., M., and J. were responsible. In 1839 M. died. In 1840 the estates sold for more than enough to liquidate all demands of the mortgagees. In 1841 C., with the concurrence of J., directed one-third of the balance at the credit of account "C., for himself, M. and J.," to be paid to himself, another third to J., and the remaining one-third to be retained, subject to the future instructions of C. In 1843 C., with the like concurrence of J., directed F. & Co., of Bombay, to remit this remaining one-third to London, subject to his orders, and stated his intention to be to hand it over to the family of the late M., in such manner as he might think proper. The fund was accordingly remitted to F. & Co., of London, "subject to the orders of C.," and so remained up to the decease of C. C. died in 1849, without having ever made any further disposition of the fund. On a bill by the widow and executrix of M.:—Held, first, that by the letter of 1836 there was no declaration of trust, or other clear appropriation of the fund, for the benefit of C., M., and J., in equal shares, which would have entitled M. to file a bill for his share. Forbes v. Forbes, 3 Jur., N. S., 1206; 6 W. R. 92.

Held, secondly, that by the letter of 1837 there was no declaration of trust, or clear expression of intention, which would enable the family of M. to make a claim. Id.

Semble, the letter of 1836 did not amount to a declaration of trust in favour of C., M., and J. generally, with a power of revocation and new appointment in C., but rather to a contingent declaration in favour of C., M., and J. in one event only, viz., a deficiency on a realisation; and that there being ultimately no deficiency, there never had been any positive declaration. Id.

1. An illiterate woman having wrongfully possessed herself of bonds belonging to the estate of a testator, whose executor the plaintiff was, was ordered to repay the proceeds of the sale of the bonds, although there was much doubt as to the equitable jurisdiction of the court in such a case. Inglis v. Pasco, 27 L. T. 818.

It was alleged by the defendant that the testator, by whom she had several illegitimate children, had shown her an envelope containing the bonds and bearing an indorsement to the effect that they were to be delivered to her as the property of her and her children. The envelope was lost, and the testator had always retained possession of the bonds:—Held, that there was some foundation of truth in the story of the plaintiff, though uncorroborated, and that such an indorsement would have created a trust for her and her children, which, though a slight equity, might give the Court jurisdiction. Id.

2. The husband allowed his wife, who had a separate estate, to keep a separate banking account, and to draw cheques in her own name. He was in the habit of borrowing money of her, and, at the end of the year, of giving her a promissory note for the whole balance due to her. The husband died:—Held, that the promissory note might be construed as a valid declaration of trust. Murray v. Glasse, 1 Eq. Rep. 541; 17 Jur. 816.

3. The Court will not enforce an incomplete voluntary assignment, evidenced by delivery of a box (retaining the key), such box containing what purported to be a written memorandum of gift of real estates and chattels, the memorandum not being under seal. Warriner v. Rogers, 42 L. J., Ch., 581; 16 L. R., Eq., 340; 21 W. R. 766; 21 L. T., N. S., 863.

4. In 1837 B. insured his life, in the names of his sons, B. B. and M. B., and on the policy it was expressed to be held "in trust for his three daughters," one of whom died in B.'s lifetime. B. paid the premiums during his life, and died in October 1846, indebted to his sons, B. B. and M. B. After the death of B. the sum payable on the policy, amounting to 1,748l. 4s. 5d. was paid to M. B., who gave a receipt for the same, in the names of B. B. and himself. M. B. laid out 1,700l., part of the 1,748l. 4s. 5d., in the purchase of debentures of a bank. In the journal of the bank, the debentures were entered as having been handed to M. B., for the Misses B.; and in the books of B. B. and M. B., who were co-partners in the business, the Misses B. were entered as the owners of the debentures. In 1848 an order was made to wind up the affairs of the bank, subsequently to which B. B. died; and in 1855, after his death, M. B. became bankrupt. At the time of his bankruptcy he was indebted to the bank. Some months prior to M. B.'s bankruptcy he delivered the debentures to his brother, E. L. B., by whom they were given to the Misses B. The official manager of the bank was appointed assignee in bankruptcy of M. B., and the Misses B. had been admitted as creditors under the bankruptcy. The Misses B. having claimed to prove as creditors against the bank, for the sums respectively expressed to be payable on the debentures:—Held (affirming 3 Jur., N. S., 554), first, that there was a valid trust in the policy created for the benefit of the Misses B. Exp. Boyd, 3 Jur., N. S., 897; 26 L. J., Ch., 737. S. C. nom. Boyd's case, 1 De G. & J. 223.

Held, secondly, that such trust had never been determined. Id.

Held, thirdly, that the Misses B. were entitled to prove, as creditors against the bank, in respect of the sums respectively expressed to be payable on the debentures, without prejudice to any proceedings which the official manager might be advised to take, as assignee of M. B. Id.

1. A woman who cohabited with a man as her husband handed to him sums of money without any specific directions as to their application, and he invested them in the purchase of leasehold and other property:—Held, that the transactions ought to be regarded, not as loans, to which the Statute of Limitations would be applicable, but in the nature of a trust, and that she was entitled to the investments. James v. Holmes, 4 De G. F. & J. 470.

2. A person being in prison on a charge of felony assigned real estate, which was in the hands of trustees, to his brother. He was acquitted on the ground of insanity. His brother accumulated the income except a small portion, which he spent for the benefit of the convict. After the brother's death it was held that he was a trustee for the convict. Manning v. Gill, 13 L. R., Eq., 485; 41 L. J., Ch., 736; 26 L. T. 14; 20 W. R. 357.

3. A father directed his property to be divided into nine shares, and gave one share and a half to each of his two daughters, "to be settled on themselves at their marriage." At his death the two daughters were infants. The two daughters having attained twenty-one, and being unmarried:—Held, that they were entitled to their shares absolutely, and that there was no trust for a settlement which the Court could execute. Magrath v. Morehead, 12 L. R., Eq., 491; 41 L. J., Ch., 120; 24 L. T. 868.

4. A person died intestate in America, leaving real and personal estate in New York. At a meeting of the next-of-kin in Ireland, one of them, A., who was a naturalised American citizen, asserted that, as such, he was by the law of New York entitled to the whole of the produce of the real estate. This was disputed by the others; and an agreement was entered into by A., that if they would contribute to the expense of sending B. and C. to America to recover the property, he would relinquish his exclusive claim and allow it to be divided equally. The others did contribute, and B. and C. went to America, where a suit was pending in relation to the property. B., who was himself one of the next-of-kin, wrote to A., saying that if he entertained his motion as to his exclusive claim, i.e. B., would have the case tried; but asking him if he still adhered to the original arrangement, to have a proper deed sent out to B. and C. Thereupon A. executed a deed reciting the pendency of the American suit, and his being a naturalised American, and declaring that, should the American Court declare him entitled in consequence to all or a larger portion of the property, he would not insist on his full claim, but thereby consented to accept an equal division with the other next-of-kin, and he thereby gave authority to B. and C. to give full effect to his declaration. B. and C., on receipt of this instrument, and relying on it, suffered the American Court to make a decree in favour of A. A. subsequently revoked the instrument:—Held, that the instrument, irrespective of any question of consideration, operated as a completely constituted and valid declaration of trust in favour of all the next-of-kin, irrevocable by A. Miller v. Harrison, 5 Ir. R., Eq., 324.

Held, also, that if it was merely to be looked upon as a promise or unfulfilled intention, it was clothed with valuable consideration, and was binding. Id.

5. Her Majesty by royal warrant "granted" booty of war to the Secretary of State for India in council, "in trust" to distribute amongst the persons found entitled to share it by the decree of the judge of the Court of Admiralty, to whom the matter had been referred by the sovereign for that purpose, with a direction that doubts should be finally determined by the Secretary of State unless her Majesty should otherwise order. An action having been brought against the Secretary of State for India in council by K., on behalf of himself and all the other parties entitled, alleging that a portion only of the fund had been distributed, and claiming an account and the distribution of the residue:—Held, that the warrant did not operate as a transfer of property or create a trust; and that the defendant, being merely the agent of the sovereign to distribute the fund, was not liable to account to any of the parties found entitled. Kinlock v. Secretary of State for India in Council, 15 L. R., Ch. D., 1; 49 L. J., Ch., 571; 42 L. T. 667; 28 W. R. 619.

X. REVOCATION.

6. A. invests, in name of trustees, stock as security to B. against certain payments. Stock remains for a long time uncalled upon. A. cannot have it re-invested in himself, but dividends ordered in future to be paid to A. Linton v. Hyde, 2 Madd. 94.

7. Demurrer to a bill stating that the plaintiff had deposited moneys as security against a disputed claim, on trust that if the claimant should within one month bring and diligently prosecute an action, then to satisfy the amount recovered, otherwise on trust for the plaintiff, and that the claimant had brought the action and obtained a nominal verdict, with leave to the defendant to move to set aside the verdict, and which was afterwards turned into a special case, not yet determined, and asking for return of the deposit:—Overruled. Portugal (King) v. Russell, 3 Giff. 287.

8. Where money has been subscribed by bondholders for a particular purpose (such as the construction of a railroad) and part of that money has been placed in the hands of trustees for the bondholders, the duty of such trustees being to pay portions of the money as portions of the intended railroad are constructed, if no such railroad nor any portion of it is constructed, and its construction becomes impracticable, the bondholders are entitled to demand from the trustees re-payment of what remains in their hands. National Bolivian Company v. Wilson, 5 L. R., App. Cas., 176; 43 L. T. 60. Affirming 13 L. R., Ch. D. 1.

1. Although, where a trust has been created for an illegal purpose, the Court will not in general interfere, it will do so where the illegal purpose fails to take effect. Symes v. Hughes, 9 L. R., Eq., 475; 39 L. J., Ch., 304; 22 L. T., N. S., 462.

2. Bequest by a testator of 50*l.* per annum, to his executor, to be paid for the keep of a mare, with a direction that the executor should consider himself bound in honour to fulfil this wish, and see that she be well provided for:—Held, that the trust in favour of the mare ought to be performed, and that the executor was entitled to the surplus not required for the mare's keep. Pettingall v. Pettingall, 11 L. J., N. S., Ch., 176.

3. The Court has no jurisdiction to take account of money voted by Parliament for the general expenses of a branch of the executive. Granville Murray v. Clarendon (Earl), 39 L. J., Ch., 221.

4. It is clear that a suit may be maintained against a public officer having in his hands money issued by Government for the use of an individual, for the recovery of such money; but where Government had ordered the money to be withheld, the question is only between Government and the individual or his assignees, and the Court has no jurisdiction. Priddy v. Ross, 3 Meriv. 102.

5. Commissioners were authorised by an Act of Parliament to raise money on the security of the assignment of parish rates. Interest on the debentures was to be paid pari passu, and the debentures were to be paid off by ballot:—Held, that the relation of trustee and cestui que trust was constituted by Act, and that the holders of the debentures were entitled to sue for an account of the moneys received by the trustees, and of their payments; and that they were not bound to proceed on their bonds at law. Fletcher v. Gibbon, 23 Beav. 212.

6. The Bombay Civil Fund was formed to provide retiring pensions for civil servants, and annuities and portions for their widows and children. The fund was constituted by the subscriptions of the members, and by a grant from the Government. It was managed by a committee, the members of which resided in Bombay, and by the rules the property of the fund was vested in the committee of managers as trustees. In fact, however, the funds were always in the hands of the Government as a floating debt due to the association. A suit having been instituted by the representatives of the widow of a member of the association, against the trustees of the fund and the Secretary of State for India, claiming payment of an annuity which they alleged ought to have been paid to her in her lifetime:—Held, that there was no fiduciary relation between the trustees of the fund and a person making a claim against the fund, and that therefore the plaintiffs could only recover arrears of the annuity which accrued due within six years before the filing of the bill. Edwards v. Warden, 43 L. J., Ch., 644; 9 L. R., Ch., 495; 22 W. R. 669; 30 L. T., N. S., 540.

Held, also, that even assuming that the suit ought to have been instituted in Bombay, still inasmuch as the defendants resident in India had appeared unconditionally, had not moved to discharge an order made for service of the bill on them in India, and had not raised any objection to the jurisdiction by demurrer or plea, and as the Government of India in fact held the money, and had taken no objection to the suit, the Court ought to decide the question in dispute. Id.

7. If a trust fund is in the Court of Chancery, that Court may proceed to administer it, even although a foreign sovereign may be interested in it, and may not think fit to come before the Court in a suit relating to it. Morgan v. Lartiere, 7 L. R., H. L., 423; 44 L. J., Ch., 457.

8. The Irish Society held to be trustees for public purposes; and though accountable to the Crown and the city of London for any neglect, etc., they were not so to the companies of London, notwithstanding the latter were, after providing for the public objects, entitled to the surplus revenues of the estates vested in the former. Skinner's Co. v. Irish Society, 7 Beav. 593. Affirmed 12 Cl. & F. 425; 9 Jur. 1043. And see S. C. 1 Myl. & C. 162.

9. A collegiate body compellable to execute a trust as a private person, and though the bill not brought recently. Green v. Ruthersforth, 1 Ves. 468.

10. Where office of justice or profits is in trust, the acts of majority of the cestui que trust may bind the rest. Younger v. Welham, 3 Swan. 180.

11. Where a general trust of a public nature is created, it is essential to the purposes of the trust that a majority of the trustees should have the power, both at law and in equity, of binding the majority. Perry v. Shipway, 1 Giff. 1; 5 Jur., N. S., 535; 7 W. R. 406; 33

L. T. 1023. Affirmed 5 Jur., N. S., 1015; 28 L. J., Ch., 660; 7 W. R. 574; 33 L. T. 251.

1. A bridge Act provided that sixteen persons therein named, "and all other parties" who possessed a certain property qualification, "shall be, and they are hereby appointed, the trustees for carrying this Act into execution." It also provided for the holding and calling of meetings, but contained no expressed power of adjournment. It gave the trustees power to assess at meetings called for the purpose, but no assessment was to be valid unless notice of the intention of making it, and of the time at which it was intended to be made, should be given to all persons to be charged therewith. The word "trustees" was defined in the interpretation clause "the trustees acting by virtue of this Act." The trustees named in the Act were alone summoned to the meetings. K., who by his qualification was a trustee, but had never acted, and whose name was not inserted in the Act, brought an action to set aside the assessment and proceedings, on the ground that the meetings had not been duly called, and that one of the assessments was made at an adjourned meeting, without any fresh notice to the parties to be charged:—Held, that he never having acted as a trustee, was not entitled to require the statutable notice. Kerr v. Wilkie, 6 Jur., N. S., 383; 8 W. R. 286; 2 L. T., N. S., 501.

Held, also, that where notice of a meeting had been properly given, there was no necessity for notice of its bonâ fide adjournment. Id.

I. GENERAL PRINCIPLES AND DISTINCTION BETWEEN EXECUTORY TRUSTS BY MARRIAGE ARTICLES OR WILLS.

2. A trust to be carried into execution by the Court, must be of such a nature that it can be under the control of the Court. Ommanney v. Butcher, T. & R. 270.

3. In executory trusts the Court considers the intention of the testator, and acts according to it. In the latter this Court follows the law. Jervoise v. Northumberland (Duke), 1 Jac. & Walk. 570.

No difference between marriage articles and executory trusts in wills, except that the former afford primâ facie evidence of intent which does not belong to the latter. Id. 574.

4. The general intent of a testator in creating an executory trust for a settlement of his property, not any strictly technical meaning attached to the words he has used, is to govern the preparation of the settlement. Sackville West v. Holmesdale (Viscount), 4 L. R., H. L. Cas., 543; 39 L. J., Ch., 505.

The manner of executing an executory trust must be guided by the object of the author of the trust, provided such object is one which can be legally effectuated. Id.

There is no difference between the construction to be put on an executory trust created by marriage articles and on an executory trust created by a will, except so far as the former, by its very nature, furnishes more emphatically the means of ascertaining the intention of those who created the trust. Id.

5. There is no difference between executory trusts, whether created by marriage articles, by a voluntary settlement, or by a will: in the latter cases there is more difficulty in arriving at the conclusion that a particular trust is executory; for in the first case the nature of the instrument establishes the fact, in the latter it must be collected from the nature of the dispositions in the instruments. Roehfort v. Fitzmaurice, 2 Dr. & War. 1; 4 Ir. Eq. R. 375. S. C. nom. Roehfort v. Fitzmaurice, 1 Con. & L. 158.

6. Articles not construed in same manner as formal dispositions, Taggart v. Taggart, 1 Sch. & Lef. 84.

7. Equity exercises a power to modify and control the ordinary sense of language used in marriage articles, so as to give effect to the real intention; but its interference has always been supported by a necessary implication, resulting from the context of the articles. If it were to assign a power to control the contract from presumptions dehors the instrument, it would be making, instead of expounding, the agreements of parties. M^cGuire v. Scully, Beat. 378.

A deed executed in consideration of marriage, and reciting, as a consideration, payment of 1*l.* and the intended marriage, is to be considered as marriage articles, though the intended husband and his father were the only parties to it. The object of articles being to provide for the issue of the marriage, and the consideration being the marriage, it is presumed that the parties did not mean merely to pass through the form of executing a marriage contract, and at the same time to place the property under the unlimited dominion of the husband. Issue female are entitled to have articles carried into specific execution on a limitation over of the estate, on failure of issue of their father. S. C. nom. Magurie v. Scully, 2 Hog. 113.

1. In the construction of articles the intention of the parties must be the guide. Lecky v. Knox, 1 Ball & B. 215.

2. Distinction between marriage articles and wills; all the parties to the former considered purchasers to effectuate their intention; none of the parties mentioned in the latter are so, as the testator's intention is alone to be considered. Stratford v. Powell, 1 Ball & B. 25.

3. No distinction between executory trusts by marriage articles and will, except the inference from the object of the former, to provide for the issue, that the father should not have the power to defeat it; therefore, estate for life, with remainder to the heirs of the body, a strict settlement in the one case, an estate tail in the other unless clearly not meant in their technical sense. Blackburn v. Stables, 2 Ves. & B. 367. But see 1 Jac. & Walk. 571.

II. WHAT IS AN EXECUTORY TRUST.

4. Definition of an executory trust as distinguished from a trust executed according to the sense of a court of equity. Per Lord St. Leonards. Egerton v. Brownlow, 18 Jur. 71; 23 L. J., Ch., 348; 4 H. L. Ca. 1.

5. Devise of copyhold estates, the legal estates being outstanding, "to my son R. W. G., to be entailed upon his male heirs, and failing such to pass to his next brother, and so on from brother to brother, allowing 2,500*l.* to be raised upon the estates for female children each." Whether a trust executed or executory, and, if the latter, whether an estate tail in R. W. G., quære. The point too doubtful to compel a purchaser to take the title. Jervoise v. Northumberland (Duke), 1 Jac. & Walk. 559.

6. Executory trust defined, and the principles laid down upon which courts of equity act in executory trusts. Boswell v. Dillon, Dr. 291; 6 Ir. Eq. R. 389.

A testator devised his property to trustees, and the will contained the following passages, amongst others: "The said sum I will shall be taken from my real, freehold, and personal property; the residue to be divided between them by my said trustees, share and share alike, at such time, and in such manner, as to my said trustees shall seem most expedient, subject to this limitation," etc.; shares of sons, in certain events, were to go to survivors, "subject, however, to such jointure as my said sons, or any of them, may settle on any wife," etc.; premises were devised to the son carrying on the testator's business, "at such reasonable rent as my trustees shall think proper." "I further will my trustees shall lend out at interest" certain sums bequeathed in the way prescribed; a small annuity was given to W. B., "to be paid to him by my said trustees out of the issues," etc. A codicil bequeathed other property, "to be divided equally among," etc., "agreeable to the real intention of my will":—Held, that the provisions of this will did not constitute executory trusts. Id.

7. A testator devised his real and personal estate to trustees, and gave life estates therein to several persons, namely, A., B., etc., and after their deaths he directed the trustees to pay the income to M. and N. during their respective lives, share and share alike, and in case either of them should, after the deaths of A., B., etc., depart this life without leaving issue male of his body in trust, to pay the whole income to the survivor for life; and he directed that if M. should, after the deaths of A., B., etc., die before N., leaving issue male, then the trustees should convey a moiety of the real estate to the use of the first and other sons of M. in tail male, with remainder to N. for life, with remainder to his first and other sons in tail, and in default to the testator's right heirs, and lay out a moiety of the personal estate in land, and convey the same to trustees to the like uses. The testator made a similar disposition mutatis mutandis of the other moiety, in case of the death of N., after the deaths of A., B., etc., leaving issue male; and he provided that, in case M. and N. should die without leaving issue male, or if such issue male should die without any issue male, the trustees should convey the property to such person as should at the death of the survivor of M. and N. be the right heir of the testator:—Held, that the trusts on which the question arose, were not executory so as to alter the construction as arising on an executed trust. Franks v. Price, 3 Beav. 182; 9 L. J., N. S., Ch., 383. And see S. C. at law, 5 Bing., N. S., 37 6 Scott 710.

8. Where an instrument, executed previously to a marriage under the name of articles of agreement, appears on the face of it finally to declare the intention of the parties, and does not point to a future instrument as necessary to complete the contract, it will not be treated as executory, though, in order to give full effect to its provisions, a future act may remain to be done after its execution. De Havilland v. De Saumarez; De Havilland v. Bingham, 14 W. R. 118.

9. A testator directed 6,000*l.* to be settled on the marriage of his daughter, and then went on to give it to trustees, with a separate life interest to his daughter; after her death for her children, on their attaining twenty-one, if the mother should be then dead; but if not, then not till after her decease; and if no child should live to attain a vested interest, then to fall into his residue. And he gave his residue to A. for life, remainder to B.:—Held, first, that the testator had made a positive settlement, and the Court could not add to it in any way. Fullerton v. Martin, 1 Dr. & Sm. 31; 6 Jur., N. S., 265; 39 L. J., Ch., 469; 8 W. R. 289.

Held, secondly, that the income undisposed of after the wife's death fell into the residue. Id.

Held, thirdly, that it was undisposed of income merely, and passed as such to the tenant for life of the residue. Id.

10. Words of a settlement held not to constitute an executory trust, but merely to amount to the gift of an equitable estate, by directing the property to be held in trust for the persons designated. Doncaster v. Doncaster, 2 Jur., N. S., 1066.

11. A testator left shares of his property to his daughters "to be settled on themselves at their marriage." One of the daughters attained twenty-one, and applied to have her share paid to her absolutely:—Held, that she was absolutely entitled to her share, and that there was no trust for settlement. Magrath v. Morehead, 24 L. T., N. S., 868; 12 L. R., Eq., 491; 41 L. J., Ch. 120.

1. A will contained a direction to trustees to convey to the testator's son in strict settlement, if he should marry, followed by a declaration that if the son should die unmarried, or without lawful issue, the property should be limited and devolve upon A. for life, remainder to A.'s eldest son for life, remainder to his issue male, and in failure of such issue to A.'s other sons in succession, the eldest of such sons and his heirs male always to be preferred:—Held, that the trusts in favour of A. and her sons were not executory; and that the testator's son, having died unmarried, and A. having died subsequently, her eldest son was entitled in tail male. Re Nelley, 26 W. R. 88.

2. By a deed it was agreed and declared that A., his executors, administrators, and assigns, should raise out of certain hereditaments 800*l.*, and should invest the same in the names of trustees at interest upon government or real securities "upon trusts to be declared for the benefit of R., for her life, with remainder to her children, and as to R. and for her separate use, and with all the powers for changing the security, and for maintenance, and other powers and trusts which are usually inserted in a money settlement of the like nature." No subsequent declaration of trust of the 800*l.* was ever made:—Held, that the deed was executory only, and that the settlement so directed ought to have limited the 800*l.*, after the death of R., amongst her children as tenants in common, and not as joint tenants. Mayn v. Mayn, 5 L. R., Eq., 150. S. C. nom. Mayne v. Mayne, 17 L. T., N. S., 439.

III. LIMITATIONS TO ISSUE OR HEIRS (RULE IN SHELLEY'S CASE).

1. Articles, 6889.
2. Devises, 6891.

1. Articles.

3. Where, on a marriage agreement, the husband entered into a bond to surrender his copyhold to the use of himself for life; remainder to his wife for life; remainder to the heirs of their two bodies; remainder to the heirs of the husband: decreed, a surrender to the use of the husband for life; remainder to the first and other sons of the marriage in tail general; remainder to the daughters in tail general, in order, by making the issue purchasers, to secure them from being defeated. Nandike v. Wilkes, Gilb. Eq. Rep. 114.

4. In marriage articles to settle lands on the husband for life, remainder to the heirs male of his body, a court of equity will decree a conveyance to be made in strict settlement, according to the intent of the parties, viz., to the husband for life, remainder to the first and every other son in tail, etc., and not direct an estate tail to the husband, according to the legal operation of the words. Collins v. Plummer, 1 P. W. 106; Seale v. Seale, id. 291.

5. By marriage articles, it was agreed that 3,000*l.* should be laid out in land and settled on husband and wife for their lives, remainder to such issue, etc., as they should appoint, and in default of appointment to the issue of their bodies. On the death of the husband without appointment:—Held, the land should be settled in strict settlement, viz., on wife for life, remainder to the first and other sons in tail, remainder to daughter in tail, remainder to right heirs of husband. Dod v. Dod, Ambl. 274.

6. When it is agreed by articles that, after an estate for life in the father, the estate is to go to the children in remainder, they take as purchasers. Cordwell v. Mackrill, Ambl. 517; 2 Eden 344.

Where marriage articles limited a joint estate to the intended husband and wife, and after the death of the survivor to the use of the heirs of the body of the husband begotten on the wife, and the settlement after marriage pursued the words of the articles; husband and wife levy a fine, and first mortgage, and then agree to sell. The articles not being produced, the Court would not decree them to be carried into execution by a strict settlement against the purchaser, who had notice of them. S. C. Ambl. 515; 2 Eden 344.

7. Marriage articles to settle estates to the use of husband for life, remainder to the wife for her life, remainder to the use of the heirs of the body of the wife by the husband. The Court refused to decree a strict settlement upon them, since the power of barring the entail was not in the husband alone. As to the distinctions where a court of equity will or will not rectify settlements made in pursuance of articles, etc., by decreeing a high settlement. Election as to copyholds. Highway v. Banner, 1 Bro. C. C. 584.

8. One devises his lands for payment of his debts, and then to A. for life, with power to make leases, etc.; remainder to the heirs male of the body of A.; though this be but the devise of a trust, and executory, and expressed to be to A. for life, yet it is an estate tail in A., barrable by a fine and recovery. Secus, in a case of marriage articles to settle an estate on A. for life, remainder to the heirs male of his body, this being an agreement to do a future act, and in which the issue are particularly considered and looked upon as purchasers. Bale v. Coleman, 1 P. W. 142.

9. A limitation in marriage articles to the husband for life, to the wife for life, remainder to the issue of their two bodies, will be carried into strict settlement. Villiers v. Villiers, 2 Atk. 73.

10. Where marriage settlement is executed, after marriage, in pursuance of articles previous to marriage, and limitations are to husband for life, to wife for life, and heirs of husband by wife, it is executory, and will be carried into strict settlement by Court. Secus, if executed after marriage, without previous articles. Glanville v. Payne, 2 Atk. 29; Barnard. 18.

11. Bill for a strict settlement, after long acquiescence by plaintiff's ancestor, and when impossible to bar the remainder, dismissed. Parker v. Philips, 1 Ves. 530.

1. Marriage articles not decreed in strict settlement, where, by a difference in the penning, the parties intended to leave part in the father's power. Howel v. Howel, 2 Ves. 358.

2. The rule that a limitation to the heirs of the body in articles shall be carried into execution by a strict settlement, does not prevail where the concurrence of both parties would be necessary to bar the entail. Brudenell v. Elwes, 7 Ves. 390.

3. One articles on marriage to settle lands on himself for life, remainder to the heirs of his body by his intended wife, with a covenant to make the settlement within two years, or in default thereof to stand seised to the same uses; though this be an estate tail at law, yet equity will turn it into a strict settlement. Trevor v. Trevor, 1 P. W. 622; 10 Mod. 436. Affirmed 5 Bro. P. C. 122.

4. Articles before marriage to settle were so expressed, that the husband would have had an estate tail; a settlement copying the very words of the articles was reformed, estate for life only being intended. Randall v. Willis, 5 Ves. 275.

Articles before marriage for settling real estates of the husband, and also all and singular his personal estate of what nature or kind soever; a proper execution would be by a covenant, that real estate that should be purchased with the personal, should, with respect to the objects of the settlement, be considered personal: the settlement, therefore, made after marriage contained no such covenant, and being in other respects a defective execution, real estates purchased by the husband according to the evidence, in order to defeat the right of his wife, were decreed to be conveyed by his devise according to the articles. A gift by him in his life, in consideration of service, was not disputed; but under the particular circumstances attending the marriage, and in the case of an infant, the Court appeared to question its validity. Id. 262.

5. On marriage, the husband executes a deed-poll, whereby he purports to settle all his real and personal estate on the wife, and the heirs of her body by him begotten, obliging her to give each of her children by him begotten 1,000*l.* a-piece at twenty-one, and to divide the residue equally amongst them at her death. This gives an estate for life only to the wife, with remainder in fee to the children as tenants in common. These marriage articles so far tied up the property of the settlor, that a real estate purchased by him in his lifetime, with part of his personal estate, shall be considered as personal estate, and be disposed of accordingly. Lowther v. Westmoreland, 1 Cox 64.

6. Marriage articles carried into execution, by limiting estates in strict settlement to A. and B. respectively, with cross-remainders between B. and the issue of A., with power to A. to appoint both estates among his children. The will of A. referring to the estate, but not to the power, declared a good execution of the power, to the extent of limiting estates tail to the children; the excess reformed to effectuate the general intention of the articles. Dillon v. Dillon, 1 Ball & B. 77.

7. Marriage articles for settling lands varied by decreeing the estate to one for life, with remainder in tail to his issue instead of an estate tail to him. Griffith v. Buckle, 2 Vern. 13.

8. Marriage settlement rectified by a strict settlement agreeably to the ordinary course, notwithstanding it agreed with the articles verbatim, and both made before marriage, the plaintiff having however taken a benefit under the will which he disputed:—Held, to have made his election, and decreed to give up part of the settlement estate in satisfaction. Roberts v. Kingsly, 1 Ves. 238.

9. A., having seven daughters and no son, by articles entered into on the marriage of his daughter B., covenanted to secure "to her and her children by C. (her intended husband), a share of his real estate, equal to that of any other of his daughters." A. died without having made any settlement:—Held, that B. was entitled to an estate for life, remainder to her first and other sons in tail, remainder to her daughters in tail. Hamilton v. Cathcart, Wall. Lyn. 282.

10. By post-nuptial articles, J. F., having then two living sons, H. and T., and one daughter, M., covenanted with trustees to settle certain lands of which he was seised in fee as counsel should direct, to the use of J. F. for life, remainder to trustees to preserve, etc.; remainder to the use of H., and to permit him to take the rents and profits for his life; remainder to the heir male of the body of H., and to permit him to take the rents and profits for his life; remainder to the issue male of T., with remainders to the unborn sons of J. F. in tail male in strict settlement, with remainders over:—Held, that H. took an estate for life only. Rochford v. Fitzmaurice, 2 Dr. & War. 1; 4 Ir. Eq. R. 375. S. C. nom. Rochford v. Fitzmaurice, 1 Con. & L. 158.

Seemle, that a limitation to trustees to preserve contingent remainders, not confined to the lifetime of a tenant for life, will not be cut down to that life if there are contingent remainders which may require protection during a longer period. Id.

The only difference between an executory trust raised by a voluntary settlement, or a will, and such a trust raised by an ante-nuptial settlement, is, that in the latter the object of the settlement supplies an intention to create a strict settlement, and that in the former such an intention must appear on the face of the instrument. Id.

11. By settlement on the marriage of A. with C., in case there was no issue male, and there should be daughters living at the death of the father, who should attain twenty-one, or be married, then such daughters should have 2,000*l.* a-piece; there were three daughters and no sons; defendant, one of the daughters, married D., and previous to her marriage covenanted to assign (with D.'s consent) 500*l.* to trustees in trust, after the death of D. and the defendant, to pay it amongst the children of the bodies of the defendant and D.; and that D. should, after the marriage, assign to the trustees all the moneys and securities for it, then due and belonging to defendant. A. died in 1744; D. in 1745, intestate, to whom defendant administered, and received the

2,000*l.*:—Held, that the children, who were a son and daughter, have a right to the portion, which was decreed to be secured for their benefit, though under the articles the real estate was in the mother's power, and vested in her in tail; yet in equity it is to be carried into strict settlement to the wife for life, then to the first, etc., sons in tail, and, in default of issue male, to daughters. Bash v. Dalway, 3 Atk. 530.

1. By marriage articles a husband covenanted, in consideration of his wife's portion, to settle an estate to his own use, and after his decease to the use of his heirs on the body of his intended wife, and for want of such issue to his own right heirs for ever. The articles did not express any further intention of providing for the children of the marriage, and made a provision for the intended wife, in lieu of dower. No settlement was executed, and the husband mortgaged the estate and at the same time delivered the articles to the mortgagee:—Held, on his death, that under the articles, he was entitled to a life estate only, and that the mortgagee took with notice, and could not therefore hold as against the issue of the marriage. Davies v. Davies, 4 Beav. 54.

2. By post-nuptial articles of 1760, J. covenanted, in pursuance of articles before marriage, and for other valuable considerations, to settle his estate to the use of himself for life, remainder to trustees to preserve, etc., and after decease of J. (subject to a jointure) to the use of H., his son, and his assigns for life; and after his decease "to the heirs male of his body," in default of such issue "to T., a second son, and his assigns for life, and after his decease to his issue male; remainder to the third, fourth, and other sons and the heirs male of their respective bodies; remainders over. Power to J., H., T., or any of the issue male of J. who should become seised under the limitations, to make leases for three lives or thirty-one years. Power to H., etc., when seised to jointure not exceeding 150*l.* per annum:—Held, that H. took an estate for life only. Brennan v. Fitzmaurice, 2 Ir. Eq. R. 113.

3. In marriage articles in 1802 (which were to be, but never were, followed by a formal settlement), two separate estates, one belonging to the intended husband, the other to the intended wife, were included. Both were vested in trustees, to permit the husband and wife to receive the profits during life, and (as to her portion), should she survive her husband, "to such of her issue male by her husband as she may, by her last will and testament, notwithstanding her coverture, direct, limit, or appoint," and in case of no appointment, to the issue male of the husband and wife, and in case of no issue male, then to go amongst her daughters, and in case of failure of issue male or female, then to go to such person or persons as she should appoint. There were two children of the marriage, a son and a daughter. The wife survived the husband many years, and made a will, which, reciting the power reserved to her by the articles, appointed the property to her grandson, the son of her daughter, describing him as issue male of her marriage:—Held, that the articles were executory, that if in accordance with them a settlement had been executed, the estate would have been put in strict settlement, and that the power reserved by them was not well executed, the grandson, the son of a daughter, not coming within the description of issue male therein contained. The lady married again, and on the settlement on this marriage, the surviving trustee of the articles granted, released, and confirmed to the trustees under the second settlement, "all his right to the use and behoof of the widow as under the articles." Lambert v. Peyton, 8 H. L. Ca. 1.

Held, also, that setting up a claim to the estate under the appointment by her, the grandson could not, as an objection to a suit, compel him to convey the estate in specific performance of the marriage articles, insist that the legal estate was not in him, nor could he object to the decree that it dealt only with the property over which the wife had assumed to exercise a power of appointment, and not with the whole property included in the marriage articles. Id.

4. A marriage settlement, purporting to be made in pursuance of articles recited in it, conveyed an estate to A. and his wife, and the heirs of their bodies:—Held, that they became tenants in tail special, and that a court of law could not construe the deed as rendering them tenants for life, with remainder to their issue in tail, even if that might have been the construction to be put upon the articles by a court of equity. Doe d. Daniel v. Woodroffe, 10 M. & W. 608; 12 L. J., Exch., 147. Affirmed 15 M. & W. 769; 7 Jur. 959; 2 H. L. Ca. 811; 13 Jur. 1013.

2. Devises.

5. A. devised 10,000*l.* to trustees in trust to be laid out in lands, and to be settled on B. for life without impeachment of waste, remainder to trustees and their heirs for the life of B. to support contingent remainders, with a power to B. to make a jointure, remainder to the heirs of the body of B., remainders over; and by the same will devises lands to B. to the same uses, and dies, leaving C. executor; B. sues C., the executor, for the deeds relating to the lands that are in his hands, and to have the money laid out in lands and settled. Decreed that B. had but one estate for life in the lands, and so not entitled to the deeds, but that they were to be brought into court, and that the lands to be bought with the money were to be settled on B. for his life only, remainder to his first, etc., son. But on appeal, B. was decreed to have an estate tail in the lands devised, and consequently to be entitled to the deeds relating thereto; though, as to the lands to be purchased, that being executory, and in the power of the Court, B. was to be but tenant for life, with remainder to his first, etc., son. Papillon v. Voyce, 2 P. W. 471; 2 Kel. 27; Fitzg. 38.

6. "To one for life, and to the heirs of his body," has been always held to be an estate tail; but where it is "to one for life, and after his death to the issue of his body," there is no instance where it has been so construed. Meure v. Meure, 2 Atk. 265.

7. The only difference between the construction of executory trusts in a marriage settlement and a voluntary settlement or will is, that in the former the nature of the instrument affords a presumption that the intention is for a strict settlement, whereas in the latter case that intention must appear on the face of the instrument. Rochford v. Fitzmaurice, 1 Con. & L. 158. S. C. nom. Rochford v. Fitzmaurice, 2 Dr. & War. 1; 4 Ir. Eq. R. 375.

1. One devises his lands for payment of his debts, and then to A. for life, with power to make leases, etc., remainder to the heirs male of the body of A.; though this be but the devise of a trust, and executory, and expressed to be to A. for life, yet it is an estate tail in A., barrable by a fine and recovery: secus, in case of marriage articles to settle an estate on A. for life, remainder to the heirs male of his body, this being an agreement to do a future act, and in which the issue are particularly considered, and looked upon as purchasers. Bale v. Coleman, 1 P. W. 142.

2. Testator devised his estate to A. in case his daughter should die leaving no heirs of her body:—Held, a gift to the daughter for life, with contingent remainder to such heir of her body as should be living at the time of her death. Read v. Snell, 2 Atk. 646.

"Leaving" is a participle of the present tense, and relates to the time of the daughter's dying. Ib.

No weight has been laid on the want of the words "for life" when the intention of the testator has otherwise appeared, especially in the case of a trust executory, for then a court of equity is bound to see a settlement made agreeably to the intention of the testator. S. C. Atk. 648.

3. Tenant devised his estates to trustees, upon trust, as counsel should advise, to convey, settle, and assure the said premises to or for the use of or in trust for his daughter J. for her life, and after her death then on the heirs of her body, etc. The Court directed the estates to be settled upon J. for her life, with remainder to her first and other sons in tail general, with remainder to her daughters in tail general, etc. The limitations being to both sons and daughters in tail general, there is no necessity for a subsequent limitation to J. and the heirs of her body. Bastard v. Proby, 2 Cox 6.

4. A testator empowered his trustees to purchase freeholds, "to the amount of 1,500*l.* of his personal estate, for the use of A. during life, and then to be divided among his issue, if any":—Held, that this was executory, and that A. took for life, with remainder to his children as tenants in common in tail, with cross-remainders between them in tail, with an ultimate reversion in fee to A. Hadwen v. Hadwen, 23 Beav. 551.

5. Testator gave one-third of his residue to his niece, which he desired might be settled by his executors, on her, for her separate use, for her life, but to devolve to her issue at her death, and, failing issue, then to revert to his nephew. The Court directed the third to be settled in trust for the niece, for her separate use, for life, and after her death in trust for her issue then living, and if there should be no such issue then in trust for the nephew. Stonor v. Curwen, 5 Sim. 264.

6. A. devises lands to trustees to pay debts and legacies, and then to settle the remainder on her son B., and the heirs of his body, with remainders over, and directs that special care should be taken in the settlement that it should never be in the power of her son to dock the entail. Decreed, the son should be only tenant for life, without impeachment of waste, and should not have an estate tail conveyed to him. Leonard v. Sussex, 2 Vern. 526.

7. A testator directed that an estate should be purchased by his executors, and that such estate should be made hereditary, and settled upon his constituted heir. He then appointed his nephew his heir and successor, and desired that the estate should be settled upon him, and should descend to his heirs and successors in the direct male line; and in case of his nephew dying without issue, the estate to devolve upon his brother, his heirs and successors in the direct male line:—Held, that the nephew was not to take as tenant in tail in possession, but that the estate was to be settled upon him for life, with remainder to his sons in tail male, and afterwards to the next taker and his sons in like manner. Shelton v. Watson, 16 Sim. 543; 18 L. J., N. S., Ch., 223; 13 Jur. 203.

8. A. devises lands to his sisters B. and C., and their heirs and assigns, upon trust, that until his granddaughter D. should marry or die, to receive profits, and thereout to pay her 100*l.* a year for her maintenance; residue to pay debts and legacies. After payment thereof, in trust for said D., and upon further trust, that if she lived, to marry a Protestant, and at time of such marriage be twenty-one, or upwards, or if under that, such marriage be with consent of said D., then to convey with all convenient speed after such marriage, to use of said D. for life, sans waste, voluntary waste in houses excepted; remainder to her husband for life; remainder to the issue of her body, with remainders over; and upon further trust, that if D. died unmarried, then to use of B. for life: remainder to son of his other granddaughter E., in tail; remainder to defendant C., remainder to his first and other sons: remainder to A.'s right heirs; and upon further trust, that if D. marry not according to will, then upon such marriage to convey to trustees, as to one moiety to use of D. for life; then to trustees to preserve contingent remainders; remainder to her first and every other son, being Protestant, with remainders over; and as to other moiety, to son of his daughter E., in like manner. A. dies, D. attains her full age; and upon treaty of marriage with F., applies to B. and C. for conveyance to herself for life; remainder to her intended husband for life; remainder to issue of her body: B. executes such conveyance, but C. refuses; D. suffers a recovery of the whole to use of herself in fee, and then marries F., who made considerable settlement upon her; she covenants to settle her estate upon husband and wife; remainder to first, etc., sons in tail; remainder to survivor of husband and wife in fee. They bring bill to compel C. to convey, etc. Decreed (not estate tail to D.) but an estate for life, sans waste, ut supra, as being intent of A., upon the will, with remainders over in strict settlement. Glenorchy (Lord) v. Bosville, Forrest 4.

1. A., by will, directed his trustees to convey his freehold lands to his daughter, P., and so as that she alone should receive the rents, and so as her husband should not intermeddle therewith; and from and after her decease, in trust for the heirs of the body of the said P. for ever:—Held, that this was an executory trust, and that the wife took an estate for life only; therefore the husband could not have curtesy; sed secus, if it had been an estate tail. Lord Hardwicke said in this case, that the devise being to the wife's separate use, would not bar the husband; for here is a sort of seisin in the wife. And though Coke says, that to make a tenancy by the curtesy, there ought to be an inchoate right to the husband in the wife's lifetime, he does not say he should be seised of the rents and profits. Roberts v. Diamell, 1 Atk. 607.

2. A testator devised some copyhold estate to his son Thomas, and "advised him to settle it upon himself, and his issue male by his lawful wife, and for want of such issue upon Edward and his lawful issue":—Held, first, that these words created a trust; and, secondly, that Thomas was entitled to a life estate only. Parker v. Bolton, 5 L. J., N. S., Ch., 98.

3. A testator directed his estates and house property to be settled on his son, D., and his heirs male; and should he have no heirs male, then the property to go to his grandson, E., on his taking the name of D., in addition to his own, within twelve months after his succession; and in the event of his having no heirs male, then the estate to go to his brother and his heirs male, he taking the name of D.:—Held, that an executory trust was created, which the Court directed to be carried out by a settlement, with limitations to the several devisees for life, and remainders to their sons in tail, successively. Duncan v. Bluet, 4 Ir. R., Eq., 469; 19 W. R. 41.

4. A testator directed his property to be divided between his children at twenty-five, share and share alike, and all moneys inherited by his daughters to be placed in the hands of trustees, to be settled on them for the sole use of themselves and their lawful issue:—Held, that "strict settlement" was not intended by these words, but the money inherited was to be settled upon the daughters and their lawful issue, which would have the effect of giving to the daughters an absolute interest. Samuel v. Samuel, 14 L. J., N. S., Ch., 222.

5. A testator devised to trustees, to the use of eight persons successively for life, and afterwards in trust to convey to all the sons and daughters of the eight who should be then living, and the heirs of their bodies "respectively in a due course of entail;" and he empowered his sister to cut down the estates of children "thereafter born of the eight to life estates." The plaintiff was a child of one of the eight born at the date of the will:—Held, that though the trust was executory, she was tenant in tail, and not tenant for life. Randall v. Daniel, 24 Beav. 193.

Settlement whereby real estate was conveyed in consideration of natural love and affection to trustees and their heirs, to the use of such persons as the settlor should appoint, and in default to the use of settlor for life, with certain intermediate uses, and then upon trust to convey the property to all and every other the sons and daughters of G., and to all and every other the sons and daughters of S., and so on of six other persons in succession, who should be then living, and to the heirs male and female of his, her, and their body and bodies respectively, in a course of entail; the sons and daughters of G. and the heirs of his, her, and their body and bodies respectively, to take and be preferred before all the other persons last above named; with a similar clause for S. and each of the other six persons named, the sons of all and every the persons last named, and the heirs of his and their body and bodies to take before the daughters and the heirs of her and their bodies. The settlor then by his will devised other lands to trustees to the use of certain persons for life, and after the termination thereof upon trust to convey the estate to all the sons and daughters of eight persons and the heirs of their bodies respectively in a due course of entail, with power to one of the tenants for life to cut down the estates of children thereafter to be born, to life estates. Upon the above settlement it was held that the daughters of G. took in priority to the sons of S.; and that a daughter of G., who, at the death of the last tenant for life was the only child of G., took an estate tail in the devised estate. Id.

Held, also, that in construing the will, there being no ambiguity upon it, the settlement must not be looked at for the purpose of construing the will. Id.

6. Devise to trustees of money to be laid out in land, and to be settled as counsel should advise, in trust for A., and the heirs male of his body, to take in succession and priority, and the interest of the money till laid out, to be paid to A., his sons, and issue. A. shall have but an estate for life, with remainder to the first and other sons in tail, etc. White v. Carter, Ambl. 670. Affirmed 2 Eden 366.

7. A devise subject to the life interest of the testator's widow, upon trust to convey, assign, and assure freehold property "unto and to the use of my son T., and the heirs of his body lawfully issuing, but in such manner and form, nevertheless, and subject to such limitations and restrictions, as that if T. shall happen to die without leaving lawful issue, then that the property may after his death descend unincumbered unto and belong to my daughter B., her heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns," is an executory trust to be executed by a conveyance to the use of T. during his life, with remainder to his first and other sons and daughters as purchasers in tail, with remainder to R. in fee. Thompson v. Fisher, 10 L. R., Eq., 207; 18 W. R. 860.

IV. OTHER LIMITATIONS.

1. Articles, 6893.
2. Devises, 6897.

1. Articles.

8. Articles construed against the words for the sake of the intent, as where the wife's portion was to be laid out in land, to be settled on husband and wife, and the heirs of their bodies, and if not laid out in land during their joint lives, and the wife should die first, that the money should go to the wife's brother and sister: wife dies first leaving issue, and the money is not laid out in a purchase; yet the issue, and not the wife's brother and sister, shall have it, Equity supplying the words, "if the wife die without issue." Kentish v. Newman, 1 P. W. 234.

1. Rights of children under marriage articles to annuities charged on certain leaseholds for lives and a term of years. Richardson v. Nixon, 2 J. & L. 250; 7 Ir. Eq. R. 620.

2. By the second clause of marriage articles, it was agreed that a sum should be settled on the wife (not stating how), and the husband renounced his marital right over it during the coverture. The fourth clause provided that in case of her death, leaving issue, it should belong to the husband and children successively; the fifth gave her a power of appointment, if she died without issue; and the sixth provided that the income should, "in all cases, belong to the husband during his life. There was no express life estate given to the wife:—Held, first, that the sixth clause being repugnant with the second clause, the husband's life interest was postponed until the death of his wife; and, secondly, that the wife, by implication, took an immediate life estate to her separate use. Byam v. Byam, 19 Beav. 58; 1 Jur., N. S., 79; 24 L. J., Ch., 209.

3. A., on the marriage of his son, articles to settle a jointure on the wife and her issue; but no provision is made for the son during his life. The father has the portion, and the wife dies without issue. Whether the son is entitled to an estate in the lands, quære. West v. Delaware, 1 Vern. 198.

4. The proper mode of giving an absolute interest to a wife after the death of her husband is by limiting the property to the wife, her heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns. Witterbeek v. Barrow, 23 Beav. 423; 3 Jur., N. S., 804.

5. Settlement by lease and release (the settlor being tenant in tail, and covenanting to suffer a recovery which was never suffered):—Held, ineffectual to carry out intentions in favour of younger children, as against the remainderman in tail. Stanhouse v. Gaskell, 1 W. R. 77; 17 Jur. 157.

6. A marriage settlement provided that the trusts of a certain sum in the settlement should be declared in favour of the wife and her children, giving the wife a life interest in that fund. No declaration of the trusts had been declared during the lifetime of the wife, who had had three children:—Held, that the usual trusts of a marriage settlement in favour of children of the marriage should be declared. Mayne v. Mayne, 17 L. T., N. S., 439.

By a deed it was agreed and declared that A., his executors, administrators, and assigns, should raise out of certain hereditaments 800*l.*, and should invest the same in the names of trustees at interest upon Government or real securities "upon trusts to be declared for the benefit of R., for her life, with remainder to her children, and as to R. to and for her separate use, and with all the powers for changing the security, and for maintenance, and other powers and trusts which are usually inserted in a money settlement of the like nature." No subsequent declaration of trust of the 800*l.*

was ever made:—Held, that the deed was executory only, and that the settlement so directed ought to have limited the 800*l.*, after the death of R., amongst her children as tenants in common, and not as joint tenants. S. C. nom. Mayn v. Mayn, 5 L. R., Eq., 150.

7. Where there is an ambiguity in expressions of settlement regarding issue, the presumptions are made in favour of the children. Perfect v. Curzon (Lord), 5 Madd. 442.

8. Upon the words "issue of the marriage," the Court, on a bill for carrying articles into execution, have frequently directed the settlement to all the issue, to the first and other sons, and for default of such issue to the daughters, with proper remainders. In this case the Court determined in favour of the daughter. Hart v. Middlehurst, 3 Atk. 371.

9. Articles, on marriage, to settle lands on husband and wife for lives, remainder to heirs male of body of wife by husband, remainder to his heirs male by second wife, remainder to heirs female by marriage. Settlement is made before marriage, and said to be in pursuance of articles, whereby lands are limited to husband for life, without waste, and with power of making leases, remainder to first, etc., sons of marriage in tail male; remainder to first, etc., sons in tail by second marriage; remainder to heirs of body of husband. There are two daughters; husband suffers recovery, and devises to sister. Daughters may compel reconveyance. West v. Evisay, 1 Com. 412; 2 P. W. 349. S. C. on appeal 1 Bro. P. C. 225.

10. Articles between father and son; in consideration of 1*l.* and of the son's intended marriage, the father granted him an annuity charged on land; after the father's death, the son, his heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns to pay annuities to his sisters and their heirs; if one of them should marry without consent, her annuity to return to the son, who was also to pay an annuity to his father's widow during viduity, and several sums of money to the other children; if the son should happen to die without issue, his wife to be paid a jointure out of the lands; if he should happen to leave issue male, the estate to devolve to said issue male; and if he should happen to die without issue, the entire property to be divided equally between the eldest sons of his sisters; on the death of the father, the land to be given up to the son. The son died after the father, leaving a daughter, his only issue. To a bill to raise the arrears of an annuity for lives, granted after the execution of the articles by the father and son, a demurrer by the daughter, because they had not such an estate as enabled them to grant the annuity, overruled; as no limitations in favour of the female issue of the son could be imposed, for the articles, having expressed the intention to provide for the issue male, raised a negative implication against females being the object of the marriage provision. It is only where the contract has expressed an intention to provide for issue generally, that females are included in the provision. McGuire v. Souilly, Beat. 370.

11. By articles executed in consideration of marriage and the fortune of the wife, it was agreed that the trustees of a money fund, after the decease of the husband, should pay the residue of the interest, and also the principal sum (subject to an annuity by way of jointure for the wife), to the issue of the marriage, in such shares and proportions to any one or more of them, in exclusion of the others of them, as the husband should by deed or will appoint, and in default of appointment to all the issue, in equal shares, to such of said issue as should be sons at twenty-one, and to such of them as should be daughters at twenty-one or marriage; and that power should be given to pay towards the advancement of any of said issue any sum not exceeding one-half of the principal sum belonging to such child respectively; and in case there should be no issue, or all such issue should die in the lifetime of the husband, then that the entire of the trust funds, subject to the jointure, should vest and be assigned and go to the husband, his heirs, executors, etc., absolutely, for his and their sole use and benefit. And it was further agreed, that a regular deed of settlement should be executed, which should contain the several clauses and covenants in such cases usual and proper:—Held, first, that the word “issue” in the articles was to be read “children;” secondly, that the settlement ought to contain clauses vesting the shares of the sons in them at twenty-one, and of the daughters in them at twenty-one or marriage; and also clauses of survivorship and accruer of the shares of sons dying under twenty-one, and of daughters dying under that age without having been married, in favour of the surviving or other children; thirdly, that the husband was entitled to the fund, either in the event of his surviving all his children, or of no child attaining a vested interest therein, and that the settlement ought to contain clauses accordingly. Roche v. Roche, 2 J. & L. 561.

1. In marriage articles there is a diversity between a limitation to the heirs of the body of a man, and to the heirs female of the body of a man, and the sons more favoured than daughters. Powell v. Price, 2 P. W. 539.

2. Testator gave 5,000*l.* stock to a female infant, to be paid or transferred to, or settled on her, by his executors, by such deed or instrument in writing, as they should think most prudent and proper, on her attaining twenty-one. The infant married in testator's lifetime, and afterwards attained twenty-one. The Court ordered the stock to be transferred to her on her sole receipt. Laing v. Laing, 10 Sim. 315; 9 L. J., N. S., Ch., 48; 3 Jur. 1119.

3. A being seised for life of certain lands, and B. in remainder in fee simple therein; by articles executed in 1771, previously to the marriage of B. with L. N., to which articles A. was a party, it was agreed that A. and B. should, within six months after the marriage, settle and assure the said lands, so as to secure a jointure for L. N., “and so that immediately after the death of the said B. (subject, however, to the provisions made for jointure), the said lands should go to and be vested in the issue of the said B. by the said L. N.; and that such issue should also be entitled to a further sum of 1,000*l.* to be charged upon all the estate, real and personal, of the said B., but in such shares and proportions as B., by deed or will attested by three witnesses, should direct or appoint, and, failing such appointment, then in equal shares.”—Held, that the word “issue” meant “children,” and that the articles were to be carried into execution by giving all the children estates in common in fee. Thompson v. Simpson, 1 Dr. & War. 459.

But when the articles are very ambiguous, and there has been a great lapse of time, the Court will be slow to put a construction upon them, which would affect the rights of a purchaser, which it would have adopted without hesitation as between the parties themselves. Id. 491.

4. By articles relating to leases pur autre vie, and for years, and to money, it was agreed that said leases for lives and for years should be conveyed to trustees, in trust (after successive life estate to D. and J.). “After the decease of J., to the issue of J. and A., in such shares and proportions as the said J. should appoint, and for want of such appointment to go to such children equally, share and share alike; and for default of such issue, to the heirs, executors, and administrators of said J. during said leases; the money or the lands agreed to be purchased therewith, to go to issue of said J. and A., in such shares and proportions, etc.; and for want of such appointment, to be equally divided among such children, share and share alike; and if no children of said marriage, or all should die before twenty-one,” then a power to dispose of said money:—Held, that “issue” is to be construed “children,” and that the issue of J. and A. took the absolute interest in the chattel property, and a quasi fee in the freehold property; that a quasi estate tail cannot be barred by will, semble. Campbell v. Sandys, 1 Sch. & Lef. 281. S. P. Williams v. Jekyl, 2 Ves. 681.

5. On articles previously to the marriage of W. with R., the father of W. “bound the whole of the farm, etc., as a marriage portion to his son W., along with R.; the one-half of said farm to be the right, title, and interest of the issue, whether son or daughter, if begotten on the body of R. by W.” The issue take as tenants in common. Taggart v. Taggart, 1 Sch & Lef. 84.

6. T. H. by marriage articles covenanted to provide 30,000*l.* for an eldest son; and in case there should be issue of the marriage, an only son and an only daughter living at the time of his decease, to provide 10,000*l.* for such only daughter, to be paid to her at twenty-one or day of marriage; but in case there should be other issue of the marriage living at the time of his decease, besides one son and one daughter, then 20,000*l.* for all and every the child and children of the marriage, other than an only son, to be paid and payable to such child or children, and at such time, as T. H. should appoint, and in default of appointment to such child or children, share and share alike amongst them, if more than one, at twenty-one or day of marriage; there were living at the decease of T. H., one son and two daughters; one of the daughters died under age and unmarried:—Held, that the other daughter who attained twenty-one, being the survivor of a class, was entitled to the entire sum of 20,000*l.* provided for that class. Hynes v. Redington, Ll. & G. temp. Plunk. 33.

7. Before marriage, a husband executes a bond to trustees, the condition of which binds him to settle the property of the wife on her and her issue, in such manner as the trustees, in their discretion should think proper. After the marriage a settlement is made, by which part of the property is to be applied in payment of his debts, and for his furtherance in life; another part is settled on the wife for life, remainder to the issue of the marriage, and, in case there should not be any such issue, to the husband absolutely; and a third part of the property is given to the wife for life, and, after her decease, in case there should be no issue of the marriage, as she should appoint:—Held, that this settlement was not according to the condition of the bond, and did not bind the rights of the wife. Webb v. Kelly, 3 L. J., Ch., 172.

1. By executory articles for valuable consideration, made between A. and his wife and sons, it was agreed, after the death of A., his estates should be limited to and settled upon B. (his eldest son) and his issue, with remainder, in the event of B. dying in the lifetime of A. without lawful issue, to each of the other sons of A. in succession, according to their seniority, with an ultimate remainder to the right heirs of A. B. survived A., and had issue:—Held, in a suit to carry these articles into execution, that B. was entitled to an estate tail in possession, with remainder to him in fee. Dillon v. Blake, 16 Ir. Ch. R. 24.

2. By marriage articles, the husband agreed to settle out of the lands of K., in favour of A., his daughter by a former marriage, a jointure on his intended wife, the remainder of the lands on the issue male begotten on the wife, and in failure of issue male on the issue female; and in case A. should survive, and the lands of K. should not be made good, that then the lands of K., which were not settled on the former marriage, should be subject to the jointure, and be settled on the eldest son of the marriage, and, in failure of the said son, on the daughters of the said marriage. There was no male issue of the marriage, but female issue, B., C., and D.:—Held, that the lands of K. should be settled on them as tenants in common in tail. No settlement was executed, and the lands descended to A., B., C., and D., subject to the trusts of the articles, in 1763, when B., C., and D. went into possession. In 1783 they levied a fine, and conveyed to a purchaser for value, and covenanted that they were seised in fee. There were several subsequent conveyances for value. In 1847 the lands were contracted to be sold:—Held, in a suit for specific performance against the purchaser, that the legal title of A. and her heirs to one-fourth of the lands was barred by the Statute of Limitations, as a court of law would not notice the executory trusts of the articles, and the several conveyances operated as disseisins. Semble, the equitable title of the heir of A., on failure of issue of B., C., and D., was also barred; but:—Held, that as a fine created no discontinuance in equity, the title was too doubtful to be forced on the purchaser. A conveyance of all her estate, etc., was obtained from the devisee of the heir-at-law of A., and was held to put an end to the objection; for although the reversion belonged to the heir of the settlor he must trace title through the daughters, and all their right was extinguished by this conveyance and the fine. Stewart v. Conyngham (Marquis), 1 Ir. Ch. R. 534.

3. M. being entitled to an estate in fee, expectant upon the death of her father without other issue; by articles executed previous to her intermarriage with G. P. W. it was agreed that her estate should be settled to her separate use "if she should ever become entitled thereto," and on her issue; and that in case M. should die in the lifetime of G. P. W., he should receive the rents for his life, provided M. should ever become entitled thereto as aforesaid, but not otherwise; and G. P. W. covenanted to execute these limitations within six months after the celebration of the marriage. M. died before her father, who never had other issue, and did not execute the covenant:—Held, that under the articles, G. P. W. took an estate for life, although M. never became entitled to the possession, and that the breach of covenant did not affect the life estate. Wallace v. Wallace, 2 Dr. & War. 452; 1 Con. & L. 491.

4. Ante-nuptial articles were signed for the wife's personal estates being vested in trustees, "the trusts of the income being for the benefit of the husband and wife during their lives, and the trusts of the capital being for and amongst the children according to the appointment of the husband and wife, or the survivor of them; and in default of appointment, to the children equally; and in the event of there being no children, and of the husband being the survivor, the trust property to be at his absolute disposal." After the marriage a settlement was executed which limited the income to the husband and wife, during their joint lives, and to the survivor of them during his or her life, and then gave the capital to the children absolutely as tenants in common; but if there was no child, and the husband survived the wife, then to the husband. There was only one child of the marriage, and he died at the age of six months, in the lifetime of the parents. The husband died in the lifetime of the wife:—Held, that the capital of the fund and the arrears of income at the death of the husband belonged to the wife, for that the Court would have carried the articles into effect by giving the wife the first life estate to her separate use, and by making the shares of sons contingent on their attaining twenty-one, and of daughters on their attaining twenty-one or marrying, or by inserting clauses of survivorship and accruer on the death of sons under twenty-one and of daughters under that age and unmarried, so that the husband would have had no title as next of kin of his deceased infant child, and that the settlement must be rectified accordingly. Cogan v. Duffield, 2 L. R., Ch. D., 44; 45 L. J., Ch., 307; 24 W. R. 905; 34 L. T., N. S., 593. Affirming 45 L. J., Ch., 74; 20 L. R., Eq., 789.

5. By articles made previously to a marriage, lands were covenanted to be conveyed to the use of the husband and wife for their lives, with remainder to the use of the issue of the husband and wife, their heirs and assigns, for ever. There were a son and two daughters of the marriage, and each of them had two children:—Held (affirming 2 Dr. & Sm. 404; 12 L. T., N. S., 200; 13 W. R. 543), that the son would take an estate tail, with remainder to the daughters, and that the grandchildren took nothing. Phillips v. James, 11 Jur., N. S., 660; 13 W. R. 934; 12 L. T., N. S., 685; 3 De G. J. & S. 72.

1. By marriage articles, it was agreed that the interest of the amount of a policy of assurance, effected on the husband's life, should be applied, first, in payment of an annuity to the wife, and that the remainder of the interest should be paid among the issue of the marriage, in such shares as the husband and wife, or the survivor of them, should by deed or will appoint; and in default of appointment, share and share alike; and that the principal, after the death of the wife, should remain to the use of the issue of the marriage, in such manner and in such shares and proportions to and amongst the issue, as the husband and wife, or the survivor of them, should by deed or will appoint, and for want of such appointment, share and share alike. The articles contained a covenant to execute all acts necessary to carry them into execution. The husband survived the wife; but by a codicil to his will, made in 1854, and in her lifetime, he willed and devised that whatever property he should die possessed of, or be entitled to, either freehold or otherwise, after the payment of his debts and funeral expenses, should be equally divided amongst his sons and daughters which he then had or might have by his marriage; and that on the death of either of his sons or daughters by his marriage, before they arrived at twenty-one, the share or shares of him or her should be equally divided amongst the survivors. And he declared it to be his will and desire that, in the event of his being entitled to any property not named in his will, which contained an exclusive, and therefore invalid, appointment of the principal of the policy, his wife should be his residuary legatee:—Held, that the will and codicil did not amount to a valid execution of the power. Cronin v. Roope, 8 Ir. Ch. R. 103.

Held, also, that if a settlement had been executed, it should have contained a clause that, in the event of any of the children dying under age and unmarried, the share of the child so dying should go to the survivors. Id.

2. Devises.

2. In an executory trust a court of equity is sometimes obliged to depart from the words of a will, in order to direct a conveyance to be made, which will answer the intention of the testator. Synge v. Hales, 2 Ball & B. 507.

A devise, after the death of the survivor of testator's daughters, to all and every the child and children of his daughter S., who should be living at the time of her death, and to the heirs of such child or children, for ever, equally, share and share alike, afterwards revoked by a codicil, reciting the devise, and in lieu of it directing the trustees, upon the death of the survivor of his daughters, to convey the lands charged with 1,000*l.* for a granddaughter to the two sons of his daughter S. and their heirs; the 1,000*l.* to be paid by the grandsons as soon as they became entitled to the possession of the estate. The grandsons take as tenants in common. Id. 499.

3. If a testator directs his real estate to be settled on his son, his heir apparent, for life, with remainder to the first and other sons of his son in tail, with remainder to A. for life, with remainder to his first and other sons in tail, with remainders to other persons and their sons in like manner, and, ultimately, on his right heirs, and his personal estate to be settled on the same persons, in the same order and succession, and for the same estates and interests, so far as the nature of the property and the rules of law and equity will admit of, the Court, if a suit is instituted immediately after the testator's death for the purpose of having a settlement made, will order the ultimate limitation of the personal and real estate to be made to the person who is the testator's heir. Boydell v. Golightly, 14 Sim. 328; 9 Jur. 2.

4. Devise in strict settlement, with power to the tenants for life to jointure, on condition that two-thirds of the portion should, upon such marriage, be settled, one-third upon the eldest son of the marriage, and one other third upon the younger children. Upon the intention that the settlement should be conformable to the limitations of the real estate, a trust for the father for life was established, and the interest of the eldest son was not to be devested, except by his death under twenty-one, without issue male. Burrell v. Crutchley, 15 Ves. 544.

5. Proviso that if any of the tenants for life, in a devise and executory trust to convey in strict settlement, shall become possessed of the family estate, the devise or limitation directed shall thereupon cease and become void and not take effect; and the person next in remainder, under the said limitations or directions, thereupon become entitled to the possession. The first tenant in tail is entitled under the proviso, notwithstanding the descent of the other estate upon his father for life. Stanley v. Stanley, 16 Ves. 491.

6. When the general intent is to make a strict settlement, it shall prevail, though some of the limitations may seem contingent; but where the intent to create an estate tail is not plain, but doubtful, the Court will lay hold of anything, rather than put it in the power of a person on a remote contingency to bar all subsequent remainders. Lethieullier v. Tracey, 3 Atk. 781, 797.

7. Where trust is executory, and to be carried into execution by the Court of Equity, it will direct a conveyance of lands, notwithstanding they are gavelkind, according to the rule of common law. Roberts v. Diamell, 1 Atk. 608.

8. A will directed real estate to be settled to uses which did not exhaust the fee. In a suit to carry out the trusts of the will, to which the persons beneficially interested, who were an infant and a married woman, and the trustees of the will, were parties, the Court approved of a settlement purporting to be made in accordance with the will, the uses of which did exhaust the fee:—Held, first, that the decree approving the settlement was erroneous. Head v. Godlee, and Reynolds v. Godlee, Johns. 536; 6 Jur., N. S., 495; 29 L. J., Ch., 633.

But secondly, semble, that in a suit by persons claiming under one of the beneficiaries against persons claiming under the other beneficiary through the medium of the uses in excess of the limitations directed by the will, the Court was bound by the former decree until set aside upon a re-hearing. Id.

9. A trust created by will to purchase land, to be added and closely entailed to testator's family estate, in the possession of T. B.: testator declaring that his object was to have a head to the family, and that if T. B. should die without male issue, or dispose of the family estate, the residue of his fortune should go to A., or his nearest relative in the male line; how to be executed. Woolmore v. Burrows, 1 Sim. 512.

1. Devise to A. in fee, with directions to settle on descendants of his mother for their several lives, etc., A. may limit an inheritance to effectuate the general intent. Godolphin v. Godolphin, 1 Ves. 21.

2. Testator directed his estates to be settled on G. R. for life, with remainder to his issue in tail male in strict settlement, upon condition that all persons from time to time to come into possession of the estates should take and use the name and arms of T.:—Held, that the estates ought to be settled on G. R. for life, with remainder to his sons successively in tail male, with remainder to his daughters as tenants in common, with cross-remainders in tail male: and that the proviso to be inserted in the settlement, as to taking the name and arms and for giving over the estates on default, ought to be so expressed as to take away the estates from the defaulting party and his descendants only; that is, if a grandson of G. R. were the defaulting party, the consequence ought not to extend to the grandson's brothers. Trevor v. Trevor, 13 Sim. 108; 11 L. J., N. S., Ch., 417; 6 Jur. 863. Affirmed 1 H. L. Ca. 239.

Testator made two wills, one of his estates in Sussex, and the other of his estates in Bedfordshire. By the latter he devised those estates to trustees in trust to settle them on G. R., who was heir to the barony of D., for life, with remainder to his issue in tail male in strict settlement; "Upon the like condition to that I have made my will of my Sussex estates, so far as the change of circumstances will permit, that the said estates shall go over to the party next entitled, on the person for the time being possessed becoming entitled to the barony of D.":—Held, regard being had to the will of the Sussex estates, that the succession of a child or any male issue of a child of G. R. to the barony ought not to exclude that child or his issue male from the enjoyment of the Bedfordshire estates, unless some other child or the issue male of some child of G. R. were in existence to whom those estates might go over. Id.

3. A testator by his last will and testament directed the trustees therein appointed, to call in a certain sum of money to which he was entitled, and invest the same in the purchase of freehold estates in lands or hereditaments, of a clear estate of inheritance for the use of his son A. for and during his natural life, and after his death to the use of his first and other sons, according to seniority of age and priority of birth; and in case the said A. should happen to die without issue male, then in trust for his second son B. and the heirs male of his body, according to seniority of age and priority of birth; and desired that his said sons, and the several persons who should be in possession of such estates, should have a power to make leases not exceeding three lives or thirty-one years, at the full improved value:—Held, that A. was entitled to an estate tail in the lands to be purchased. Herbert v. Blunden, 1 Dr. & War. 78.

4. L. by his will devised his manors to trustees upon trust, to convey the same to his son J., for life, with remainder to trustees to preserve contingent remainders; with remainder to the second and other younger sons of J., in tail male. There was no limitation to the first son of J.; but the declaration of the trust of the term contained a provision to raise money for the daughters, on failure of issue male of the body of J. The will also provided, that in case J. should have any children, other than and besides an eldest or only son, then J. might raise money for the portion of younger sons or daughters:—Held, that the true construction of the will was, that the first son should have an estate tail male in reversion, after the death of his father. Langston v. Pole, Tam. 119; 7 L. J., Ch., 185.

5. Testatrix by her will gave 500*l.* to each of her two nieces to be settled as she should thereinafter describe, and directed that the provision therein made for her nieces should not be subject to the control of any husbands they might marry, but should remain vested in her executors in trust until a proper settlement was made. And by a codicil she directed that if either of her nieces should die without leaving issue, the legacy given to her should devolve to the other niece and her children, with a gift over if both should die without issue:—Held, that this was an executory trust, and that the nieces took life interests with remainder to their children and cross remainders between them. Holloway v. Collier, 1 W. R. 266.

6. Devise to trustees, as soon as his three daughters attained their respective ages of twenty-one, to convey to them and the heirs of their bodies as joint tenants, this not a joint estate, but to be construed as near as it may be; so that the conveyance must be at twenty-one respectively, with cross remainders. Marryat v. Townly, 1 Ves. 102.

7. Testator directed that if his daughter should marry a professional gentleman, or a man embarked in trade or business, and not possessed of landed property whereon to charge a suitable provision for her, certain trust funds should be settled upon her for life, and, after her decease, the principal to the issue of her marriage; but if she should marry a gentleman possessed of landed estate and he should make a suitable provision for her, and settle his estate on the issue of the marriage, that the trust fund should be paid to her husband. The daughter married a country gentleman not possessed of any landed estate, and not a professional gentleman, or embarked in any trade or business. He afterwards purchased a landed estate, and offered to make a settlement of it upon being paid his wife's fortune; but it was held, that the trust fund should be settled according to the directions in the will; and that the husband was not entitled to a life interest therein. Briscoe v. Briscoe, 1 J. & L. 334; 7 Ir. Eq. R. 123.

8. Testator directed his trustees to purchase lands in the counties of N. and D. to be settled, on the death of the eldest son of J. S. without issue (which happened), to the use of every son of J. S. then living, or who should be born in the testator's lifetime, and the assigns of such son during his life, with remainder to trustees to preserve contingent remainders; but to permit such son and his assigns to receive the rents during his life, and after his death to the use of such son's first and every other son successively in tail male, and on failure of such issue, to the use of the testator's right heirs:—Held, that the younger sons of S. took as tenants in common for life, with remainder as to each son's share to his first and other sons in tail male, with cross remainders over. Surtees v. Surtees, 12 L. R., Eq., 400; 25 L. T., N. S., 288; 19 W. R. 1043.

1. Under an executory trust in a will to settle lands, to be purchased with certain funds, upon A. for life, and afterwards according to her appointment, and, in default of appointment, to convey to the right heirs of A., with a similar trust as to the residue of the fund not laid out in the purchase of land; the trust, in default of appointment, being for the executors or administrators of A., it was held, that, as A. took an absolute interest in the money under the last trust, in default of appointment, the direction to convey the lands to her right heirs must be construed as words of limitation, and not to vest any estate in her heirs as purchasers. Webb v. Shaftesbury (Earl), 3 Myl. & K. 590.

2. Devise in trust for a son of the testator's nephew A., at the age of twenty-four; if he have no son, to A., son of the testator's great-nephew B.; but if neither have a son, then to a son of the testator's great-niece's daughter, taking his name, whoever should take not to be put in possession of any part of the testator's effects until twenty-four, nor the executors to give up their trust till a proper entail be made to the heir male by him; is an executory trust in tail for an only son of A. in ventre at the testator's death; and not void for uncertainty, nor too remote. Blackburn v. Stables, 2 Ves. & B. 367.

3. Devise to the heir-at-law and his issue male in strict settlement, remainder in trust to be sold, and the money to be distributed among certain persons, or the survivors or survivor of them, and that the share of one should, previous to her marriage, be settled upon her for life, and after her death upon her issue, in default of issue upon her right heirs; the produce of the sale is to be considered as personal estate, and vests in the survivors at the death of the tenant for life, without issue male. A settlement in trust for the husband for life, then for the wife for life, then for the children as they should appoint; in default of appointment, equally; if no children, according to their joint appointment; in default thereof, to the husband, his executors, etc., is a sufficient execution of the direction in the will. Brograve v. Winder, 2 Ves. J. 634.

4. A testator directed that upon the death of his wife, to whom he gave a life interest in all his property, both real and personal, his nephew, whom he named, should be heir to all his property not otherwise disposed of; but added, that as he had had little intercourse with his nephew, and was apprehensive that his habits might require some control, whatever portion of the property might be possessed by him was to be secured by the executors for the benefit of his family:—Held, that the real estate was to be settled on the nephew for life, with remainder to his sons successively in tail male, with remainder to his daughters as tenants in common in fee, and the personal estate upon the nephew for life, with remainder to all his children as joint tenants, with a proviso, that in the event of all the children dying under twenty-one, and daughters unmarried, or if sons, without issue, the personalty should be held in trust for the nephew absolutely. White v. Briggs, 2 Ph. 583; 17 L. J., N. S., Ch., 196.

5. One devises all his money in the government funds, to be laid out in the purchase of land of 300*l.* or 400*l.* per annum, to be settled on the eldest son, and the heirs male of his body, remainder to the second son, and the heirs male of his body, etc., and devises the rest of his personal estate to his eldest son, and the heirs male of his body; remainder to his second son, etc. The personal estate cannot be entailed; but the whole vests in the eldest son. Seale v. Seale, 1 P. W. 290; Pre. Ch. 421; Gilb. Rep. 105.

6. It does not follow, because the word "issue" in one part of the will means children only, that it should have that meaning also in another part; and where, after a bequest to A. and B. and their issue, in the sense of children, the residue was given to A. and B. equally, and to be divided between them, with benefit of survivorship, upon the death of either under twenty-one; not to be subject to the control of their husbands, but to be held in trust for them and their issue respectively until they attained twenty-one, if unmarried, or if married until a proper settlement could be made upon them and their issue, so that they should receive the dividends exclusively of their husbands, and if they both died under twenty-one, and without issue, then over; both attained twenty-one, and one of them died leaving children and grandchildren:—Held, that both the children and grandchildren were entitled to her share per capita as tenants in common. Head v. Randall, 2 Y. & Coll. C. C. 231; 7 Jur. 298.

7. B., in 1842, transferred to three persons a debenture, without any declaration of trust other than an expression in a letter written by him to his solicitor shortly before the transfer, in which the three persons were named as trustees, and the trusts of a proposed settlement of the debenture were stated to be "for my niece C. M. and her children":—Held, that a valid trust was declared by the letter in favour of C. M. for life, and afterwards of her children as joint tenants. Re Bellaria, 12 L. R., Eq., 218; 24 L. T., N. S., 466; 19 W. R. 699.

The transferees of the debenture were already trustees of a will, which contained limitations for the benefit not only of C. M. and her children, but of the issue of deceased children, and from contemporaneous entries in a solicitor's book it appeared that, after the date of the letter, B. said he had made up his mind, to transfer to the same three persons, "without stating any trust or condition;" also that B. was advised to take a letter from them that they held the debenture upon the same trusts as the will but no space of any such letter appeared. The trustees paid the income to C. M. during her life, and upon her death transferred the fund into court. There was issue of the deceased children of C. M.:—Held, that a trust for the issue of the deceased children had not been sufficiently declared. Th.

1. Testator devised lands, subject to an annuity to his wife, to his son for life, with remainder to the son's first and other sons in tail, with remainder, subject to another annuity to his wife, to his grandson and the grandson's first and other sons in like manner, with remainder over. The son died without issue; and, thereupon, the testator, by a codicil, charged the lands with three further annuities. He afterwards made two other codicils, not duly attested. He then made a fourth, which was duly attested, "revoking several of the dispositions heretofore made by me in my said will and codicils, of all my freehold, copyhold, and personal estate, of every kind; and, instead of such devise, disposition, and bequest thereof, I do give all my freehold, copyhold, and personal estate of every kind and wheresoever situate, unto my daughter, for her life; and, after the determination of that estate, unto my grandson and his heirs in strict entail as in my will directed." He then directed that his grandson, who was an infant, should not be put in possession of his estates until he attained thirty-one; and that, in the interval, the rents should be accumulated for the benefit of his grandson and his heirs; "and, in failure of issue of my said grandson, I order that my said estates and effects shall go and descend as is by my said will directed." The testator then confirmed the several annuities and donations bequeathed in his will and former codicils, and gave another annuity to his wife; thereby, in all other respects but what was above mentioned, ratifying and confirming his will and codicils:—Held, that the grandson took only an estate for life. The Court, advertent to the clause postponing the possession, which would be nugatory if A. was to be tenant in tail, and also observing that a strict mode of construction would, if applied to the words "in failure of issue," defeat the limitations over, held, in accordance with the certificate of the Court of Queen's Bench, that A. was tenant for life. Graves v. Hicks, 11 Sim. 536; 10 L. J., N. S., Ch., 185; 5 Jur. 674; and at law, 5 Adol. & Ell. 38; 8 Bingh. 479.

2. A testator who was seised in fee of three estates, devised one of them, called the Tempo Estate, to his daughter Letitia for life, with remainder to her issue in tail, and, in default of such issue, to his nephew, Robert James, for life, with remainder to his issue in tail, with several remainders over, but leaving the ultimate reversion in fee undisposed of. He then devised the two remaining estates to his other daughters in strict settlement, but made no disposition of the ultimate reversions in fee. The testator was also seised of divers freehold lands, and was possessed of considerable personal property, and after devising various parts of his freehold lands to the different persons, and bequeathing some pecuniary legacies, he concluded with these words: "I leave and bequeath the rest, residue, and remainder of my properties, both freehold and personal, of whatsoever nature and kind I may die possessed of, to my brother Robert; and if my said brother Robert shall survive me, I request and desire that he shall convert all the personal property into fee simple property, and at his decease leave the same entailed on his son Robert James, in the same manner as I have myself entailed the Tempo Estate":—Held, that the freehold estates which passed under the residuary devise, as well as the residuary personal property, are within the trust to entail contained in the residuary devise. Held, also, that this trust was to be executed by giving a life estate to Robert James, with remainder to his sons and daughters in tail, according to the limitations of the Tempo Estate. Tennent v. Tennent, 1 Dr. 161; 1 J. & L. 379; 7 Ir. Eq. R. 361.

3. A lady devised freehold estates to trustees for her sister E. for life, with remainder in strict settlement to her sons, excluding the second, and with powers of jointuring and charging portions. By letters patent, subsequent to the will, a barony was created and limited to E. for life, with remainder to her second son R. and the heirs male of his body, and in default of such issue to the third and younger sons of E. and the heirs male of their bodies respectively and successively. The patent contained a shifting clause, by which if any person taking thereunder should succeed to the earldom of D., and there should then or thereafter be a younger son or heir male of a younger son of E., then the succession to the barony was to devolve upon the son of E. or the heir who would be next entitled to succeed thereto if the person succeeding to the earldom of D. was dead without issue. By a subsequent codicil, the testatrix devised her estates to trustees on trust, to settle the same in a course of entail corresponding as nearly as might be with the limitations of the barony, and the provisos affecting the same contained in the patent, and with all such powers, provisos, declarations, and agreements as the trustees should think proper or their counsel advise. The House of Lords after E.'s death declared that the estates ought to be limited in strict settlement to the second son for life, with remainder to his first and other sons in tail male, with remainder to the third and other younger sons of E. and the heirs male of their bodies respectively and successively in tail male, and that the settlement should contain a shifting clause similar to that in the letters patent:—Held, that clauses postponing the vesting of portions until the death of the person creating them, and providing for the cesser of jointures and portions charged on the estates upon the person charging them succeeding to the earldom of D., ought not to be inserted in the settlement. Holmesdale (Viscount) v. West, 40 L. J., Ch., 795; 12 L. R., Eq., 280.

V. EXPRESS DIRECTIONS TO SETTLE IN "STRICT SETTLEMENT."

4. If lands are devised in trust to be settled on A. and his heirs, in strict entail, the lands ought to be settled on A. for life, and on the persons designated as his heirs, in succession. Testator devised lands, subject to an annuity to his wife, to his son for life, with remainder to the son's first and other sons in tail, with remainder, subject to another annuity, to his wife, to his grandson, and the grandson's first and other sons in like manner, with remainders over; and he gave his residuary personal estate to his son. The son died without issue; and, thereupon, the testator, by a codicil, charged the lands with three further annuities, one for his wife, another for his daughter, and the third for her husband; and gave his residuary personal estate to his wife. He afterwards made two other codicils, but they were not duly attested. He then made a fourth, which was duly attested, "revoking several of the dispositions, heretofore made by me in my said will and codicils, of all my freehold, copyhold, and personal estate of every kind; and, instead of such devise, disposition, and bequest thereof, I do give all my freehold, copyhold, and personal estate of every kind, and wheresoever situate, unto my daughter, for her life; and, after the determination of that estate, unto my grandson and his heirs in strict entail as in my will directed." He then directed that his grandson, who was an infant, should not be put in possession of his estates until he attained thirty-one; and that, in the interval, the rents should be accumulated for the benefit of his grandson and heirs: "and, in failure of issue of my said grandson, I order that my said estates and effects shall go and descend as is by my said will directed." The testator then confirmed the several annuities and donations bequeathed in his will and former codicils, and gave another annuity to his wife; thereby, in all other respects but what was above mentioned, ratifying and confirming his will and codicils:—Held, that the grandson took, not an estate tail, but only an estate for life in the lands. Graves v. Hicks, 11 Sim. 536; 10 L. J., N. S., Ch., 185; 5 Jur. 674. And see S. C. at law, 5 Adol. & Ell. 38; 8 Bing. 479.

1. When an executory trust for the settlement of freehold estates in strict settlement directs, either expressly or by reference to the trusts of other property, that certain persons shall take life estates, the use of the words "in strict settlement" does not make the tenants for life dispensable for waste. Stanley v. Coulthurst, 10 L. R., Eq., 259; 39 L. J., Ch., 650; 18 W. R. 969; 23 L. T., N. S., 761.

2. Directions as to the proper settlement to be made where property was directed by will to be "settled strictly." Loch v. Bagley, 15 W. R. 1103.

VI. DIRECTIONS TO SETTLE ON A FEMALE.

3. A legacy given to a married woman, to be settled on her in Italy, was ordered to be paid to a banker in Italy, on his giving security that it should be settled, according to the law of Italy, on the wife, for her separate use. Brown v. Tatnall, 6 L. J., N. S., Ch., 371.

4. Where a testator directed that his daughters' shares under his will should be "settled upon themselves strictly":—Held, that the income of each daughter's share should, during the joint lives of herself and her husband, be paid to her for life for her separate use, without power of anticipation; and if she died first, then her share should go as she should by will appoint, and in default of appointment to her next-of-kin, exclusively of her husband; and if she survived, then to her absolutely. Loch v. Bagley, 4 L. R., Eq., 122.

5. Form of settlement directed by the Court, where a testator had directed his trustees to hold a fund in trust for his daughters, to be settled on them and their issue free from their husband's control during the life of such daughters. Stanley v. Jackman, 5 W. R. 302; 23 Beav. 450.

6. Form of settlement directed by the Court, where a testator directed personality to be settled on his daughters, independent of their coverture. Eustace v. Robinson, 7 L. R., Ir., 83.

7. A father directed his property to be divided into nine shares and give one and a half share to each of his two daughters, "to be settled on themselves at their marriage." At his death the two daughters were infants. The two daughters having attained twenty-one, and being unmarried:—Held, that they were entitled to their shares absolutely, and that there was no trust for a settlement which the Court could execute. Magrath v. Morehead, 12 L. R., Eq., 491; 24 L. T., N. S., 868; 41 L. J., Ch., 120.

8. A testator gave to his daughter the sum of 15,000*l.*, to be kept in trust by his executors till she should attain the age of twenty-one or marry with consent, whichever might first happen, when this sum was to be settled on his said daughter, but, failing her attaining twenty-one or having issue by such marriage, then the money to devolve upon others. The daughter attained the age of twenty-one, without having been married:—Held, that she was entitled to the legacy absolutely, without any settlement being made. Arnold v. Arnold, 16 Sim. 404; 18 L. J. (N. S.), Ch., 90.

9. A testator by his will dated the 2nd July 1870, gave a legacy to a married woman for her separate use without power of anticipation, and directed that "for the purpose of securing to her the separate enjoyment without power of anticipation against any husband for the time being, the trustee should settle the legacy in such manner as would carry out the said purpose." Previously to the date of the will the legatee had been judicially separated from her husband, and had ever since lived apart from him:—Held, that she was entitled to have the legacy paid to her. Munt v. Glynes, 41 L. J., Ch., 639; 27 L. T., N. S., 366; 20 W. R. 823.

10. Bequest of the testator's property to his wife to bring up and educate his children, and when they should come of age, to settle on them what she should deem prudent, reserving to herself a sufficient maintenance; and, at her death, the property remaining to be equally divided amongst his children; with a gift to trustees for the children, in case of the marriage of his widow:—Held, that the widow took a life interest in the property, with a power to settle or appoint the same on or to the children of the testator, but not on or so his grandchildren; and that the children took vested interests in the property at the testator's death, liable to be divested by such appointment. Kennerley v. Kennerley, 10 Hare 160; 16 Jur. 649.

11. Testator gave 5,000*l.* stock to a female infant, to be paid or transferred to or settled on her, by his executors, by such deed or instrument in writing as they should think most prudent and proper on her attaining twenty-one. The infant married in the testator's lifetime, and afterwards attained twenty-one. The Court ordered the stock to be transferred to her on her sole receipt. Laing v. Laing, 10 Sim. 315; 9 L. J., N. S., Ch., 48; 3 Jur. 1119.

1. A father gave the residue of his estate in trust for all his children who being sons should attain twenty-one, or being daughters should attain that age or marry, and if any of his children should die before attaining a vested interest, leaving issue, their shares to go to their children with a proviso that, notwithstanding the trusts aforesaid, on the marriage of any daughter a moiety of her share should be held in trust for such daughter for life, and afterwards for her children.—Held, that the daughters who had attained twenty-one, and had not married, were entitled to the whole of their shares absolutely. Re Dowling, 14 L. R., Eq., 463.

2. Bequest of 2,000*l.*, for the benefit of a feme sole, "to be paid upon her marriage, and to be settled upon her by her settlement," the interest to be paid to her in the meantime; and, in case she should not marry before attaining the age of thirty-five years, the principal sum to be paid to herself. The legatee married under the age of thirty-five years, and applied for payment of a sum of money in court, which represented the legacy:—Held, that a settlement should be made of the legacy upon the legatee and her children. Duckett v. Thompson, 11 L. R., Ir., 424.

3. Where a precatory trust has been created by will in favour of "children," simpliciter, the trustee may, in executing the trust, limit the shares of daughters to their separate use. Willis v. Kymor, 7 L. R., Ch. D., 181; 47 L. J., Ch., 90; 38 L. T., N. S., 207.

4. Where articles for a settlement directed the property to be conveyed on trust to pay the income to the wife, or such person as he should appoint, during her life, for her own absolute use and benefit, free from marital control and liability:—Held, that in the settlement a restraint against anticipation should not be inserted. Symonds v. Wilkes, 11 Jur., N. S., 659; 13 W. R. 1026; 12 L. T., N. S., 598.

5. A father gave real and personal property to trustees for his daughter, and directed that, if she should marry, it should be so settled that she might enjoy the income during her life for her separate use:—Held, that the trust for the separate use during life, being merely executory, should be carried into execution with a restraint upon anticipation. Re Dunnill, 6 Ir. R., Eq., 322.

6. A testator, by his will, gave real and personal property to his daughter A. absolutely; but by a codicil made subsequent to her marriage, he directed that "it should be settled to the exclusion of her present or any future husband, that the same might belong to her during her life, and be secured for the benefit of her children, equally, after death, so that the issue of any such child dying in her lifetime might take his or her parent's share;" and in default of such children or other issue over:—Held, that the property must be settled in trust for A. for life, to her separate use without power of anticipation; and, after her decease, upon trust for such of her children as should survive her, and for the issue living at her death of such of her children as should not survive her equally as tenants in common, the issue to take per stirpes, but inter se equally as tenants in common. That there should be limitations, in the nature of cross-remainders, in favour of such of the children and issue as should survive A. in respect of the share of any child dying in her lifetime without leaving issue, and in respect of the share of any issue of any child similarly dying. That the realty should be settled as realty; and (as the testator, by simply directing a settlement, must have intended) with powers of leasing and sale and exchange, and with a receipt clause; and that the settlement should contain provisions for maintenance, education, and advancement, and a power to appoint new trustees. Turner v. Sargent, 17 Beav. 515; 2 W. R. 50.

Form of the limitations to the issue inter se in such a settlement. S. C. 2 W. R. 50.

7. J. T. by his will gave all his property to trustees in trust for his three daughters equally, to be paid to them as they respectively attained twenty-one, or married with the consent of the trustees. Provided that if they married with such consent under age, the trustees at their discretion might pay the share to such daughter so marrying, or settle it upon her or her issue, with a gift over. One of the daughters having married under age and without consent, the question was, whether her share could be settled, the trustees being willing to settle it:—Held, that there was nothing in the will to authorise a settlement, and nothing could be done until she attained twenty-one. Taylor v. Auston, 1 W. R. 252; 1 Drew. 459.

See also IX. infra.

VII. DIRECTIONS TO SETTLE PERSONALTY AS HEIRLOOMS OR ON THE TRUSTS OF FREEHOLDS.

8. Covenant in marriage settlement, to settle leasehold estates in trust for such persons, and such or the like estates, ends, intent, and purposes, as far as the law would allow, as declared concerning real estates limited to the first and other sons in tail male, with several remainders; the Court, in executing the covenant, declared that no person should be entitled to the absolute property unless he should attain twenty-one, or die under that age, leaving issue male. Newcastle (Duke) v. Lincoln (Countess), 3 Ves. 387. But see the variations in this decree, id. 398. n., and 12 Ves. 218, on appeal.

9. A testatrix bequeathed jewels to S. "to go and be held as heirlooms by him and by his eldest son on his decease, and to go and descend to the eldest son of such eldest son, and so on to the eldest son of his descendants, as far as the rules of law or equity would permit," and she requested him to do all in his power, by his will or otherwise, to give effect to that her wish:—Held, that these words created an executory trust in S., and that the jewels must be settled on him for life, with remainder to his eldest son for life, with remainder to the eldest son of such eldest son, but to be divested in case of his death in his father's life, or after his father's death under twenty-one; but that, subject to these limitations, the beneficial interest in the jewels remained in him. Shelley v. Shelley, 37 L. J., Ch., 357; 6 L. R., Eq., 540; 16 W. R. 1036.

Family jewels may be settled as heirlooms independently of any real estate. Ib.

1. A settlement, on marriage, of real estate, upon trust for the intended wife for life, remainder to the husband for life, and, after the death of the survivor, "in trust for and to be released and conveyed unto" the children, as the parents or the survivor should appoint; in default, "in trust for and to be released and conveyed unto" the children, as tenants in common in tail; and in default of issue, if the wife should survive the husband, "in trust for and to be released and conveyed unto" the wife, "her heirs and assigns for ever." By the same deed personal property was assigned to the trustees, upon trust to pay the income and principal "to such person and persons, for such uses, ends, intents, and purposes, and in such manner and form, and subject to the same powers, provisos, contingencies, declarations, and agreements, as were expressed concerning the payment by the trustees of the rents and profits of the real estate, and concerning their release and conveyance of the same, or as near thereto as circumstances and the nature of the case would admit".—Held, that this trust of the personality was not rendered executory by reference to the direction to release and convey the real estate, such direction being merely superadded to a distinct declaration of trust of such real estate. Doncaster v. Doncaster, 3 Kay & J. 96.

This construction was not altered by a proviso immediately following the limitation of the personal estate, that the ultimate limitation in favour of the heirs of the wife should, with respect to the personal estate, be construed to be for her next-of-kin; the meaning of such proviso being only, that if, by the failure of the preceding limitations, the real estate should at any time become vested in possession in the heirs of the wife, the personality, which was settled upon corresponding trusts, should belong to her next-of-kin. Ib.

There was only one child of the marriage, who died an infant in the lifetime of his father. On the death of the father:—Held, that such child took an absolute interest in the personality, subject to open and let in other children, if any. Ib.

Part of the personal property consisted of a share of real estate under a will, by which it had been devised in trust for sale; and the settlement contained a power for the trustees, with the consent of the husband and wife, and with the concurrence of the persons entitled to other shares of this property, to elect to take it as real estate, and to hold it upon the trusts of the other real estate contained in the settlement:—Held, that this power did not alter the construction of the limitations of the personal estate; but that, when the settled personal estate became the absolute property of the child, the power could no longer be exercised. Ib.

VIII. DIRECTIONS TO SETTLE PROPERTY TO GO WITH A TITLE.

2. Direction by deed, after the decease of the settlor, to convey and settle estates in such a manner that the same shall, so far as the law will permit, be strictly settled, so as to go along with a barony, so long as the person possessed of the dignity shall be a lineal descendant of the settlor, and be held and enjoyed by the person for the time being possessed of the dignity and being such lineal descendant, so that during every suspension or abeyance of the dignity, within the limits prescribed by law for strict settlements, the rents and profits of the estate shall be equally divided amongst the co-heirs per stirpes of the person or persons respectively, by reason of whose death or deaths without issue male, the suspension or abeyance shall be for the time being occasioned:—Held, that the Court would endeavour to give effect to this direction, and, for that purpose, refer it to the Master to approve of a proper settlement in conformity with it. Banks v. Le Despencer, 10 Sim. 576; 9 L. J., N. S., Ch., 185; 4 Jur. 601.

Estates settled so as to go along with a barony in fee. Form of a settlement approved of by the Court, in pursuance of a direction contained in a deed executed by the late Lord Le Despencer, that his estates should, so far as the law would allow, be strictly settled, after his death, so as to go along with the baronial dignity of Le Despencer (which was a barony in fee), and be held and enjoyed by the person for the time being possessed of the same dignity, for the support thereof, so long as the person possessed of the same dignity should be a lineal descendant of the late Lord, but with a provision that in case the dignity should, at any time or times within the limits prescribed by law for strict settlements, be suspended or in abeyance, the rents and profits of the same estates should, during the continuance of every such suspension or abeyance, be equally divided amongst the co-heirs per stirpes of the person or persons respectively by reason of whose death or deaths without issue male, such suspension or abeyance should be, for the time being, occasioned. The Court approved of a settlement in which the latter object was secured by a proviso, subject to be defeated by a recovery, and not as suggested by the Court at the first hearing, by a term of 1,000 years, prior in limitation to all the other uses; and the Court also declined to appoint a protector of the settlement, by reason of his irresponsibility if appointed. S. C. 11 Sim. 508; 12 L. J., N. S., Ch., 293; 7 Jur. 210.

3. A., having a power of revocation and new appointment over an estate, of which B., his heir, was tenant in tail, by his will directed the estate "to be attached to his title as closely as possible":—Held, that the estate of B., and those of all other tenants in tail in esse at A.'s death (living in the line of the title), were abridged to estates forlife only. Dorchester (Lord) v. Eppingham (Earl), 2 Beav. 180. n.

4. A trust created by will to purchase land to be added and closely entailed to testator's family estate, in the possession of T. B., testator declaring that his object was to have a head to the family, and that if T. B. should die without male issue, or dispose of the family estate, the residue of his fortune should go to A. B., or his nearest relative in the male line; how to be executed. Woolmore v. Burrows, 1 Sim. 512.

1. Property was by a codicil directed to be settled "in a course of entail to correspond as far as may be practicable" with the limitations of a newly created peerage contained in letters patent, which limitations were to a countess for life, remainder to her second son and the heirs male of his body, remainder to her third and other younger sons and the heirs male of their respective bodies successively:—Held, that a strict settlement of the property ought to be directed corresponding in order of succession with the limitations of the peerage, but limiting the estates of the second and other younger sons of the countess, being lives in esse at the death of the testatrix, to estates for their respective lives, with remainder to their first and other sons in tail male, mainly on the ground that the object was to endow the title, and that a peerage being inalienable, such limitations would best correspond in effect with the limitations of the peerage. West v. Holmesdale (Viscount), 4 L. R., H. L., 543; 39 L. J., Ch., 505.

The codicil, by which the settlement was directed, referred to a will thereby revoked, limiting a different course of entail, and containing powers of jointuring and charging portions, and making the estates for life unimpeachable for waste. The codicil only directed that the settlement should "contain such powers, provisoes, declarations, and agreements, as the trustees therein named should consider proper, or their counsels should advise":—Held, that the will ought to be the model of the settlement, and that the estates of tenants for life should be without impeachment of waste, and that the settlement should contain powers of jointuring and charging portions to the limits contained in the revoked devise. Id.

2. A lady devised freehold estates to trustees for her sister E. for life, with remainder in strict settlement to her sons, excluding the second, and with powers of jointuring and charging portions. By letters patent, subsequent to the will, a barony was created and limited to E. for life, with remainder to her second son R. and the heirs male of his body, and in default of such issue to the third and younger sons of E. and the heirs male of their bodies respectively and successively. The patent contained a shifting clause, by which if any person taking thereunder should succeed to the earldom of D., and there should then or thereafter be a younger son or heir male of a younger son of E., then the succession to the barony was to devolve upon the son of E. or the heir who would be next entitled to succeed thereto if the person succeeding to the earldom of D. was dead without issue. By a subsequent codicil, the testatrix devised her estates to trustees in trust, to settle the same in a course of entail corresponding as nearly as might be with the limitations of the barony, and the provisoes affecting the same contained in the patent, and with all such powers, provisoes, declarations, and agreements as the trustees should think proper or their counsel advise. The House of Lords after E.'s death declared that the estates ought to be limited in strict settlement to the second son for life with remainder to his first and other sons in tail male, with remainder to the third and other younger sons of E. and the heirs male of their bodies respectively and successively in tail male, and that the settlement should contain a shifting clause similar to that in the letters patent:—Held, that clauses postponing the vesting of portions until the death of the person creating them, and providing for the cesser of jointures and portions charged on the estates upon the person charging them succeeding to the earldom of D., ought not to be inserted in the settlement. Holmesdale (Viscount) v. West, 12 L. R., Eq., 280; 40 L. J., Ch., 795.

IX. WHAT POWERS INSERTED IN THE SETTLEMENT.

1. Powers of Appointment, 6904.
2. Powers of Appointment of New Trustees, 6905.
3. Powers to Jointure or Charge Portions, 6905.
4. Powers of Leasing, 6906.
5. Powers of Sale or Exchange, 6906.
6. Other Powers, 6907.

1. Powers of Appointment.

3. A testator left to his daughter Jane the sum of 2,000*l.*, to be settled on her when she married, or to be paid to her on her attaining twenty-one; should she die not leaving issue, the 2,000*l.* to fall into the residue of his estate. Jane married in her father's lifetime. The Court directed the legacy to be settled in trust for her separate use for life, remainder for her children living at her death, according to her appointment; in default of appointment, for her sons at twenty-one, and her daughters at that age or on marriage; remainder for her next-of-kin; and if she had no child living at her death, the legacy to become part of the testator's residue. Young v. Mackintosh, 13 Sim. 445; 7 Jur. 383.

4. A father directed a fund, given to his daughter, to be settled "upon her and her issue," so that "the same might not be liable or subject to the debts, control, or engagements of any husband" whom she might happen to marry during her lifetime:—Held, that the settlement ought to give the daughter a power of appointment by will, in default of issue. Stanley v. Jackman, 23 Beav. 450; 5 W. R. 302.

Form of settlement in such a case. Id.

5. Where a testator had directed, that, in the event of the marriage of his daughter, a portion of his property should be secured to her and the issue of her marriage by a settlement or some other good assurance, in such manner as his trustees or trustee for the time being might think fit, the Court, on the application, to which the surviving trustee was a party, approved of a power in the settlement made on the marriage of the daughter enabling her to appoint by will a life estate in the property to her husband. Charlton v. Rendall, 11 Hare 296.

1. Upon the marriage of H. T. with L. N., he covenanted to convey certain lands upon trust, that the same should go and be vested in the issue of H. T. by L. N., and that such issue should also be entitled to a further sum of 1,000*l.*, to be charged on all other the real and personal estates of H. T. not therein comprised, but in such shares and proportions as H. T. should by deed or will appoint, and in default thereof as L. N., in case she survived H. T., should by deed or will appoint, and failing such direction in equal shares:—Held, that a court of equity would execute the articles by giving successive powers of appointment to H. T. and L. N., and in default of appointment a limitation to the children of the marriage as tenants in common in fee. Thompson v. Simpson, 1 Dr. & War. 459.

2. In settling a fund in pursuance of a will by which the fund was bequeathed to a man until marriage and then to be settled on his wife and children, the Court inserted a power for the husband and wife jointly by deed, and for the survivor by deed or will, to appoint among the children. Observations on Oliver v. Oliver (10 L. R., Ch. D., 755). Re Gowan, Gowan v. Gowan, 17 L. R., Ch. D., 778; 50 L. J., Ch., 248.

Form of judgment settling a fund. Id.

An order of the Court making a settlement should bear the usual settlement stamp. Id.

2. Powers of Appointment of New Trustees.

3. A lady being entitled to a sum, payable at a future time, out of her father's estates, it was agreed, by articles on her marriage, that in the settlement to be made in pursuance thereof a power should be inserted for her father in his lifetime, or his executors within six months after the sum should be payable, to invest that sum in the names of trustees to be appointed for the purpose, and for the trustees, with the consent of the husband and wife, or the survivor, or of their own authority, as the case should happen, to change the securities, the trusts of the fund being for the husband for his life, then to the wife for her life, then to the children. No settlement was executed, and the father and the husband died before the fund was invested, leaving the wife surviving and four children:—Held, that the wife had no power to appoint a trustee to receive the funds. Brasier v. Hudson, 9 Sim. 11.

4. Where a marriage was contracted abroad, by articles stipulating that the funds settled should, "under the laws of England, be regulated, made binding, and carried into full and complete effect;" on a subsequent bill filed for carrying the articles into effect:—Held, that powers to appoint new trustees, as often as should be necessary, was a proper power to be inserted in the settlement. Sampayo v. Gould, 12 Sim. 426; 11 L. J., N. S., Ch., 121.

5. Court will not order a clause to enable trustees to appoint others to be inserted in a conveyance, there being no provision to that effect in trust deed. Bayley v. Mansell, 4 Madd. 226.

6. Testator directed his real estates to be settled on certain persons in strict settlement, and that there should be inserted in the settlement so to be made powers of leasing, sale, partition, and exchange. "And my will is that, in such intended settlement, shall be inserted all such other proper and reasonable powers, as are usually inserted in settlements of the like nature":—Held, that a power to appoint new trustees was a proper and reasonable power to be inserted in the settlement. Lindon v. Fleetwood, 6 Sim. 152. And see Turner v. Sargent, 17 Beav. 515; 2 W. R. 50.

3. Powers to Jointure or Charge Portions.

7. Will directed settlement to be made of real estate on A., and his first and other sons in tail, with power of jointuring, leasing, sale, and exchange, and all other clauses, powers, and provisos usually inserted in settlements of same kind:—Held, these last words did not give power to charge with portions. Higginson v. Barneby, 2 Sim. & S. 616.

8. A power was reserved, in articles before marriage, to husband and wife to alter and vary the provisions and terms of the articles, in such manner as to them should seem fit, previous to the execution of the settlement:—Held, not to authorise the insertion in the settlement of a power enabling the husband to jointure a future wife, or to charge portions for younger children of a future marriage. Bedford (Duke) v. Abercorn (Marquis), 1 Myl. & C. 312; 5 L. J., N. S., Ch., 230.

9. Testator directed a settlement to be made of his estates, and a power to be inserted in it enabling the tenant for life to jointure any wife or wives, at one or several times, to the extent of one-fifth part of the then ordinary annual rental of the estates:—Held, that the settlement ought to authorise the tenant for life to charge the estates with a clear yearly rent-charge not exceeding one-fifth of the yearly rent of the estates payable at the time of creating the charge. Trevor v. Trevor, 1 H. L. Ca. 239. Affirming 13 Sim. 108; 11 L. J., N. S., Ch., 417; 6 Jur. 863.

10. A covenant in marriage articles to settle an estate, after the payment of an annuity to the intended wife, "upon his issue" by the intended wife, must be construed as a covenant for strict settlement, and excludes the husband from creating charges in favour of younger children. Grier v. Grier, 5 L. R., H. L., 688. Affirming 6 Ir. R., Eq., 1.

By articles of marriage it was recited that the intended husband had received 600*l.* from his intended wife, and he covenanted to settle upon her his lands, with the ordinary powers of distress and entry, and to settle the remainder of his lands "upon his issue by" his intended wife. There were several children of the marriage. Some years after the marriage he executed a deed, by which he charged on his lands various sums of money in favour of younger children, devising the lands themselves to his eldest son and his other sons successively in tail male:—Held, that this deed creating these charges was void, for that the covenant in the articles gave him no power to charge the lands for the benefit of the younger children, and must be interpreted to mean that he would settle the lands in the ordinary form of strict settlement. Id.

4. Powers of Leasing.

1. Articles for a settlement on ward of court, with a power of leasing for twenty-one years, and other usual powers, etc., do not authorise the introduction of a power granting building leases for long terms. Pearse v. Baron, Jac. 158.

2. A reference was made to the Master, to inquire whether certain proposed powers of leasing were usual in that part of Ireland in which the estates were situated, and whether any circumstances connected with the property rendered such powers expedient, and to the interest of all parties; with liberty to state special circumstances. Bedford (Duke) v. Abercorn (Marquis), 1 Myl. & C. 312; 5 L. J., N. S., Ch., 230.

3. In a settlement of personal property, the parties covenanted to settle all future acquired property upon the same trusts and subject to the same powers, or as near thereto as the nature and tenure of the property would admit of:—Held, that this authorised the insertion of a power to grant mining leases in the settlement of subsequently acquiring freeholds, the prior owner having granted such leases, though the mines had never been effectually worked under them. Scott v. Steward, 27 Beav. 367.

4. A testator, by his will, gave real and personal property to his daughter A., absolutely; but by a codicil made subsequent to her marriage, he directed that "it should be settled to the exclusion of her present or any future husband, that the same might belong to her during her life, and be secured for the benefit of her children, equally, after her death, so that the issue of any such child dying in her lifetime might take his or her parent's share;" and in default of such children or other issue, over:—Held, that the property must be settled in trust for A. for life, to her separate use; without power of anticipation; and, after her decease, upon trust for such of her children as should survive her, and for the issue living at her death of such of her children as should not survive her equally as tenants in common, the issue to take per stirpes, but inter se equally as tenants in common. That there should be limitations, in the nature of cross-remainders, in favour of such of the children and issue as should survive A. in respect of the share of any issue of any child similarly dying. That the realty should be settled as realty; and (as the testator, by simply directing a settlement, must have intended) with powers of leasing and sale and exchange, and with a receipt clause; and that the settlement should contain provisions for maintenance, education, and advancement, and a power to appoint new trustees. Turner v. Sargent, 17 Beav. 515; 2 W. R. 50.

5. Powers of Sale or Exchange.

5. A stipulation was made, in articles before marriage, that the intended settlement, which related to estates in Ireland, should contain all the covenants, provisions, and conditions usually contained in marriage settlements made in England:—Held, to authorise the insertion of a power of sale and exchange under which lands in England might be taken in exchange for lands in Ireland. Bedford (Duke) v. Abercorn (Marquis), 1 Myl. & C. 312; 5 L. J., N. S., Ch., 230.

6. By marriage articles, it was agreed that estates should be settled in strict settlement, and that there should be contained in the settlement powers to the husband to charge the estates, by way of mortgage, with a certain sum, and also to charge the estates with another sum for younger children, and to create terms for raising those sums, and likewise all other powers, etc., usually inserted in settlements of the like nature, and which should be proper for effecting any of the purposes aforesaid:—Held, that a power of sale and exchange might be introduced into the settlement. Hill v. Hill, 6 Sim. 136.

7. A will directing a settlement of estates, and that there should be inserted all proper power for making leases, and otherwise according to circumstances, to and for the tenants for life, to be exercised by them when qualified, and when not by the trustees, does not authorise the insertion of a power of sale and exchange. Horne v. Barton, Jac. 437.

8. Powers of sale and exchange inserted in a settlement under clause in articles for all usual powers. Peake v. Penlington, 2 Ves. & B. 311.

9. A will, directing settlement of estates, and that there should be inserted all proper powers for making leases, and otherwise, according to circumstances, for the tenants for life, to be exercised by them when qualified, and when not by the trustees, does not authorise the insertion of a power of sale and exchange to the trustees, to be exercised with the consent of the tenant for life. Whether the will authorises the introduction of a power of sale and exchange of any description, quære. Bromster v. Angell, 1 Jac. & Walk. 625.

10. A testator having, by his will, devised his freehold and copyhold estates in trust for his son in strict settlement, with remainder to his nephew; and having given by his first codicil a special power of sale over a part of his estates, to be exercised at the request of his son, in favour of his nephew; and by his second codicil a general power of sale over "all or any part of his estates," to be exercised at the discretion of his trustees, the conveyance by the trustees must contain both the particular and the general power of sale. Green v. Wigglesworth, 1 Swan. 234; 1 Wils. 313.

11. Purchaser not compelled to take a doubtful title, viz., by executing a power of sale, introduced under a direction by a decree, establishing a will, to the Master to approve a proper settlement: the will not authorising the insertion of such a power; nor could it be sustained under a power by a former settlement; which, if not extinct by the failure of the limitations, and the union of the estate for life with the reversion, could not be duly applied to purposes clearly foreign to its original object; and, though purchasers are not put to exercise a very nice and critical judgment with regard to the purposes for which powers are created, it could never be intended to refer to a perfectly new set of limitations, in a new settlement, at a long subsequent period, under a disposition by the will of the owner of the fee, to be exercised, not for any purpose in the least degree connected with the settlement, but avowedly as an expedient to supply the want of a valid power in that settlement, and enable those whom he had made only tenants for life to dispose of the estate. Wheate v. Hall, 17 Ves. 80.

1. A testator, who made his will in 1810, and died in 1820, directed by his will that his daughters' shares in his property (which consisted of realty and personalty) should be so settled that, if they married, one-half of their fortune should be settled on them and their children, exclusive of their husbands:—Held, that this direction authorised the insertion in the settlement of a power of sale and exchange of that moiety of a daughter's share in the testator's real estate which was to be settled on her and her children. Wise v. Piper, 13 L. R., Ch. D., 848; 49 L. J., Ch., 611; 41 L. T. 794; 28 W. R. 442.

[Implication of Powers of Sale.] See POWER, XXI. 1.

6. Other Powers.

2. Testator devised F. (a well-timbered estate) to defendant in fee, and directed him to settle it on himself for life, with divers remainders over, and directed that such settlement should contain such powers of jointuring, etc., as defendant should direct, and all other usual and proper provisions for giving effect to his intentions therein expressed, and all such other powers and provisions as counsel should advise:—Held, that the successive tenants for life ought not to be made punishable for waste, but power should be inserted in the settlement for trustees to cut timber in a due course of management for the benefit of all parties interested. Davenport v. Davenport, 3 N. R. 26; 1 Hem. & M. 775; 12 W. R. 6.

3. A., before marriage, covenants to settle lands, in consideration of 2,000*l.* portion, on himself for life, remainder to the first and other sons in tail, remainder to the daughters in tail, remainder to himself in fee, with a power of revocation reserved to the wife's father, then beyond sea. The marriage is had, and a daughter born, and the husband, being taken sick, devises 1,500*l.* to his daughter, and, if his wife (being enclente) should have a posthumous daughter, she to have 500*l.* of the 1,500*l.*, and if either should die before twenty-one, or marriage, the survivor to have the whole; and gives all his lands to his wife and her heirs, and the surplus of his personal estate, after debts paid, to his wife, her executors, etc., and makes his wife executrix; then another daughter is born, and the husband dies without any alteration of his will, or any settlement made:—Decreed, that a settlement be made, with a power of revocation to the father, and the legacies be likewise paid the children, the youngest daughter being a posthumous child, within the intent of the will. Jaggard v. Jaggard, Pre. Ch. 175.

4. A marriage contract in the Portuguese language, between British subjects resident in Lisbon, expressed that the parties were desirous it should be regulated, made binding, and carried into full and complete effect according to the laws of England; some years afterwards the parties, who were then resident in England, filed a bill, praying that a settlement in strict conformity with the contract, and containing all the covenants, clauses, powers, etc., usually inserted in marriage settlements and deemed necessary, and at the same time consistent with the substance of the contract, might be executed under a decree of the Court:—Held (notwithstanding the contract provided that the settled moneys should be invested, as they had been, in the English and French funds), that a power to change those securities for any other of the government stock or funds of England or France or for real securities in Great Britain or Ireland, was a proper power to be inserted in the settlement. Sampayo v. Gould, 12 Sim. 426; 11 L. J., N. S., Ch., 121.

5. A testator, by his will, gave real and personal property to his daughter A., absolutely; but by a codicil made subsequent to her marriage, he directed that "it should be settled to the exclusion of her present or any future husband, that the same might belong to her during her life, and be secured for the benefit of her children, equally, after her death, so that the issue of any such child dying in her lifetime might take his or her parent's share;" and in default of such children or other issue, over:—Held, that the property must be settled in trust for A. for life, to her separate use; without power of anticipation; and, after her decease, upon trust for such of her children as should survive her, and for the issue living at her death of such of her children as should not survive her equally as tenants in common, the issue to take per stirpes, but inter se equally as tenants in common. That there should be limitations, in the nature of cross-remainders in favour of such of the children and issue as should survive A. in respect of the share of any issue of any child similarly dying. That the realty should be settled as realty; and (as the testator, by simply directing a settlement, must have intended) with powers of leasing and sale and exchange, and with a receipt clause; and that the settlement should contain provisions for maintenance, education, and advancement, and a power to appoint new trustees. Turner v. Sargent, 17 Beav. 515; 2 W. R. 50.

X. TRUSTEES TO PRESERVE CONTINGENT REMAINDERS.

6. Where testator directed that money should be laid out in lands to be conveyed after the expiration of a term to the use of B. for life, and his first and other sons in tail male, remainder to several others successively for life, with like limitations; remainder to his own right heirs, and there were no trustees to preserve contingent remainders: decreed, that such trustees should be inserted in the conveyances, to be settled by the Master, of the lands purchased with the money. Baskerville v. Baskerville, 2 Atk. 279.

Lord Hardwicke said, in the directions he gave in this case, that he adhered to the rules of conveyancing laid down by the great men before the Restoration, and during the Usurpation. Id.

1. A. devised his estate to trustees, in trust for H., and E., his wife, for their lives, and life of longest liver; remainder to first son of E. for ninety-nine years, if he should so long live; remainder to heirs male of body of such first son; remainder to all and every the sons of said E. for ninety years, if every such son respectively should so long live; remainder to heirs male of every of them, to take not jointly, but successively, one after other, according to births of each, sons to take term of ninety-nine years, with immediate remainder to his said heirs male. On bill brought for conveyance of this estate according to testator's will, it was decreed that in such conveyance, where any part of the estate was limited in use to plaintiff for ninety-nine years, if he should so long live, there should be a limitation over to trustees and their heirs, during his life, to preserve contingent uses in remainder, and then to first and other sons of plaintiff successively. Stamford (Earl) v. Hobart, 3 Bro. P. C. 31.

2. Testator directs his executors to invest personal estate in the purchase of real estates, which, when purchased, he devises to A., to him and the male heirs of his body for ever, and if A. should die without issue male, then he devised the same to the heir male of the body of B., after in tail to A.: the Court will insert a limitation to trustees to preserve contingent remainders. Harrison v. Naylor, 2 Cox 248; 3 Bro. C. C. 108.

3. Upon a trust in equity, no estate can be gained by disseisin, abatement, or intrusion, while the trustee continues in possession of the land, neither will equity suffer a merger of the trust estate; for uses and mere trusts stand on very different foundations, and are not governed by the same reasoning. All trusts are executory, and the Court must follow the intent of the parties, as far as the rules of law will admit, howsoever improperly a will may be penned; therefore, if a testator intended a strict settlement the Court will direct it; and where the Court make use of the words "strict settlement" in an order, it implies a direction to the Master to have trustees to preserve contingent remainders inserted, and, whether a conveyance be directed or not, the Court must decree one, when asked at the proper time. Hopkins v. Hopkins, 1 Atk. 593. And see Cholmondeley (Lord) v. Clinton (Lord), 2 Meriv. 173, 358; 2 Jac. & Walk. 18, where the report of this case is corrected from an MS. note.

4. The only difference between the construction of executory trusts in a marriage settlement and a voluntary settlement or will is, that in the former the nature of the instrument affords a presumption that the intention is for a strict settlement, whereas in the latter case that intention must appear on the face of the instrument. RoCHFORD v. Fitzmaurice, 1 Con. & L. 158. S. C. nom. RoCHFORD v. Fitzmaurice, 2 Dr. & War. 1; 4 Ir. Eq. R. 375.

Semble, that a limitation to trustees to preserve contingent remainders, not confined to the lifetime of a tenant for life, will not be cut down to that life if there are contingent remainders which may require protection during a longer period. Id.

5. Devise of freehold and copyhold surrendered to the use of the will to trustees, and the survivor and his heirs, in trust to pay debts and legacies, an annuity to the testator's son, and for other purposes; then on the marriage, or attaining twenty-one, of his granddaughter, to convey to her for life, remainder to trustees, etc., remainder to her first and other sons in tail male, remainder to her daughters in tail general, remainder to such persons for such estates, and subject to such charges and conditions, as he should by any deed or instrument, with two or more witnesses, appoint: the next day, by deed poll with two witnesses, reciting his will, and that he had reserved a power of disposing of his estate, further, he directed his trustees, immediately after the death of his granddaughter, and failure of her issue, to convey all his real estate to the first and other sons of his son in tail male, then to his daughters in tail general, then to the right heirs of the survivor of his trustees, his heirs, and assigns for ever. No conveyance was made. The granddaughter died without issue; then the son died without issue, leaving one trustee surviving. Under the will alone, the trustees have a mere legal estate, and all the equitable interest beyond the express dispositions would result to the son as heir; but the deed was considered as a codicil sufficiently executed to pass copyhold, but not freehold. The last limitation is a contingent remainder to the heir of the surviving trustees, and a conveyance was directed with an insertion of trustees to support that remainder as to the copyhold; the rents and profits of the copyhold during the life of the trustee, and all the freehold, to go to the heir of the testator. Habergham v. Vincent, 2 Ves. J. 204; 4 Bro. C. C. 353.

Contingent Remainders. In General and Duties of Trustees. See VESTED CONTINGENT AND FUTURE INTERESTS.

XI. HOTCHPOT CLAUSE.

6. The Court of Chancery will not insert a hotchpot clause in executory marriage articles in the absence of any words therein indicating the intention of the parties to introduce such clause. Lees v. Lees, 5 Ir. R., Eq., 549.

XII. ESTATE OF TENANT FOR LIFE MADE UNIMPEACHABLE FOR WASTE.

7. A testator directed his trustees to invest his property in the purchase of estates of inheritance to be settled "in strict settlement":—Held, that tenancies for life created by will were not without impeachment of waste. Stanley v. Coulthurst, 23 L. T., N. S., 761; 10 L. R., Eq., 259; 39 L. J., Ch., 660; 18 W. R. 969.

8. The right of a tenant for life of estates devised upon an executory trust for settlement to take them without impeachment of waste, depends upon the intention of the testator, to be gathered from his will, to give to the objects of his devise the fullest possible enjoyment of its subject short of the power of alienation. Davenport v. Davenport, 33 L. J., Ch., 83; 9 L. T., N. S., 870; 10 Jur., N. S., 35; 12 W. R. 6; 1 Hem. & M. 775; 3 N. R. 26.

A testator devised his residuary real estate to his son D., and directed him to settle the F. estate, which was included in the devise, to the use of D. for life, with remainder to his first and other sons successively in tail male, or tail general, or in tail male, with remainder in tail general, or otherwise in tail, as he should think proper, with remainder to H. for life, with remainders over, and an ultimate limitation to the survivor of D. and H., his heirs and assigns. And the testator directed that such settlement should contain such powers of jointuring, of charging with portions for younger children, of sale and exchange, as D. should direct; and should also contain all other usual and proper provisions for giving effect to his intentions as therein expressed, and such other powers and provisions as counsel should advise. There was a large quantity of timber on the F. estate:—Held, that in settling the property the estates for life ought not to be limited without impeachment of waste, but that powers must be given to the trustees to cut timber in a due course of management for the benefit of all parties interested. Id.

1. A grandfather devised his residuary real estate to trustees for his granddaughter in fee at twenty-one or marriage, and directed that if she should marry under twenty-one his trustees should settle the real estate on her for life for her separate use, without power of anticipation, with remainder to her children as tenants in common in tail, and he authorised his trustees to give a life estate to his granddaughter's husband, to commence after her death, and to be either with or without impeachment of waste:—Held, that the life estate given to the granddaughter must not be without impeachment of waste; such an estate being inconsistent with the restraint on anticipation. Clive v. Clive, 7 L. R., Ch., 433; 41 L. J., Ch., 386; 20 W. R. 477; 26 L. T., N. S., 409.

See also VIII. supra.

XIII. OTHER CASES.

2. Direction to trustees to correct any defect or incorrect expression in the will, and to form the settlement, from what appears to them to be the testator's real meaning, does not authorise them to change the limitations. Stanley v. Stanley, 16 Ves. 491.

3. Conveyance to trustees, in trust to sell and purchase other estates to be settled. Those entitled under the limitations directed of the estates to be purchased, have equitable interests co-extensive until a sale; therefore, a specific performance was decreed of an agreement for partition against an objection to a title under a fine by a person who would have been tenant in tail of the estates to be purchased; the effect being an election to keep the estate, binding the trustees, though it may be questionable, whether they could take upon themselves to convey in fee to a person entitled to an estate tail only. Pearson v. Lane, 17 Ves. 101.

4. Money was to be laid out in land to be settled to the husband for life, remainder to raise portions for younger children; the money was afterwards invested by direction of the husband in S. S. annuities; afterwards, by will, he devised generally all his manors, etc., to certain uses: the money in the funds must be laid out in land. Hickman v. Bacon, 4 Bro. C. C. 333.

5. Money devised to be laid out in land, and settled on the children of J. S.; land is purchased and settled on them and their heirs, and one dies. Decreed the land should not survive. Saunders v. Browne, 2 Vern. 46; 3 Ch. Rep. 214.

6. In an executory trust to be effected by the Court, it is sufficient if it can satisfy itself of the testator's intention to carry it into execution; therefore, where testator gave his real estate to A., to devise in strict settlement, and ordered other estates to be sold, and converted into personalty, and the produce, with the residue of his property, to be laid out in land in A., contiguous and convenient to his estate in A., and by strong expressions (though without direct words) showed he intended it to go to the same uses, it was decreed so to be. Browne v. De Laet, 4 Bro. C. C. 527.

7. Testator having seized in fee of T., S., and B., and also seized as of freehold of divers lands, and possessed of considerable personal property, by his will devised T. to his daughter L., and her issue, taking his surname, in strict settlement; and, in lieu of such issue, to his nephew, R. J. T., and his issue, in strict settlement, with divers limitations over; but left the ultimate reversion in fee undisposed of. He also devised S. and B. in strict settlement, leaving the ultimate reversion in fee undisposed of; and, after making several devises of parts of his freehold properties, devised the residue "of my properties, both freehold and personal, I may die possessed of, to my brother R. T.; and, if my brother R. T. shall survive me, I request and desire that he shall convert all his personal property into fee simple property, and, at his decease, leave the same entailed on his son R. J. T., in the same manner as I have myself entailed the T. estate":—Held, that the direction to entail applied as well to the freeholds which passed by the residuary devise, as to the fee simple lands to be purchased with the residuary personal estate. Tennent v. Tennent, 1 J. & L. 379; Dr. 161.

8. By a contract for sale it was agreed that 600*l.*, part of the purchase money, should be paid after the vendor's death to such uses as she should direct, for the benefit of J. B. and her children. By the conveyance, that sum was made payable to the executors, etc., of the vendor, or as she should appoint by her will; she appointed it to J. B. absolutely:—Held, that the settlement, being executory only as to the children, could not be enforced, and that J. B. took absolutely. Burrows v. Greenwood, 4 Y. & Coll. 251; 5 Jur. 384.

9. Testator gave property to his trustees, upon trust to pay, distribute, and divide equally between his daughters, naming them, to be paid and assured to them as they should attain the age of twenty-one, or be married under that age with the consent of his trustees. Proviso, that if they should marry with the consent of his trustees, he empowered the trustees to pay the shares at the times of such marriages, or at their discretion to settle the same. There was a power of maintenance, and gifts over as between the daughters on dying unmarried under twenty-one, and if all the daughters should die under twenty-one unmarried, and without leaving issue then over:—Held, that the trustees had no power to direct a settlement where one of the daughters married under twenty-one without consent. Taylor v. Austen, 1 Drew. 459; 1 W. R. 252.

1. In articles there was a covenant in the conveyance that the lands were free from incumbrance. This is not a covenant that the lands are free; and if any incumbrance is discovered between the execution of the articles and of the conveyance, whereof the party had no notice, that shall be discharged before the sealing of the conveyance, as the concealment of it would be a fraud, though, against all incumbrances discovered afterwards, there is only the party's own covenant to protect a purchaser. Vane v. Bernard (Lord), Gilb. Eq. Rep. 6.

2. Marriage articles authorised the tenant for life to withdraw the fund from the settlement, with the assent of the "under-signed trustees":—Held, that the power of assent was annexed to the office, and might therefore be exercised by new trustees appointed by the Court. Byam v. Byam, 19 Beav. 58; 1 Jur., N. S., 79; 24 L. J., Ch., 209.

By marriage articles, a wife was authorised to divert the trust funds for the benefit of herself or children, provided the diversion be acceded to by the trustees:—Held, that the trustees had a discretion to consent or not; that it must be bonâ fide exercised; and to justify their assent, the purpose for which the money was to be applied must, in their judgment, appear to be really for the benefit of the wife or children. Ib.

To save expense, the Court declared the construction of executory marriage articles, instead of directing a settlement to be executed in conformity therewith. Ib.

3. Where it is referred to the Master to approve of a settlement in pursuance of an executory trust, the Court does not usually insert in the order declarations as to the interests which the parties are thereafter to take, but merely directs the Master to approve of a settlement in conformity with the will, articles, or other directions upon which it is to be founded. Williams v. Teale, 6 Hare 254.

4. Under a direction by will to accumulate and lay out a certain sum of money in the purchase of land to be settled to uses thereby declared, the costs of the investment are to be paid out of the particular sum directed to be invested. Gwyther v. Allen, 1 Hare 505.

5. Bill for a strict settlement, after long acquiescence by plaintiff's ancestor, and when impossible to bar the remainder, dismissed. Parker v. Philips, 1 Ves. 530.

6. The Court will not decree a partial performance of articles: but when some parts appear unreasonable they always dismiss the bill. Goring v. Nash, 3 Atk. 189.

7. Constructive trustees, how constituted, and liabilities of. Esq. Watson, Re Aoramau, 7 Jur. 1001.

8. Trusts may be constituted, not merely by direct declaration of trust, but also by the constructive operation of the consequences flowing from the acts of parties. Thus equity will enforce the execution of a trust, not only against the trustees themselves, but against all persons who obtain possession of the property affected by the trust, provided they had notice of it. Poolley v. Budd, 14 Beav. 34.

A., who sold 500 tons of iron stacked on his wharf to B., in consideration of a bill accepted by a third party, gave an acknowledgment engaging to deliver it to the bearer, he (A.) "having been paid for the same." B. mortgaged the iron, and, the bill having been dishonoured, A. refused to deliver the iron. The mortgagee proceeded in equity to make A. responsible for the iron:—Held, that A. had no ownership or property in the iron so stacked, and was a trustee, and therefore a demurrer for want of equity was overruled. Ib.

9. A trust may well be created in the absence of any expression importing confidence; and in the case before the Court the obligation on the surviving partner created by the partnership articles, with reference to the legal interest in the partnership, did not in substance differ from a trust, and it was therefore held that the articles of partnership created a trust attaching on the property. Page v. Cox, 10 Hare 163.

10. Where two purchase in equal moieties between them, and one has abatement in price, etc., made to him, he shall account as to it to the other. Carter v. Horne, 1 Eq. Abr. 7.

11. Two persons article that whatever J. S. shall leave to either of them, shall be equally divided between both; such agreement good, and shall be carried into execution by this Court; also, if after this, one of them contrives that J. S. shall lease part of his estate to a third person in trust for him, this is within the articles. Beckley v. Nowland, 2 P. W. 182.

12. A. and his wife, being assignees of a lease, mortgage to B.; A. becomes insolvent, and, the title not being good, C., who had the real title, in compassion to A.'s wife, makes a lease in trust for her. Decreed, the trustees to make a new mortgage to B. Seabourne v. Powell, 2 Vern. 11.

1. Where a man enters into a treaty with a mortgagee for his purchase of his interest, but, finding he has not the legal estate, procures it to be conveyed to himself without privity of the mortgagee, equity will consider such person as a trustee for the mortgagee. Hovess v. Wadham, Ridgw. 199.

2. Real estate having been applied, for a century and a half, upon trusts specified by will, which named a trustee, the Court assumed the will to have created an express trust in the heir-at-law. Re Gore's Charities, 2 Con. & L. 411; 4 Dr. & War. 270.

3. The position that the mortgagee is a trustee for the mortgagor, to be received with considerable qualifications. Cholmondeley v. Clinton, 2 Jac. & Walk. 182. Affirmed 4 Bligh. 1.

4. If mortgagor and mortgagee deposit deeds with A., A. is a trustee for mortgagor before condition broken, and for mortgagee afterwards. Anon., 2 Eq. Abr. 284.

5. Vendee under contract for purchase dying before conveyance, vendor is trustee for him. Darris' case, 3 Salk. 85.

6. If a purchaser for a valuable consideration has not the legal estate properly conveyed to him, though the consideration cannot create a use by way of covenant to stand seised, yet the vendor will be considered a trustee for the purchaser. Polleffen v. Moore, 3 Atk. 273.

7. P. bequeathed all his property, right, and interest in and to a public newspaper, and all the benefit and advantage thereof unto three trustees, in trust to carry on and conduct the same, and, after paying certain expenses, out of the residue to pay an annuity to his daughter B. for life, for her separate use, and restrained from alienation. The testator died in 1831, and in 1832 the parties entitled to the newspaper property subject to the annuity entered into a partnership with Z., whereby it was provided, that after payment of certain expenses, the clear profits should be applied in the first place in the payment of the annuity; and for clearing the partnership of the annuity, and for making some provision for the children of B., a reserve of 200*l.* a year for five years should be made, and retained by the trustees, who should be at liberty to settle the same as they should think proper for answering the annuity, and for the benefit of B.'s child or children. Entries were, as alleged, made in the books of the partners relating to the partnership deed. B. was not a party to this deed. The annuity was paid half-yearly during the lives of and after the deaths of the trustees. The property became vested in other parties, who subsequently, as alleged, disputed the validity of the partnership deed, and stated that an arrangement had been come to between the surviving trustees and Z., whereby they put an end to the arrangements effected by the deed, and divided the annuity among certain parties:—Held, on a bill filed by B. and her children, that the partnership deed, having dealt with the property charged with the annuity, had created such a trust in favour of B. and her children as the Court would give effect to; and the annuity was ordered to be raised for their benefit. Burton v. Jackson, 2 Jur., N. S., 224.

8. A. and B. cohabited from 1849 to 1860. B., having a considerable sum of money of her own, in 1849 placed it in the hands of A., upon trust, as she alleged, to invest it on her behalf. During the cohabitation B. was maintained by A. In 1860 the woman filed a bill, charging A., as a trustee, with the moneys received by him on her account, and A. thereupon put an end to the connection between them. A. admitted the advance of some money by B., but denied the trust, and he set up, as a defence, the Statute of Limitations. The existence of the trust was supported by the evidence of the plaintiff:—Held, that having regard to the position of the parties, they must be considered to have stood in the relation of trustee and cestui que trust in respect of the moneys paid to the defendant, and that he was bound to account for what he had received, with interest at 5*l.* per cent. James v. Holmes, 8 Jur., N. S., 553; 10 W. R. 487. Affirmed 8 Jur., N. S., 732; 31 L. J., Ch., 567; 10 W. R. 634; 6 L. T., N. S., 589.

Held, also, that the defendant was not entitled to any allowance for the maintenance of the woman, or an illegitimate child which she had had by a former connection. Id.

9. C. assigned to H. his interest in a fund in court by way of trust for sale, to secure what was due from C. to H. Before the execution of the deed H. bought up a debt owing by C. for half its amount, of which transaction C. was cognisant:—Held, that the relation of trustee and cestui que trust did not exist between H. and C. in respect of the debt which H. had so purchased; but that H. was a creditor of C. for the whole amount of such debt, and not merely in respect of the amount which H. had actually paid. Crompton v. Huber, 3 W. R. 847; 1 Jur., N. S., 465.

10. By 1 & 2 Vict., c. 42—an Act to empower the Commissioners of Woods and Forests to confirm the titles to and grant leases of encroachments in the Forest of Dean—it was enacted that as to encroachments made between 1787 and 1812, and coloured "blue" in the survey, the Commissioners of Woods and Forests might grant to possessors leases of these encroachments for three lives, at a nominal rent, with possessors to purchase the fee-simple within ten years from passing the Act. J. Y., who died in 1824, was in possession by encroachment of some forest land coloured "blue," and also of land coloured "red," as to which by the Act an absolute title in fee-simple was conceded to the possessors. By his will he gave all his real estate to his widow B. Y. for her life, and after her death to be equally divided between his five sons. After the passing of the Act, B. Y. obtained a lease, and subsequently a conveyance in fee (for a very small consideration) from the Commissioners of Woods and Forests of the lands coloured "blue," which had been in her possession since the death of her husband. B. Y. devised these lands upon trust to sell:—Held, that this devise was inoperative, and that the sons of J. Y. named in his will were entitled: the Act which ratified the possessory title upon certain conditions not intending to determine the rights of parties interested in remainder, etc., by the accident of possession at the time in the party obtaining a legal title under the provisions of the Act. Yem v. Edwards, 5 W. R. 552; 3 Jur., N. S., 462; 3 Kay & J. 564; 26 L. J., Ch., 590.

1. An attorney is bound to give sufficient advice to his client; and if any advantage of property come to him by his ignorance, or the neglect of his duty, he shall be trustee thereof for the benefit of the person who would be entitled thereto, if the attorney had known and done his duty. Bulkeley v. Wilford, 2 Cl. & F. 177; 8 Bl. N. S. 111.

2. A. sued B., a debtor of his intestate, upon a bond debt and obtained a decree against him for the amount. B. appealed from this decree to the Sudder Court. By a deed of arrangement entered into by A. and C., after the commencement of the suit, C. became entitled to a six-anna share of the debt. Pending the appeal to the Sudder Court, A. entered into a compromise with B., postponing the payment of the amount recovered by the decree, for three years, and foregoing altogether interest upon the principal. This was done without the privity or consent of C. B. failed to pay the amount within the stipulated time, and proceedings were taken by A. against him, but he had not realised the amount of the decree. In a suit by C. against A. to make him chargeable for the six-anna share in the decree, the Sudder Court held that A. was chargeable to C. for such share, with interest. Upon appeal, such decree reversed; the Judicial Committee holding, that A. must be treated as a trustee for C., and that in the absence of fraud upon the cestui que trust in executing the compromise, or that it was not beneficial for all parties, he was responsible only to C. for such amount of the debt as had been recovered, or without his wilful default might have been recovered. Doorga Persad Roy Chowdry v. Torra Persad Roy Chowdry, 4 Moo. Ind. App. 452.

3. A. placed his son, who was much addicted to intemperance, under the care of B., a relation by marriage, and at his death left his son an annuity of 500*l.* The son resided with B. for several years after his father's death and until a few months before his own death. B. always accompanied him when he went to receive his annuity from his father's executors, and he as soon as he received it handed it over to B. to keep for him; and B. from time to time gave him small sums and paid his bills:—Held, that B. was accountable in a court of equity for what he had received from the son. Terry v. Wacher, 15 Sim. 447.

4. A scheme, made in 1855, provided that no person should act as trustee of the charity, who should hold or occupy any part of the charity property. At that time one of the trustees held a small piece of charity land, under a twenty-one years' lease granted in 1847 by public tender:—Held, that he must either give up the lease or the trusteeship. Foord v. Baker, 27 Beav. 193.

5. A tenant for life of an estate under settlement agreed, in consideration of 3,000*l.*, to withdraw his opposition to a bill in Parliament by a railway company, authorising the construction of a line of railway through the estate. The bill passed and the money was paid, but the Act was allowed to expire. Subsequently the company obtained another Act for construction of a similar line, and took part of the settled estate:—Held, that the 3,000*l.* must be treated as having been received for the benefit of the tenant for life, and those entitled to the estate in remainder. Pole

v. De la Pole, 2 Dr. & Sm. 420; 11 Jur., N. S., 477; 34 L. J., Ch., 486; 13 W. R. 648; 12 L. T., N. S., 337; 6 N. R. 19.

6. The foreign agent of a mercantile house in London, dealing in African produce, was appointed executor of A., a merchant at Sierra Leone, with directions to sell the testator's property, and invest the proceeds in the Bank of England. The agent accordingly wrote to his principals in London, advising them of consignments which he should make to them of some of A.'s property, and directing them to place the proceeds to his credit as executor of A. The consignments were made, and the merchants placed the proceeds to a separate account, namely, that of A.'s estate:—Held, that the goods were specifically and not generally consigned, and that the produce of the consignments was trust money in the hands of the merchants, which, upon a motion in a suit filed against them by the representative of A. for an account, they were bound to pay into court. Leigh v. Macaulay, 1 Y. & Coll. 260; 4 L. J., N. S., Exch. Eq., 37.

7. Whether, where A., a residuary legatee, by artful and fraudulent misrepresentations to the testator of the character of B., induces the testator to revoke a legacy given to B., the benefit of which revocation results to A., this Court has jurisdiction to affix a trust on A. in favour of B. to the extent of the fruit of the fraud possessed by A., or whether the matter belongs exclusively to the Ecclesiastical Court; and, secondly, whether such trust can be declared after a sentence of the Ecclesiastical Court, in which the question of undue influence was in issue, quære:—Held, in the affirmative by the Master of the Rolls, and in the negative by the Lord Chancellor. The parties thereupon appealed to the House of Lords. Allen v. M'Pherson, 1 Ph. 133; 12 L. J., N. S., Ch., 97; 7 Jur. 49. Reversing 5 Beav. 469; 11 L. J., N. S., Ch., 59. The judgment of the Lord Chancellor was affirmed. S. C. 1 H. L. Ca. 191; 11 Jur. 785.

8. The plaintiff, through his brokers, purchased ten shares in a company on the Stock Exchange from the defendant. A transfer was duly executed and left for registration. Before it was registered, issue of new shares in respect of original ones was made, within fourteen days, for shareholders to accept or refuse. The defendant, whose name was still on the register for the ten shares sold to the plaintiff, applied for ten new shares in respect of them, and they were allotted to him. The plaintiff did not become aware of the issue of the new shares till after the expiration of the fourteen days, and he then applied to the defendant to hand over to him the ten new shares, which the defendant refused to do:—Held, that the defendant was a trustee of the ten new shares for the plaintiff. Stewart v. Lupton, 22 W. R. 855.

1. Trust by implication, without the word "trusts." King v. Denison, 1 Ves. & B. 273.
2. Nature of presumptive trusts. Cook v. Fountain, 3 Swan. 491.
Trusts never implied or presumed without necessity. Id. 592.
3. If, in voluntary deeds and wills, there is no declaration of trusts of term, it results to donor; but secus if "for valuable consideration," and in nature of a contract for the benefit of the wife and issue. Brown v. Jones, 1 Atk. 190.
4. Payment made in the name of A. with his money raises a trust, but it is an equity which may be rebutted by evidence. Graham v. Graham, 1 Ves. J. 275.
5. Where lord of manor by feoffment grants certain parcels of common, etc., to trustees, for the benefit of themselves and the rest of tenants of manor, in lieu of and recompense for their several claims of common in all the rest of the common lands, etc., in the manor, the whole interest passes from the lord, and there is no resulting trust for him as to the ownership of the soil. Irwin v. Simpson, 7 Bro. P. C. 306.
6. A mortgagee assigns over his mortgage to S., and declares a trust by parol for other persons; J. acknowledges the trust: there being an express trust declared, though by parol only, shall prevent a resulting trust to the assignee. Bellaris v. Compton, 2 Vern. 294.
7. By a deed between a father and son, reciting that the father was desirous of settling the property therein comprised, so as to make the same provision for himself during his life, and for his wife, and her children by him, after his decease, he released and assigned the same and every part thereof to the son, upon the trusts therein mentioned concerning the same. The father proceeded to declare the trusts as to part of his property in favour of his wife and daughter, and a niece, but no trust was declared as to the surplus:—Held, that the surplus did not result to the grantor, but belonged to the son, and, the father having been maintained by the son for fifteen years, a bill filed after the father's death, by his representative, was dismissed with costs as to that part of it which sought an account of interest. Cook v. Hutchinson, 1 Keen 42.

8. A., jointly seised with two others, conveys his third part to the use of himself for life: remainder to his wife for life, remainder to his son in fee, and at the same time makes his will and gives the same lands to his son in tail, charged with his debts. The son not a trustee for the father in the settlement; otherwise it would have been, if the entire fee had been conveyed to the son. Baylis v. Newton, 2 Vern. 28.

9. Where the plaintiff, being entitled to the residuary estate of his father, filed a bill against his mother, the executrix, for an account, etc., and she, by arrangement with him, by deed covenanted to settle a yearly sum on him and his family, and to advance a sum for the benefit of his creditors, if they would accept it in full discharge; the latter having refused:—Held, that no resulting trust arose in favour of the son, as to the sum so to have been advanced to the consenting creditors. Sherwood v. Walker, 6 Beav. 401; 7 Jur. 293. Affirmed 13 L. J., N. S., Ch., 253; 8 Jur. 229.

10. A trustee is not entitled to retain for his own use a sum of money bequeathed to him in trust, under circumstances which rendered the trust void for remoteness. A trust differs from a charge in this—that where a man has an estate subject to a charge, if the charge fail he has the benefit of it; but a trust once declared, although unlawful or impossible, excludes the notion of a beneficial interest being intended in the trustee. The subject matter of the trust in question to fall into the residue. Joy v. Aspinwall, 18 Jur. 284.

11. A grant of the next avoidance to one without his privity:—Held, a resulting trust for the grantor, no other trust being declared. Norfolk v. Broune, Fre. Ch. 80.

12. A. grants lease to B., which is intended to be in trust for A., and B. declares a trust accordingly. B. afterwards surrenders the lease to A., who makes a new lease to C. without a declaration of trust:—Held, that C. was entitled to full benefit, and that no trust existed for A. Pilkington v. Bayley, 7 Bro. P. C. 383.

13. A person being in prison on the charge of felony assigned real estate, which was in the hands of trustees, to his brother. He was acquitted on the ground of insanity. His brother accumulated the income except a small portion which he spent for the benefit of the convict. After the brother's death it was held that he was trustee for the convict. Manning v. Gill, 41 L. J., Ch., 736; 13 L. R., Eq., 486; 20 W. R. 357; 20 L. T., N. S., 14.

II. PURCHASES.

1. Joint Purchases and Purchase in Name of a Stranger, 6914.
2. Purchase in Name of Wife or Child, and by Persons in loco parentis. See ADVANCEMENT.
3. Purchase by Partners. See PARTNERSHIP, VI.

1. Joint Purchases and Purchase in Name of a Stranger.

1. Trusts by implication arise where one party pays the purchase money, and the conveyance is taken in the name of another; but the rule is not so large as to extend to every voluntary conveyance. Young v. Peachy, 2 Atk. 256.

2. Resulting trust by a joint advance upon a purchase in the name of one. Wray v. Steele, 2 Ves. & B. 388.

3. Conveyance to B. of an estate, the money being paid by A.; B. is a trustee, and C., taking from B. with notice, is also a trustee. Mackreth v. Symmons, 15 Ves. 350.

4. If A. buy land in name of B., A. may prove he paid the money, and there will be a resulting trust for him. So, where there is a declaration as to part of the land, the rest results. Lane v. Dighton, Ambl. 411.

5. When an estate is purchased in the name of one person, and the money is paid by another, he has a resulting trust; or, when it is declared only as to part, and nothing said as to the rest, what remains undisposed of remains to the heir-at-law. Lloyd v. Spillett, 2 Atk. 150.

In no other instance has the Court declared resulting trusts by operation of law, unless in cases of fraud, and where transactions have been carried on malá fide. Ib.

The heir-at-law does not want an express intention to take by will, though it is otherwise with regard to a deed. Ib.

6. A. by marriage article covenanted that all lands he should afterwards purchase in the parish of K. should be to the uses of the articles. He purchased lands in K. and took a conveyance in fee in the name of his youngest son; but there was no declaration of trust:—Held, that youngest son was a trustee as to the lands for the parties entitled under the settlement. Blake v. Blake, 7 Bro. P. C. 241.

7. In a manor the custom was to grant for three lives successively; A., being the last life in an old copy, obtained a fresh grant to B. and C.; A. paying the whole fine, B. and C. were held trustees for A. Withers v. Withers, Ambl. 151.

8. Where a personal office or employment is purchased with the partnership funds for the benefit of the partnership, the partner in whose name it is purchased is not necessarily a trustee for the profits of the office for the other partners, after the term of the partnership has expired. Clarke v. Richards, 1 Y. & Coll. 351; 4 L. J., N. S., Exch. Eq., 49.

9. A lease was granted to W., who afterwards committed an act of bankruptcy, and then executed a deed, stating that his name had been used in the lease in trust for R., and declaring the trust accordingly. A bill was filed on behalf of the creditors of W. under the commission, claiming the lease as part of his estate; and the Court directed an issue to try whether W.'s name was used in the lease as a trustee for R.:—Held, that the issue was properly directed. The jury having found a verdict in the affirmative:—Held, that the declaration of trust was valid, though executed after bankruptcy, and that the lease did not pass to W.'s assignees. Gardner v. Rome, 5 Russ. 258; 7 L. J., Ch., 2. Affirming 2 Sim. & S. 346; 3 L. J., Ch., 220.

10. A purchase by A. in name of B., a stranger in blood, is a trust for A., unless presumption is repelled by evidence. Rider v. Kidder, 10 Ves. 360.

11. The person in whose name South Sea stock is entered in the company's book, is with regard to them the proprietor. Stockdale v. South Sea Co., 2 Atk. 141.

12. Parol not admitted to show that a party, having agreed for purchase of an estate in his own name, had in fact purchased it on behalf of another person. Bartlett v. Pickersgill, 1 Cox 15; 1 Eden 515.

13. Purchase by A., and receipt in his name; evidence admitted to prove trust for B. Knight v. Peachey, Dick. 327.

14. He who pays purchase money has a resulting trust, but he must clearly prove payments. Willis v. Willis, 2 Atk. 71.

Parol evidence admitted to show a trust from the mean circumstances of the pretended owner of the real estate. Ib.

15. Where land is purchased with the money of A., in the name of B., the resulting trust to A. may be rebutted as to part of the land or part of the interest in the land. Where A. took a mortgage in the name of B., declaring that the principal sum should be for the benefit of B., and received the interest during his life, this being personal estate is not within the clause in the Statute of Frauds relating to resulting trusts, or the doctrine of resulting trusts under the statute; but the property, after the death of A., will belong to B. by force of the parol declaration. Bonbow v. Townsend, 1 Myl. & K. 506; 2 L. J., N. S., Ch., 215.

16. Custom of manor, that, if tenant for life of copyhold obtains a grant in reversion, in the name of a third person, unless a trust is mentioned on the rolls of the manor, such third person should be beneficially entitled thereto, and not as trustee:—Held, good. Edwards v. Fidel, 3 Madd. 237.

17. A. purchases an estate in the name of B., and suffers him to execute lease thereof, and gives receipt for rents in name of B., but no declaration of trust was executed by B. Bill by A.'s heir for conveyance and account dismissed. Delane v. Delane, 7 Bro. P. C. 279.

18. A., being in possession of lands for a long term of years, contracts for the purchase of the reversion and inheritance, but to prevent merger of the term takes conveyance to B. absolutely and without declarations of trust from B. The title deeds remain throughout in the custody of A. and those claiming under him. B. held to be a trustee only for A. Lover v. Andrews, 7 Bro. P. C. 288.

1. C. lends money upon mortgage of copyhold, but being infirm, etc., surrender, etc., is taken in name of D., who executes a declaration of trust. C. afterwards purchases the equity of redemption, and second surrender is made in the name also of D., but without a declaration of trust:—Held, sufficient trust within the Statute of Frauds without a second declaration of trust. Acherley v. Acherley, 7 Bro. P. C. 273.

2. A. purchases in the name of B., and pays the purchase money; B. claims the estate, there being no declaration of trust. A. may be admitted to read proofs that he paid the purchase money, but then those proofs must be very clear to make it a trust arising by implication of law. Gascoigne v. Thwing, 1 Vern. 366.

3. A., a freeman of London, purchases in the name of B., but no trust declared; A. dies, and B. gives a declaration of trust: this is good against the custom. Ambrose v. Ambrose, 1 P. W. 321.

4. A., seized of freehold estates, and of customary freeholds, which were not devisable, made a voluntary surrender of the latter to B. in fee, in trust, as B. admitted for A., and after his death for the purposes of his will; but B. executed no declaration of trust. A. made a general devise of all his real estates, and after A.'s death B. was admitted:—Held, that he was a trustee for the devisees, and not for A.'s customary heir. Wilson v. Dent, 3 Sim. 385.

5. By the rules of a joint-stock company, only principals could become subscribers. The petitioner purchased forty shares in the name of the bankrupt, who verbally declared that he held them as a trustee for the petitioner, and the certificates of the shares were kept in the possession of the petitioner; but no notice was given to the company of the trust, nor did the bankrupt sign a written declaration of trust, until seven days before the fiat was issued:—Held, that the shares were in the order and disposition of the bankrupt as reputed owner, and passed to his assignees. Exp. Ord., 1 Dea. 166; 2 Mont. & A. 724; 4 L. J., N. S., Bky., 84.

6. A. buys a copyhold estate for his own use and two lives in the manor of M., where the custom was, that whoever purchases in it the estate shall go in succession, and by his will devises all his real and personal estate to his wife:—Held, that though the legal interest was according to the custom of the manor, yet A. has an equitable interest from being the sole purchaser, and it shall be construed as a trust for him, he having advanced the money. Smith v. Baker, 1 Atk. 385.

7. Where in a grant of a copyhold for three lives, viz., to the husband and wife and a third person, the fine was mentioned to be paid by the husband and wife, this, there being no full evidence to the contrary, made the third person only a trustee for the husband and wife and the survivor of them. Benger v. Drew, 1 P. W. 781.

8. A. agrees for a beneficial lease of forty-one years. B. advances money towards paying the fine, etc., and lease is taken in B.'s name without any declaration of trust:—Held, that

B. was a mere trustee for A., and upon being repaid his advance with interest, should assign the lease to A., account with him for the profits, and pay his costs. Held, also, that the trust, being proved by letters of B.'s own handwriting, takes the case out of the Statute of Frauds. O'Hara v. O'Neill, 7 Bro. P. C. 227.

9. Though, in the purchase deed, the consideration money is mentioned to be paid by the purchaser, and there is no express declaration of a trust, yet upon the circumstances of the case decreed a trust, though to the disappointment of the purchaser's will and of his creditors. Plymouth (Earl) v. Hickman, 2 Vern. 167.

10. Testator on renewal of a lease takes it in the names of his brother and himself, paying the fine, and receiving the profits himself:—Held, not to be assets, but vested in the brother beneficially upon the ground of intention, though proved but by one witness. Maddison v. Andrew, 1 Ves. 58.

11. Purchase in the name of another is a trust for the party who pays the consideration, except by a parent in the name of his child, which is presumed an advancement; the presumption capable of being rebutted, but does not give way to slight circumstances. Finch v. Finch, 15 Ves. 43.

12. A testator, under the 33rd section of the Savings Bank Act, 9 Geo. 4, c. 92, made deposits in the names of himself and his sisters; but he did not communicate to them the fact of such deposits being made:—Held, that a trust was not thereby created for the benefit of the sisters, the testator's object being, in the opinion of the Court, merely to evade the provisions of the Act. Field v. Lonsdale, 13 Beav. 78; 19 L. J., N. S., Ch. 560; 14 Jur. 995.

13. In 1805 A. B. purchased an estate with the money of C. D., and executed a mortgage to secure the amount. A. B. was evicted, and he died in 1812; C. D. died in 1816. The same individuals represented both A. B. and C. D., and in 1845 they established, under the covenant for title, a claim against the vendor's estate, for the amount of the purchase money. The residuary legatees of C. D. filed a bill in 1846 against the representatives to recover the amount. The Court thought, that there was so much probability, at least, of their ultimately establishing their equity, that it overruled a demurrer to the bill, leaving the question open at the hearing. Norman v. Stiby, 9 Beav. 560.

14. C. proposed to A. that A. should take out a lease of certain lands in his own name, but in trust for C., to which A. verbally consented, and C. paid the fine for the lease, which was afterwards executed by A. A difference having arisen as to the terms of the agreement between A. and C.:—Held, that it lay on C. to sustain his view beyond all doubt, or be bound by the offer made by A. in his answer. Before the bill was filed A. had repudiated the trust, but having admitted it by his answer upon terms:—Held, entitled to his costs from the filing of the answer. Chartrres v. Ainsworth, 1 Hay. & J. 68.

15. Transfer of stock of intestate into name of himself jointly with that of husband of one of his two nieces, accompanied with proof of his having said in his lifetime that it was his intention to give husband stock at his death in consideration of affection, etc., and that he had transferred it for that purpose (if not repelled by counter testimony):—Held, to be sufficient proof of gift of such stock, and no trust; and the Court will not continue injunction granted to restrain husband, who had administered, from disposing of it. George v. Howard, 7 Price 646.

1. D., having expressed a wish to save her sister legacy duty, in her lifetime transferred stock into the name of herself and sister, whom she made her universal legatee, the husband of the sister being a witness to the will. On bill filed for a declaration that the testatrix died intestate, and that the stock formed no part of her personal estate:—Held, that the bequest by the will was void, and that the stock formed no part of the personal estate, but the sister was entitled to the beneficial interest in it. Deacon v. Colquhoun, 2 W. R. 67; 2 Drew. 21; 23 L. J., Ch., 16; 2 Eq. Rep. 319.

2. H., married in 1840 the sister of a deceased wife. He afterwards invested parts of the savings of his income in consols in their joint names. It did not appear that the reputed wife had at the time of performing the ceremony of marriage any property of her own. In 1845 H. died, leaving his reputed wife surviving:—Held, that she was a trustee of the stock, and that it formed part of the estate of H. Soar v. Foster, 4 Kay & J. 152; 4 Jur., N. S., 406.

No intention of advancement in cases of a purchase in joint names will be presumed, except in the case of a lawful wife, or a person to whom the purchaser stands in loco parentis. Id.

In all other cases the onus of proving the intention to advance is thrown on the person claiming the advancement, and such a circumstance as the performance of the ceremony of marriage, where the parties knew it to be inoperative, will not be regarded. Id.

3. Where one claimed as an advancement shares purchased in his name by an elder brother, and also alleged a gift of them seven years after the purchase, and stated his belief they were intended to be ultimately for his benefit:—Held, no advancement. Forrest v. Forrest, 5 N. R. 299; 11 Jur., N. S., 317; 34 L. J., Ch., 428; 13 W. R. 380; 11 L. T., N. S., 768.

4. A married woman, out of the savings of her separate estate, purchased stock in the name of a niece, and told the niece by letter that it was her intention that the stock should be for the niece herself, but took from the niece a power of attorney to receive the dividends, and sell the stock:—Held, that on the death of the aunt the niece was entitled to the stock. Beecher v. Major, 13 W. R. 1054; 11 Jur., N. S., 537; 12 L. T., N. S., 562. Affirmed 13 L. T., N. S., 554; 6 N. R. 370.

5. M. took a lease of Bellevue in the name of his sister M. from S. He subsequently agreed to purchase Bellevue from S., and an agreement was entered into between them in June 1860. It was afterwards discovered that proceedings in the Landed Estates Court were necessary to establish the title of S., and a new agreement between N. and S. was prepared for this purpose. N. had this draft agreement altered by substituting the name of his sister M. for his own, and M., when directed to do so, signed the agreement, as also did S., in October 1860. During the proceedings in the Landed Estates Court N. died intestate. The purchase of Bellevue was subsequently completed: a conveyance was made to M., and she, as administratrix of N., was allowed credit for the purchase money out of the assets of N. In his lifetime he acted as master and absolute owner of Bellevue, and had spoken of Bellevue as purchased by him for M., and as intended by him for her benefit:—Held, that there was no evidence sufficient to rebut a resulting trust; but that M. was the agent of N. authorised by parol, with a right to be indemnified inconsistent with any beneficial interest belonging to her. Nicholson v. Mulligan, 17 W. R. 659.

Held, also, that her representative capacity, reconciling the two agreements, excepted the case from the operation of the doctrine admitting evidence to rebut a resulting trust. Id.

6. On a purchase by two contributing equally to the cost of it, parol evidence of surrounding circumstances and of subsequent dealings is, notwithstanding the Statute of Frauds, admissible to prove an intention to hold it severally. But, semble, parol evidence of statements of intention is not admissible. Harrison v. Barton, 1 John. & H. 287; 7 Jur., N. S., 519.

7. Stock purchased in the joint names of two sisters, and a balance to their joint account at their bankers:—Held, under the circumstances, to belong to them as tenants in common, notwithstanding they had contributed equally, the Court looking to the source whence the funds were derived, viz., rents of land, of which the two were tenants in common. Robinson v. Preston, 4 Kay & J. 585; 4 Jur., N. S., 186; 27 L. J., Ch., 395.

The rule as to the investment of moneys in the names of two or more persons in the purchase of property is this: if invested in unequal shares, the purchasers remain tenants in common of the purchased property; if in equal shares, and the matter on the face of it purports to be a joint tenancy, it is considered to be a joint tenancy, and no equity is supposed to intervene by which it can be reduced to a tenancy in common. Id.

8. Money which was standing in the funds in the name of a married woman was claimed, after her decease and that of her husband, by her mother, as having been invested by her while separated from her husband in her daughter's name. The only evidence of the trust was the affidavit of the mother, and proof that the dividends had been received by her with the assent of the daughter and her husband:—Held, that the claim of the mother was established. Down v. Ellis, 35 Beav. 578.

III. CHARITABLE GIFTS.

1. Failure of Gifts, 6917.
2. Surplus and Increased Revenue. See CHARITY, VI. VI.
3. When Trusts for Conversion. See CONVERSION, II. II. 3.

1. Failure of Gifts.

1. Legacies to charity, void by the stat. 9 Geo. 2, c. 36, fell into the general residue. Page v. Leapingwell, 18 Ves. 463.

2. When there is a clear intention to give to charitable purposes, and the gift is immediate, there is no resulting trust for the next-of-kin, although the particular application of the fund directed by the will would not of necessity take effect within any assignable limit of time, and could never take effect at all except upon the occurrence of uncertain and contingent events. But if the gift to charity is conditional and the condition is so remote and indefinite as to transgress the rules of law against perpetuities, the gift fails ab initio. Chamberlayne v. Brookett, 21 W. R. 299.

3. Trust of an annuity for a charity charged upon a devised estate, being void under the Act 9 Geo. 2, c. 36, does not pass by a residuary disposition, but sinks for the benefit of the specific devisees. Baker v. Hall, 12 Ves. 497.

4. A leasehold house, the bequest of which, being to a charity, fails, passes under a general disposition of the residue, and does not belong to the next-of-kin as undisposed of. Shanley v. Baker, 4 Ves. 732.

5. Trusts declared for certain Roman Catholic chapels, for saying masses and requiems for the soul of the donor and for other souls, and for the souls of the "poor dead," and for other purposes:—Held, that the gift for masses, etc., for the dead was superstitious and void; that the pious uses could not, as religious uses, be separated from the others, and were therefore also bad; and that the words "pious uses" could not be construed charitable uses; consequently, the property given to these uses went to the residuary legatees of the donor. Heath v. Chapman, 2 Drew. 417; 23 L. J., Ch., 947; 2 Eq. Rep. 1264.

6. Devise of copyhold land in fee, on condition to pay 1,000*l.* to charity. Testator having left no next of kin, nor any customary heir, and gift of charity being void, devisee held entitled to 1,000*l.*, and not the crown or lord of manor. Henchman v. Att.-Gen., 3 Myl. & K. 485. Reversing 2 Sim. & S. 498.

7. Money charged upon a real estate for a charity void by the Statute of Mortmain shall sink in favour of the specific devisee, not go to the heir-at-law or residuary legatee. Secus, when it is an exception out of the devise. Wright v. Row, 1 Bro. C. C. 61.

8. Upon a devise to a charitable use, the heir has no right to the rents and profits accrued before the devise is carried into effect. Att.-Gen. v. Bomyer, 3 Ves. 714.

Devise upon a future contingency, and no intermediate disposition of the rents and profits, is a resulting trust for the heir. Id. 725.

9. When lands are given to charity purposes on the happening of a particular event, there is a resulting trust in the meanwhile; but where real estate was vested in A. in trust, out of the rents, to keep it ready for the reception of plague patients during their sickness, but no longer, and for a burying-place for them, and for no other use:—Held, first, that this was a present gift to charitable purposes, and not merely a gift contingent upon the re-appearance of the plague; and, secondly, that there was no resulting trust in the meanwhile for the donor or his heirs, though the plague had not re-appeared for more than 180 years. Att.-Gen. v. Craven (Earl), 21 Beav. 392; 2 Jur., N. S., 296; 25 L. J., Ch., 291; 4 W. R. 340.

10. A bequest of personal estate "to be appropriated for the pious and benevolent uses and purposes" of a charitable association, the objects of which included the purchase of and erection upon land, and also other purposes not within the stat. 9 Geo. 2, c. 36, held to be valid, but that any appropriation of the fund towards purchasing more land would be an illegal application of the bequest. Testator, by a codicil, declared that in case any of the charitable bequests in his will should be incapable of taking effect, he gave all such moneys, etc., to four legatees absolutely, free from any trust or conditions whatever. These four legatees were the trustees named in the will of the charitable bequests:—Held, that in the event of the charitable bequests being void, the four legatees were entitled, and not the next-of-kin of the testator. Carter v. Green, 5 W. R. 856.

11. Bequest in trust for such objects of benevolence and liberality as trustee in his own discretion should most approve, cannot be supported as a charitable legacy, and is therefore a trust for the next-of-kin. Morice v. Durham (Bishop), 9 Ves. 399. Affirmed 10 Ves. 522.

12. After giving charitable legacies by her will, a testatrix, by codicil, declared that if any of them should fail, by reason of any part of her estate being of such a nature as could not legally be made applicable to charitable purposes, she gave such part to A. and B., for their absolute use and benefit, having full confidence that they would desire to carry out her intentions, but she declared that that should not have the effect of imposing a trust upon them, or in any manner qualify their interest in the bequest:—Held, that A. and B. took beneficially, and not as trustees for the next-of-kin. Cawood v. Thompson, 17 Jur. 798; 22 L. J., Ch., 835; 1 Sm. & G. 409.

A testatrix gave charitable legacies, and the residue to her sister, who survived her, and also made several bequests to charities:—Held, that the impure personalty, which the sister took under the former will, and kept unconverted until her death, was not to be treated as converted for the purpose of the charitable legacies in her own will. Id.

13. A testator gave all his real and personal estate to his executors: then mentioned a specific house, 71, Queen's Road, Bayswater, which he gave to the inhabitants of B., to found a charity, directed the executors to call a meeting of the inhabitants, to appoint trustees to carry his scheme into execution, named his godson, W., to be one of the trustees, leaving to the inhabitants to choose as many more as they pleased; and then said, in the event of the inhabitants not being willing to carry out the scheme, "I will that all my property so given to the charity shall absolutely belong to my godson." He afterwards made some pecuniary gifts, and devised leasehold and freehold houses for life to different persons; each house, on the death of the devisee, being given to the "residuary legatee or legatees" for the charity. As to one freehold house alone, 4, Douglas Place, there was a gift of it to W. for life, then to the trustees of the charity; but should there be no charity established, then to W. absolutely. The gifts to the charity being contrary to the Statute of Mortmain, no meeting of inhabitants was called, nor were any trustees appointed:—Held, that on the general failure of the gift to the charity, the gift overtook effect; and therefore, in the case of the house, 4, Douglas Place, W. became entitled to it absolutely. Hall v. Warren, 9 H. L. Ca. 420.

Held, also, that W. was only entitled, in addition, to the house, 71, Queen's Road, Bayswater, for that the words "all my property so given" must be restricted to that house, and did not affect the general property of the testator, as to which he must be treated as having died intestate. Id.

1. More than fifteen years before his death, a testator purchased two Southampton Pier Bonds for 500*l.* each, having, before the purchase, told the plaintiff that he had left her by his will more than her sisters, to enable her to subscribe to some charities, and, very soon after the purchase, that he had invested the 1,000*l.* on the pier bonds in her and his own name, but did not mention any trust or purpose. He privately applied the interest in subscribing to certain charities; and, fourteen years after the purchase, mentioned in several letters the charities to which he wished her to apply the interest, but said he did not intend to bind her by any legal document:—Held, that no valid trust was created, and no resulting trust, but that the sister was entitled to the fund. Wheeler v. Smith, 1 Giff. 800; 6 Jur., N. S., 62; 29 L. J., Ch., 194; 9 W. R. 173.

2. A married woman having a power of appointment under her marriage settlement over estates A. and B., appointed, by will in September 1838, estate A. to her husband in fee, "and all other the hereditaments comprised in the settlement not hereinbefore disposed of to another person." By codicils to her will she revoked the appointment of estate A. to her husband, and gave him the same estate for life, with remainder to trustees to sell and pay certain legacies and pay the residue to charities:—Held, that the devise of "all other the hereditaments," etc., by the will was not residuary, but specific; and that the void gifts to the charities did not pass by it, but lapsed as unappointed. Re Brown, 1 Kay & J. 522; 3 W. R. 542.

3. A testatrix gave certain lands in the parish of H. to A., B., and C., as joint tenants in fee, and devised to the plaintiff "the rest of my freehold hereditaments in the parish of H., and all my freehold hereditaments in the parishes of," etc. The devise to A., B., and C., having been declared void, as made on a secret trust for a charity:—Held, that the lands comprised in that devise did not pass under the gift of "the rest of my freehold hereditaments in the parish of H.," but were undisposed of. Springett v. Jennings, 6 L. R., Ch., 333; 40 L. J., Ch., 848; 24 L. T., N. S., 643; 19 W. R. 575. Affirming 23 L. T., N. S., 132.

4. A testator gave 10,000*l.*, and all the money he had invested in the funds, to trustees upon trust to invest such portion upon mortgage of freehold security as would be sufficient to produce certain annuities; and gave the residue of the 10,000*l.* and money in the funds to A. The will contained a general residuary clause. Some of the annuities, being for charitable purposes, were void:—Held, that the void bequests fell into the particular and not the general residue. Aston v. Wood, 31 L. T., N. S., 293; 43 L. J., Ch., 715; 22 W. B. 893.

5. Testatrix, after giving certain legacies, bequeathed "all her moneys, securities for money, moneys secured on mortgage, railway stocks and shares, moneys to be produced from sale of any property at S. or P. to which she was entitled, all moneys to which she was entitled under the will of her late grandfather, and also all her moneys secured upon any securities or in any way or manner howsoever" to trustees, upon trust, after payment of her legacies and debts, to invest and pay the income to A. for life, and after her decease to pay thereout a certain charitable legacy, and as to the residue thereof, upon certain trusts, in favour of the defendants. The will contained a general residuary bequest in favour of A. The charitable legacy was partially invalid under the Statute of Mortmain:—Held, that the portion of such legacy which failed passed to the defendants under the particular gift of residue, and not to A. under the general residuary gift. Champney v. Davy, 11 L. R., Ch. D., 949; 48 L. J., Ch., 268; 27 W. R. 390; 40 L. T. 189.

1. Persons Entitled.

6. A. makes two of his daughters his executors, and directs them to distribute a sum of 400*l.* and also the residue of his personal estate among themselves and their brothers and sisters, according to their needs and necessities, as they in their discretion should think fit. The Court restrained the exercise of this power, by decreeing a double share to the eldest son and heir, looking upon him as a necessitous person. Warburton v. Warburton, 4 Bro. P. C. 1.

7. Bequest of residue to A. for life, with power thereout to advance her eldest son, and a gift, after A.'s death, of the said residue to

A.'s children equally:—Held, on the context, that the amount advanced to A.'s eldest son was not to be taken into account in the ultimate division of the remainder amongst A.'s children. Upjohn v. Upjohn, 7 Beav. 152.

1. By a marriage settlement certain stock in the funds was settled upon the intended husband and wife for their joint lives, and the life of the survivor, and then upon the children of the marriage, with a power to the trustees, with the consent of the wife, to advance part of the fund for the benefit of the children in her lifetime. There were four children of the marriage; the husband died; the wife married again; the second husband assigned the wife's life interest for value; after the assignment the trustees, with the consent of the wife, exercised the power of advancement in favour of the children of the first marriage:—Held, that the power was well executed as against the assignee of the second husband. Whitmarsh v. Robertson, 1 Colly. 571; 14 L. J., N. S., Ch., 157; 9 Jur. 125. And see S. C. 1 Y. & Coll. C. C. 715; 11 L. J., N. S., Ch., 404; 6 Jur. 921.

2. Consents to Exercise of Power.

2. A tenant for life of a fund under a settlement which empowered the trustees with his consent to advance part of the presumptive share of a child, assigned his life interest in the fund by way of mortgage:—Held, that the trustees might be restrained from making any advancement to a son of the tenant for life during his life, he having by executing the mortgage lost his power to consent. Nottidge v. Green, 33 L. T., N. S., 220.

3. By a settlement made on the marriage of A. with B., certain funds, the property of B., were transferred to trustees, upon trust, during the joint lives of A. and B., to pay the dividends to B., to her separate use; and, after the decease of such one of them as should first depart this life, to pay the dividends to the survivor during his or her life, for his own or her own benefit; and, after the decease of the survivor upon trust for the children of the marriage, as tenants in common. The settlement provided, that it should be lawful for the trustees, at any time or times after the decease of the survivor of A. and B., or in "the lifetime of them or of the survivor of them, with their, his, or her consent, in writing," to levy and raise any part or parts of the portion or portions intended to be thereby provided for such child or children, not exceeding one moiety of such expectant portion, notwithstanding the same should not then have become vested or payable, and to apply the money so be raised for the preferment, etc., of such child or children. A. died, leaving B. and seven infant children. Shortly afterwards B. intermarried with C.; but on that occasion no settlement was made. Subsequently, by indenture, C. and B., for valuable consideration, assigned B.'s life interest to D.:—Held, that, notwithstanding such assignment, B. was entitled effectually to exercise the power of consent under the advancement clause, and the trustees were authorised to give effect to that consent. Whitmarsh v. Robertson, 9 Jur. 125; 1 Colly.

571; 14 L. J., N. S., Ch., 157. And see S. C. 1 Y. & Coll. C. C. 715; 11 L. J., N. S., Ch., 404; 6 Jur. 921.

3. Duration and Cesser.

4. On the construction of a power of advancement, it was held not to be restricted to minority, and did not cease by the expiration of twenty-one years from the date of the testator's death, when the power of accumulation ceased. Pride v. Fooks, 2 Beav. 430; 9 L. J., N. S., Ch., 234; 4 Jur. 213.

"Collieries" held to mean freehold collieries, and not shares in leasehold collieries, the testator having both. Id.

5. Under a will a mother was tenant for life of a fund, to her separate use, without power of anticipation. After her death the fund was to go to her children as she should appoint by deed or will, and in default of appointment, among her children equally, the shares of sons being vested at twenty-one, and the shares of daughters at twenty-one or on marriage. The trustees had power to advance the whole or any part of the share to which each of the children being a minor was actually or presumptively entitled:—Held, that there was no power, even with the consent of the mother, to make an advance to a son who had attained twenty-one. Clarke v. Hogg, 19 W. R. 617.

6. By a separation deed between husband and wife a fund was vested in trustees for the wife for her life, with remainder as to four-sixths for F. for his life (determinable as therein mentioned), with remainder to his children, with remainder over. The deed contained a power for the trustees, if they in their discretion should think fit, but they were to be under no fiduciary obligation, as to the exercise of this discretion at any time while F. should continue to hold a commission in the army, to raise out of the fund settled for the benefit of himself and his children any sum or sums not exceeding in the whole 2,000*l.*, and to apply the same in or towards the purchase of or effecting his promotion in the army. During the life of the tenant for life, the money was only to be raised with her consent. In 1869 the sum of 850*l.* was raised and applied in effecting F.'s promotion in the army. In 1871 promotion in the army by purchase was abolished:—Held, that the trustees could not after that raise the rest of the 2,000*l.*, and pay it to F., or exercise the power at all. Re Ward, 20 W. R. 1024; 7 L. R., Ch., 727; 42 L. J., Ch., 4; 27 L. T. 668.

7. A power in a settlement to withdraw funds and lay them out in the purchase of a trade for the benefit of the husband and wife may be exercised after the death of one of them for the benefit of the survivor alone. Dooley v. Arnold, 18 W. R. 540.

In exercising it the trustees ought to see that a purchase is bond fide made, but they need not inquire into the value of the property or expediency of the purchase. Id.

8. Trust by will as to the residue of real and personal estate, for a nephew and his heirs, to pay him the interest for life, with power to the trustees, in case they should see it would be for his benefit, to advance him, when it may be in their power, any part of the principal for his advancement in life, that they will not withhold such assistance as they may deem necessary; but in case no part should be advanced, the residue to be divided among the nephew's issue; with a limitation over, if he should leave no issue. The nephew is entitled, not to the absolute property, but for life only; and no advancement having been made, an inquiry was directed, whether his circumstances required advancement. Robinson v. Cleator, 15 Ves. 526.

4. What are Proper Advances.

1. A fund bequeathed by will was directed to accumulate till infants should attain twenty-one, deducting annually from the interest such portion as might be necessary for their education and other expenses, with benefit of survivorship; in case of either dying under twenty-one, the shares to be vested at twenty-one. The Court (parties to whom the fund was given over consenting) directed an advancement for the purchase of a commission for one of the infants, but with considerable hesitation. Evans v. Massey, 1 Y. & J. 196.

2. Under a marriage settlement, stock was vested in trustees, in trust to pay the interests and dividends to the wife for life, remainder to the husband for life, with a power to them and the survivor to appoint the principal among the children of the marriage. The wife died, and the husband appointed a third part thereof absolutely and at once in trust for an infant child, payment to be postponed till twenty-one. The Court, on the application of the infant that the trustees might apply a sufficient part of the capital of his share of the stock in payment of the expenses incurred and to be incurred for his education as a cadet, and his advancement in India, granted the prayer of the petition so far as related to payment of part of the expenses incurred, and as to the expenses of education and residence as a cadet at Addiscombe, and ordered the rest of the petition to stand over. Re Lane, 17 Jur. 219.

3. Trustees having a power of advancement for the benefit of children, were authorised by the Court to make an advancement for the passage and outfit of the children with their parents to New Zealand, for the sake of their health, each child's share contributing equally to the passage and outfit of their parents. Re Long, 38 L. J., Ch., 125; 17 W. R. 218; 19 L. T., N. S., 672.

The Court declined to sanction the transfer of the trust funds to new trustees resident in New Zealand. Ib.

4. The trustees of a marriage settlement were authorised, with the consent of the parents, to advance to each or any of the sons of the marriage any part not exceeding half of his expectant share for the purpose of placing or establishing him in any business, profession, or employment, or otherwise for the advancement or preferment in the world of such son or sons. A son attained twenty-one and married. Neither he nor his wife was entitled to any property producing an immediate income, and the son being engaged in study, preparatory to entering the legal profession:—Held, that the trustees were authorised to raise and pay half the son's expectant share to the trustees of a settlement which had been prepared for the purpose of settling the same upon the son, his wife and children, but that the trustees were not authoaised to raise and pay the same to the son on his undertaking forthwith to settle it. Roper-Curzon v. Roper-Curzon, 19 W. R. 519; 24 L. T., N. S., 406; 11 L. R., Eq., 452.

5. Testator after making a certain provision for A., the son of a relation, till he attained the age of sixteen, added: "I then leave him to the care of my trustees to provide for him in some business or profession, and his future maintenance, out of my funded property":—Held, that these words created a trust for placing him out, was referred to the Master. Kilvington v. Gray, 10 Sim. 293.

6. Trustees of a marriage settlement had authority, with the consent of the husband and wife, or the survivor, to raise 2,000*l.* for placing the issue of the marriage to any profession, trade, or business, or for their advancement in life:—Held, that in the case of a daughter, "advancement in life" might be taken to mean "advancement in life by way of marriage." Lloyd v. Cooker, 6 Jur., N. S., 336; 29 L. J., Ch., 513; 8 W. R. 252; 27 Beav. 645.

7. A discretionary power of advancement vested in trustees for setting up testator's sons and daughters in business may not be exercised in favour of the married daughters' husbands, either for paying their debts or setting them up in business. Talbot v. Marshfield, 37 L. J., Ch., 52; 4 L. R., Eq., 661. Affirmed with a variation, 3 L. R., Ch., 632.

But where a share was advanced for the purpose of setting up a married daughter in a farming business, her husband covenanting that the business should be for her separate use:—Held, that this was a good execution of the power. Ib.

If such a power is exercised by the trustees pending a suit for administration of their testator's estate, the Court will require the strictest evidence of bona fides, and of the propriety of the advancement. Ib.

Trustees having, in the opinion of the Court, exercised such a power mala fide, for the purpose of defeating the plaintiff's interest, were ordered to refund the sums advanced, and pay all costs of the litigation occasioned beyond the estimated costs of an ordinary administration suit. Ib.

8. Trustees having power to advance for the benefit of a testator's daughter at any period of her life half the capital, the income of which was given by the will to her separate use, were authorised by the Court to make the advance for the purpose of setting up her husband in business. Re Kershaw, 37 L. J., Ch., 751; 6 L. R., Eq., 322.

9. E. B. by will gave 1,000*l.* to trustees to invest and stand possessed of the same until P. L. attained twenty-one, and then pay the interest to him for life, with remainder to his children at twenty-one or marriage, with power to the trustees if they thought proper, but not otherwise, to advance all or any part of the legacy for the advancement of P. L. P. L. had twelve children; seven died infants, and unmarried, and five attained twenty-one; and P. L. being distressed, and having mortgaged the legacy, now petitioned, with the consent of four of the surviving children, one being abroad, that the security might be paid off out of the legacy, and the residue paid to him under the power in the will:—Held, that the trustees had no power to do what was asked. Inard v. Pease, 1 W. R. 527; 22 L. J., Ch., 2069.

1. Where there was a power of advancement in favour of an infant female legatee to whom an interest for life for her separate use, without power of anticipation, was given, with remainder to her children, the Court, after the legatee had attained twenty-one, and married, ordered an advancement to be made for the purpose of enabling the husband to enter into a partnership, upon the husband insuring his life, and entering into a bond for the payment of the sum advanced and the premiums on the policy. Phillips v. Phillips, 18 Jur. 69; 23 L. J., Ch., 7; 1 Kay 40; 2 Eq. Rep. 362.

2. The whole of a small legacy, and its accumulations, were paid out of court to the solicitor of an infant who had no other property upon his undertaking to apply it in discharging a sum claimed for past maintenance, and for a prospective outfit, and after deducting the costs to pay any remaining balance to the infant at majority. Re Welch, 23 L. J., Ch., 344.

3. A testator gave 5,000*l.* to trustees upon trust to pay and apply so much of the interest as they should in their uncontrolled discretion think necessary or expedient to be paid and applied yearly and every year from the time of his death until A. should attain thirty-two, in aid of the allowance which A's father should or ought to make for that purpose in order to prepare A. for his establishment in and to enable him to follow some profession, and subject thereto, to accumulate the income by way of compound interest, and upon A. attaining thirty-two to pay the interest and the accumulated fund arising therefrom to A. during his life, so long as he should not have been bankrupt. And after the death of A. the 5,000*l.* and the accumulated fund were to be held in trust for the children of A. On the testator's death in 1842, A. was six years old, and his father died in 1849. The testator's estate was being administered in Chancery, and a considerable fund arose from the accumulations of the income. A. was married and had one child, and having contracted debts which prevented his living in this country he petitioned the Court that a sufficient sum for their payment might be raised out of the accumulated fund:—Held, that there was power to apply a portion of the accumulations for that purpose, and that as it was clearly under the circumstances for A.'s benefit, the Court directed the necessary sum to be so raised and applied in payment of the debts. Edwards v. Grove, 29 L. J., Ch., 839; 2 De G. F. & J. 210.

4. A father bequeathed a fund upon trust for L. during his life, and after his death for his children, as he should by will appoint, and in default of appointment for his children, who being sons should attain twenty-one, or being daughters should attain that age or marry, in equal shares. The testator empowered the trustees, at any time or times during the life of L., to apply any part of the fund not exceeding one moiety in or towards the preferment or advancement of L., or otherwise for his benefit as the trustees should in their discretion think fit. At the date of the will L. was thirty years of age, and had been married for nearly three years:—Held, that the trustees might apply one moiety of the trust fund in payment of debts incurred by L., the interest on which absorbed nearly the whole of L.'s income, and the principal of which he was unable to pay out of his own resources. Lowther v. Bentinck, 19 L. R., Eq., 166; 31 L. T., N. S., 719; 44 L. J., Ch., 197; 32 L. T. 156.

5. Power of advancing the capital of a fund was given to a trustee for the "benefit and advancement in the world" of the person entitled to the income of the fund for life, and there were words at the end of the clause conferring the power, which seemed to indicate that the power was to be a wide one:—Held, that the word "and" must be read disjunctively, and that the trustee could advance the fund, not only for the advancement, in a strict sense, of the object of the power, but also for such wider purposes as would come within the meaning of "benefit." Re Brittlebank, Coates v. Brittlebank, 30 W. R. 99.

5. Fund Raised for. Failure of Purpose.

6. In the event of the object failing for which money has been advanced by trustees, under a power of advancement, the money belongs to the person for whose benefit it was advanced, and cannot be recalled into the original fund. Lawrie v. Bankes, 4 Kay & J. 142; 4 Jur., N. S., 299; 27 L. J., Ch., 265; 6 W. R. 244.

Therefore where, under such a power, the trustees purchased a commission in the army, and the person for whom the commission was purchased sold out shortly after joining his regiment, there being no fraud:—Held, that he was, and not the trustees were, entitled to the purchase money. Ib.

7. A testator, after giving a life annuity, from and after the death or marriage of his sister-in-law, in trust for his nephew, her son, bequeathed the residue of his mixed real and personal estate specifically in favour of his nieces, their husbands and children. He then declared that for making a further provision for the maintenance of his nephew, it should be lawful for his trustees, during the life of his sister-in-law upon her request in writing, to expend any sums not exceeding 6,500*l.* in the purchase of a commission for, or in obtaining the promotion of, his nephew in the army. After the testator's death the nephew, being in the army, exchanged from one regiment into another, and in so doing paid 600*l.* for the exchange and 550*l.* for horses and outfit; after which, in May 1868, his mother signed and sent a formal request to the trustees, desiring that the whole of the 6,500*l.*, with interest from the day of the date of the request, should be raised out of the residuary estate, and paid to her son. From the 1st November 1871 purchase of commissions in the army was by royal warrant abolished:—Held, that the nephew was entitled to the full sum of 6,500*l.*, with interest at 4 per cent. from the date of the request, subject to the payment of legacy duty. Palmer v. Flower, 13 L. R., Eq., 250; 41 L. J., Ch., 193; 25 L. T., N. S., 816; 20 W. R. 174.

8. But when by a separation deed a sum of money was directed to be held by trustees for the wife for life, and after her death, as to four-sixth parts, for W., one of the children of the marriage, who was then an officer in the army, during his life, and after his death for his children, and it was declared that it should be lawful for the trustees, if in their discretion they should think fit, to apply any portion of the fund, not exceeding 2,000*l.*, in or towards effecting the promotion of W. in the army, and the trustees applied 850*l.* in the way pointed out by the deed, but in consequence of the abolition of purchase of commissions in the army, no further sum could be applied for the same purpose:—Held, that the purpose for which the power was given to the trustees having failed, the residue of the 2,000*l.* could not be raised and applied in any manner for the benefit of W. Re Ward, 7 L. R., Ch., 727; 20 W. R. 1024.

6. Allowances to Trustees in Accounts.

1. A trustee bonâ fide advanced a sum to apprentice an infant, in the life of his father, who was in great pecuniary distress, and while the infant's interest in the trust fund was contingent, and before a power of advancement had come into operation:—Held, that in taking the accounts as against the trustee, the amount ought to be allowed him. Worthington v. McCrae or McCraw, 23 Beav. 81; 26 L. J., Ch., 286; 5 W. R. 124.

2. Trustees applied a part of the capital, of a fund belonging to infants, who had been left destitute by their father, for their benefit. They were allowed the amount. Prince v. Hine, 26 Beav. 634.

7. Other Cases.

3. A settlement contained a power of advancement, a power of appointment, and a hotchpot clause, applicable to the former, and not to the latter. Part of the trust fund having been taken out of the settlement and paid over to a child, without stating under which power:—Held, that it was primâ facie attributable to the advancement clause, and that this was confirmed by subsequent memoranda in the handwriting of the donee of the power. Re Gosset, 19 Beav. 529.

4. When two trustees under a will, one of them the wife of the testator, had a power to make advances to the testator's children, and there was a direction to appoint new trustees, or a new trustee, in case of the first two or either of them dying or not acting, and the wife only acted and made advances without the concurrence of the other trustee, as was alleged:—Held, that the power of making advances was not vested in her, and the Court refused to inquire into the propriety of particular advances made by her with a view to their being allowed. Palmer v. Wakefield, 3 Beav. 227.

5. A deed, after reciting that A. was desirous of securing the payment after his death of the several annuities and the gross sum thereafter specified, to the several persons thereafter named, contained a covenant by A. with trustees that if B. should attain the age of twenty-one, either in the lifetime or after the death of A., then the heirs, executors, or administrators of A. should at such time after his death, or after the day on which B. should attain the age of twenty-one, whichever should last happen, as the trustees or the survivors or survivor of them should in their or his uncontrolled discretion think fit, and either in one sum or from time to time in various sums pay to B., or for his use or benefit, any sum not exceeding 300*l.*, without any deduction or abatement whatever. The covenant, as originally drawn, was an absolute covenant for the payment of 300*l.*, but was altered by the direction of the covenantor at the time when he executed the deed. The sum of 300*l.* was the only gross sum mentioned. The trustees proposed to exercise their discretion by paying B. 5*l.*, and expressed their intention of not exercising it further for his benefit:—Held, that the discretion of the trustees was confined to the time at which the sum or sums was or were to be paid to B., and that he was entitled to the full sum of 300*l.* Palmer v. Newell, 25 L. T., N. S., 892.

1. Persons Entitled.

6. A direction for maintenance in general terms, comprehending all children, not restrained by the bequest of the capital in terms, limited to those living at the date of the will. Freemantle v. Taylor, 15 Ves. 363.

7. Bequest in trust to pay the interest to the testator's wife for life, for the separate use of his wife and their children, and applied for the maintenance and support of himself, and the maintenance, education, clothing, and support of such children. The widow mortgaged her interest and became insolvent:—Held, that the trust was only for the benefit of those children requiring support, and a reference was directed to ascertain what part of the income was necessary for that purpose. Carr v. Living, 28 Beav. 644.

8. Devise to the children of A., B., and C., who should be living when the youngest attained twenty-one, with a direction that "the present yearly rents" should be paid to the persons who brought up the children of C.:—Held, upon the context, that until the contingency happened, the rents were to be paid to such person in trust not only for the children of C., but of A. and B. Sanders v. Miller, 25 Beav. 164.

9. Power of maintenance of the "person for the time being entitled" to the estate:—Held, to include persons absolutely or presumptively entitled. Sidney v. Wilmer, 25 Beav. 260.

2. Duration and Cesser.

(a) Whether for Life or determined on attaining Twenty-one or Marriage.

1. Testator gave, devised, and bequeathed to his executors all his real and personal estate upon trust, to permit his wife M. to receive the income thereof for her own use and benefit, and for the maintenance and education of his children, naming them, so long as she should continue his widow; and in case she should marry, to pay her an annuity of 100*l.* per annum; and subject to such trusts, in trust, after the decease or marriage of M., for his said children in equal shares, when and as they should attain the age of twenty-one:—Held, that a trust was constituted of a sufficient part of the income of the property for the maintenance and education of the children, and that such trust was capable of continuance beyond the period of a son attaining twenty-one, or a daughter attaining that age or marrying. The Court, however, being of opinion that a discretionary power as to the mode of executing the trust was given to M., directed inquiries for the purpose of ascertaining how such discretionary power had been and how it ought to be exercised. Longmore v. Eloum, 2 Y. & Coll. C. C. 363; 12 L. J., N. S., Ch., 469.

2. Testator bequeathed one-fifth of his residuary personal estate to trustees, upon trust for all and every the children or child of his son J. B., born and to be born, and who, being a son or sons, should live to attain twenty-one, or, being a daughter or daughters, should live to attain that age or be married, to be equally divided between them, if more than one, share and share alike, as tenants in common; and he directed that the dividends, interest, and income of the share or expectant share of each such child should be paid to his said son J. B., during his life, and after his decease then during the minority of each such child should be retained by his said trustees or trustee, and be applied by him or them, as the event should happen, in, for, or towards the maintenance, clothing, and advancement of each such child, in such proportion, manner, and form as his said son J. B., or, as the event might happen, his said trustee or trustees, should think fit. At the date of the will and of the testator's death, J. B. had three children, one of whom, a son, afterwards attained twenty-one, married, and lived separately from his father:—Held, first, that a trust was constituted in J. B., of the income, for the maintenance, clothing, and advancement of his children, which trust did not terminate upon all or any of his three children attaining a majority in his lifetime; secondly, that J. B. was not entitled to apply the income arbitrarily, according to his own will and pleasure; thirdly, that he was entitled to apply the income of a child's prospective share towards that child's maintenance, clothing, and advancement, without reference to his ability to maintain and educate that child; and, fourthly, that the son who had attained his majority was not entitled to an immediate transfer of one-third of the fund, inasmuch as it did not appear that the testator intended to exclude after-born children, and, at all events, he did intend to authorise an unequal distribution, from time to time, of the income, for the benefit of J. B.'s children. Bateman v. Foster, 1 Colly. 118.

3. Testator directed maintenance for his sons during minority and for daughter till twenty-one or marriage, and gave her a legacy in case she should attain twenty-one, payable at and to carry interest from that time. Having married at eighteen, she was allowed maintenance for the interval until twenty-one. Chambers v. Goldwin, 11 Ves. 1.

4. Testator directed his residue to be converted into money, and his wife to receive the interest of it for the maintenance of herself and children, and at her death he bequeathed the whole, share and share alike, to all the children she might have by him. The testator left a son and a daughter. Some years after his death the daughter married:—Held, that thereupon her right to maintenance ceased. Bowden v. Laing, 14 Sim. 113.

5. A discretionary trust, for the maintenance of children during their minority, and for their future advancement in life:—Held, not to be determined as to the maintenance, by marriage of a female object of it, but only on her attaining the age of twenty-one; and as to the advancement to be still subsisting after her marriage. The trust was as to the income of a fund which was directed to be accumulated, subject to the trust, and the period of lawful accumulation had expired before the suit. Pride v. Fooks, 2 Beav. 430; 9 L. J., N. S., Ch., 234; 4 Jur. 213.

6. Under a trust for maintenance of an infant till twenty-one, at which age the corpus of the fund was given her, maintenance allowed from her marriage at twenty till twenty-one. Coleman v. Rackham, 8 Jur. 556.

7. A testator bequeathed a fund to his widow to be at her sole and entire disposal for the maintenance of herself and their children. There was only one child, a daughter, who attained twenty-one and married:—Held, that the trust for maintenance did not cease when the child attained twenty-one or married, and that the widow was not entitled to have the fund transferred to her. Scott v. Key, 11 Jur., N. S., 819; 13 W. R. 1030; 35 Beav. 291; 6 N. R. 349.

8. A testator gave the income of his estate to his wife and daughters for their respective lives, with a survivorship clause amongst them for their respective lives in case of the death of his wife or of any of his daughters leaving no issue. In the event of a daughter dying and leaving issue, the trustees were empowered to apply all or any part of the trust moneys or annual produce and premises to which such daughter, if living, would be entitled, in the maintenance, education, and advancement of such her issue. After the death of his wife and all his daughters, the principal was to be divided amongst the issue then living of his daughters:—Held, that the trustees had power to make allowances for the maintenance of the deceased daughter's children after they attained their majority. Hill v. Rawlinson, 15 W. R. 148.

1. Testator devised estates to trustees in trust to pay 300*l.* a year for the maintenance, clothing, and education of his son's children during the life of their father. The son had three children, all of whom attained twenty-one, and then one of them died:—Held, that the personal representative of the deceased child was entitled to one-third of 300*l.* a year during the father's life. Leves v. Leves, 16 Sim. 266; 17 L. J., N. S., Ch., 425.

2. A party whose interest in a fund had not vested:—Held, under the terms of a power in a will, entitled to maintenance, even after attaining twenty-one. Ellis v. Maxwell, 3 Beav. 587; 10 L. J., N. S., Ch., 266.

3. A gift of the income to arise from a fund during the life of A. to B., for his maintenance, is an absolute gift to B., his executors and administrators, during the life of A., and is not confined to the joint lives of A. and B. Attwood v. Alford, 2 L. R., Eq., 479; 14 W. R. 956.

4. A bequest of 30*l.* a year to A., together with her children B., C., and D., and for their joint maintenance:—Held, a bequest of that annual sum to the mother and her children as joint tenants for the life of the longest liver of them. Wilson v. Maddison, 2 Y. & Coll. C. C. 372; 12 L. J., N. S., Ch., 420; 7 Jur. 572.

5. A bequest of an annual sum to be raised for the support of the children of H., to be paid them from time to time as their necessities require, without regard to their father or mother, cannot be confined to the minority of the children. Alexander v. M'Culloch, 1 Cox 391.

6. A testatrix devised lands to trustees, in trust, in the first place, at their discretion, to pay an annuity to her son A.; and next to apply the rents to the maintenance, education, and bringing up of the three children of A. during A.'s life; the sole survivor of the three children attained twenty-one in the lifetime of A.:—Held, that the interest of such surviving child in the surplus rents and profits did not cease on his attaining twenty-one, but that he continued entitled to them during the life of his father. Badham v. Mee, 1 Russ. & M. 631.

7. R. N. gave and bequeathed the residue of his estate and effects to trustees, upon trust, out of the rents, profits, and dividends, to pay each of his children, R. C. N. and P. N., an annuity of 150*l.*; and as his other children respectively attained the age of twenty-one, to pay to each of them an annuity of 100*l.*; all the annuities to be paid until the period should have arrived for the distribution and division of his estate and effects between his children in the manner after mentioned; and when and so soon as all his children should have attained twenty-one, or at such earlier or deferred period as the trustees might think proper, the testator authorised and empowered the trustees to sell and convert into money all his estate and effects, and to invest the residue in their names upon trust, during such time as any of his children should be under the age of twenty-one, to pay to those who might have attained twenty-one the said several annuities until such period of distribution and division; but when and so soon as all his children should have attained the age of twenty-one, then the trustees were directed to distribute and divide the stocks, funds, etc., between all those who should have attained that age. The testator directed "that the rents and profits of his real and personal estate and effects, remaining unsold and unconverted, should be applied in the same manner as the income of the produce of such estate and effects, if sold and converted, might be applicable." The youngest son attained the age of twenty-one years on the 15th May 1853, and an order had been obtained for the sale of the real estate, but no conversion had actually taken place:—Held, that the annuities did not determine upon all the children attaining the age of twenty-one, but were to be continued until the period of distribution; and that, as the conversion of the estates had not been effected, no present distribution could be made; the annuities, therefore, to be continued until the period for actual distribution should have arrived. Nicholson v. Locke, 18 Jur. 263.

8. Bequest of an annuity to a father for the maintenance of his children until they respectively attained twenty-one, and a further bequest of a principal sum to be divided among the children as they respectively attained twenty-one, the amount of the annuity will not be reduced proportionately as the children respectively come of age. Bortoft v. Wadsworth, 12 W. R. 523.

9. Bequest by a man to his wife, to be applied for the maintenance of herself and their children:—Held, that the right of an unmarried daughter to maintenance did not cease on her attaining twenty-one. Carr v. Living, 33 Beav. 474.

10. A testator gave an annuity to his niece of 8*s.* a week "towards the support and maintenance of her two children until they shall attain the age of twenty-one years." By a codicil the testator gave certain leasehold property to the niece "to enable her to provide for her children," and referred to his will as "my said will in her favour." One of the children of the niece died, and the other attained twenty-one:—Held, that the words in the gift of the annuity referring to the support and maintenance of the children were merely descriptive of the testator's motive in making the gift, and that they did not cut down the life estate of the niece. Farr v. Hennis, 44 L. T. 202.

11. A testator, by will, made in 1810, bequeathed "one annuity or clear yearly rent-charge or sum of 300*l.*" to his niece, "for and during the term of her natural life"; and after her decease he bequeathed "the said annuity, yearly rent-charge, or sum of 300*l.* unto all and every the children, if any, of his said niece lawfully to be begotten; if more than one, share and share alike; and if but one, then to such only child, to be applied in the "support, maintenance, and education of such child or children" until such only child, or the youngest of such children, should attain twenty-one, when he directed that the annuity should "be absolutely sold and disposed of by such child or children," and the produce to be derived from such sale to be equally divided among such children, if more than one, share and share alike; and he charged his real estates with the annuity, and, subject thereto, devised the same to H. in fee:—Held (affirming 27 L. J., Ch., 769), that the annuity was a perpetual charge upon the real estate. Man- sergh v. Campbell, 4 Jur., N. S., 1207; 3 De G. & J. 232.

The devise of an estate in fee-simple charged with an annuity is not of itself sufficient to indicate an intention that the duration of the annuity should correspond with the limits of the estate charged. Id.

1. A gift of the interest of a sum of money, for the "maintenance and education" of A., is a gift for life: aliter, "bringing up." Soames v. Martin, 10 Sim. 287; 8 L. J., N. S., Ch., 367; 3 Jur. 1144.

A direction by testator to apply the interest of a fund for the maintenance and education of his infant nephew, without any disposition of the principal:—Held, to give the interest for life to the nephew. Id.

2. Under a trust in a will to apply the yearly sum of 50*l.* (and so on in proportion for any less term than a year) for the maintenance and education of A. in such manner as the trustees should, in their own discretion, think proper, the will containing gifts of other annuities during life:—Held, that this annuity ceased upon A.'s attaining twenty-one. Gardiner v. Barber, 2 W. R. 407; 18 Jur. 508; 2 Eq. Rep. 888.

Soames v. Martin (10 Sim. 287) overruled. Id. Held, also, that the annuities being in arrear, they should abate pro tanto for the present, to be recouped out of the interest accruing on the outstanding portions of the trust funds, which, when paid, was to be regarded as income for this purpose. Id.

3. A testator gave the residue of his estate and effects to his four children equally to be divided between them, share and share alike, with a gift over to the survivors or survivor, in the event of any dying under twenty-five. He appointed guardians during their minorities, with a power to apply accumulations of the income of each child's share, during minority, in maintenance, education, etc.:—Held, that the children were entitled, for maintenance, etc., to the income of their shares between twenty-one and twenty-five. Fraser v. Fraser, 8 L. T., N. S., 20; 1 N. R. 430.

4. An annuity to the children of A. "for their maintenance and education" is not confined to the minorities of the children. Bequest of an annuity of 100*l.* to A., followed by a direction in these words: "In the event of her death the annuity is to be continued to her children for their maintenance and education, and I have to request Mr. W. G., banker, to see it carried into execution." A. survived the testator and died. On the death of A.:—Held, that the annuity of 100*l.* was payable to the children, not merely during their respective minorities, but during their joint lives and the lives and life of the survivors and survivor of them. Wilkins v. Jodrell, 13 L. R., Ch. D., 564; 49 L. J., Ch., 26; 41 L. T. 649; 28 W. R. 224.

5. By a marriage settlement property was vested in trustees upon trust, after the death of the wife, to pay the rents and profits to the husband for life, or until he married again, and in case he married again and there was issue of the intended marriage, then to pay him one-half of the rents and profits, and out of the other half to levy and raise for the maintenance and education of one child one-fourth, of two or three children one-third, and of four or more children the whole income of such other half, and subject thereto to pay the whole income thereof to the husband for his life, and if there should be no issue, then to pay the whole of the rents and profits to the husband. The husband married again, and at the date of the decree there were four children of the first marriage, two daughters and one son who had attained twenty-one, one son under age, and a child of a deceased daughter:—Held, that the trust for maintenance and education did not cease upon the children attaining twenty-one, but that the four children were entitled equally to one-half of the rents and profits during the life of their father, that the daughters were equally entitled in the event of their marrying, and that the word "issue" was restricted to the first generation, and, therefore, that the child of a deceased daughter took no interest. Frewen v. Hamilton, 47 L. J., Ch., 391.

6. A husband directed his trustees to pay to his widow 100*l.* per annum for the maintenance and support of each of his children until he or she should attain twenty-one, with power to increase or decrease such allowance; and he empowered his trustees, with the consent of his widow, to advance any sums not exceeding in the whole one-fourth of the presumptive share of any child for his or her placing out or advancement in life, or otherwise for his or her benefit; the residue to be held in trust for all the children of the testator, who being sons should attain twenty-one, or being daughters should attain twenty-five or marry, without any provision for the maintenance of unmarried daughters during the interval:—Held, that the trustees had no power, either under 23 & 24 Vict., c. 145, s. 26, or by way of interest on their contingent shares, to allow maintenance to unmarried daughters during the interval; but that the advancement clause enabled them to advance the necessary sums of money for the purpose. Re Breeds, 1 L. R., Ch. D., 226; 45 L. J., Ch., 191.

Semble, that, if the testator's estate was being administered by the Court, interest on their contingent shares would have been given by way of maintenance. Id.

Held, also, that the trustees would be justified in increasing the allowance for infant daughters of the testator so as to meet the expenses of education, as included in maintenance and support. Id.

The doctrine whereby interest on a contingent legacy or share of residue is given for the purpose of maintenance depends upon the natural obligation which the father would be under, if living, to maintain the child during infancy, and is not applicable to a case where that obligation would not arise. S. C. nom. Re Breed, 24 W. R. 200.

7. An annuity charged on lands was bequeathed to three trustees and the longest liver of them, to continue during the life of the longest liver of them, and no longer, in trust to apply it, "to assist in the support of" the testator's daughter, A., "in aid of, and towards the clothing, maintenance, and education of her children, free from the control or interference of her present or any future husband, and not subject to his or their debts, contracts, or engagements." After the death of the daughter, her children, being all of full age, and forisfamiated, filed a bill, praying for a declaration that the annuity was well charged on the lands, and that they were entitled to have it applied towards their clothing and maintenance, or otherwise for their benefit:—Held, that the will created no trust in favour of the children of the daughter of A. of which they could enforce the execution in equity; and, therefore, that the trusts of the annuity ceased on the death of A. Ryan v. Keogh, 4 Ir. R., Eq., 357.

1. The testator bequeathed to his son an annuity of 40*l.* from the period of his majority to the death or second marriage of the testator's wife. The son attained twenty-one, and died before the widow:—Held, that the legal personal representative of the son was entitled to the annuity until the death or second marriage of the widow. Re Ord, Dickinson v. Dickinson, 12 L. R., Ch. D., 22; 41 L. T. 13. Affirming 9 L. R., Ch. D., 667; 26 W. R. 880.

(b) Effect of Bankruptcy, Insolvency, or Composition with Creditors.

2. Legacies in trust for the testator's son for his own use and benefit, provided no misfortune in business shall in the meantime have happened to him, so as to deprive him or his family of the benefit of it, the testator declaring his intention, his son's fortune being amply sufficient by this fund to form a certain and permanent provision for him or his family; but in case he fail in business at any time before the age of thirty-two, then in trust for the support of him, his wife, and children, as the trustees think proper, so long as he shall labour under the effects of any misfortune in trade: but as soon as he shall be freed and absolutely discharged from the effects of any misfortune or failure in trade, then (but not before) to be paid to him; otherwise, the interest to be continued to be paid for the support of him, his wife, and children, for his life; and if, at his death, he shall be under any difficulty, from misfortune or failure in business, in trust for his wife and children according to his appointment by will, and if he shall leave no widow or child according to his disposition. There was a considerable settlement. The son, in the twenty-eighth year of his age, being discharged under a deed of composition, the legacy was decreed to him, the trustees and his children not opposing it; but the Court observed, that if he should not be discharged, as in case it should end in a bankruptcy, the trustees would not be indemnified. De Mierre v. Turner, 5 Ves. 306.

3. An annuity given to A. for his personal support, not to be liable to his debts, and to be paid from time to time into his proper hands, and not to any other person, and his receipt only to be a sufficient discharge, passes on A.'s bankruptcy to his assignees. Graves v. Dolphin, 1 Sim. 66; 5 L. J., Ch., 46.

4. Testator devised his estates to trustees, in trust to pay out of the rents 300*l.* a year for the maintenance of his son's children, and to pay the surplus rents during his life for the maintenance of himself and his family; but so that he should not have any power to charge or alienate the same, provided that if his son should, in any manner, impede or frustrate the trusts of the will, then the surplus rents should be no longer paid to him, but should be accumulated by the trustees, for the benefit of the children. The son conveyed his interest under the will to trustees for his creditors:—Held, that thereupon the trust for accumulation took effect. Lewes v. Lewes, 6 Sim. 304; 3 L. J., N. S., Ch., 55. Affirmed 4 L. J., N. S., Ch., 77.

5. A testatrix gave the interest of a share of her residuary personal estate to A. for life; and afterwards, by a codicil, she noticed the facts of the bankruptcy of A., and of his becoming of unsound mind, and thereby revoked the bequest to A., and gave the same to her executors, upon trust, during the life of A., to apply the whole or such part thereof, at such time, and in such proportions and manner, for the maintenance and support of A., and for no other purposes whatsoever, as her executors should in their discretion think expedient:—Held, that the interest given by the said bequest did not pass to the assignees of A. under his bankruptcy. Twopeny v. Peyton, 10 Sim. 487; 9 L. J., N. S., Ch., 172; 4 Jur. 456.

6. Testator bequeathed his residuary estate to trustees, and, after making a provision out of it for the benefit of his son for his life, and after the son's death for his wife and children, directed, that if his son should assign or charge the interest to which he was entitled for life, or attempt or agree to do or commit any act whereby the same or any part thereof might, if the absolute property thereof were vested in him, be forfeited to or become vested in any person or persons, then the trustees should pay and apply the said interest for the maintenance and support of his son, and any wife and child or children he might have, and for the education of such issue as the trustees should in their discretion think fit. Some years after the testator's death the son became bankrupt:—Held, that the trust for the benefit of the son, his wife, and children was valid, and that the assignees were not entitled to any part of the provision. Godden v. Crowhurst, 10 Sim. 642; 11 L. J., N. S., Ch., 146.

7. Trust for the support, clothing, and maintenance of an adult:—Held, to be a trust for his benefit generally, and to devolve to his assignees under the Insolvent Act, notwithstanding a provision to the contrary in the will by which the trust was created. Young-husband v. Gisborne, 1 Colly. 400; 8 Jur. 750. Affirmed 15 L. J., N. S., Ch., 355; 10 Jur. 419.

8. Where trustees under a will have a discretion as to the manner of the application of the trust fund for the benefit of a particular person, but no power to apply it otherwise than for the benefit of that cestui que trust during his life, his interest passes to his assignees under the Insolvent Act, notwithstanding a proviso in the will, that he shall not have power to sell, mortgage, or anticipate the income of the fund. Green v. Spicer, 1 Russ. & M. 895; Tam. 396; 8 L. J., Ch., 106.

9. A testator bequeathed a legacy of 400*l.*

to his executors, upon trust to pay the same to his son, in such smaller or larger portions, at such time or times, and in such way or manner, as they should, in their judgment and discretion, think best:—Held, that the discretion of the executors was determined by the insolvency of the legatee, and that the legacy vested in the assignee of the insolvent. Piercy v. Roberts, 1 Myl. & K. 4; 2 L. J., N. S., Ch., 17.

1. A. assigned 800*l.* to trustees, in trust, during the life of B., or such part thereof as they should think proper, or at such other times, and in such portions as they should judge expedient, to pay the interest to him; or, if they should think fit, to lay it out in procuring for him diet and other necessaries, but so that he should not have any right to the interest, other than the trustees, in their uncontrolled discretion, should think proper, and so that no other creditor of his should have any claim thereon, nor should the same be subject to his debts, disposition, or engagements; and it was declared, that after his death the 800*l.* and all savings and accumulations of interest, if any, should be in trust for his children, and if he should have no child, then in trust for C. B. became a bankrupt. The trustees had paid him the interest down to his bankruptcy:—Held, that his life interest passed to the assignees. Snowden v. Dales, 6 Sim. 524; 3 L. J., N. S., Ch., 188.

2. Property was settled on J. R. by his father, until he should take the benefit of the Insolvent Debtors Act, and then the trustees were, during his life, to apply it in such manner and to such persons, for the board, lodging, and subsistence of J. R. and his family, as the trustees should think proper; and after his decease upon trust for such persons as J. R. should appoint, and in default of appointment in trust for his children. J. R. took the benefit of the Insolvent Debtors Act. He had three children, but his wife was dead:—Held, that his children, who were all infants, became entitled to three-fourths, and the assignees to one-fourth, of the life interest of J. R. Rippon v. Norton, 2 Beav. 63.

3. Settlement of husband's estate on his marriage, in trust to pay the rents, etc., "unto or for the maintenance and support of the husband, wife, and children, or otherwise, if the trustees should think proper to permit the same to be received by the husband during his life, without power to charge, etc.;" on the bankruptcy of the husband:—Held, that a trust had been created for the maintenance and support of the wife and children out of the property during the husband's life. Page v. Way, 3 Beav. 20; 4 Jur. 600.

4. Bequest of shares in certain trust funds, in trust for A., his executors, administrators, and assigns, provided that if A. should during the life of B. and C. assign, charge, or otherwise dispose of his share in the principal or interest thereof, or attempt or agree so to do, or do any act whereby his share in the said moneys, if payable to himself or his executors or administrators, would become vested in some other person, then and in such case all his estate, right, title, and interest in such trust moneys should absolutely cease and determine, and thereby and thereupon become absolutely forfeited; and the trustees should thenceforward stand possessed of the share or shares so forfeited, in trust to pay, apply, and dispose of the annual produce thereof, during the lives of B. and C., for the support and maintenance of A., and of his wife and family, or otherwise for his and their benefit, in such manner as the trustees should think proper; and after the death of B. and C. should settle and assure, or pay and apply, and dispose of the share so forfeited, in trust for, or for the benefit of A. and his family, in such manner as they should in their discretion think proper; A. assigned all his property to trustees for his creditors, and thereby committed an act of bankruptcy, and a fiat being issued against him, he was declared a bankrupt:—Held, that upon the execution by A. of the assignment, his share and interest in the trust moneys became subject to the trust declared by the will for the benefit of A., and his wife and family; that A. was not of necessity entitled to any part of the income of the trust moneys separately from his wife and children; but that any interest of A. in the trust moneys not applicable for the support and maintenance of his wife and children passed to his assignees on his bankruptcy. Kearsley v. Woodcock, 3 Hare 185; 8 Jur. 150.

5. Under a marriage settlement, trustees were, after the bankruptcy of the husband and the death of the wife, to pay the income "in such manner, for the maintenance and support or otherwise for the benefit of the husband and the issue," as they might think proper:—Held, that the discretionary power of the trustees, as to the application of the income, was not taken away by the bankruptcy, so as to entitle the objects to take equally. An inquiry was directed as to what had been properly applied for the maintenance of the issue, and the assignees were declared entitled to the surplus. Wallace v. Anderson, 16 Beav. 533.

6. A testator bequeathed the dividends of certain stock to his nephew, solely for the maintenance of himself and his family, declaring that such dividends should not be capable of being charged with his debts or engagements, and that he should have no power to charge, assign, anticipate, or incumber them; but that if he should attempt so to do, or if the dividends, by bankruptcy, insolvency, or otherwise, should be assigned or become payable to any other person, or be or become applicable to any other purpose than for the maintenance of the nephew and his family, his interests therein should cease, and the stock be held upon trusts for his children. Long subsequently to the date of the will, and a few weeks prior to a codicil confirming it, the nephew took the benefit of the Lords Act (1 Geo. 4, c. 119), in the usual way; and some years afterwards the testator died:—Held, that this insolvency operated as a forfeiture of the life interest given to the nephew by the will. Yarnold v. Moorhouse, 1 Russ. & M. 364.

7. A person conveyed certain freehold and leasehold property to trustees upon trust, to pay the rents and profits to his son T. for life, provided that in case T. should be declared bankrupt, or be discharged under any Insolvent Act, the trustees should apply the rents and profits in or towards the maintenance, clothing, lodging, and support of T. and his then present or any future wife, and his children or any of them, or otherwise for his, her, their, or any of their use and benefit, in such manner as the trustees should in their discretion think proper. T. was taken in execution for debt, and sent to prison at the suit of a creditor who obtained a vesting order against him under the 1 & 2 Vict., c. 110. The insolvent was afterwards discharged under that Act:—Held, that the life estate of the insolvent was forfeited at the time of his discharge; that from the date of the vesting order to the time of the discharge the rents and profits of the estate belonged to the assignee under the Act; that upon the discharge taking place, the discretionary power given to the trustees by the settlement might be exercised by them in favour of the insolvent, his wife and children collectively, or in favour of any of those persons, to the exclusion of the others; and that to whatever extent the power might be exercised in favour of the insolvent, the benefit which he would take by the appointment would vest in the assignee. Lord v. Bunn, 2 Y. & Coll. C. C. 98.

1. A testatrix gave real and personal estate to trustees, during the life of her nephew, an uncertificated bankrupt, at their uncontrolled discretion, to apply the interest for the benefit of him, or his wife, or his children; and as to the income which should not be applied, to invest the same; but should he at any time obtain his certificate so as to enable him to hold and enjoy real and personal estate for his own personal use, enjoyment, and benefit, then she directed that thenceforth during his life, and so long as he should be able to hold and enjoy real and personal estate for his own personal use, enjoyment, and benefit, the whole income should be paid to him for his own use. The nephew never married, and after several years he obtained his discharge:—Held, that the will conferred on the nephew a contingent interest in the income, which passed to the assignees, and, upon his obtaining his discharge, vested in them absolutely. Davidson v. Chalmers, Perry v. Chalmers, 10 Jur., N. S., 910; 33 L. J., Ch., 622; 12 W. R. 592; 11 L. T., N. S., 217.

2. After G. had been adjudged a bankrupt by a Scotch sequestration, and before he obtained his discharge, his wife, who had taken part in procuring the sequestration, made her will, and thereby gave an annuity to him for life, and declared, that if he should become bankrupt, or should assign, the annuity should cease; and she also empowered the trustees of her will in their discretion at any time to refuse or discontinue payment of the annuity to her husband. After the death of the testatrix, and before the first payment of the annuity became due, G. obtained a discharge which did not divest the property from the trustee in the sequestration:—Held, that the annuity was forfeited. Trappes v. Meredith, 41 L. J., Ch., 237; 26 L. T., N. S., 5.

3. A bequest of a share of residuary personal estate in trust for A. for life, and after the decease of A. for his children equally, to be vested interests in such children at twenty-one, with power to apply the income for their maintenance during their minorities, and a gift over, on default of such children, and a proviso, that, if A. should in any manner sell, assign, transfer, incur, or otherwise dispose of, or anticipate, his share, or any other part thereof, then, immediately after such alienation, sale, assignment, transfer, or disposition, the bequest in trust for A. should cease, determine, and become utterly void, as if the same had not been mentioned in the will, or as if A. were dead. A., being in prison for debt, presented a petition for his discharge, under the Act 1 & 2 Vict., c. 110, and thereupon the vesting order was made:—Held, that there was a valid limitation over of the share of A.; that taking the benefit of the Insolvent Act was a voluntary alienation of his share by A., and was the event, or one of the events, on which the limitation over was to take effect; that the declaration in the will, that the gift should thereupon be void, as if the same had been mentioned in the will, applied to the event of there being no children; that, although the limitation over took effect, the capital was not to be necessarily forthwith divided, for the determination of the life interest did not alter the class which was to take, and which class included after-born children; that the children of the insolvent who had attained twenty-one had a vested interest in their respective shares of the residuary share bequeathed in trust for the insolvent, and had become entitled to receive the interest of the same, and that the infant children of the insolvent were entitled to contingent interests in their respective shares thereof; and that both interests were subject to the interests of any after-born children of the insolvent who might become entitled. Rockford v. Hackman, 9 Hare 475; 21 L. J., N. S., Ch., 511; 16 Jur. 212.

4. A. being entitled to a life interest in the dividends of 9,000l. consols, and being largely indebted, his brother agreed to pay all debts not charged on A.'s life interest, upon condition that such life interest should be settled so as to be applicable for the maintenance of A., his wife and children, or any of them, at the absolute discretion of the trustees. This transaction having been carried into effect:—Held, that such settlement was valid against subsequent creditors, and also against a person who was a creditor of A. at the time of the settlement, and whose debt was concealed by A. from his brother, and was the only one not paid by him. Holmes v. Penney, 2 Kay & J. 90; 3 Jur., N. S., 80; 26 L. J., Ch., 179.

(c) Effect of Assignments.

5. A fund was bequeathed to trustees upon trust after the death of testator's widow to make a weekly allowance to S. and his children, if he should have died leaving any, towards his or their maintenance and support, such allowance to be in the discretion of the trustees. Testator also declared that it should be in the discretion of the trustees during the life of his widow with her consent to advance and pay all or any part of the principal money to S. or his children towards his maintenance and advancement in the world, it being his wish that S., if living, should have the whole benefit of such moneys if he should conduct himself to the satisfaction of the trustees. S. assigned all his interest under the will to X. The trustees having paid the fund into court without imputing any unsatisfactory behaviour to S.—Held, that X., the assignee of S., took the whole fund. Re Coe's Trust, 4 Kay & J. 199; 4 Jur., N. S., 158.

(d) In Other Cases.

1. Gift to a widow, she maintaining and educating the testator's son and two daughters thereout, until the son attained twenty-one:—Held, that the son, who had married and ceased to reside with his mother, but was still a minor, was not entitled to maintenance. Staniland v. Staniland, 34 Beav. 536.

2. A testator directed his executors to apply 500*l.* for the support and education of his nephew, whose education for holy orders he directed to be under the control of certain persons named, and that, if any part of the sum should remain after providing for such support and education, such residue should be applied for certain religious purposes:—Held, first, that this was not a general legacy. Re Lee, 10 Ir. R., Eq., 157.

Held, secondly, that although the nephew had determined not to enter holy orders, and had been apprenticed to a trade, an adequate part of the sum bequeathed should be applied for his maintenance and education. Ib.

3. A widow who was by the terms of the will to be allowed money by the trustees during the minority of an infant—her son—abandoned the child, for whom other guardians were appointed by the Court, and afterwards having cohabited with a married man, and by him had several illegitimate children, lived with them in a house to the use of which she was entitled under the will. The trustees under these circumstances refused to make her any allowance out of the trust moneys:—Held, that she could not compel the trustees so to do, but was disqualified from making any claim by her abandonment of the child independently of other misconduct. Mellor v. Mellor, 20 W. R. 51.

4. Gift to A. of 15*l.* per annum for bringing up B.:—Held, that a trust was created for the benefit of B., which did not fail by the death of A. Pilcher v. Randall, 9 W. R. 251; 4 L. T., N. S., 398.

5. Testator made a certain provision for the infant son of his relation M. W. until the age of sixteen, and then left the infant to the care of his trustees, to provide for him in some business or profession, and his future maintenance, out of the testator's funded property:—Held, that the infant, on attaining sixteen, was entitled to receive out of the testator's funded property a sum sufficient to provide for him in some business or profession, and to an annual allowance for his future maintenance during his life; and it was referred to the Master to inquire and state what sums were proper to be allowed for those purposes. Kilvington v. Gray, 10 Sim. 293.

6. By marriage settlement maintenance for daughters is made payable half-yearly, at Lady-day and Michaelmas, until the portion became payable, which was at eighteen or marriage. A daughter attained her age of eighteen the 16th August. Decreed to have her maintenance pro rata, from the last Lady-day to the time of her attaining her age of eighteen. Hay v. Palmer, 2 P. W. 501.

7. By a marriage settlement, a term was limited to trustees for raising, on failure of issue male, 3,000*l.* for daughters' portions, payable at eighteen, or marriage. The father and mother die, leaving issue two daughters only, who at the death of the father (who survived the mother) were fifteen or sixteen years of age, and who had, by the father's will, 500*l.* a piece devised to them, payable at the same time with their original portions; but the estate was devised to S., one of the daughters, being married and being of the age of twenty:—Held, on her bill, that she must have maintenance from the time of her father's death till the portion became due, and from thence interest at 5 per cent. till paid. Greenhill v. Waldoe, Pre. Ch. 367; Gilb. Eq. Rep. 31.

8. A legacy to unborn children of a person named in a will to vest at twenty-five being void for remoteness, a direction in the same will to apply the income in the meantime for their maintenance is also void, and cannot be supported even for a period of twenty-one years. Pickford v. Brown, 2 Kay & J. 426; 2 Jur., N. S., 781; 25 L. J., Ch., 702.

3. Out of What Fund.

9. General rule, that trustee shall not break in of his own authority upon the capital of infant's fortune. Walker v. Wetherell, 6 Ves. 473.

10. Trustees may, in a case of necessity, be justified in breaking in upon the capital of a trust fund, either for the maintenance and education, or for the advancement in life of infant children, even where there is a gift over to the issue of such children in the event of their dying under twenty-one. Re Tibbs, 17 W. R. 804.

11. A testator left stock to trustees for the maintenance of his two granddaughters till twenty-one, and then to be divided between them. The Court refused to assume as a fact against one of these granddaughters, who, after the lapse of many years, was claiming her share of the principal fund against the estate of the surviving trustee, that that share had been expended by the trustees in maintaining her. Clarke v. Wyburn, 12 Jur. 613.

Quære, whether the trustees would have a right so to have applied the principal fund. Ib.

12. A testator, in 1853, devised freeholds to trustees, to pay the rents (after satisfying certain premiums and repairs) to and for the use of his grandson for life, and after his decease "to and for the use of all and every child or children of his grandson, equally as tenants in common, who should attain the age of twenty-one being sons, or being daughters, should attain that age or marry," and if but one such child, to him or her absolutely. The testator devised and bequeathed the residue of his estates to his trustees, to convert, invest, and hold the same and the accumulations, upon similar trusts for his grandchildren and their issue. He then directed his trustees to apply a competent part of the income of the investments for the maintenance and education of such "grandchildren and their issue;" and to accumulate the residue, as in his will was mentioned. The grandson attained twenty-one and died in 1869, leaving three children, infants:—Held, that they were entitled to maintenance out of the interim rents and profits of the specifically devised freeholds. Best v. Donmall, 40 L. J., Ch., 160; 19 W. R. 400; 24 L. T., N. S., 217.

1. A testator gave a share of his residuary estate to trustees upon trust to pay the annual produce to the plaintiff for her life; or to apply the same, or so much as might be necessary for her support and maintenance, in such manner as might be most for her comfort and advantage. The plaintiff having been found lunatic by inquisition, an allowance out of her fortune was made for her maintenance. The plaintiff was also entitled to certain property in her absolute right:—Held, that the income of her life estate, under the will, must be first applied for her maintenance in exoneration of her absolute property. Rudland v. Crozier, 6 W. R. 305; 27 L. J., Ch., 261; 4 Jur., N. S., 675.

2. A legacy of 5,000*l.* was bequeathed to trustees, to pay and apply so much of the interest as they, in their uncontrolled discretion, should think necessary or expedient, yearly and every year from the time of the testator's decease, until A. should attain thirty-two, in aid of the allowance which A.'s father should or ought to make for that purpose, in order to prepare A. for his establishment in, and to enable him to follow, some profession or business, and subject thereto, to accumulate the income until A. should attain thirty-two or die, whichever should first happen; and on A. attaining thirty-two, to pay the interest of the capital, and of the accumulated fund arising therefrom, to A., during his life, so long as he should not have been found bankrupt, or taken the benefit of the Insolvent Acts, or have assigned his estate for the benefit of, or have compounded with, his creditors for payment of less than the debts due to them; and subject to the trust above mentioned, the principal and the accumulated fund were to be held in trust for the child or children of A. in manner therein mentioned, with a gift over in default of a child or children becoming entitled under such trust. A., soon after attaining his majority, became involved in debt, and, in consequence, unable to provide for his wife and infant child, or to pursue any profession or business. The Court directed a portion of the fund which had arisen from accumulations of surplus income to be applied in payment of his debts. Edwards v. Grove, 2 De G. F. & J. 210.

Power of trustees to resort for future maintenance to accumulations of dividends which would, if required, have been applicable to past maintenance. Ib.

3. Testator gave his real estate and residuary property to wife for life, remainder to an infant great-nephew for life; a statement in the will that it was his particular wish and request that his wife and the infant's grandfather would superintend and take care of the infant's education, so as to fit him for any respectable profession or employment, was held, under the circumstances, and upon the effect of the whole instrument, to charge the maintenance and education of the infant upon the interest taken by testator's widow under the will. Foley v. Parry, 2 Myl. & K. 138; Coop. temp. Brough. 219; 5 Sim. 138.

4. When a settlor directed maintenance for his children to be paid to their mother for their support up to fourteen years of age out of yearly income, and from fourteen to twenty-one to be allowed by trustees "out of the share" of each child in a certain fund of 6,000*l.*, to which each would be entitled on attaining the latter age, and there was no direction for the payment of interest on that fund from fourteen to twenty-one:—Held, that the maintenance for each child from fourteen to twenty-one must come wholly out of the capital of the share of that child in the 6,000*l.* Cusack v. Jellico, 22 W. R. 344.

5. A testator bequeathed pecuniary legacies to each of his children, some of whom were minors; and he bequeathed the residue of his property, after payment of all his just debts, and funeral and testamentary expenses, and the several legacies bequeathed by his will, to be equally divided between all his sons and daughters; and he directed that the "interest of the legacies" thereby given to such of his children as should not be of age at the time of his decease should be paid to his wife, to be applied by her for and towards their maintenance and education:—Held, that the interest of the respective shares of the residue, as well as that of the pecuniary legacies, was applicable to the maintenance of the minor children. Guinness v. Guinness, 14 Ir. Ch. R. 218.

4. Surplus..

6. T. gave the residue to trustees, inter alia, to lay out one-third part in securities, the interest to accumulate for the benefit of the children of his niece, and, if she should survive her husband, and have issue under twenty-one years of age, the trustees were to apply the interest for their maintenance till twenty-one, and, upon the children attaining their ages of twenty-one, equal shares of the principal to be transferred to them; the interest accrued between the elder and the younger children coming of age decreed to be divided between them. Hawkins v. Combe, 1 Bro. C. C. 335.

7. A testator directed that certain funds should be payable to children on their arriving at the age of twenty-one, and that his trustee should in the meantime pay and apply the interest towards the maintenance of such children until their respective shares should become payable; and that it should be lawful to apply the whole or any part of the principal to which any infant might be entitled under the provisions thereinbefore contained, at any earlier period than the same would become vested or payable by virtue of such provision, for the advancement of such infant:—Held, that the representatives of a child who died under the age of twenty-one were not entitled to the interest accrued during his minority. Skaife v. Stewart, 10 Jur. 299.

8. A., seized of an estate of 600*l.* per annum, devises 300*l.* per annum to an infant, whose father was his heir-at-law, and the other 300*l.* per annum he devises to the father for his care in looking after the son's estate till he should come to the age of twenty-one. The father dies, leaving the son six years of age, having, by his will, devised this 300*l.* to his wife, and desired her to save what she could out of it for a portion for his daughter, and appointed her guardian for his son. This 300*l.* per annum does not determine by the father's death, but the wife shall have it till the son arrives at the age of twenty-one. Anon., Pre. Ch. 597.

1. A testatrix devised lands to trustees, in trust, in the first place, at their discretion, to pay an annuity to her son A.; and next to apply the rents to the maintenance, education, and bringing up of the three children of A. during A.'s life; the sole survivor of the three children attained twenty-one in the lifetime of A.:—Held, that the interest of such surviving child in the surplus rents and profits did not cease on his attaining twenty-one, but that he continued entitled to them during the life of his father. Badham v. Mee, 1 Russ. & M. 631.

2. Upon the construction of a will:—Held, that the surplus dividends of a legacy, after payments for maintenance during the minority of the legatee, go with the corpus. Slade v. Parr, 1 Y. & Coll. C. C. 565.

3. Bequest of stock, etc., and interest and dividends to accrue to testator's two great-nieces, equally to be divided and to be assigned, transferred, etc., to them, when and as they should respectively attain twenty-one, with limitations of their respective shares, on the event of death under twenty-one, to their respective children; survivorship in case of no children, and a direction that the executors should, during the respective minorities of the legatees, receive the dividends, interest, etc., and that so much as should be necessary should be applied for maintenance, etc., and the residue accumulate for their benefits respectively, until they should respectively become entitled to their respective parts. The surplus interest held to go with the principal upon the death of one under twenty-one without children. Sisson v. Shaw, 9 Ves. 285.

4. Such part of interest of legacy of 4,000*l.* as was not wanted for support of M. Q. to accumulate and be added to, and managed along with, the principal sum for the benefit of the persons to be entitled to the same after M. Q.'s death. In that event the principal and accumulations to go to her child or children. If no issue 1,000*l.*, part thereof, to J. H.; 750*l.*, other part thereof, to G. W.; 750*l.*, other part thereof, to J. M.; and the remainder to T. H.:—Held, that the latter took the whole accumulations. Woodhead v. Marriot, C. P. C. 62.

5. Testator bequeathed the residue of his personal estate to three trustees, in trust to pay, apply, and dispose of all the interest thereof for the maintenance, support, and benefit of his three children and the survivors and survivor of them, in such shares and proportions, and in such manner, as they should think most proper and advisable; and if all the children should die without leaving issue, then that the trust fund should remain vested in two of the trustees in trust for the persons thereafter mentioned:—Held, that the whole income of the residue was given for the children's benefit, and, the trustees having applied only part of it for their benefit, that the surplus devolved on the survivor's death to his personal representative. Bevor v. Partridge, 11 Sim. 229; 10 L. J., N. S., Ch., 89.

6. Where after a devise for successive estates for life, with remainders in tail, subject to a term of ninety-nine years, the trusts of such term were declared to be that the trustees should, out of the rents and profits of the estates, insure the messuages and keep the same in repair during the respective lives of the several tenants for life, and should, during the respective minorities of every person thereby made tenants for life or in tail, apply the surplus or residue of the rents and profits for the maintenance and education of the tenants for life or in tail, who for the time being should be entitled in possession to the estates; and in case the whole of the surplus of the said rents and profits should not, during the minority of any such tenant for life or in tail as aforesaid, be applied for his or her maintenance and education, then the surplus thereof was from time to time to be laid out on real or Government securities, at interest, in the names of the trustees, upon trust for such person or persons from time to time, as for the time being should under the limitations of the will be entitled in possession to the said estates; and if any person who might become entitled in possession or remainder to an estate tail in the estates under any of the said limitations should die under twenty-one, without issue inheritance to such estate tail, then the absolute interest in the moneys so directed to be laid out and invested was to be considered as not having been vested in such person, but the same was to go over to the next taker:—Held, that the first tenant for life in possession of the estates was not absolutely entitled to the accumulations of the rents and profits which had accrued during his minority, but was only tenant for life of such accumulations. Crosse v. Glennie, 2 Y. & Coll. 237; 7 Jur. 274.

7. Devise of houses to executors in trust to receive the rents for the support, clothing, maintenance, and education of the testator's children, until they should respectively attain the ages of twenty-one years or marriage, and from and after which to A., B., and C., or such of them as shall be then living:—Held, that the devise to A., B., and C. did not take effect in possession until after all the children attained twenty-one or married. Furran v. Smith, 11 Ir. Eq. R. 254.

Quere, whether there was an intestacy as to the surplus rents beyond what was necessary for maintenance and education of the children during their minorities. Id.

8. A particular sum being given for maintenance will not bar the party from being entitled to the surplus profits. Stafford (Earl) v. Buckley, 2 Ves. 171.

9. A testator directed his executors to apply the dividends of the property belonging to him, which might remain after paying legacies and providing for the payment of annuities, with his funeral expenses, his debts being all paid, to the maintenance, education, and benefit of R. S., as they should judge most advantageous for him; and in the event of the death of R. S. under twenty-one, he directed the dividends to be applied as therein mentioned. R. S. survived the testator about two years, and the executors applied a part of the dividends to his maintenance, education, and benefit:—Held, that the unapplied part of the dividends, with the accumulations, formed part of the residue.

McDonald v. Bryce, 2 Keen 517; 17 L. J., N. S., Ch., 217; 2 Jur. 295. And see S. C. 2 Keen 276.

1. Testator gave all his property to trustees in trust to pay an annuity to his wife, and, subject to that payment, to convey, assign, or transfer all his property unto and equally between his children, when and as they severally attained twenty-one; and in the meantime to pay to his wife, or otherwise apply the rents and proceeds of their respective shares for or towards their respective maintenance, education, and advancement. But in case of the decease of any of the children under twenty-one, then upon trust to convey, assign, or transfer the shares of such of them as should so die, and the accumulations, if any, unto and equally between such of them as should attain twenty-one. The testator's widow maintained and educated the children for several years, and advanced three of them, out of the income received by her from the testator's property, exclusive of her annuity, and, the income being more than sufficient for those purposes, a considerable surplus remained in her hands:—Held, that the surplus belonged, not to the children, but to the widow. Brown v. Paull, 1 Sim., N. S., 92; 20 L. J., N. S., Ch., 75; 15 Jur. 5.

2. C., by his will, devised all his freehold and copyhold estates to his two daughters, A. and M., and all other daughters that he might thereafter have, as tenants in common fee; he had afterwards another daughter L. He then gave directions for another will, by which he gave all his real estates to his two eldest daughters, and a sum of 15,000*l.* to his daughter L. The attorney took the minutes of this second will in writing, but before it was prepared the testator died; these minutes were proved in the Spiritual Court as a testamentary paper:—Held, first, this paper, being proved in the Spiritual Court, is sufficient to pass copyhold estate; secondly, but is so totally void as to the freehold, that it will not put L. to her election, and she thereafter will take her share of the freeholds under the first will, as well as the 15,000*l.* under the second; thirdly, the testator gave the 15,000*l.* to his daughter L., to be paid to her at twenty-one or marriage, without interest for the same in the meantime; but if she died before twenty-one or marriage, then the 15,000*l.* was not to be raised, but was to sink into the residue of his personal estate. And he directed that, out of the interest of the 15,000*l.*, certain sums of money should be applied for the maintenance or L. The interest of this legacy, beyond the maintenance, is vested in L., and must be appropriated to accumulate for her benefit. Carey v. Ashem, 2 Bro. C. C. 51; 1 Cox 241. And see 8 Ves. 492, 498, 499.

3. A testator, after bequeathing certain shares of his residuary estate (the produce of a mixed fund) to his son and daughter respectively, directed that the interest of the share given to the son should be applied for his maintenance and education till twenty-one, and that after such period he should have power to receive and dispose of such interest till his age of twenty-five, when the whole of the property bequeathed to him was to be at his own disposal. He further directed that half the property given to his daughter should be invested, in trust, for her maintenance, education, use, and benefit, during her life, and for her children, if any, after her decease; and if there was no issue living at her decease, the said property was to devolve to his son; and in case he was dead also, and had left no issue, the said property was to devolve to his executors thereafter named. The other half of the property bequeathed to his daughter he directed to be invested for her sole use and benefit till twenty-one, and that the said property should then be at her own disposal; and if either the son or daughter should die under twenty-one, the property bequeathed to the one so dying should devolve to the other; and if both should die under that age, then the property bequeathed to them should devolve to and become the property of the four persons therein named and described, to be divided betwixt them, in equal proportions, and their heirs for ever; which four persons he also appointed his executors. One of the four persons named executors renounced probate, and declined to act; and afterwards both the son and daughter died under twenty-one, and without issue:—Held, that the interest which accrued upon the shares of the son and daughter, during their respective minorities, so far as it had not been applied to their maintenance and education, vested absolutely in them, and passed to their personal representatives. Barber v. Barber, 3 Myl. & C. 688; 8 L. J., N. S., Ch., 36; 2 Jur. 1029. Affirming on this point, 7 L. J., N. S., Ch., 70; 1 Jur. 915.

4. An estate was devised to trustees for five hundred years, with remainder to persons still unborn, with remainder to the plaintiff. The trustees had active duties as to the management of the estate and large discretionary powers, and they were authorised, "during the minority of any person absolutely or presumptively entitled," to apply the surplus income for the benefit of such person, accumulating the surplus:—Held, that the plaintiff, who had attained her majority, had no right to any part of the surplus rents accruing prior to her estate becoming vested in possession. Sidney v. Wilmer, 25 Beav. 260.

5. Testator directed his executors to pay and apply the whole or any part of the rents, issues, and profits of his real and personal estates during the life of J. S. for or towards his maintenance, attendance, and comfort; and after the death of J. S., to sell the real and personal estate, the produce of the sale to be deemed part of the testator's personal estate, and the rents and profits of the real estate in the meantime, and until a sale, to be deemed part of the annual income of his personal estate. The whole of the rents of the real estate, and part only of the personal estate, had been applied by the trustees for the maintenance of J. S., who was of unsound mind, without touching upon his private property:—Held, that the personal representatives of J. S. were not entitled to the unapplied savings of the testator's real and personal estate as upon an absolute gift of the income to J. S., though the whole income, however large, might have been applied by the trustees for his maintenance, if necessary; but that the mixed fund must be apportioned between the testator's heir-at-law and residuary legatees.

Held, also, that if the trustees had accumulated the testator's estate, and allowed J. S. to have been maintained out of his own property, his administration would have been entitled to be recouped to the full extent. Re Sanderson's Will, 5 W. R. 864; 3 Kay & J. 497; 3 Jur., N. S., 658; 26 L. J., Ch., 804.

1. A legacy was given to trustees to be expended by them for the benefit and advancement of an infant as they in their absolute discretion should think fit. There was also a gift by the will, of the income of a share of the residue to the infant for life on his attaining twenty-one, with a power to the trustees to apply the income during his minority for his maintenance and education. A suit for administration was instituted by the trustees immediately after the testator's death, and orders were from time to time made in it for the advancement, and also the maintenance and education of the infant out of the legacy. On his attaining twenty-one:—Held, that he was absolutely entitled to the unapplied residue of the legacy. Furley v. Hyder, 41 L. J., Ch., 583; 26 L. T., N. S., 864.

Held, also, that inasmuch as maintenance would have been ordered out of the income of the contingent share of the infant, he was entitled to be recouped out of the past income of the residuary estate what had been expended out of the legacy for his maintenance and education. Id.

2. By settlement, trustees were directed to pay the income of 1,000*l.* for the maintenance, education, and support of the children of the marriage, and when they should attain twenty-one years to pay the same sum and the accumulations thereof accruing to such children. The father had maintained the children at a greater expense than the income of the 1,000*l.* There was no direction to accumulate:—Held, that the father was entitled to the past accumulations of income and the future income during children's minority. Birch v. Sumner, 3 Jur., N. S., 712.

3. Funds were vested in trustees by M., upon trust (after certain intermediate trusts) to pay the whole or so much as they should think fit of the dividends thereof towards the maintenance, etc., of an infant; and upon trust, when the infant attained twenty-one, to pay the whole dividends to her, with further trust as to corpus of the fund for her children; but if the infant died under twenty-one without issue, then upon trusts as to the corpus of the fund, and the dividends thenceforth to accrue for the next-of-kin of M. A power was contained in the settlement authorising the trustees to invest so much of the income to which the infant "shall be entitled" as might not be required for her maintenance, etc., and to transfer such investments to the infant on her attaining twenty-one, with power to the trustees to resort to the accumulations of any previous year, and apply the same for the infant's maintenance, etc., in any succeeding year. The infant died under twenty-one, and there was a considerable sum invested, being accumulations of unapplied income:—Held, as between the parties claiming under the gift over, the next-of-kin of the infant, and the personal representatives of the settlor, that the invested accumulations passed to the personal representatives of the settlor as a resulting trust. Baker v. Pugh, 5 W. R. 239.

4. By a post-nuptial settlement the sum of 15,000*l.*, secured by mortgage of the settlor's property, was settled upon his children, with power for the trustees to apply the income for their maintenance. The money was never raised or paid to the trustees; the settlor maintained his children until his bankruptcy:—Held, that the children were entitled to the arrears of the fund. Re Morrison, 40 L. J., Ch., 637; 25 L. T., N. S., 57; 19 W. R. 967.

5. Property was bequeathed to trustees in trust for an infant, with a gift over in case of his death under twenty-one. The trustees accumulated the income of the property not required for his maintenance, in pursuance of the powers given by s. 26 of Lord Cranworth's Act. The infant died under twenty-one:—Held, that the accumulations of income to the time of the death of the infant belonged to the infant, and were not to be held for the benefit of the remainderman, who ultimately became entitled to the property from which the accumulations arose. Re Buckley's Trusts, 22 L. R., Ch. D., 583; 52 L. J., Ch., 439; 48 L. T. 109; 31 W. R. 376.

5. Discretion of Trustees.

(b) Exercise of pending Suit or after Payment into Court, 6934.

(c) Interference of the Court, 6935.

(a) In General.

6. A disinherits his son, and by will gives the greatest part of his estate to B., and tells B., if his son behaved well, he might pay him 20*l.* a quarter; and if he used that well, he might make it up 40*l.* a quarter. Decreed 40*l.* a quarter to the son. Kingsman v. Kingsman, 2 Vern. 559.

7. A testator directed his trustees, in their uncontrolled discretion, to apply such part of his residuary estate for the maintenance, comfort, and support of his wife, as, together with her own property, should make up her annual income to 500*l.* At the date of the will, and at his death, the wife was of unsound mind, but she afterwards recovered:—Held, that she was entitled to have her income made up to 500*l.* per annum. Bullock v. Bullock, 11 Jur., N. S., 29.

8. Trustee, being directed to apply in his discretion such portions of the income as he should think fit, towards the support of F. H. and her children, and to invest and accumulate such part of the income as should not be so applied:—Held, to be justified in keeping considerable balances in his hands to answer contingencies, and not chargeable with interest on such balances. Cantrell v. Higgins, 1 Jur. 792.

9. Under a settlement, discretionary power over a fund of 500*l.* a year was given to two trustees upon trust, to apply it to the maintenance of an infant, or else in their discretion to accumulate it, and if the trustees did not apply the fund to either of these objects, it was to be paid to Mrs. W. They both agreed the fund was not required for maintenance, but differed on the question of accumulation:

—Held, that as the maintenance was amply provided for, and the Court in the exercise of its discretion on the point, when the trustees differed, thought the accumulation unnecessary, Mrs. W. was entitled to the fund until further order. Windham v. Cooper, 24 L. T., N. S., 793.

1. Devise and bequest of freehold, copyhold, and personal estate, upon trust for sale at the discretion of the trustee, and that the rents, interest, and proceeds should be divided amongst a class, either equally or in other proportions, as the trustee, having regard to their circumstances, should appoint; followed by an unattested codicil, directing the application of such rents, interest, and proceeds for the benefit of such of the class as were unsettled, and particularly for the comfortable support of P. (one of the class), who was of weak mind; and in case the trustee should not live to perform the whole trust, the rest to be executed by any persons he might appoint, having regard to the said intentions. The trustee by deed directed the manner in which the estates should be sold, and the proportions of the proceeds applied, and directed the division thereof amongst the other objects to be postponed until after the death of P., and nominated other persons to execute the trusts, which might remain unexecuted at his (the trustee's) death, with the same discretionary power that he had himself:—Held, that the trustee, for the government of his own discretion, might properly have regard to the direction of the unattested codicil, even as to the proceeds of the real estate, so far as he was not restrained by the effect of the will; that the prospective directions in the deed of appointment were not necessarily invalid, especially those which related to the future maintenance of P.; and that the attempt to delegate powers which the trustee could not transfer did not invalidate the directions in the same deed which he had power to give. Hitch v. Lenworthy, 2 Hare 200; 15 L. J., N. S., Ch., 235.

2. Under a marriage settlement, property was to be held by the trustees, after the death of the wife, for all and every or such one or more of the children of the marriage, etc., as the wife should appoint, and in default of appointment, for the children equally; and the trustees were empowered during the minorities of the children to apply the income of their presumptive shares for their maintenance and education; although the father might be of ability to maintain them. In exercise of the power, the wife appointed the property among the children equally, and directed that, during their minorities, the income of their respective shares should be paid to the husband, to be applied by him for their maintenance:—Held, that the discretion of the trustees as to the application of the income during the minorities was not thereby taken away. White v. Grane, 23 L. J., Ch., 863; 18 Beav. 571.

3. By a will a sum was given to two trustees on trust to pay the income to C. for his life, with a gift over of the principal on his death; but the trustees had a discretionary power to purchase with the principal an irredeemable annuity for the life of C. for his benefit. The trustees did not purchase an annuity, but one of them paid to C. during his life, from time to time, various small sums, amounting in the aggregate to more than the total income, but less than the principal:—Held, that this was a proper exercise of the discretionary power. Messena v. Carr, 9 L. R., Eq., 260; 39 L. J., Ch., 216; 22 L. T. 3; 18 W. R. 415.

4. A widow, who was by the terms of the will to be allowed money by the trustees during the minority of an infant—her son—abandoned the child, for whom other guardians were appointed by the Court, and afterwards having cohabited with a married man, and by him had several illegitimate children, lived with them in a house to the use of which she was entitled under the will. The trustees under the circumstances refused to make her any allowance out of the trust moneys:—Held, that she could not compel the trustees so to do, but was disqualified from making any claim by her abandonment of the child, independently of other misconduct. Mellor v. Mellor, 20 W. R. 51.

5. Where trustees have unlimited discretionary power to postpone, as long as they may think fit, the payments of shares of a residuary fund; and where of the time and manner of exercising the power they are to be the sole and final judges, asserting creditors of the fund will be defeated by the trustees executing, even after action raised, a deed applying the fund as an alimentary provision for the behoof of the beneficiaries. No proceedings resorted to by creditors of the beneficiaries can in such a case abridge the powers of the trustees. Chambers v. Smith, 3 L. R., App. Cas. (Sc.), 795.

(b) Exercise of pending Suit or after Payment into Court.

6. Where, under a will, the income of a fund is payable for the maintenance of T., the trustee, by paying the fund into court, relinquishes his discretionary power. Re Tegg, 15 W. R. 52; 15 L. T., N. S., 236.

7. Power given by a will to trustees, at their discretion, to apply during the life of testator's wife any part not exceeding one moiety of the annual income of the trust estate for or towards the maintenance and education of his daughter, or otherwise for her benefit, in such manner as the trustees should think proper, may be exercised, notwithstanding bill filed by trustees to have the trusts of the will performed and carried into execution under the direction of the Court. Sillibourne v. Newport, 1 Kay & J. 602; 1 Jur., N. S., 608; 3 W. R. 653.

8. When a testator by his will gives his trustees a discretionary power of advancement for the maintenance and education of children presumptively entitled under the will, the Court will not control the trustees in the exercise of their discretion, because a decree has been made in a suit for the administration of the testator's estate. Brophy v. Bellamy, 29 L. T., N. S., 380; 8 L. R., Ch., 798; 43 L. J., Ch., 183.

9. A testator bequeathed to his executors a sum of £50L, which he directed should be held by them in trust for his brother James's family; and should be by his said executors expended for the benefit of the said family, in such a manner as to them should seem most expedient. The executors having paid the 450*l.* into court under the Trustees Relief Act:—Held, that the payment into court terminated the discretionary power of applying the fund. Re Mulqueen Trusts, Ex p. Mulqueen, 7 L. R., Ir., 127.

(c) Interference of the Court.

1. Where a testator has given a discretionary power to trustees to apply the income of his estate for the maintenance of an infant, the Court will not interfere, unless the trustees have been guilty of extravagance. Douglas v. Andrews, 3 Jur. 949.

2. Where a testator has reposed a discretion in his trustees as to the application of rents and profits in the maintenance, etc., of his widow and children, the Court will not interfere, in the absence of misconduct, without their consent. Collins v. Vining, C. P. C. 472.

3. A direction by will that the testator's widow shall receive all the income of his real and personal estate, and pay and apply the same to and for the use of herself and the children of their marriage agreeably and according to her own discretion during her life, confers on the wife a discretionary power which the Court will not disturb so long as it is reasonably and honestly exercised. Costabadie v. Costabadie, 6 Hare 410; 16 L. J., N. S., Ch., 259; 11 Jur. 345.

4. Testator bequeathed an annuity to his granddaughter, to be applied whilst she was under age in and towards her maintenance and education, in such manner as his trustees should in their absolute and uncontrollable discretion think fit, and whether her father should be able to maintain and provide for her or not. The trustees having made a very small payment on account of the annuity, and having made no provision for the maintenance or education of the infant, who had been wholly provided for by her father, the Court declared, that, in the event of its appearing that the father had properly maintained and educated the infant from the testator's death, he should receive the whole annuity for the time past and till further notice, he undertaking properly to maintain and educate her, and to abide by the order of the Court. Stephens v. Lawry, 2 Y. & Coll. C. C. 87.

5. A testator gave to his executors certain real and personal estate, upon trust to permit his wife M. to receive the rents, etc., thereof for her own use and benefit, and for the maintenance and education of his children (naming them), so long as his said wife should continue his widow, and, in case she should marry, to pay her an annuity of 100*l.* per annum, and subject to such trusts, in trust, after the decease or marriage of M., for his said children in equal shares, when and as they should attain the age of twenty-one:—Held, that a trust was constituted of a sufficient part of the income of the property for the maintenance and education of the children, and that such trust was capable of continuance beyond the period of a son attaining twenty-one, or a daughter attaining that age or marrying. The Court, however, being of opinion that a discretionary power as to the mode of executing the trust was given to M., directed inquiries for the purpose of ascertaining how such discretionary power had been, and how it ought to be, exercised. Longmore v. Eloum, 2 Y. & Coll. C. C. 363; 12 L. J., N. S., Ch., 470.

6. A testator gave a legacy of 3,000*l.* to three children, or the survivors or survivor, who should attain twenty-one; but if all three died under twenty-one there was a gift over. The will contained a direction to the trustees to apply the whole or such parts as they should think fit of the income of the legacy for the maintenance and education of the legatees while under twenty-one:—Held, that the Court had power to control the discretion of the trustees in the allowance to be made for children; and the Court, in opposition to the trustees, directed that the whole income should be paid to the father of the children for their maintenance, together with an equal amount for past maintenance. Re Hodges, Davey v. Ward, 7 L. R., Ch. D., 754; 47 L. J., Ch., 335; 26 W. R. 390.

7. Where in a marriage settlement the trustees had power to apply the income of the settled fund for the benefit of the husband and wife and their children as they should "in their uncontrolled and irresponsible discretion think proper," the Court, while expressing an opinion that the trustees were not acting judiciously, declined to interfere with their discretion, there being no proof of mala fides. Tabor v. Brooks, 10 L. R., Ch. D., 273; 48 L. J., Ch., 130; 39 L. T. 528.

8. Where a fund was by will given to trustees for infants, and the trustees were desired to pay the income to the mother to be by her applied for their benefit at her discretion:—Held, that the Court had power, where the mother had not exercised a sound discretion, to order the income to be paid to the father for the maintenance of the infants. Re Roper's Trusts, 11 L. R., Ch. D., 272; 27 W. R. 408; 40 L. T. 97.

6. Account against Trustees.

9. Where lands are devised to maintain an infant till twenty-three, and then to account, he shall not have an account until he attains twenty-three, unless the trustee be insolvent. Tilly v. Simpson, Mos. 244.

10. A testator gave his residue, on trust to apply the income for the maintenance, education, and support of his children until the youngest attained twenty-one. The children having been maintained and educated, the Court declined directing an account of the application of the income during the minority of the youngest child, without a special case being made out. Hora v. Hora, 33 Beav. 88.

11. Testator gave an annuity to a trustee in trust to pay the same to his daughter for her separate use for life, remainder to her husband, to enable him to maintain his children by her until the youngest attained twenty-one; and if the husband should die before the youngest child attained twenty-one, then upon trust for the trustee to apply the annuity in like manner as the husband was directed to do:—Held, the daughter being dead, that the husband was bound to apply the annuity for the maintenance of the children; but that if he maintained them properly, they would not be entitled to an account against him. Leach v. Leach, 13 Sim. 304; 7 Jur. 273.

1. When an annuity was given to A. in trust to apply it at his discretion for the benefit of B. during his life, and for his advancement, maintenance, support, or otherwise for his benefit, without being answerable for any of the money so laid out, or the exercise of the discretion so vested in the trustee as to the mode and extent of expending and laying out the same:—Held, that A. could not apply any portion of the annuity for his own benefit, but was bound to account for all sums not shown to be applied for the advancement, maintenance, support, or benefit of B. Wainford v. Heyl, 20 L. R., Eq., 321; 33 L. T., N. S., 155; 44 L. J., Ch., 567; 23 W. R. 848.

2. Trustee, being directed to apply in his discretion such portions of the income as he should think fit, towards the support of F. H. and her children, and to invest and accumulate such part of the income as should not be so applied:—Held, to be justified in keeping considerable balances in his hands to answer contingencies, and not chargeable with interest on such balances. Cantwell v. Higgins, 1 Jur. 792.

3. Charges by trustees for money laid out in luxuries under colour of maintenance, and for money unnecessarily expended in pulling down and rebuilding a house, disallowed. Bridge v. Brown, 2 Y. & Coll. 181.

4. If a trustee be sued in Chancery for an account, and it appears that he has properly expended sums of money for the protection and safety, or for the maintenance and support, of his cestui que trust, at a time when he, though adult, was incapable of taking care of himself, the Court will allow him credit in account for such sums of money. Nelson v. Duncombe, 9 Beav. 211; 15 L. J., N. S., Ch., 296; 10 Jur. 399.

5. The fact that a will contains an express direction to accumulate, and no power of maintenance, will not be a ground for charging the trustee with sums properly paid for maintenance. Aveline v. Melhuish, 10 Jur., N. S., 788.

6. The sum of 100*l.* devised to an infant payable at twenty-one, and if he dies before, then it is devised over, and the interest of the 100*l.* is for the child's maintenance. The trustee lays out 20*l.* of the 100*l.* for placing out the child as apprentice, and the child died under twenty-one. This 20*l.* shall be allowed. Franklin v. Green, 2 Vern. 137.

7. Maintenance to some extent allowed out of capital, though the direction in the will applied only to income, the whole estate amounting to about 12,000*l.*, but the income having proved insufficient, owing to temporary charges; but sums expended in luxuries, etc., as for the purchase of ponies, were disallowed, and 100*l.* only was allowed out of 145*l.*, expended by executors for funeral expenses, on an estate of about 12,000*l.* Bridge v. Brown, 2 Y. & Coll. C. C. 181.

7. Lunatics.

8. A mother, whose only daughter, a lunatic, was entitled to a large real and personal estate under her father's will, bequeathed the residue of her estate and effects to trustees, upon trust to apply the interest, amounting to about 1,600*l.* a year, towards the maintenance and support of her daughter, and otherwise for her comfort and advantage, as they should think proper, without being liable to account; and after her decease to pay the principal, and also such interest as should not have been actually so applied, to the testatrix's nieces:—Held, that the allowance of the lunatic ought to be borne exclusively by the maternal estate, as that arrangement, in the event of her recovery, would be most beneficial for her. Re Ashley, 1 Russ. & M. 371.

9. A father, by will, directed the income of his real and personal estate to be expended as the trustees might think fit, in the maintenance of his son, a lunatic, and gave the corpus so that it vested in the lunatic absolutely. Afterwards, the mother of the lunatic gave her personal estate to trustees, upon trust, to apply a sufficient part of the income in his maintenance, with a direction to accumulate the surplus, and gave the corpus and accumulations over:—Held, that the mother had dedicated the whole of the income of her estate for the benefit of her son, subject to a provision that the surplus should be added to the principal, and that the question of contribution between the two estates to the lunatic's maintenance must be decided solely with reference to his interest; and the income of the mother's estate alone being insufficient for the lunatic's maintenance, the whole thereof must be applied for that purpose in the first instance, before any part of the income of the father's estate should be applied. Methold v. Turner, 4 De G. & Sm. 249; 15 Jur. 810; 20 L. J., Ch., 201.

10. A testator gave a fund to trustees in trust to pay the income to his sister for her life, or apply the same, or so much as may be necessary, for her support and maintenance, in such manner as may be most to her comfort and advantage. He then directed the surplus, if any, to be accumulated and added to the capital of the fund, which was given over after her death. The sister, who was of unsound mind, was entitled to a life interest under a settlement, of which the testator was a trustee. After the testator's death, she was found lunatic, and the allowance for her maintenance was fixed at a sum exceeding the income of the bequeathed fund:—Held, that this income was a primary fund for the maintenance, and that therefore the whole of it must be so applied. Rudland v. Crozier, 2 De G. & J. 143; 4 Jur., N. S., 675; 27 L. J., Ch., 261.

11. P., by his will, directed that his widow A. and second son B., who were devisees of his estates, should apply a sum not exceeding 400*l.* per annum for the maintenance and care of his son John, who was a lunatic, and that whoever should at any time be in possession of his estate should, during the life of his son, apply such sum annually for his comfortable support, care, and maintenance; and that such sum should be deemed, taken, and considered as a charge thereon:—Held, that there was no greater charge upon the estate than what was actually required and applied for the maintenance of the lunatic. Re Pensonby, 3 Dr. & War. 27; 2 Con. & L. 30; 5 Ir. Eq. R. 568.

After A. and B. had died, the Court fixed the allowance of 280*l.* a year:—Held, after the lunatic's death, as between the owner of the estate charged and the administrator of the lunatic, that the owner of the estate was entitled to the difference between 280*l.* and 400*l.* a year, and not the administrator of the lunatic. Ib.

The committee of a lunatic is beneficially entitled to the savings out of the lunatic's allowance. Ib.

1. A wife was insane before and during the time of her being entitled to a separate maintenance left by the will of a testator who knew her to be insane; no commission had issued; she had an only child an infant entitled to the capital in the event of surviving his mother; upon the husband's application for an allowance out of the wife's separate maintenance for her support, a reference was directed to the Master to inquire who had maintained the wife, at what expense, how far the husband was able and willing to maintain her, and if any part of this fund was to be advanced to any one, what securities should be taken for its due application. Brodie v. Barry, 2 Ves. & B. 36.

2. Where there are two funds, both of them applicable to the maintenance of a lunatic, under the management of the Court of Chancery, to one of which the lunatic would be absolutely entitled as her own property, the other of which, so far as she might not benefit by it, would pass away to different persons, the Court might direct her maintenance to be provided for out of the latter fund. But where such latter fund is provided by a will which vests the fund in trustees, and gives them an absolute discretion and "uncontrollable authority" over its application, the Court will not exercise its ordinary power. The fund so specially provided will be left to the exercise, bonâ fide, of the discretion of the trustees. Gisborne v. Gisborne, 2 L. R., App. Cas., 300; 46 L. J., Ch., 556; 25 W. R. 516; 36 L. T., N. S., 564. Affirming 23 W. R. 410; 32 L. T., N. S., 46, which reversed 23 W. R. 151; 31 L. T., N. S., 472.

A husband devised real estate, and bequeathed his residuary personal estate to trustees upon trust, that they, in their discretion and of their uncontrollable authority, should pay and apply the whole or such portion only of the annual income of his real and residuary personal estate as they should think expedient to or for the maintenance of his wife (a lunatic) at such time or times and in such proportion and manner in all respects as his trustees should think most conducive to her comfort, enjoyment, and convenience, without being liable to account for such payment and application. The wife became, on her husband's death without issue, entitled under her marriage settlement to a life interest in certain funds, and absolutely to other funds therein respectively comprised. By an order of the Lords Justices in Lunacy, it was ordered that without prejudice to the question as to the primary liability of the testator's estate to provide for the maintenance of the lunatic, the sum of 696*l.* a year should be applied for that purpose:—Held, that the trustees had an absolute discretion as to whether or not they would apply any and what part of the income of the testator's estate for the maintenance of the lunatic, and that the Court was not entitled to control or interfere with such discretion. Ib.

3. Where a lunatic has property to which he is entitled for life under a settlement as well as property to which he is absolutely entitled, the Court will apply the life interest in the first place towards his maintenance; unless the trustees of the settled property have no absolute discretion whether to employ the whole or any part of the income for the lunatic's benefit. Therefore where property was held upon trust to pay the income in such way, at such time, and in such manner as the trustees should think fit towards the maintenance of a lunatic during her life, with power to invest any surplus not required for the purpose as capital, it was held that the trustees had no such discretion as wouldoust the jurisdiction of the Court to apply the whole of the income in the lunatic's maintenance in exoneration of her absolute property. Gisborne v. Gisborne, (2 L. R., App. Cas., 300) distinguished. Re Weaver, 21 L. R., Ch. D., 615; 48 L. T. 93; 31 W. R. 224.

The brother of a lunatic lady, not so found by inquisition, advanced money for the maintenance of his sister for several years, under circumstances which left it doubtful whether he intended it for a gift or expected to be repaid. He died, and his sister was then found to be lunatic by inquisition. His executors having brought in a claim against the lunatic's estate for repayment of the advances, the Court made an allowance to the testator's estate for past maintenance, but limited it to advances made within six years before the testator's death. Ib.

4. A testator gave the residue of his estate to trustees, upon the usual trusts for conversion and investment, and directed them to pay such sums for the maintenance and education of his sons M. and N. during their minorities, or for apprenticing them, as his trustees should think proper; and declared that, when his sons should have attained their ages of twenty-one years, his trustees should pay the then residue of the moneys unto his two sons, provided that they should be, in the opinion of his trustees, of competent understanding and sufficient discretion to manage and take due care thereof. M. and N. were both lunatic at the time of their attaining their majority:—Held, that the qualification as to the sons being of competent understanding did not make the gift to them conditional, and that the testator's estate vested in them absolutely. Wright v. Wright, 21 L. J., Ch., 775.

5. A testatrix gave real and personal estate to trustees to pay the income to E. for life, and hold the capital in trust as E. should by will appoint, and in default to pay thereout certain legacies, and hold the residue in trust for C. and W. And in case E. should become of unsound mind, to apply the income or any part of it at their discretion towards her maintenance and support:—Held, that while E. was of sound mind, she, together with C. and W., could, on providing for the legacies, dispose of the estate. Gardiner v. Young, 34 L. T., N. S., 348.

8. Married Women or Widows. Separate Use.

6. A testator directed his trustees to apply a legacy for the support and maintenance of the wife of H., and for the support and education of his children. There were none at the testator's death:—Held, that the wife took absolutely for her separate use. Cape v. Cape, 2 Y. & Coll. 543; 1 Jur. 307.

1. Testator bequeathed his residuary estate to trustees in trust to pay the income to his wife for her life, to be by her applied for the maintenance of herself and such children as he might leave at his death:—Held, not to be a trust for the separate use of the wife. Wardle v. Claxton, 9 Sim. 524; 8 L. J., N. S., Ch., 119; 3 Jur. 145.

2. If an estate is given to a husband for the livelihood of his wife, he will be a trustee for her separate use, and technical words are not necessary to create a separate trust; "livelihood" is enough here to show the testator's intention. Darley v. Darley, 3 Atk. 399.

3. A father gave his property to trustees on trust during the life of his son to pay, apply, and dispose of the annual produce of a portion of it for the maintenance and support of his son and his present or any future wife, and the maintenance, education, and support of their children or any or either of them his son and his wife and children, in such manner and such proportions as the trustees should in their discretion think fit and proper, without being answerable or accountable to any person for the way in which they should apply the same; and, after the death of his son, to pay and apply the annual proceeds in like manner unto and for the benefit of any widow for life, and any children until they should attain twenty-one or marry, and subject to those trusts in trust for the children. The son died in 1849, leaving a wife and six children, the youngest of whom attained twenty-one in 1870. In 1851 the widow married again. The settlement made on the marriage did not comprise the above annual proceeds, and the trustees continued to pay them to the wife as part of her separate estate and on her separate receipt. The second husband, who was living apart from his wife, claimed to be entitled to the income during her life:—Held, that the trustees had a discretion to pay the wife the income for her separate use. Austin v. Austin, Austin v. Boyce, 4 L. R., Ch. D., 233; 46 L. J., Ch., 92; 36 L. T. 96; 25 W. R. 346.

4. Under a trust deed providing pensions to be paid for the maintenance of widows and children of clerks in the East India Company's service, and stipulating that any recipient of a pension who should dispose of or incur the right to lose all right to such pension, a widow became entitled to a pension. She married a second husband, who claimed to be entitled to a pension in his marital right:—Held, that the pension provided for the petitioner was intended by the trust deed to be for her separate use, and the money was ordered to be paid to her upon her sole receipt. Re Peacock's Trusts, 10 L. R., Ch. D., 490; 48 L. J., Ch., 265; 27 W. R. 500; 39 L. T. 661.

9. Statutory Powers (23 & 24 Vict., c. 145, and 44 & 45 Vict., c. 41).

5. Trustees may, under 23 & 24 Vict., c.

145, s. 26, apply for or towards the maintenance of an infant the income of a legacy bequeathed to an infant by a stranger contingently on attaining the age of twenty-one years. Re Cotton, 1 L. R., Ch. D., 232; 45 L. J., Ch., 201; 33 L. T. 720; 24 W. R. 243.

When a fund was bequeathed upon trust for all the children of A. who should attain twenty-one in equal shares, and if there should be but one such child, then for that child, and A. died leaving one infant child:—Held, that the income of the fund might be applied in the maintenance of the child. Ib.

6. The 23 & 24 Vict., c. 145, s. 26, empowering trustees to apply towards the maintenance of an infant the income to which such infant may be entitled in respect of a legacy payable contingently on his attaining twenty-one, does not apply to a case where the infant on attaining twenty-one would not be entitled to interest on his legacy till the time of payment. Re George, 5 L. R., Ch. D., 837; 47 L. J., Ch., 118; 37 L. T. 204; 26 W. R. 65. Reversing 25 W. R. 182.

A father declared that his personal estate should be held upon trust out of the annual produce to raise for every daughter who should be under age and unmarried the yearly sum of 50*l.* for their maintenance and education, and to accumulate the surplus income as part of his residuary personal estate, and he bequeathed to each of his daughters a legacy of 4,000*l.* if and when they should respectively attain twenty-one or be married, and gave his residuary personal estate to his eldest son:—Held, that the legacies to the daughters did not carry interest until the time of payment, and that the Court had no power, under s. 26 of the 23 & 24 Vict., c. 145, to apply any part of the income of the expectant legacies to the maintenance of the daughters. Ib.

The presumption that a legacy, given by a person in loco parentis to an infant on his attaining twenty-one, carries interest by way of maintenance in the meantime, is rebutted if the testator makes any other provision for such maintenance. Ib.

7. Trustees cannot, under s. 43 of the Conveyancing Act 1881 (44 & 45 Vict., c. 41), apply the income of an infant's contingent legacy for the benefit of the infant, unless the income will go along with the capital of the legacy if and when such capital vests. Re Judkin's Trusts, 25 L. R., Ch. D., 748; 58 L. J., Ch., 496.

8. A testator gave a fund to trustees, on trust for all the children of A. equally, who being sons should attain twenty-one, or being daughters should attain twenty-one or marry, with benefit of survivorship amongst them, and he directed his trustees to accumulate the income of the shares of the children, and to pay the same to them as and when their presumptive shares should become payable under the previous trust:—Held, that the will did not express a "contrary intention" within the meaning of s. 43 of the Conveyancing Act 1881 (44 & 45 Vict., c. 41), and that the children being infants and unmarried, the trustees might at their discretion apply the income of the trust fund in or towards the maintenance and education of the infants. Re Thatcher's Trusts, 26 L. R., Ch. D., 426; 58 L. J., Ch., 1050; 32 W. R. 679.

10. Other Cases.

1. Held, on construction of settlement that will not being duly attested, and under other circumstances, trustees had no power to allow maintenance during a certain period, but that eldest son should be put to his election to allow it, as he had other benefits under the will, and was the only person that could be benefited by withholding the maintenance. Hume v. Rundell, 2 Sim. & S. 174.

2. A testator bequeathed as follows: "I leave J. B. under the protection of my wife A. P., to be by her apprenticed and taken care of, and to be provided for to the best of her judgment, as long as the said A. P. remains unmarried":—Held, that J. B. was entitled to maintenance out of the testator's estate. Batt v. Anns, 11 L. J., N. S., Ch., 52.

3. Testator gave all his property to his wife and two other persons in trust for the under-mentioned purpose, namely, to pay the income to his wife for the education and support of his children by her, and after her death the property to be divided among his children; and he gave his furniture, plate, etc., to his wife absolutely:—Held, that the children were not entitled to the trust property on their father's death; but that their mother was entitled to the income for her life, she maintaining and educating the children out of it. Gilbert v. Bennett, 10 Sim. 371.

4. Money, secured by a policy, was settled to A. and B., wife and husband, successively, for life, then in trust for the children of the marriage, with powers of advancement and for maintenance with an ultimate trust; on failure of children, to the wife's appointment. There was but one child of the marriage, and the wife bequeathed all her interest under the settlement to her husband and died. There was a bonus declared on the policy, and the assurance office was willing to pay money in respect of it. The husband was in insolvent circumstances, and about to emigrate, and he and the child petitioned that the trustees might be at liberty to receive the money payable in respect of the bonus, and, by yearly payments out of it, maintain the child; and the Court granted the prayer of the petition, on the husband (the father) agreeing to give up all his life interest, not only in the bonus money, but in the principal money assured, although there was no suit in court for the administration of the trust. Exp. Hayes, 18 L. J., N. S., Ch., 441; 13 Jur. 762.

5. Term of years to trustees to raise money for maintenance, etc., of younger children of A. in such shares, etc., as A. should direct, and, in default of direction, to be applied for benefit of children equally, same to be paid them respectively till their respective portions provided out of other property should be paid. A., by will, appointed a certain portion for plaintiff, to be vested in her at the age of twenty-one or marriage, and directed that a certain part of the interest and dividends should be applied towards her maintenance, etc., but did not make any appointment, or give any directions relative to the sum of money raisable for that purpose under the term:—Held, on construction of settlement, that plaintiff was entitled to have her share of the money provided by the term raised for the benefit, until her portions should become payable. Poulett v. Poulett, 6 Madd. 167.

6. A testator devised estates to trustees upon trust to pay certain annuities to his wife and other persons, with a direction that during the life of his wife the surplus rents should be applied in discharge of incumbrances affecting the devised property; and subject to these trusts, he declared that the trustees should stand seised of the property, in trust for various persons (not in esse at the testator's death) successively in tail, with remainder to the testator's niece for life, with a direction that during her minority the rents should be applied as after mentioned; and then followed a clause to the effect that, if any persons beneficially entitled to the rents should be in his or her minority, an annual sum not exceeding 300*l.* should be applied out of the rents to the maintenance of that person, and that the residue of the rents should accumulate, and the accumulations be applied in the discharge of incumbrances:—Held, upon the construction of these inconsistent clauses, and other parts of the will, that the testator's niece was not (at least during the life of the testator's widow) entitled to any part of the rents for her maintenance during minority. Williams v. Edwards, 2 Colly. 176.

7. Testator desired his trustees to pay the whole of the income of his property to his wife "for her own use and the use of her children"; but if she married again he gave her one-third only, the other two-thirds to be received for the benefit of the children in providing for their education and outfits in life. The wife's third to be for her life, and then to go to the children with the remainder:—Held, that during the widowhood of their mother the children were not entitled to any portion of the income, or to have any part set apart for their maintenance or advancement. Kennedy v. Kennedy, 2 W. R. 298.

8. W. by will gave all his real estate to trustees until his son attained twenty-five, remainder to his said son W. the younger for life, remainder to trustees to preserve, remainder to his first and other sons in tail, with remainders over. And in case his said son should leave any child other than an eldest or only son, the trustees had power, at any time after the son's death, to demise or mortgage for years to raise 5,000*l.* for portions for younger children, as W. the younger should appoint, and in default equally between them, to be vested and payable at twenty-one. W. the younger never appointed, and died leaving an infant son and three younger children. On bill filed, and application for maintenance for them:—Held, that there being a third person (the eldest son) interested, and not sui juris, no maintenance could be allowed. Willow v. Brown, 2 W. R. 153.

9. Where a testator made a special provision for the maintenance of his younger children until receipt of their portions, and stated that the maintenance given to the sons (saying nothing as to daughters), which was less than the interest on their portions, should be in lieu of interest:—Held, that the daughters were not entitled to interest as well as maintenance, although the will directed that the trustees should stand possessed of the fund appointed for payment of their portion, and of the interest, dividends, and annual produce thereof, in trust for the daughters, on their attaining twenty-one. Selby v. Gillum, 2 Y. & Coll. 379.

1. Devise of real estates to testator's daughter for life, with remainder to his two sons in fee, and, in case daughter should leave any child or children living at her death, then he directed that the two sons or their heirs should pay to such child or children 200*l.*, equally between them, as they should severally attain twenty-one, and interest for the same, until the legacy should become due, for maintenance, etc. The daughter left one child, which lived several years but died an infant:—Held, that interest was due from mother's death to child's death. Harris v. Finch, 1 McClel. 141.

2. Where a testator bequeathed an annuity to his granddaughter for her life, and directed that if she should die during the lifetime of his widow the annuity should be paid for the maintenance of the children of the granddaughter, and that from and after the decease of his widow and granddaughter the value or the amount of the annuity (such a sum as would produce it according to the then legal rate of interest) should be paid to all and every the child and children of the granddaughter; if more than one, to be equally divided amongst them when and as they should respectively attain the age of twenty-one years, and if there should be but one then the whole to such one child, with a gift over, in case of the death of the granddaughter without issue who should attain the age of twenty-one; the children of the granddaughter are not entitled to the annuity or interest of the fund after the death of the widow and their mother until they attain the age of twenty-one years. Festing v. Allen, 5 Hare 575.

3. A testator, having bequeathed various legacies, and, among others, an annuity of 5*l.* to his daughter during her life, directs his son (whom he afterwards makes his executor) to take care of and provide for her, and, "subject as aforesaid," he gave to that son the residue of his real and personal estate: the daughter is entitled to a provision out of the residue in addition to her annuity, and a reference will be directed to the Master to fix the amount of such provision. Broad v. Bevan, 1 Russ. 511. n.

4. An hotel keeper by his will desired his wife to carry on the business after his decease for the benefit of herself and his family so long as it might be conducted with advantage; and gave the hotel, etc., to trustees, upon trust to permit his wife to receive the profits, that she might apply the same in the maintenance of herself and family and for the education of the children; and if such profits were not sufficient, a sufficient proportion of the interest, etc., of the residue of his property was to be so applied. The testator left two children. The wife in 1852, after his death, left the hotel, abandoned her children, and otherwise misconducted herself. Upon the construction of the will:—Held, that since that time she was entitled to maintenance only out of the testator's estate; and one-third of the profits of the business was allowed to her for that purpose. Castle v. Castle, 5 W. R. 643; 29 L. T. 243.

5. By marriage settlement a sum of stock was vested in trustees, upon trust to pay the dividends to the husband and wife, and the survivor during life, upon the condition that they should, during the minorities of their children, find and provide them with suitable diet, clothing, and general maintenance and support, in proportion to the circumstances and condition in life of the husband and wife, and to the expectancies of the children. The husband subsequently presented a petition, under the Insolvent Debtors Protection Act, upon which an official assignee was appointed and an order for protection granted, on the terms of his paying 30*l.* a year out of the dividends of the settled estate in discharge of his debts. The husband and wife afterwards assigned all their interest in the trust fund to R. O., an assignee, for valuable consideration. The trustees having paid the fund into court, under the provisions of the Trustees Relief Act, the infant children presented a petition, asking that the dividends of the whole trust fund might be applied for their maintenance and support. This petition was opposed by R. O. The Lord Chancellor, however, made the order, holding that under the terms of the settlement the children were entitled, but without deciding what he would have done if it had been shown that the money borrowed from R. O. had been directly for the benefit of the children, and without determining what was the effect on the interest of the husband of the order for protection. Re Dalton, 1 De G. M. & G. 265; 21 L. J., N. S., Ch., 681; 16 Jur. 253.

6. Testator devised his real and personal estates to trustees, in trust to pay certain annual sums for the maintenance of his grandchildren till they attained twenty-five, and to accumulate the surplus income of his estates, which was to form part of his residuary personal estate; and to divide the income of his estates amongst his grandchildren when they attained twenty-five, with benefit of survivorship on any of them dying under twenty-one, without leaving a child that should attain twenty-one; and, on the death of each of them leaving such child, to convey the parent's share to such child; and he empowered his trustees, after the death of the father of his grandchildren, to convey to his grandsons, absolutely, the shares of his estates to which, under the previous trusts, they would be entitled for their lives. A petition by one of the grandsons for an increase of the maintenance provided by the testator was dismissed, the disposition of the property not being such as that the grandchildren must of necessity take the whole fund. Turner v. Turner, 4 Sim. 430.

7. Testator gave his wife 400*l.* a year in addition to 500*l.* a year under her settlement, in consideration of the expense and care she would incur in the maintenance of their children; she must maintain them when at home, but is not to be charged with education or maintenance at school. Collier v. Collier, 3 Ves. 33.

8. Upon a marriage settlement, the settlor conveyed certain lands in trust for himself for life, remainder to trustees for a term, to raise an annuity for the lives of the husband and wife, and of the survivor, and subject thereto and in the meantime to trustees for a long term, in trust, subsequently to the previous charge, by mortgage or otherwise, to raise a sum as a portion for the children of the marriage; and with the annual proceeds, or otherwise, to provide for their maintenance from and after the decease of the settlor, as the parents should by deed appoint:—Held, that the latter term did not wait for the commencement of it until after the death of the survivor of the husband and wife, but commenced at the death of the settlor; and that the parents, after the death of the settlor, might, by deed under the powers, direct an annual sum to be raised for such maintenance. Gough v. Andrews, 1 Colly. 59; 8 Jur. 306.

1. A testator bequeathed to each of his six grandchildren 200*l.*, and, in case any of them should not have attained twenty-one at the death of the testator, he directed his trustees, who were also his executors and residuary legatees, to pay interest for the legacies of such children, after the rate of 5 per cent., towards their maintenance and education. Upon differences arising between the father of the children and the trustees as to the investment of the money pending minorities, the trustees file their bill to obtain the direction of the Court, and for leave to pay the amount into court:—Held, that the trustees might pay the principal money into court; and, semble, the trustees will not be liable to make up the difference between the dividends on the money in court and the 5*l.* per cent. Abraham v. Holderness, 6 Jur. 290.

Semble, if the direction in the will had been for the trustees to pay interest at 2 per cent., and the money was paid into court, the legatees would be entitled to the full amount of the dividends. Id.

2. The testator, standing in loco parentis, directed his trustees to levy and raise, for the maintenance of such of the children of his son J. and his daughter E. for whom it was his intention to provide portions; in the meantime, until such portions should become payable, such yearly sum (not exceeding what the interest of the expectant portions intended to be provided for such children would amount to at 4 per cent.) as the trustees should deem sufficient:—Held, that the legatees were not entitled to interest at 4 per cent. from the testator's death, but to maintenance only. And the trustees only having applied less than 4 per cent. on their portions for the maintenance of the children:—Held, that they were not entitled to have the difference paid to them. Rudge v. Winnall, 12 Beav. 357; 18 L. J., N. S., Ch., 469; 13 Jur. 737.

3. Legacy to a father, the better to enable him to provide for his younger children: he consented to secure the capital, but was held entitled to the interest. Brown v. Casamajor, 4 Ves. 498.

4. Gift to A. of 15*l.* per annum for bringing up B.:—Held, that a trust was created for the benefit of B., which did not fail by the death of A. Pilcher v. Randall, 9 W. R. 251; 4 L. T., N. S., 398.

5. Testatrix directed the interest of her residuary estate to be applied in defraying the expenses of the education of her nephews George and Charles, and the principal to be applied either in binding them apprentices at the age of fourteen, or to be reserved till they attained twenty-one, to commence business.

"In the event of George and Charles (both or either of them) being settled before this will comes in force, I provide that the next boy (James or Henry) have the benefit, and so on." George and Charles survived the testatrix, but died under twenty-one:—Held, that James and Henry were entitled to the residue. Prestwidge v. Groombridge, 6 Sim. 171.

6. A father, by will, gave real estate to his daughter for life, with remainders in tail, and gave her power to appoint a life estate to any husband she might marry, and he bequeathed his residuary personal estate upon corresponding trusts, but directed that the income of it should not vest in any child presumptively entitled to it, but should be applied in the maintenance of such child. The daughter married and had four children, and after appointing a life estate in the property to her husband, she and her husband appointed the whole (subject to their life estates) in trust for their children. The sum was large to which each child would be entitled on the death of the parents. The mother died, and the husband disposed of his life estate so that he derived no income from it, and the children could not be maintained in a manner consonant with their expectations. The Court sanctioned a scheme for raising 600*l.* a year for their maintenance. De Witte v. Palm, 14 L. B., Eq., 251; 26 L. T. 825; 20 W. R. 858.

7. Held, under the limitations of an antenuptial settlement giving inter alia a life interest to the wife for her separate use, without power of anticipation, with a clause of maintenance, that the maintenance clause did not enable the wife to affect her life interest by a prospective provision for the children, at all events as regarded any period beyond the minority of the sons, or the minority or marriage of the daughters. Horlock v. Horlock, 2 De G. M. & G. 644.

I. WHO MAY EXERCISE.

1. Testator devising an estate to persons whom he names trustees for such purposes as they or the major part of them shall think fit, gives no benefit to them, but is an authority only by appointing a quorum out of them. Cook v. Duckenfield, 2 Atk. 568.

2. Archbishop P. devised his options to trustees, regard being had in the dispositions of them, according to their discretion, to his eldest son, Dr. P., the husbands of his daughters, his present and former chaplains, etc.:—Held, a personal trust, and, the trusteeship of C. being vacant, one of the trustees might present the other, he being within the description in the will. Potter v. Chapman, Amb. 98; Dick. 146.

3. A testator gave his residuary personal estate to the trustees named in his will, their executors, administrators, and assigns, upon trust to apply the same as he should appoint; and in default of appointment as to any part, he directed the trustees to settle such part at their discretion either for pious and charitable purposes, or otherwise for the benefit of the testator's sister and her children:—Held, that this was a personal trust, which a representative of the surviving trustee could not execute, and that a sum which remained at the decease of the surviving trustee, and which had not been applied to charitable purposes, or for the benefit of the testator's sister and her children, was undisposed of, and belonged to the testator's next-of-kin. Down v. Worrall, 1 Myl. & K. 561.

4. A bequest of 2,000*l.* to testator's executors, in trust, to build a bridge in Scotland over the River Don, "the situation to be chosen by them," was allowed by them to remain unapplied, and to accumulate for thirty years. Sebble, the power of selection given to the original executors ceased upon their death. Forbes v. Forbes, 18 Beav. 552.

5. Where lands are devised to trustees in fee upon trusts, or with powers requiring the exercise of judgment and discretion, and they disclaim, the heir-at-law cannot exercise such powers or trusts, although he may hold the estate subject to the trusts of the will. Robson v. Flight, 11 Jur., N. S., 147; 34 L. J., Ch., 226; 13 W. R. 393; 11 L. T., N. S., 725.

A trustee devised real estate to trustees, and directed that they should and might grant leases thereof for the term of twenty-one years. The trustees disclaimed the trusts, and the heir-at-law, who was tenant for life of a moiety, granted a lease:—Held, that the lease was invalid. Id.

Held, also, that the acceptance of rent from 1860, payable under the lease, by one of the plaintiffs, was not a confirmation of the lease. Id.

II. CONTROL OF THE COURT OVER TRUSTEES IN EXERCISING THE TRUSTS.

6. In case of personal trust under a will, the Court never interferes, unless the trust be corruptly executed. Potter v. Chapman, Amb. 99; Dick. 146.

7. If testator's intention is clearly manifested on will to give an unlimited discretion to trustees, the Court will not control it; but, in general, discretion must be held to the limitations in the will. Conley v. Hartstrong, 1 Dow 361, 378.

8. A. makes two of his daughters his executrices, and directs them to distribute a sum of 400*l.*, and also the residue of his personal estate, among themselves and their brothers and sisters, according to their needs and necessities, as they in their discretion should think fit. The Court restrained the exercise of this power, by decreeing a double share to the eldest son and heir, looking upon him as a necessitous person. Warburton v. Warburton, 4 Bro. P. C. 1.

9. Where discretion of trustee is to be exercised on matters of fact, Court will substitute a Master, but not if upon matter of opinion or judgment. Walker v. Walker, 5 Madd. 424.

10. Where trustees are appointed to execute a trust according to discretion, they are bound to state reasons for any conclusion at which they may arrive in fulfilling the duty imposed on them; their discretion must, however, be exercised with an absence of indirect motives, with honesty of intention, and with a fair consideration of the subject; and the duty of the Court generally is to see that the discretion of the trustees has been thus exercised, and not to deal with the accuracy of the conclusion at which they may have arrived. Re Wilkes' Charity, 3 Macn. & G. 440; 20 L. J., Ch., 588.

If, however, in such cases, trustees think fit to state a reason for their conclusion, the Court may consider the validity of the reason thus stated, and if it sees that the reason does not justify the decision, it may correct the decision accordingly. Id.

Trustees of a charity were to select, out of certain parishes named, a lad to be brought up as a minister of the Church of England, his parents not being able to educate him for that situation, and in the event of no suitable candidate being found in the specified parishes, then to select a lad from any other parish. On a vacancy occurring the trustees chose C. J., a lad not of the specified parishes, and declared the election without stating any reasons for their choice. On a petition presented to set aside this election, and to obtain a decree that the trustees ought to have elected W. G., a lad of one of the specified parishes:—Held, that the trustees were right in abstaining from the statement of any reasons for the selection they had made, and that in the absence of any proof that they had exercised their discretion otherwise than fairly and honestly, the Court had no jurisdiction to interfere on the question of the correctness of their decision. Id.

The petition was dismissed accordingly, the petitioners paying their own costs, and the costs of the trustees being paid out of the funds of the charity. Id.

11. A complete miscarriage in the exercise of discretionary power on the part of trustees puts the subject-matter of the trust just as much under the cognizance of the Court as if such discretion had been fraudulently exercised. Foltham v. Turner, 23 L. T., N. S., 345.

12. Where a discretionary trust is vested in trustees, the Court will not interfere with the exercise of the discretion, if it be not capricious or improper, though a suit is instituted for the administration of the trust funds. Gray v. Gray, 13 Ir. Ch. R. 404.

1. Where the disposition of a trust estate amongst certain objects is made by the author of the trust to depend upon the discretion of the trustee, the Court will, in a proper suit, inquire into the manner in which the trust has been administered, and require that such discretion shall be fairly and honestly exercised; and so long as it appears to be so exercised, the Court will not deprive the trustee of the discretionary power which he possesses, or assume itself the exercise of that power; but to avoid a repetition of suits where there is reason to apprehend that the conduct of the trustee may be liable to question, the Court may require the discretion of the trustee to be exercised under its view. Costabadie v. Costabadie, 6 Hare 410; 16 L. J., N. S., Ch., 259; 11 Jur. 345.

2. A testator directed his trustee "to divide an estate amongst his, the testator's, first cousins as he in his discretion might think proper, by dividing the whole equally among them, or between two or more, or giving the whole to any one, for such estates and interests, and subject to such conditions and limitations as he should think proper":—Held, that the trustee had a power of selection only, and that if he appointed to more than one, he must do so equally among them. Ward v. Tyrrell, 4 Jur., N. S., 779; 27 L. J., Ch., 749.

3. By marriage articles, a wife was authorised to divert the trust funds for the benefit of herself or children, provided the diversion be acceded to by the trustees:—Held, that the trustees had a discretion to consent or not, that it must be bonâ fide exercised, and to justify their assent, the purpose for which the money was to be applied must, in their judgment, appear to be really for the benefit of the wife or children. Byam v. Byam, 19 Beav. 58; 1 Jur., N. S., 79; 24 L. J., Ch., 209.

4. A testatrix devised freehold and copyhold estates to a trustee, upon trust to sell and divide the proceeds among her brothers and sisters living at her decease, equally or in other proportions, at the discretion of the trustee. She afterwards executed an unattested codicil, by which she directed that the interest of the trust property should be applied for the benefit of such of her brothers and sisters as were not otherwise provided for, and particularly towards the support of one of her brothers, P. who was of weak mind; and in case the trustee should not live to execute all the trusts, they were to be performed by such person as he should appoint. He executed a deed of appointment, naming other trustees, and giving directions as to the time for selling the trust estates and the application of the proceeds, and directed P. to be supported out of the income; and the proceeds of one estate to be divided equally among P.'s brothers and sisters who should be living at his death; and the proceeds of another estate to be divided at his death among such of his brothers and sisters as should most require it:—Held, that the appointment by the trustee, and the directions contained in it, were not altogether invalid; but the Court directed, that, after providing for the comfortable support of P., the proceeds from both estates should be divided equally among all the testatrix's brothers and sisters who were living at the death of the testatrix, except P. Hitch v. Leemorthy, 2 Hare 200; 15 L. J., N. S., Ch., 235.

A trustee for the government of his own discretion may have regard to the directions of an unattested codicil, even as to the proceeds of real estate, so far as he is not restrained by the effect of the will. Id.

5. On demurrer:—Held, that trustees to whom discretionary power was given of renewing leases, had not an arbitrary power of renewal, but must renew when most for benefit of cetui quo trust. Milington v. Mulgrave, 3 Madd. 491.

6. Direction in will, that executors shall pay annuity, unless circumstances render it unnecessary, impracticable, and inexpedient, means unless in the opinion of executors it shall become so, and Court has no control over such discretion, unless they act malâ fide. Frenoh v. Davidson, 3 Madd. 396.

7. Where absolute discretion has been given to trustees as to the exercise of a power the Court will not compel them to exercise it, but if they propose to exercise it, the Court will see that they do not exercise it improperly or unreasonably. Where the power is coupled with a trust or duty the Court will not enforce the proper and timely exercise of the power, but will not interfere with the discretion of the trustees as to the particular time or manner of their bonâ fide exercise of it. Tempest v. Camoys (Lord), 21 L. R., Ch. D., 571; 51 L. J., Ch., 785; 48 L. T. 13; 31 W. R. 326.

A testator gave his trustees a power to be exercised at their absolute discretion of selling real estates, with a declaration that the proceeds should be applied, at the like discretion, in the purchase of other real estates. He also gave him power at their absolute discretion to raise money by mortgage for the purchase of real estates. A suit having been instituted for the execution of the trusts of the will, and a sum of money, the proceeds of the sale of real estate, having been paid into court, one of the trustees proposed to purchase a large estate and to apply the fund in court in part payment of the purchase money, and to raise the remainder of the purchase money by mortgage of the purchased estate. The other trustee refused to concur in the purchase:—Held, that the Court could not control the dissentient trustee in the exercise of his discretion in refusing to make the purchase, or in refusing to exercise his power of raising money by mortgage for the proposed purpose. Id.

8. L., on his marriage, gave a bond and warrant to the trustees of his settlement, upon trust, "when the trustees should think fit and expedient so to do," to levy the amount, and hold it for the uses of his settlement. No judgment on the bond was ever entered, and the amount of the bond was lost:—Held, that the discretion conferred upon the trustees was not absolute, but to be controlled by the Court; and that the circumstance that enforcing the bond might have been injurious to L.'s credit as a trader and have lost him various situations, did not justify them in omitting to enforce the bond. Luther v. Hancock, 10 Ir. Ch. R. 194.

1. The Court will control the discretion reposed in trustees by the provisions of a will when such discretion is dishonestly or improperly exercised. Davey v. Ward, Re Hodge, 26 W. B. 390; 47 L. J., Ch., 335; 7 L. R., Ch. D., 754.

2. Where a trustee has a discretionary power, the Court will not interfere with the exercise of it, except where it is mischievously, or ruinously, or fraudulently exercised. The onus of showing that it has been so exercised rests on those who impeach the acts of the trustee. Re Brittlebank, Coates v. Brittlebank, 30 W. R. 99.

3. Although the mere existence of a discretionary power in trustees over a fund affords no reason why the Court should not order payment of the fund into Court, unless such payment into Court would interfere with the exercise by the trustee of such discretion; yet where it appeared that trustees were about, in the due exercise of a discretionary power to deal with a fund, the Court refused to order payment into court, although the trustees had not actually parted with the fund. Talbot v. Marshfield, 2 Dr. & Sm. 285.

III. EXECUTION OF BY THE COURT WHERE TRUSTEES DISCLAIM OR REFUSE TO ACT.

4. When trustees are directed to pay a certain sum to a person for life, and are empowered, according to their discretion, to invest the trust funds out of which that sum is to arise, but decline or neglect to act, and the assistance of a court of equity is sought in order to carry into effect the purposes of the will, the Court will not, as a matter of course, exercise that discretion, but will only act on its established known rules, unless the intention of the testator plainly appears to exclude such a mode of proceeding. Prendergast v. Prendergast, 2 H. L. Ca. 195; 14 Jur. 989. Affirming S. C. nom. Prendergast v. Lushington, 5 Hare 171; 16 L. J., N. S., Ch., 125; 11 Jur. 865.

5. A testator gave his leasehold to trustees for legatees in succession, and upon trust, if the trustees "should think it proper or advantageous, as to those which were customarily or might be renewed," to endeavour to renew; and in order thereto, should, "if they, in their discretion, should think fit or expedient, but not necessarily or peremptorily," insure the lives of the cestuis que vivent, and apply the insurance money in renewing, and out of the rents and profits raise sufficient money to renew so often as a renewal should be advisable; and he gave a power to mortgage for the same purpose:—Held, first, that this was an imperative trust, and that the trustees were bound to renew, if they could do so on reasonable terms; secondly, that if the trustees refused, the Court would exercise it; and, thirdly, that they were bound to raise the necessary funds in such a mode as would be most beneficial to all parties interested. Mortimer v. Watts, 14 Beav. 616; 21 L. J., N. S., Ch., 169.

6. A. and B., for whom land had been purchased by C., with a view to its being re-sold in building lots, on the land being conveyed to them, signed a paper writing purporting to be a memorandum of an agreement between them relative to the land, by which it was agreed that they should each advance half the purchase money, and receive interest on the same at 5 per cent., and that they were to have each one-third interest in the purchase, and to receive one-third of the profits arising therefrom for C., in lieu of his commission for purchasing, selling, surveying, valuing, and laying out the lands in lots, or any other services that might be required of him; but that it was clearly and distinctly understood that C. should have no power or authority whatsoever over the land, and that he should not be entitled to receive any compensation therefrom until the whole was sold and paid for. The land having afterwards greatly increased in value, A. and B. refused to recognise C.'s interest in the speculation, and offered him a money compensation for his services. Whereupon C., who had objected from the first to the clause in the memorandum which excluded him from all control, as inconsistent with the original terms for which he had verbally stipulated, filed his bill for an immediate sale of the land. And the Court, being of opinion that the defendants, by repudiating the trust as to C.'s share, had devolved upon the Court the discretion which they had by the memorandum reserved exclusively to themselves, as to the time of sale, declared C. entitled to one-third, and referred it to the Master to inquire whether it would be for the benefit of all parties that the land should be sold. Dale v. Hamilton, 2 Ph. 266; 16 L. J., N. S., Ch., 397; 11 Jur. 574. And see S. C. 5 Hare 369.

7. Trust deed, whereby trustees were to give the residue of A.'s estate "among all his friends and relations, where they should see most necessity, and as they should think most just;" though in other cases the Court will not interpose where trustees declining to act have a power to distribute generally, according to their discretion, without any defined object, it was:—Held, that here a rule was laid down, the word "friends" meaning "relations," and the Court could judge of the respective families' necessities and occasions by a reference to the Master. Gower v. Mainwaring, 2 Ves. 87.

8. Bequest of 20,000*l.* to executors, in trust to divide amongst testator's younger sons at twenty-five. Further bequest of 50*l.* to each of the sons annually, until their portions should be payable, and such a further sum as in the discretion of the trustees might seem necessary, but not to exceed 3,000*l.* These legacies were charged on the real estate. One of the executors having disclaimed on a bill filed by the other executor and the elder sons:—Held, that the whole 3,000*l.* should be raised. Young v. Young, 1 Jur. 840.

9. Testator directed his residuary, real, and personal estate to be divided by his trustees, in such shares and at such times as they should think proper, amongst his nephews, A., B., and C., and his other nephews and nieces, sons and daughters of his late sisters, T. and H., who should be living at his decease, and the children of any other such nephews and nieces who, having died in his lifetime, had left issue. There were several children, and children of the deceased children, both of T. and H., living at the testator's death. The trustees not being able to agree as to the division of the property, the Court ordered it to be divided amongst the children, and the children of the deceased children of T. and H. per capita. Tomlin v. Hatfield, 12 Sim. 167.

1. Where property is vested in trustees by an instrument, in the Scotch form, and they have an absolute discretion given to them as to the distribution of it amongst a particular class, but decline to exercise that discretion, upon a suit being instituted to secure the property in this country the Court will direct the distribution of the fund equally between the members of the class, such discretion not involving the construction of the instrument or the exercise of a discretion, in the place of the trustees. Little v. Neil, 10 W. R. 592; 31 L. J., Ch., 627.

By a marriage settlement, trustees were empowered to apply the income and capital of the trust estate for the use and benefit of such one or more of the wife and children of P. and the issue of such children, as the trustees in the exercise of a free and unlimited discretion should select and determine; but such provision for the wife to be by annuity depending on the life of P. The trustees declined exercising their discretion, and the Court directed the fund to be divided equally between the wife and children and grandchildren, without making any provision as to an annuity to the wife. Ib.

2. Bequest to trustees to apply the income or principal for the benefit of J., widow, and of her three children, in such proportions as the trustees in their absolute discretion should think proper; but in case J. married again, her interest to cease. The trustees declined to act:—Held, that the fund must be divided equally between J. and her three children. Isod v. Isod, 32 Beav. 242; 9 L. T., N. S., 191; 1 N. R. 462; 9 Jur., N. S., 1216.

3. A testator empowered his widow, with the assistance of his trustees, to sell his estates, and the money arising therefrom "she, his said wife, should and might divide and appoint among his children, as she should think fit and proper, or as she should direct and order by any will".—Held, that this was a trust for the children, and that, no valid appointment having been made by the widow, the children were entitled equally. Grievson v. Kiropp, 2 Keen 653; 6 L. J., N. S., Ch., 261.

4. If trustees in whom a discretionary trust is vested do not concur, the Court will distribute the trust fund among the parties equally. Gray v. Gray, 13 Ir. Ch. R. 404.

Where one of two trustees in whom a discretionary trust is vested was resident in Australia, the Court would not act on a scheme for the distribution of the fund, approved of by his solicitor in the suit and the other trustee. Ib.

5. A husband gave his property to trustees for his wife for life, and at her death he directed his trustees to pay 1,000*l.* equally between and among such ten of the children and grandchildren and other descendants of W. B. and H. B., as his trustees should, in their uncontrolled discretion, after inquiry, judge most to require the benefit of such a bequest. The trustees died without making a selection. There were no descendants of W. B., and at the death of the testator's widow there were only six descendants of

H. B. living:—Held, that the sum was divisible amongst them. Carthow v. Enraght, 26 L. T., N. S., 834.

6. Variation on petition of a scheme settled on further consideration for the administration of the estate of a testator according to a discretion reposed by him in his trustee, and exercised in their stead by the Court. Benett v. Wyndham, 4 De G. F. & J. 259.

IV. WHERE PENDING SUIT OR FUND PAID INTO COURT.

7. A trustee having a discretionary power as to the application of a trust fund, does not necessarily abandon it by paying the trust fund into court. Re Landon, 40 L. J., Ch., 370.

8. After a decree in a suit for administration of trust funds the Court will not without reason control a discretionary power given to the trustees by the instrument creating the trust. Brophy v. Bellamy, 43 L. J., Ch., 183; 8 L. R., Ch., 798; 29 L. T., N. S., 380.

9. The Court having possession of a fund, impressed with a trust, but subject to a discretion given to trustees, will execute the trust without regarding the discretion. Re Cow, 4 Kay & J. 199; 4 Jur., N. S., 158.

V. OTHER CASES.

10. Where a Hindoo testator made two of his sons his executors, and after directing the performance of various religious acts by them, and that when they should do them they should give notice to their brothers, and that they should all of them perform the acts; otherwise, whatever the executors might think proper they might do, and, should any one raise objections, they should be inadmissible:—Held, that the executors had not an unlimited discretion in expending the testator's fortune in religious ceremonies. Mullick v. Mullick, 1 Knapp 245.

11. A discretion vested in trustees of a settlement must be exercised in such a way as to preserve, not to defeat, the objects of the settlement. Eland v. Baker, 29 Beav. 137; 7 Jur., N. S., 956; 9 W. R. 444.

12. Trustees will not be charged with loss to the trust estate, arising from acts done by them in the honest exercise of a discretion conferred upon them by the author of the trust, though in opposition to the judgment or wish of the cestui que trust. Selby v. Bowie, 2 N. R. 2; 1 N. R. 420; 9 Jur., N. S., 432; 11 W. R. 606; 6 L. T., N. S., 372.

13. In ordinary cases it is the duty of trustees to get in the funds, but where under the terms of the instrument constituting the trust it is the duty of the trustees not to do so if in their discretion they consider it inexpedient, misconduct on their part must be proved in order to render them liable for loss, and the ordinary rules as to wilful neglect and default have little application. A cestui que trust sought to charge a trustee with breach of trust in not recovering moneys, which were recoverable only in equity:—Held, that as under the circumstances the cestui que trust might have himself sued, he could not make the trustee liable for not doing what he could at any time have himself done. Paddon v. Richardson, 1 Jur. 1192; 7 De G. M. & G. 563; 3 Eq. Rep. 933.

1. By the marriage settlement of A. a sum of 8,000*l.* stock was settled upon himself and his intended wife for their joint lives and the life of the survivor, and then for the benefit of their children; and if no children, in trust for the settlor, his executors, administrators, and assigns. After the marriage A. made his will and thereby gave his real estate to P. and his heirs upon the same trusts, as near as could be, as were declared of the stock by the settlement, and after giving certain pecuniary legacies, he bequeathed all the rest of his moneys and property of any kind to P., his executors, administrators, and assigns, upon trust and for the benefit of the objects of his settlement as he might think best. A. died, leaving his widow, but no issue of the marriage. P. declined to take probate of the will:—Held, that whether the course taken by P. had or had not the effect of depriving him of the discretionary power given him by the will, he could not in the events that had happened, exercise that power so as to affect the rights of the parties interested under the will and settlement, and that the effect of these instruments was to give a life interest to the widow in the real and residuary personal estate impeachable of waste as to the real estate, with the remainder as to the real estate to the testator's heirs, and as to the residuary personal estate to his next-of-kin. Ford v. Ruston, 1 Colly. 403.

2. A trustee of a will, who had formally renounced that character by a deed which purported (but ineffectually) to appoint a successor, being applied to eleven years afterwards to join with his original co-trustee in a deed purporting to be an exercise of a discretionary power, which could only be exercised by the two trustees of the will for the time being, refused to do so without an indemnity, but ultimately, on being indemnified, executed the deed:—Held, that he could not resume his position as trustee for such a purpose, and that, even if he could, his execution of the deed under the circumstances stated, could be regarded only as a mere formal act, and not as an exercise of that discretion which was essential to a due execution of such a power. Lancashire v. Lancashire, 2 Ph. 657; 17 L. J., N. S., Ch., 270; 12 Jur. 363.

3. A settlement was made of a trust fund, in moieties, for the granddaughters of the settlor for life (subject to a prior interest in their mother), with remainder to their children as they should appoint, or in default equally. A power was interposed, that in the event of either of the granddaughters marrying with consent, the trustees might transfer to her part of the trust funds. One of the granddaughters married with consent, but the power was not executed by the trustees:—Held, that the execution of the power was discretionary with the trustees, and they not having exercised it, the granddaughter was not entitled to payment to her of any part of the capital of the trust funds. Re Strickland's Trusts, 1 N. R. 164.

4. Charitable gift to the use of the reparation of the church of U., and to the use of the reparation of the bridge of U., and to the use of other things needful within the parish of U., at the discretion of the trustees, to be applied and distributed for ever:—Held, that the discretion applied to the third branch only, and that the three objects took equally. Re Hall's Charity, 14 Beav. 115; 15 Jur. 940.

5. K., by will, directed his trustees, on B., the eldest son of K., and failing him the next eldest son, attaining twenty-one, to convey certain real estates to K., but in case any of the children conducted themselves so as not to merit the approbation of the trustees, then such children were to have life estates only. K., by codicil, directed his trustees to postpone the conveyance to R. till he attained twenty-five. R. at twenty-three married, with the approbation of the trustees, though they were not parties to his marriage settlement, which settlement disposed of his interest under his father's will as if it were an estate in fee. When R. attained twenty-five, the trustees, not being satisfied with R.'s conduct, conveyed to him only a life estate in the premises:—Held, first, that the eldest son was included under the term children: secondly, that the trustees were not bound to declare their dissatisfaction until R. attained twenty-five, and that they could not by having assented to R.'s marriage preclude themselves from discharging the duty of reviewing his conduct when he attained twenty-five. Weller v. Ure, 15 L. T., N. S., 97.

6. A testator gave all his real and personal estate (after certain specific and pecuniary gifts) to trustees, including therein a promissory note for 3,000*l.* and interest due from J. L. C., upon trust to get in and convert, and divide among certain persons, of whom J. L. C. was one. If J. L. C. behaved to the satisfaction of the trustees in a certain business in which he was placed, the trustees were to cancel the note for the benefit of J. L. C.; but if he did not behave to their satisfaction in the said partnership for six years from the testator's decease, they were to call in the note. Within a year from the testator's decease the partnership, in which J. L. C. was, was dissolved: then J. L. C. became bankrupt: then the trustees (but long within six years after the testator's decease) gave notice to J. L. C. that he had misconducted himself, and called in the 3,000*l.* In their answer, which was also within the six years, the trustees declared that the misconduct referred to was misconduct in the partnership, and within the meaning of the will, and that it had caused the dissolution:—Held, that such notice, although after the bankruptcy, was sufficient, and that the 3,000*l.* should be deducted out of the share of J. L. C. in the residue. Bird v. Johnson, 18 Jur. 976.

Distinction between a trustee undertaking to make good a debt due to the estate, and actually receiving payment, in the one case being bound to invest it, i.e., if the money be received; but secus, where the trustee merely undertakes to make it good, the debtor not being discharged. Id.

7. Where trustees have unlimited discretionary power to postpone, as long as they may think fit, the payments of shares of a residuary fund; and where of the time and manner of exercising the power they are to be the sole and final judges, asserting creditors of the fund will be defeated by the trustees executing, even after action raised, a deed applying the fund as an alimentary provision for the behoof of the beneficiaries. No proceedings resorted to by creditors of the beneficiaries can in such a case abridge the powers of the trustees. Chambers v. Smith, 3 L. R., App. Cas. (Sc.), 795.

X. Uses.

— Executory Uses and Interests. See POWER—VESTED CONTINGENT AND FUTURE INTERESTS—WILL.

See also COVENANT TO STAND SEISED.

1. Though a use or trust must arise out of the original feoffment to uses, yet they need not be specifically created at the time of execution of the deed. Wright v. Cadogan (Lord), 2 Eden 256.

The Statute of Frauds has only imposed a form in declaring the use; the control of the use remains, as it was before the statute, the absolute will and declared intent of the owner. Id. 257.

2. Natural love and affection is very sufficient to create a use, and will amount to a covenant to stand seised, though no other consideration appear. Lloyd v. Spillet, 2 Atk. 149.

Uses were introduced during the contests between the houses of York and Lancaster, to avoid forfeitures, and were exactly what trusts are now. Id.

3. Where there is an agreement to suffer a recovery, and uses are declared by it, though it is suffered at a different time, yet if there is no subsequent declaration of uses it shall enure to those so declared. Stapilton v. Stapilton, 1 Atk. 7.

4. The Statute (27 Hen. 8, c. 10) of Uses was made to execute and bring the estate to the use; and after the statute, the certui que use was seised of the estate at law as before he was of the use in equity: but the necessities of mankind, and reasonable occasions in families, obliged the judges to give way to uses notwithstanding. Contingent uses, springing uses, executory devises, and powers over uses, were foreign to the notions of the common law, and could not be let in upon the common law fees, but were let in by construction (by the judges themselves), upon uses after they became legal estates; yet the judges still adhered to the doctrine, that there could be no such thing as a use upon a use; but when the first use was declared, there it was executed, and must rest for that estate. Hopkins v. Hopkins, 1 Atk. 591.

Uses in equity and mere trusts stand on different foundations, and will not be governed by the same reasoning. Id. 592.

Upon a trust in equity, no estate can be gained by disseisin, abatement, or intrusion, while the trustee continues in possession of the land, neither will Equity suffer a merger of the trust estate; for uses and mere trusts stand on very different foundations, and are not governed by the same reasoning. All trusts are executory, and the Court must follow the intent of the parties, as far as the rules of law will admit, howsoever improperly a will may be penned. Id. 593.

5. A. tenant for life and R., his son and first tenant in tail, suffered a recovery and declared the uses to N., his heirs and assigns, for and until the payment of 4,000*l.*, with interest, and then to the uses of a settlement of 1737, viz., to A. for life, remainder to his first and other sons in tail:—Held, that the declaration to the uses of the deed of 1737, though void as a limitation of the legal estate, was a good declaration of the trust estate. Stoney v. Saunders, Hay. & J. 519.

6. Semble, by analogy to a use before the statute of uses, there cannot be an occupant of a trust. Penny v. Allen, 3 Jur., N. S., 273.

7. No case of a springing use ever introduced in the middle of a limitation, but it always comes in afterwards, and determines the first gift in fee; and whenever it happens to arise, it displaces the first gift, and changes the uses in favour of other persons. Carnardine v. Carnardine, 1 Eden 34.

No instance where Equity has considered an estate as not executed, at the same time that law would have considered it as executed. Id.

8. Executory devise is in its nature equitable, and becomes legal estate only by application of the Statute of Uses, which executes every species of interest that a court of equity would before: and that has been extended to cases not in contemplation of the statute. Perry v. Phelps, 1 Ves. J. 255.

9. The Statute of Uses has executed the legal estate, and joined it to the use; the legal estate, therefore, must want to be executed by a conveyance to make it a trust in equity. Bagshaw v. Spencer, 2 Atk. 583.

10. If a purchaser for a valuable consideration has not the legal estate properly conveyed to him, though the consideration cannot create a use by way of covenant to stand seised, yet the vendor will be considered a trustee for the purchaser. Polleafen v. Moor, 3 Atk. 273.

11. On a marriage settlement, lands were conveyed to trustees and their heirs, to the use of the trustees and their heirs, to the use of the husband for life, remainder to the use of the wife for life, remainder to the first, etc., sons of the marriage: these limitations to the husband for life, etc., are trusts only, and not uses; and when the husband and wife levied a fine to a mortgagee to raise money, though the fine would have been a forfeiture of the wife's estate for her life had she had the legal estate, against which equity will not relieve, yet decreed that a trust estate was not forfeited by a fine. Whetstone v. St. Bury, 2 P. W. 146; Pre. Ch. 591.

12. Where an act is to be done, as a conveyance made, the estate is a trust, not a use executed. Mott v. Buxton, 7 Ves. 201.

13. Where a trust is limited to a man and the heirs of his body, with remainder over, the Court will not decree the trustees to convey to him an estate in fee, but an estate tail only. Saunders v. Nevil, 2 Vern. 428.

Lands limited to A. in trust for a feme covert, and that A. should receive the rents and apply them as the feme whether sole or covert should direct. This is a trust, and not a use, executed by the statute. S. C. 1 Vern. 415.

1. The Statute of Uses not applying to copyholds, on a devise of freeholds and copyholds together the legal estate in the copyholds attaches that in the freeholds, and makes it vest in the first devisee. Baker v. Parson, 42 L. J., Ch., 228.

1. When Trustees take Legal Estate.

2. Testator, by will, gives annuity to wife, and legacies to children, knowing he has not sufficient personal estate. He says nothing of his real estate, but appoints certain persons trustees of the inheritance for the execution of his will. Semble, the trustees took an interest in the real estate for the purposes of this will. Trent v. Trent, 1 Dow 102. S. C. nom. Trent v. Hanning, 10 Ves. 495.

3. Construction in favour of vesting the legal estate in trustees for effecting a limitation to the separate use of a married woman. Hampkins v. Luscombe, 2 Swans. 891.

Effect of limitation to trustees and their heirs to the use of them and their heirs in conferring the legal estate on the trustees. Id. 392.

4. B. desired the residue of his real and personal estate to be divided into eleven equal parts, and he devised and bequeathed to each of his eleven children, his or her heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, one of the parts. He declared that the share or shares of his daughters should be for their separate use; and as it might probably happen that the arrangements made by his will could not be carried into effect without the sale of the whole, or at least a great portion of his real and personal estate, he recommended great caution in the sale, for he believed that his landed property was daily increasing in value, and he nominated G. and M. executors and trustees of his will for duly carrying the disposition of all the property therein alluded to into proper effect:—Held, that this was not sufficient to divest a legal estate previously devised to children, and to vest it in the trustees, although the words might give a simple power to sell, in an event which might possibly, though not certainly, happen. London & South-Western Railway Co. v. Bridger, 10 Jur., N. S., 650; 12 W. R. 948; 10 L. T., N. S., 689.

5. A. devised copyholds to trustees in fee, upon trusts in the will mentioned. A. afterwards executed a voluntary conveyance of the same lands to the same trustees, upon similar trusts to those declared by the will, and covenanted to surrender the copyholds to the trustees, on the trusts declared by the deed, and that until such surrender, and the trustees should be admitted to the copyholds covenanted to be surrendered, A. and her heirs would hold the lands in trust for the trustees, their heirs and assigns, and dispose of the same as they should direct and appoint. A. died without having executed any surrender:—Held, that the legal estate in the lands was in the devisees in trust under the will, and not in A.'s customary heir. Steele v. Waller, 6 Jur., N. S., 1004.

6. Limitation to trustees to stand seised and receive rents and profits to the use of A., is an estate executed in A. Carnardine v. Carnardine, 1 Eden 36.

7. Lands limited to A. in trust for a feme covert, and that A. should receive the rents and apply them as the feme, whether sole or covert, should direct. This is a trust, and not a use, executed by the statute. Novil v. Saunders, 1 Vern. 415.

8. Devise of freehold and copyhold surrendered to the use of the will to trustees and the survivor and his heirs, in trust to pay debts and legacies, an annuity to the testator's son, and for other purposes; then on the marriage or attaining twenty-one of his granddaughter, to convey to her for life, remainder to trustees, etc., remainder to her first and other sons in tail male, remainder to her daughters in tail general, remainder to such persons, for such estates, and subject to such charges and conditions, as he should by any deed or instrument, with two or more witnesses, appoint: the next day by deed poll, with two witnesses, reciting his will, and that he had reserved a power of disposing of his estate further, he directed his trustees, immediately after the death of his granddaughter, and failure of her issue, to convey all his real estate to the first and other sons of his son in tail male, then to his daughters in tail general, then to the right heirs of the survivor of his trustees, his heirs and assigns for ever. No conveyance was made. The granddaughter died without issue; then the son died without issue, leaving one trustee surviving. Under the will alone, the trustees have a more legal estate, and all the equitable interest beyond the express dispositions would result to the son as heir; but the deed was considered as a codicil sufficiently executed to pass copyhold, but not freehold. The last limitation is a contingent remainder to the heir of the surviving trustee, and a conveyance was directed with an insertion of trustees to support that remainder as to the copyhold; the rents and profits of the copyhold during the life of the trustee, and all the freehold, to go to the heir of the testator. Habergham v. Vincent, 2 Ves. J. 204; 4 Bro. C. C. 353.

9. Devise to trustees and their heirs during the life of A. B., in trust to lay out the rents and issues thereof in Government securities, until A. B. should attain twenty-one, and after that, to suffer her to receive and take the profits during her life, not subject to the debts or control of her husband, her receipt to be a sufficient discharge; and, after her decease, to her heirs. Upon a suit for specific performance of an agreement for the purchase of part of the estates, the question was whether A. B. took the legal, or only an equitable interest for life in the property, so as to bring the title within the rule in Shelley's case (1 Rep. 93. b.). The Lord Chancellor C. B. would not compel the defendant to accept the title. Playford v. Hoare, 3 Y. & J. 175.

1. A testator devised property to A. for life, remainder to B. and C. in fee upon trusts, and appointed A., B., and C. his executors. By a codicil, he revoked the appointment of B. to be a trustee and executor, and appointed A., C., and D. trustees and executors, as fully and effectually to all intents and purposes and in all respects as if they had originally by his will been appointed to be the trustees and executors thereof:—Held, that the legal estate passed to A., C., and D. Re Turner, 2 De G. F. & J. 527; 7 Jur. N. S., 114; 30 L. J., Ch., 144; 9 W. R. 174; 3 L. T., N. S., 573.

2. A testator devised and bequeathed his real and personal estate to his wife and three other persons, and their heirs, executors, etc., for ever, upon trust for his wife to receive the rents for life; and after her decease, upon trust "to pay and divide the rents among his children as they attained twenty-one, and after their decease, to pay the principal of their respective shares unto their legal representatives, their executors, administrators, and assigns. He gave power to the trustees to sell, with power of maintenance out of the rents, and advancements out of the principal of their shares; and in case any of his freehold estates should not be sold by his said trustees, then, from and after the decease of his said children, he devised the same unto their respective heirs and assigns, as tenants in common. And he directed that the receipts and conveyances of his said trustees to any purchasers of any part of his estate and effects should be good discharges and assurances:—Held, that the trustees took the legal fee, and that the children were entitled to equitable estates for life, with equitable remainders to their heirs, which, united, gave them equitable estates in fee-simple. Reynell v. Reynell, 10 Beav. 21.

3. Real estate was assured by deed unto and to the use of a trustee, his heirs and assigns, for a married woman for life to her separate use, and from and after the determination of that estate to stand seised to such uses and upon such trusts as she should by will appoint, and in default of appointment to the use of the heirs and assigns of the married woman:—Held, that the legal fee was vested in the trustee; that all the subsequent limitations were merely equitable, and that, therefore, under the rule in Shelley's case (1 Rep. 93. b.) the wife took an equitable estate in fee, and could, with the concurrence of the trustee after her husband's death, make a good title in fee to the property, and one which the Court would force on an unwilling purchaser. Cooper v. Kymoch, 41 L. J., Ch., 296; 7 L. R., Ch., 398.

4. A testator devised and bequeathed all his estate and effects to trustees, their heirs, executors, and administrators, to convert his personal estate, not being money, and to stand possessed of the money to arise by such sale, and of the rest and residue of his estate and effects to invest the same in Government or real securities, and to stand possessed of such investments for the benefit of his widow and children and his brothers and sisters:—Held, that the real estate passed to the trustees, but the beneficial interest therein was undisposed of by the will, and consequently resulted to the heir. Longley v. Longley, 13 L. R., Eq., 133; 41 L. J., Ch., 168; 20 W. R. 227; 25 L. T., N. S., 736.

5. A devised real estate to three trustees, one of whom was his heir-at-law, and he directed that during the lives of his wife, his daughters, and their husbands, the income should be applied for the benefit of those persons and their children, and when those persons should be dead the estate should be sold and divided among his grandchildren. This devise of the corpus had been held to fail for remoteness:—Held, that assuming the legal fee to have passed to the trustees, the descent was not broken so as to create a new reversion, but that the heir-at-law took the old estate; and that the character of this equitable reversion was not affected by the devise of the legal fee to the heir as trustee. Buchanan v. Harrison, 10 W. R. 118.

6. A testator devised a freehold to trustees for the benefit of E. for life for her separate use, and after her death upon trusts for such of the children of E., as being sons, should attain twenty-one, or being daughters, should attain that age or marry. E. died after the testator, leaving an infant daughter who did not marry before attaining twenty-one:—Held, that the legal estate was in the trustees, and the daughter of E. took the property on attaining twenty-one, but the interim rents went to the residuary devisee. Re Eddels, 40 L. J., Ch., 316; 11 L. R., Eq., 559; 24 L. T., N. S., 223; 19 W. R. 815.

On a petition for payment out of the interim rents which had been paid in under the Trustee Relief Acts, the Court decided that the legal estate was in the trustees. Id.

7. Although a devise to A. and B. upon trust to pay rent to C., or permit him to receive the same during his life, confers a legal life estate on C., a devise to A. and B. upon trust to pay the rents to A. (or B.) or permit him to receive the same during his life, only confers an equitable life estate. Doe v. Biggs (2 Taunt. 109) considered. Re Tanqueray-Willarume and Landau, 20 L. R., Ch. D., 465; 51 L. J., Ch., 434; 46 L. T. 542; 30 W. R. 801.

8. Devise of freeholds and copyholds to A. and B., to hold the same to A. and B., their heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, upon trust during the life of J. to receive the rents and pay the same to J. for life, or otherwise to permit J. to receive them; followed by a devise after J.'s decease, to the use of the heirs of his body. The testator appointed A., B., and J. executors of his will, and declared that the receipts of his trustees and executors for any money payable under the will should be a sufficient discharge to any person paying the same:—Held, that J. took a legal estate tail in the freeholds, and an equitable estate for life in the copyholds. Baker v. White, 20

1. A testator devised all his real estate to trustees, their heirs and assigns, to hold the same unto his trustees, their heirs and assigns, for ever, "but nevertheless to the several uses, upon the several trusts, and subject to the several powers" thereafter declared, namely, to the use of his nephews and assigns during his life, and from and after the determination of that estate, to the use of such child or children of his nephew as should attain the age of twenty-one, as tenants in common in fee, with limitations over. The tenant for life was directed to repair and insure the messuages forming part of the devised estates, and in case of his default the testator authorised and empowered his trustees or trustee to receive the rents, and thereout effect such repairs and insurance. The testator also empowered his trustees or trustee to apply all or any part of the yearly income to which, under any of the devises or bequests thereinbefore contained, each or any infant devisee or legatee should be presumptively or otherwise entitled, towards the maintenance or education, or otherwise for the benefit of such devisee or legatee during his or her minority. By a codicil of even date with the will the testator devised land which he had contracted to sell to a railway company unto and to the use of his trustees, their heirs and assigns, upon trust to complete such contract. The tenant for life died, leaving issue four children, one of whom, the plaintiff, had not attained the age of twenty-one at the time of his father's death:—Held, that, having regard to the provision for maintenance, the limitation in favour of the children of the testator's nephew was equitable, and that the contingent devise to the plaintiff therefore took effect. Re Berry, Berry v. Berry, 47 L. J., Ch., 182; 7 L. R., Ch. D., 657; 38 L. T., N. S., 474; 26 W. R. 327.

2. Devise (after 1837) of copyholds and freeholds to trustees to hold unto them and their heirs on trust to pay unto or permit A. to receive the rents during his life, and after his death to the use of the heirs of his body, with a gift over in case he died without leaving issue:—Held, that A. took an equitable estate for life with a legal remainder to the heirs of his body in both the freeholds and copyholds. Baker v. Parson, 42 L. J., Ch., 228.

The Statute of Uses not applying to copyholds, on a devise of freeholds and copyholds together, the legal estate in the copyholds attracts that in the freeholds and makes it vest in the first devisee. Id.

3. A testator, after directing his debts to be paid, and setting apart certain sums to provide annuities for his two sons, devised and bequeathed all his real and personal estate to his four daughters, to be equally divided between them: Provided as follows—that the share of his wife should be divided after her death between his four daughters or the survivors and their children; and the testator appointed his wife and T. Davies, his executors, to act jointly in carrying out all the intentions of his will, and to invest his daughters' shares for their benefit and the benefit of their children:—Held, upon an application under the Vendor and Purchaser Act, that the legal estate in freeholds was vested in the executors who could

4. By the custom of the manors of Y., P., and S., the tenant of the copyhold tenement held only for life, with a power to nominate by writing one or more successors, but so that if there were more than one, they held concurrently for their lives or the life of the survivor, who had power to nominate a successor to himself. A copyhold tenant of these manors by his will devised all his copyholds to three trustees to the use of his grandson A. for life, with remainder to the use of the trustees to preserve the contingent remainders, with remainder to the use of the children of A. and their heirs as tenants in common, with remainder to the use of the plaintiff. By a codicil the testator, after reciting that he had ascertained that his "copyhold estates" were held of the manors of P. and S., directed that "all his copyhold estates within the manors of P. and S." should be held by his trustees to the uses and upon the trusts in his will declared, if and so far as the custom of the respective manors would warrant or authorise; and if the custom of the manors or either of them did not warrant or authorise the entail created by his will, then and in that case his grandson A. and his assigns, or his successor or successors, should have and hold his copyhold estates according to the custom of the manors. A. was admitted tenant for his life, and nominated the defendant as his successor, who was admitted accordingly:—Held, that the trustees took the legal estate in the copyholds held of the manor of Y., and ought to have been admitted instead of A., and that all the beneficial limitations in the will were equitable interests. Allen v. Benney, 7 L. R., Ch. D., 453; 37 L. T., N. S., 688.

II. QUANTITY OF ESTATE OF TRUSTEES.

1. General Principles, 6950.
2. Direction to pay Debts or Legacies, 6951.
3. Where Power or Trust for Sale, 6953.
4. Other Cases, 6954.

1. General Principles.

5. A legal fee will pass without the word "heirs," where a trust of land can be satisfied in no other way. Villiers v. Villiers, 2 Atk. 72.

6. The word "heirs" is not necessary to give an inheritance to trustees, if a less estate would not answer the purpose of the trust. Gibson v. Rogers, Amb. 95; 1 Ves. 485; 4 Ves. 288. n.

7. Devise to trustees and their heirs upon divers trusts in succession, some requiring the legal estate to remain in the trustees, and others which, in themselves, would not do so,—the whole legal fee remains in the trustees. Brown v. Whiteway, 8 Hare 145.

8. Where an estate is devised without any limitation of the quantity of interest to trustees in trust for a limited purpose, with remainder to persons to whom the beneficial interest is given, the legal estate given to the trustees will cease on the satisfaction of the limited purpose, and will vest in the persons beneficially entitled in remainder. Hearndon v. Williamson, 1 Keen 33; 5 L. J., N. S., Ch., 165.

1. It is not a sufficient ground for restricting an estate limited in a deed to a trustee and his heirs, to an estate for life, that the estate given to the trustee seems to be larger than was essential to its purpose, or that the limitation has been unnecessarily repeated. Colmore v. Tyndall, 2 Y. & J. 605.

2. Copyholds are to the same extent as freeholds, subject to the rule that the legal estate in the trustee shall be construed to be the smallest estate necessary for the execution of the trust. Baker v. Parson, 42 L. J., Ch., 228.

2. Direction to pay Debts or Legacies.

3. Devise to two trustees and the survivor, his executors and administrators, in trust, to let and apply the rents in payment of mortgages, until the whole debt should be paid off by the rents, and afterwards to other parties. The trustees take a chattel interest only. Hearndon v. Williamson, 5 L. J., N. S., Ch., 165; 1 Keen 33.

4. Devise of real and personal estates to trustees, their executors, etc., out of rents and profits to pay certain annuities and legacies:—Held, a trust, not a chattel interest in the trustees. Gibson v. Rogers, Ambl. 93; 1 Ves. 486; 4 Ves. 288. n.

The word "heirs" is not necessary to give an inheritance to trustees, if a less estate would not answer the purpose of the trust. Id. 95.

5. A., seised in fee of several manors, lands, etc., by will, devised the same to W., and others, their heirs, etc., in trust, out of rents to pay debts; and after payment thereof, he devised same estates to three of trustees, their executors, etc., for five hundred years, in trust to pay legacies, and 200*l.* per annum to his sister for life; and after determination of estate for years, he devised premises to all trustees, in trust as to one moiety, to use of T. for life, sans waste; remainder to trustees for life of T., to preserve, etc.; remainder to use of heirs of body of T.; and for want of such issue, then to B. in like manner, as to T., with like remainders to others of his nephews; remainder to testator's own right heirs. T. died without issue, and B., after suffering recovery to use of him and his heirs, of this moiety, devised it to wife, plaintiff, in fee, and died. Defendant, as heir-at-law of A., insisted that B. had only an interest for life; that recovery did not operate to affect remainder in fee to right heirs of A., and that therefore defendant, as such heir, was entitled to estate:—Held, at Rolls, that devise in will of A. to B. was in tail, and that he took such estate moiety of premises, and, consequently, that the recovery was well suffered, and barred all remainders. But Lord Hardwicke held, that B. took only estate for life, and reversed so much of his honour's decree as directed estate tail. Held, also, that estate devised to B. was not a use executed, but a mere trust in equity, and that the whole fee being devised to trustees, no legal fee could be limited upon it, and that he could take no legal estate. Also, that B.'s recovery was bad, for he could not make a good tenant to the præcipe, being before debts were paid, and fee devised to trustees was ended, and that whatever defeats recovery, defeats plaintiff's title. Bagshaw v. Spencer, 2 Atk. 570; 1 Ves. 142.

6. A testator, in 1825, left all his property to his executor for the purpose of paying the following bequests, first paying debts and funeral expenses. He then bequeathed lands for ever to his illegitimate son T., giving him power to will and dispose of same if he had a family, but if he shall die without issue, then to go to the use of his daughter J., also illegitimate:—Held, that the executor took the fee in the lands, and that T. took an estate tail, the limitation over being not an executory devise, but a remainder, and that this limitation conferred the fee upon J. on indefinite failure of issue of T., J. taking the entire estate remaining in the executor. Ormsby v. Anderson, 14 W. R. 379.

7. A testator devised his real estate to trustees and their heirs, in trust, during the life of his brother, and until payment of his debts and legacies, to apply the rents in payment of his debts and legacies, and then to pay them to his brother for life; and after the death of his brother, and such payments, he devised the estate to the heirs of the body of his brother, and in default to his own right heirs:—Held, first, that the trustees took the legal fee, determinable upon the death of his brother and payment of the debts and legacies. Collier v. McBean, 34 Beav. 426; 34 L. J., Ch., 555; 6 N. R. 192. S. C. on appeal, 14 W. R. 156; 13 L. T., N. S., 484.

Held, secondly, that the brother took an equitable estate for life, with a legal remainder to the heirs of his body. Id.

The trustees having conveyed to the brother the legal estate for his life, and he having suffered a recovery:—Held, thirdly, that the heirs of the body were not barred, because the legal estate to the brother for life, and the legal remainder to the heirs of his body, had become vested by different instruments, and also because it was the duty of the trustees to preserve the contingent estates, and therefore it was a breach of duty in them to convey the estate to the brother. Id.

Held, on appeal, that the title under the recovery was too doubtful to force on a purchaser. Id.

8. A testator, by will, subsequently to 7 Will. 4 and 1 Vict., c. 26, after directing that his debts and funeral and testamentary expenses should be paid by his executors as soon as conveniently might be after his decease, devised all his real and personal estates to trustees (whom he afterwards appointed his executors), in trust to pay the rents and proceeds thereof to his son J. for his natural life; and from and after the death of J., in trust for the right heirs of him, J., for ever:—Held, that by reason of the direction to them to pay debts, the trustees took the legal estate in fee, and therefore, inasmuch as the estate for life and the estate in remainder were both equitable estates, the rule in Shelley's case (1 Rep. 93. b.) applied, and J. took an equitable estate in fee. Spence v. Spence, 12 C. B., N. S., 199; 31 L. J., C. P., 189; 10 W. R. 605; 6 L. T., N. S., 538.

1. A general devise to trustees and their heirs primâ facie gives the fee, and it lies on the parties alleging that they take a less estate to show what less estate they take. Collier v. Walters, 43 L. J., Ch., 216; 17 L. R., Eq., 252; 29 L. T., N. S., 868.

A trust to set and let, and a direction to sell timber, are grounds for not cutting down the estate. Ib.

A testator, by will, dated in 1827, devised his estate to trustees and their heirs upon trusts that they and their heirs should stand seised of the same during the life of C., and until the whole of the testator's debts and the legacies were paid, upon trust, to set and let the same and apply rents and yearly profits and the value of whatever timber might be considered at its best growth, from time to time, in discharge of his debts and legacies until they were paid, and from thenceforth to pay the rents to C. during his life; and after his death, and payment of the debts and legacies and expenses, the testator devised the estate to the heirs of the body of C., and for default of such issue, to his own right heirs. In 1830 the trustees by deed reciting that the debts and legacies were paid, conveyed the estates to C. for his life. C. shortly afterwards suffered a common recovery, and then mortgaged the estate in fee to W. In 1861 C., the father, and W., his mortgagee, had filed a bill for a conveyance of the fee against the heir of the surviving trustee and the son (C.'s heir apparent). The son, instead of asking to be dismissed as not being heir during his father's lifetime, put in an answer disputing the plaintiff's title. In 1865 a decree was made for the conveyance of the fee to the plaintiff. The father had since died. The suit was instituted in 1873 by the son against the mortgagee:—Held, first, that the trustees took a legal fee under the will, that the rule in Shelley's case (1 Rep. 93. b.) therefore applied, and that the son acquired a good equitable fee by the recovery. Ib.

Held, secondly, that if they had only taken a life estate, their conveyance of it to the father enabled him to suffer a recovery and bar the contingent remainders at law and in equity, and was no breach of trust. Ib.

Held, thirdly, that the son having chosen to answer in the former suit, was bound by the decree. Ib.

The decision on the same will in Collier v. McBean (34 Beav. 426; 34 L. J., Ch., 555), that the trustees took a fee determinable when the debts were paid, disapproved of. Ib.

2. C., after desiring that all his just debts, etc., should be in the first place paid, devised to three trustees, and the heirs of the survivor, a copyhold estate, upon trust to pay the rents and profits thereof, in equal moieties, to his two daughters, for their separate use for life; and after the decease of either, upon trust to pay the whole of such rents, etc., to the survivor for life; and after the decease of the survivor, C. devised the estate, in equal moieties, to the heirs of the bodies of his daughters respectively; and in default of issue of either daughter, he gave the entirety of the estate to the heirs of the body of such daughter who should leave such issue; and in default of issue of both daughters, he gave the estate to the right heirs of the surviving daughter. The trustees were appointed executors of the will, and they were duly admitted to hold to the uses of the same. Both the testator's daughters died without having ever been married. The estate was of gavelkind tenure. Both the customary co-heirs and the heir-at-law of the surviving daughter claimed the estate. On demurrer by the latter:—Held, that the general charge of debts, coupled with the legal estate devised to the trustees, made the estate of the devisee in remainder an equitable estate; and the demurrer was overruled. Creaton v. Creaton, 2 Jur., N. S., 1223; 3 Sm. & G. 386; 26 L. J., Ch., 266.

Where, by a will, there was a general charge of debts, and a devise to trustees upon certain trusts:—Held, that the extent of the estate vested in the trustees could not be measured by the length or continuance of the equitable interests given to two tenants for life; but semble, if there had been no charge of debts, the estate of the trustees would have determined with the life of the surviving tenant for life. Ib.

Semble, where the subject of a devise is copyhold, the right of the trustees to be reimbursed moneys paid in fees of court will not of itself prevent the determination of the estates vested in them, or affect the quality of the estates limited in remainder. Ib.

3. A testator, by his will made in 1838, directed his debts to be paid. And he devised specific real estate to four persons (whom he afterwards named as his executors), their heirs and assigns, upon trust and for the intents and purposes thereafter mentioned, viz., upon trust during the minority of his daughter D., to receive the rents and apply the same for her benefit till she should attain twenty-one, and, on her attaining twenty-one, to pay to or permit and suffer her to receive the rents during her life for her separate use, without the power of anticipation. And, from and after her death, upon trust for, and the testator thereby gave and devised the property to the issue, children or child, of the daughter who should live to attain the age of twenty-one, in equal shares if more than one, and to their respective heirs and assigns with remainders over. And, after making other specific devises and bequests, the testator devised and bequeathed the residue of his estate and effects (subject to and charged with the payment of his debts) to one of his trustees absolutely, for his own use and benefit. The daughter D. survived the testator, and she afterwards married and had three children, but she died before any of them had attained twenty-one:—Held, that by reason of the direction that the testator's debts should be paid, the trustees took the whole legal estate in fee-simple in the specifically devised estate, and consequently that the contingent remainder to the children of the daughter had not failed by reason of the determination of her life estate before the happening of the contingency. Festing v. Allen (12 M. & W. 279) distinguished. Creaton v. Creaton (3 Sm. & G. 386) followed. Marshall v. Gingell,

1. A testator, in 1772, devised to trustees, and the survivor and his heirs, all his real and personal estate upon trust to pay an annuity to his daughter, Lady A.; the residue of the rents to be applied to the payment of his debts; and, after her decease, in trust to permit the second son of Lady A., by J. B., her husband, afterwards Earl Ormonde, and the heirs male of his body to receive the same in preference to her eldest son, it being testator's meaning that such second son "do take and be preferred, etc., until he shall become an eldest, and so shall each and every second and younger son or sons take place and enjoy the said estates according to seniority, etc., and the heirs male of the body of such second son." In default of such issue, the estates were to go to the use of the daughters of Lady A., as tenants in common in tail, etc., with ultimate remainder to testator's trustee in fee. Lady A. had issue four sons by J. B.—Walter, John, James, and Charles, all of whom had been born during testator's lifetime, and John was second son living at date of the will, and of testator's death. In 1793 John joined his father and mother in a recovery of the W. estates so devised by the testator, and executed a deed declaring the uses thereof to Lady A. for life; remainder to John for life, with remainder to John's sons in tail; remainder successively to James and Charles for life, and their issue respectively in tail male; and said deed contained a proviso for shifting the W. estates from John to James, and from James to Charles, in the event of the O. estates of their father coming to John or James. In 1796 John died. J. B. died in 1795, whereupon Walter became entitled and suffered recoveries of the O. estate, and died in 1822, Marquis of O. James then became Marquis. Lady A. died in 1830, and in 1834 James filed his bill against Charles, and the present plaintiff, and the heir of surviving trustee, whereby he claimed the W. estates as tenant in tail, under the will of 1772, or as tenant for life, with remainder to his eldest son in tail male, under the deed of 1793. Charles answered the bill, and issue had been joined and publication passed when the plaintiff, James, Marquis of O., died. In 1838 the present plaintiff filed his bill against Charles and his three sons, setting out all the charges contained in the former bill, and the several proceedings had thereon, and claiming to be entitled to the W. estates, either as issue in tail under the will of 1772, or as tenant in tail under the deed of 1793, and the recoveries. The bill stated that Charles and his sons claimed some interest in the said estates, and in the subject matter of this suit, and in that respect were necessary parties. The bill prayed that plaintiff might have the benefit of the said former proceedings, etc., and that the trusts of the will might be carried into execution, etc. To this bill the three sons of Charles demurred for want of equity; no grounds were assigned on the record. At the bar one of the causes of demurrer was, that the plaintiff showed no title to the W. estates:—Held, that Lady A. took no estate under the will; that the devise to the second son of Lady A., and the heirs male of his body, was an executory devise to such son as should answer that description at the time of the death of Lady A.; and, therefore, that the recoveries suffered in 1793 and 1795 were bad for want of a tenant to the præcipe, so as to bar the remainders over limited by the will, even supposing that, on the death of John, James, the late marquis, took an estate tail, by way of executory devise. It was also held, that the limitation to the trustees and the survivor, and his heirs, vested in them the legal estate in fee. Ormonde v. Wandersforde, 1 Ir. Eq. R. 238.

2. A testator, after the 4 Will. 4, c. 22, devised freehold lands to two trustees, their heirs and assigns, to pay thereout to his widow an annuity for her life, and after her decease for A. and B., their heirs and assigns, as tenants in common:—Held, that the legal estate in the trustees was not restricted to the life of the widow. Fenwick v. Potts, 8 De G. M. & G. 506.

3. A devise before 1838 to trustees in trust to pay a life annuity, with power to raise it by distress or sale as for rent in arrear, gives them the legal fee. Whittemore v. Whittemore, 38 L. J., Ch., 17; 19 L. T., N. S., 236.

3. Where Power or Trust for Sale.

4. A devise to trustees and their "heirs" carries the whole fee in law; and a devise to sell will carry a fee, though the word "heirs" be not mentioned. Bagshaw v. Spencer, 2 Atk. 578; 1 Ves. 142.

Where testator's intent appears plain, Court will construe the words "heirs of the body" to be words of purchase. S. C. 2 Atk. 580.

"Heirs of the body" have, at law, been considered as words of purchase, even in a deed. Id.

5. By the will of W. S., real estate was devised unto and to the use of W. T., his heirs and assigns for ever, upon trust to pay M. S. an annuity during her life, and to apply the surplus during the life of M. S. to the testator's daughter, C. N.; and after the death of M. S., the testator directed that the premises should be and remain unto W. T., his heirs and assigns, to the use of the said C. N., and her assigns for her life, with remainder to W. T. to support contingent remainders; and after the decease of C. N., to the use of B. N. and his assigns during his life, with remainder to W. T. to support contingent remainders, and after the decease of B. N., in case he should survive C. N., to the use of all and every the child and children of C. N., with cross-remainders between them, with the ultimate remainder to the testator's cousin, M. S., in fee. The will contained a power to W. T., his heirs and assigns, to sell the trust premises at the request of B. N. and C. N., or the survivor of them, and directed the proceeds of such sale to be laid out in the purchase of other estates to be settled to the same uses as the estates sold:—Held, taking into consideration the various duties prescribed by the will to be performed by W. T., that the intention was manifest, and that the words were large enough to give to W. T. a legal estate in fee.

Rackham v. Siddall, 1 Macn. & G. 607; 2 H. & Tw. 44.

1. A testator, without expressly devising his real estate, empowered his trustees and executors to manage and to sell and invest the proceeds. He directed them, under the management of his wife, to carry on his farm for the maintenance of his family, and subject to that trust directed his real and personal estate to be held on trust for his children equally, some of whom were to bring into hotchpot property of their own:—Held, that the trustees had the legal estate in the realty, and on the death of the wife, though the children were all of age, could sell and convey. Cooke v. Simpson, 46 L. J., Ch., 463.

2. Effect of a private Act of Parliament declaring an estate vested in trustees and their heirs, in trust to sell discharged from the trusts of a settlement, divesting the legal fee outstanding under a prior settlement. Bullock v. Fladgate, 1 Ves. & B. 471.

3. U. devised lands by will to trustees. The will contained no power of sale. In 1873 a private Act was passed, reciting that it was desirable that the lands should be sold, and enacting "from and after the passing of this Act the legal estate in the lands and hereditaments devised by the will of U. shall, for the purposes of this Act, vest in W. M., J. M., and R. K." The Act went on to give the trustees power to sell all or any part of the lands:—Held, that the legal estate was vested in the trustees for all purposes, and not merely for the purpose of selling the lands, so that they could maintain an action of ejectment. Underwood v. Pennington, 37 L. T., N. S., 320.

In 1874 an Amendment Act was passed by which "all the trusts, powers, and authorities by the Act of 1873, vested in or conferred upon the trustees of the Act, and all matters and things incident thereto, shall be vested in the trustees and two other trustees, to be appointed as hereinafter mentioned":—Held, that the new trustees were on exactly the same footing as the others, and that the legal estate was in them all. Id.

4. A testator by will made in 1851, after appointing his wife executrix, and B. executor and trustee of his will, devised his real estate to his wife for life, in case she continued his widow; but in case she married again, he devised the real estate to the use and intent that his wife should receive an annuity of 20*l.*, with powers of entry and distress. After the decease of his wife, the testator directed his trustee to sell his real estate, in such manner as he should deem right, with power to execute such deeds and assurances as should be requisite for effecting the sale of his real estate:—Held, that the trustee took a contingent estate pur autre vie during the life of the widow, in the event of her subsequent marriage. Re Boyce, 10 Jur., N. S., 138; 33 L. J., Ch., 390; 12 W. R. 359; 9 L. T., N. S., 670; 4 De G. J. & S. 205.

4. Other Cases.

5. Under a devise to A. and B., and their heirs, to the use of son for life, with remainder in trust that the trustees apply the rents for maintenance of the children of son during their minority, and after they attained twenty-one, to the use of them in fee:—Held, that the son took the legal estate for his life, with remainder to A. and B., for a chattel interest, with remainder to the children in fee. Tucker v. Johnson, 16 Sim. 341.

6. A devise to trustees and their heirs:—Held, to confer an estate co-extensive only with the trusts they had to perform. Ward v. Burbury, 18 Beav. 190.

Devise of freeholds to trustees "and their heirs," upon trust to receive the rents and pay them to E. W., a feme covert, for her separate use; and after her death, upon trust to sell and divide amongst her children; and in default, to apply the rents towards the education of J. W., until he attained twenty-one; and (continued the testator) "when J. W. shall so have attained that age," I devise to him and his heirs all my real and personal estate:—Held, on the death of E. W. without issue, that J. W. took the legal estate in fee. Id.

7. Devise, subject as to part, to a devise to trustees and their heirs for debts in aid of the personal estate, and, as to part, to mortgages in fee, to sons and a daughter, and their respective issue male, in strict settlement, etc., with power to the sons respectively, when in possession, to convey or appoint all or any part to trustees on trust, by the rents and profits to raise a rent-charge, as and for a jointure for any wife or wives, for each such wife's natural life only, and also to charge portions by deed and to lease for twenty-one years. Execution of the power, by conveyance to trustees and their heirs on trust, by the rents and profits to raise and pay a jointure during the wife's natural life only, and charging portions, with covenant for title, and for quiet enjoyment by the trustees during the natural life only of the wife. As to the estate of the trustees at law, quære, the Court of King's Bench certifying that they took an estate in fee, and the Court of Common Pleas, that they took no estate whatsoever. Wykham v. Wykham, 18 Ves. 395.

8. A., seised in fee, conveyed lands to B. and C., and the survivor of them, and the heirs of the survivor, to the use of A. for life, and after his death, to the use of B. and C., and the survivor, and the heirs of such survivor, upon trust to permit and suffer D. to receive a jointure, and after the death of D., to the use of the right heirs of A.:—Held, that B. and C. took a legal estate in fee in remainder. Fowler v. Lightburn, 11 Ir. Ch. R. 495.

9. A testator being seised of lands under leases for lives renewable for ever, in 1824 devised all his freehold leases and interest whatsoever to trustees, and the heirs of the survivor of them, in trust, after payment of the head rents, to apply the clear yearly rents to and amongst his three daughters during their respective lives, in equal shares and proportions, for their sole and separate use; and in case any or either of his daughters should happen to die leaving lawful issue, then in trust, as to the share and proportion of such daughter so dying, to and for the use of such issue, as she should by deed or will appoint, and in default of such appointment to the use of such issue equally, share and share alike; and if any of his daughters died without issue, he directed that her share of the rents should go to, and be paid to, the survivors or survivor of them for the increase of her and their respective shares, to their separate use, and to go to their lawful issue, subject to the like power of appointment among such issue; and in case of the death of all his daughters without leaving lawful issue, then in trust to pay the rents to his nephew during his life; and after the death of his nephew, in case he should happen to die leaving lawful issue, in trust, as to one-half of his freehold and leasehold interests, to the use of the children of his sister, in equal shares, and to their lawful issue; and in case his nephew should happen to die without issue, then, as to the whole of his freehold and leasehold interests, to the use of the said children of his sister, in equal shares, and to their lawful issue; and in case they should be then dead, then, as to the whole, in trust for the issue of his nephew; and in case of the deaths of his nephew and the children of his sister without issue, in trust to assign over the freehold and leasehold interests to his own right heirs; and a power was given to the trustees to lease from time to time as they should remain seised and possessed by virtue of the trusts in the will contained, with the consent of the person or persons then entitled:—Held, first, that the legal estate was devised to the trustees during the existence of the entire series of limitations. Sherrin v. Kenny, 16 Ir. Ch. R. 138.

Held, secondly, that the daughters of the testator took equitable estates in quasi tail in their respective shares. Ib.

1. A testator, by codicil, after appointing two persons trustees, as also their heirs and assigns, to his will and codicil, desired that his sister A. should do what she pleased with his remaining property after payment of certain legacies, excepting a tenement at W. and stock, of which she should only receive the interest and rent during her life, and afterwards to his sister's eldest son, on his taking the name of M.; but should he refuse to take the name of M., or his sister depart this life without a son, then the tenement at W. and the stock should go to P. on his taking the name of M., and so on to his heirs, each taking the name of M., none of them being allowed to touch the principal; and no one should after his sister A. inherit the said property or enjoy the interest who did not take or possess the name of M.:—Held, that the trustees took an estate in fee by virtue of their appointment, and that A. was entitled to an estate for life in the tenement and stock, with a remainder in fee in the tenement, and an absolute interest in the stock, to the firstborn of A. vested in his birth and baptism by the name of M. Bennett v. Bennett, 2 Dr. & Sm. 266.

III. OTHER MATTERS.

2. No person can be a trustee in law unless he has a vested interest in the thing given. Owen v. Owen, 1 Atk. 496.

3. The necessary funds having been subscribed by certain parties, a piece of land was purchased and conveyed by deed to trustees, for a charitable purpose. Under this deed the trustees entered into and continued in possession for several years; and, with the acquiescence of all the subscribers, including some not parties to the deed, a considerable expenditure was made, and heavy liabilities were incurred:—Held, that, even assuming the subscribers not parties to the deed had an equitable interest in the land in respect of the moneys subscribed by them, yet they would not be heard to assert a title to the land adverse to that of the trustees. Att.-Gen. v. Munro, 9 Jur. 461.

I. BY DEVISE IN GENERAL TERMS.

4. One makes his will and says, "As to such estate as God hath blessed me with, I devise in manner following;" after which he gives part to J. S., and his heirs, etc., and devises the rest of his estate to his wife in fee: this passes a trust estate. Marlow v. Smith, 2 P. W. 198.

5. Trust estate will pass by a general devise. Hamkins v. Obeon, 2 Ves. 559.

6. A general devise by a trustee did not pass the trust estate. Att.-Gen. v. Buller, 5 Ves. 339.

7. Under residuary disposition by will to natural son, his heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns for ever, to and for his and their own use and behoof, a trust estate did not pass. Exp. Brettell, 6 Ves. 576.

8. By a devise in general terms, a trust estate will pass, unless an intention to the contrary can be collected from expressions in the will, or purposes, or objects of the testator. Braybrooke (Lord) v. Inskip, 8 Ves. 417.

9. Rule that trust estate will pass by a general devise is confined by objects appearing upon the will inconsistent with that intention. Exp. Morgan, 10 Ves. 101.

10. A testator devised all his property to his wife, her heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, for all his estate and interest therein, for her own absolute use and benefit, and to be disposed of by deed or will as she should think fit:—Held, that a trust estate in fee passed by the devise. Exp. Shaw, 8 Sim. 159; 5 L. J., N. S., Ch., 378.

11. Trustee, after devising certain real estates to different persons, gave and devised all his real estates not before disposed of by his will to A. B., his heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, according to the tenure and nature thereof respectively, to and for his and their own use and benefit:—Held, that under this devise the trust estate passed. Bainbridge v. Ashburton (Lord), 2 Y. & Coll., Exch. Eq., 347; 6 L. J., N. S., Exch. Eq., 73.

1. A devise by testator "of all the lands and hereditaments vested in him as trustee or mortgage in fee:—Held, to pass trust estates vested in the testator, but not in fee. Groomwood v. Wakeford, 1 Beav. 576; 8 L. J., N. S., Ch., 333.

2. Testator gave all his property, whatsoever and wheresoever the same might be at his decease, to his wife for her absolute use for ever:—Held, that an estate vested in the testator as a trustee did not pass by the devise. Lindsell v. Thacker, 12 Sim. 178; 10 L. J., N. S., Ch., 343; 5 Jur. 603.

3. A general residuary devise and bequest of real and personal property for such estate and interest as the testator had therein, the personal estate to be subject to the testator's debts:—Held, to pass the legal estate in real property of which the testator was merely trustee, the will creating no inconsistent trust thereof. Langford v. Auger, 4 Hare 313.

4. Testator devised all his real estates whatsoever and wheresoever to Grace T., her heirs and assigns, charged with 50*l.* to J. W.:—Held, that estates of which the testator was a trustee did not pass by the devise. Rackham v. Siddall, 16 Sim. 297; 12 Jur. 640. And see S. C. 1 Macn. & G. 607; 2 H. & Tw. 44.

5. Real estate vested in a testator as a trustee:—Held, to pass by a general devise in his will to "A. B., his heirs, executors, and administrators, for his and their own use and benefit." Sharpe v. Sharpe, 17 L. J., N. S., Ch., 384; 12 Jur. 598.

6. A testator gave and bequeathed all his stock in trade, book debts, securities for money, money in the funds, and all his household goods, to his wife. He also gave and bequeathed whatever money he had in the bank, or vested on any security, and also all the residue of his personal and testamentary estate, goods, chattels, and credits, to his trustees, upon certain trusts therein mentioned:—Held, that the legal estate in certain messuages, which were conveyed to the testator, upon trust to pay himself a sum of 300*l.*, and to pay the surplus to the person conveying the same, did not pass by the will. Re Gorfe's Trust, 19 L. J., N. S., Ch., 173; 14 Jur. 53.

7. Trust estates held on the context of a will not to pass by a general devise. Re Morley, 1 W. R. 90.

A devise to trustees of certain copyhold estate, and all other the real estate of the testatrix, and a declaration of the trusts of the moneys to arise from the sale of such copyhold estate, and a general devise of all other her real estate to three persons as tenants in common:—Held, not to pass the legal estate of the testatrix in certain copyholds, of which she was merely trustee. S. C. 10 Hare 293.

8. A testator being seized of trust estates, by his will, after reciting that he was or might at the time of his death be seized, or possessed, or entitled to real and personal estate, devised all and singular his said real and personal estate to H., her heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, for her and their sole and absolute use and benefit. H. was a feme sole:—Held, that the devise to H. included the trust estates, and that the words did not create a separate estate. Lewis v. Mathews, 2 L. R., Eq., 177; 12 Jur., N. S., 542; 35 L. J., Ch., 638; 14 W. R. 682.

9. A devise by a testator of all his real and personal estate to his nephews and nieces, who were a numerous and unascertained class:—Held, not to pass estates vested in the testator in trust or on mortgage, but that such estates descended to his heir-at-law. Re Finney, 3 Giff. 465; 6 L. T., N. S., 745; 8 Jur., N. S., 965.

10. A trustee devised "all his real estates, whatsoever and wheresoever," charged with a legacy:—Held, that the trust estates did not pass. Hope v. Liddell, 21 Beav. 183.

11. A husband gave various pecuniary legacies, and all the rest and residue of his estate, real and personal, he gave, devised, and bequeathed to his wife, her heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, absolutely:—Held, that the legacies were charged on the real estate, and therefore that the general devise did not pass property of which the testator was seized in fee as trustee. Re Bellis, 5 L. R., Ch. D., 604; 46 L. J., Ch., 353; 25 W. R. 456; 36 L. T., N. S., 644.

12. A husband, who was mortgagee in fee of an estate to secure a sum of money of which he was trustee, devised and bequeathed his residuary real and personal estate unto and to the use of his wife, her heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, in trust, either to leave the same in existing investments, or sell and convert the same, and out of the proceeds to pay his debts, funeral and testamentary expenses, and certain legacies, and invest the residue and retain the income thereof, for her life; and subject as aforesaid, such residue to remain in trust for C. There was no express devise of trust or mortgaged estates:—Held, that the legal estate in the mortgaged property did not pass under the will. Re Smith, 4 L. R., Ch. D., 70; 25 W. R. 294; 35 L. T., N. S., 890.

A husband, who was trustee for sale of real estate, after giving pecuniary legacies, gave all the rest and residue of his estate, real and personal, to his widow. There was no express devise of trust estates:—Held, that the legal estate in the trust property did not pass under the will. Id.

13. Trust estates held to pass under a general devise notwithstanding a charge of legacies; the devise passing all the real estate vested in the testator whether on trust or beneficially, and the charge affecting only such estate as belongs to him beneficially. Re Brown, 3 L. R., Ch. D., 156; 24 W. R. 782; 35 L. T., N. S., 305.

14. A testator devised all his real estates (except the hereditaments thereafter particularly devised), including all estates vested in him upon trust or by way of mortgage, to trustees upon certain trusts; in a subsequent part of his will, he devised his farm in A., in the possession of T. H., to T. R. He had two farms in A., called respectively S. and M., both of which were in the possession of T. H., but at different rents. On a question being raised which of the two farms the testator intended to give to T. R.:—Held, that the devise must be taken to have been made to T. R. for his personal advantage, and not upon trust; and if, therefore, it could be ascertained that one of the farms was subject to a trust, or that the testator supposed or treated it to be so, it must then be inferred that such farm was not the one intended to be devised, but that the other was the one referred to by the testator. In the present case, it was sufficiently established by the evidence, that during the lives of the testator and his father the proceeds of the farm S. had been regularly paid to a Roman Catholic priest, and that the testator had uniformly dealt with it in conformity with a real or supposed trust affecting it for this purpose:—Held, therefore, that he must be taken to have intended to comprise it in the general devise of trust estates, and that consequently the farm M. was the one devised to T. R. Blundell v. Gladstone, 3 Macn. & G. 692. Reversing 14 Sim. 83.

Constructive Trusts. Devise by Vendor.]

1. An estate which the testator had contracted to sell, held to pass by a devise of all his real and personal estate to trustees, in trust to sell. Wall v. Bright, 1 Jac. & Walk. 494.

2. Testator agreed to sell land to B., but died before the purchase was completed. By his will he had given the residue of his real and personal estate (which included the land agreed to be sold) to his children, equally to be divided between them as tenants in common, with a proviso that if any of them died under twenty-one without leaving issue, then, as well as to the respective estate and interest and share to which any such child so dying would otherwise have been entitled under any of the devises, bequests or dispositions therein contained, as to any accruing share, testator gave and devised the same unto the others of them; and if more than one, equally as tenants in common:—Held, that the legal estate in the property agreed to be sold, had not passed by the devise, but descended upon the heir-at-law of the testator. Thirtle v. Vaughan, 2 W. R. 632.

3. Where, after contracting to sell land, the vendor devises to parties, some of whom are infants at his decease, his estate must bear the costs of the suit which he has thus voluntarily rendered necessary to a completion of the contract, and a mere devise of trust estates does not in such a case avoid the necessity of a suit. Purser v. Darby, 4 Kay & J. 41.

Distinction in this respect between suits rendered necessary by the voluntary act of the deceased, and those caused by the mere act of God, as where the deceased has died intestate, leaving an infant heir. Id.

4. In 1874 the plaintiff entered into a contract for the purchase of real estate. After the title had been accepted, and before completion, the vendor died, having by his will (dated in 1873) given his personal estate to E., whom he appointed executor, and devised all his real estate to H. and M. upon trust for sale, and having also devised to H. alone all the real estate which at his death might be vested in him as trustee:—Held, that the real estate contracted to be purchased by the plaintiff passed to H. under the devise of trust estates. Lysaght v. Edwards, 2 L. R., Ch. D., 499; 45 L. J., Ch., 554; 24 W. R. 778; 34 L. T., N. S., 787.

5. Testator devised his estates to trustees in trust to sell, and declared their receipts to be sufficient discharges, and he directed his trustees to complete any contracts, for the sale of his estates, entered into during his lifetime, and remaining incomplete at his death:—Held, that his executor was the proper party to give receipts for the purchase moneys of the estates contracted to be sold by the testator. Eaton v. Sanater, 6 Sim. 517; 3 L. J., N. S., Ch., 197.

Devise of Mortgaged Estates.] See WILL.

II. BY ASSIGNMENT OR SPECIFIC DEVISE.

6. Trust of copyhold passes by unattested will. Tuffnell v. Page, Dick. 76; 2 Atk. 37; Barnard. 12. But see Wagstaff v. Wagstaff, 2 P. W. 261.

7. A devise by a sole surviving devisee in trust of all estates which at his decease might be vested in him as trustee, and which he could devise without breach of trust to A. W., her heirs and assigns, upon the trusts affecting the same respectively:—Held, to pass the trust estates to the devisee A. W. Beasley v. Wilkinson, 13 Jur. 649.

8. Where the surviving trustee of a will devised the trust estate upon the same trusts on which he held:—Held, that the cestuis que trustent were entitled to have new trustees appointed of the original will. Ockleston v. Heap, 1 De G. & Sm. 641.

9. Semble, where a trust estate is limited to trustees and the survivors and survivor, and the heirs of the survivor, the surviving trustee does not commit a breach of trust by not permitting the trust estate to descend, or by devising it to proper persons on the trusts to which it was subject. Titley v. Wolstenholme, 7 Beav. 426; 13 L. J., N. S., Ch., 410.

A testator devised real and personal estate upon trusts, which, as held, the testator intended to be performed by the trustees and the survivors, and the heirs and assigns or executors of the survivor. There was no power to appoint new trustees. The surviving trustee devised and bequeathed the trust estates to A., B., and C., upon the trusts of the first will:—Held, that this devise, and the appointment of A., B., and C. as trustees, were valid. Id.

10. The survivor of two executors and trustees bequeathed the trust property to A., upon the trusts declared by the original testator, expressing by the same instrument his wish that A. would execute the trusts with fidelity. No direction was given by the will of the original testator as to the appointment of new trustees. On a bill by the cestuis que trustent for that purpose:—Held, that A., though legally in the possession of the trust property, was not a trustee properly constituted, and that the cestuis que trustent were entitled to have new trustees appointed by the Court. Mortimer v. Ireland, 6 Hare 196; 16 L. J., N. S., Ch., 416; 11 Jur. 721.

11. Bequest to A. and B., their executors and administrators, upon trust. B., the surviving trustee, by his will bequeathed his trust estates to C. and D., their heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, on the trusts; and he appointed C., D., and E. executors of his will:—Held, that C. and D. took only the legal estate, and that neither C. and D. by themselves, nor C., D., and E. were capable of executing the trusts. Re Burt's Estate, 1 Drew 819.

1. Semble, that Cooke v. Cranford (13 Sim. 91) has been misunderstood; a trustee can, and it may often be his duty to devise a trust estate, to prevent the legal estate from vesting in a lunatic or a person out of the jurisdiction, or in any other person who ought not to be a trustee. Wilson v. Bennett, 5 De G. & Sm. 475; 16 Jur. 966; 21 L. J., Ch., 741.

2. Bill against a trustee who has assigned his trust; the assignee ought to be made a party as the decree should be first against him, and the trustee to stand as a security. Burt v. Dennet, 2 Bro. C. C. 225.

3. A., being impropiator of a parish, demised part of the tithes to certain parishioners as trustees for 1,900 years, who re-demised it to him for 999 years under the yearly rent of 50*l.*, payable to the trustees as a provision for a preacher, to be nominated by the trustees. The heir of A. afterwards sold the rectory to B., and the representative of the surviving trustee was prevailed upon to assign to B. the right of nominating a preacher. From the date of the original demise, and for forty years after the latter transaction, the preacher was constantly nominated by the parishioners; but upon a contest between them and B. it was held that the right of nomination was absolutely in the trustees, and that the assignment of that right was a breach of trust; and directions were given by the House of Lords for the re-establishment of the trust in trustees, to be impartially chosen. Foley v. Att.-Gen., 7 Bro. P. C. 249.

4. A., seized of the manor and patronage of W., by will gives 100*l.* per annum rent-charge, and the advowson to six trustees, and those trustees, when reduced, to choose others; B., the only surviving trustee, assigns his trust to others who nominate to the church, being a donative: decreed, the assignees of the trust, though the assignment was made by one only who survived, had the right to nominate to the church, and not the owner of the manor. Att.-Gen. v. Floyer, 2 Vern. 748.

III. ESTATE OF BARE TRUSTEE UNDER THE 37 & 38 VICT., C. 78, AND THE 38 & 39 VICT., C. 87.

5. When a surviving trustee of real estate had died intestate after the passing of the Vendor and Purchaser Act 1874, 37 & 38 Vict., c. 78, and prior to the commencement of the Land Transfer Act 1875, 38 & 39 Vict., c. 87, the legal estate vested in his heir-at-law notwithstanding the provision of the Vendor and Purchaser Act 1874, s. 5. Christie v. Ovington, 1 L. R., Ch. D., 279; 24 W. R. 204.

6. Semble, a person to whose fiduciary office no duties were originally attached, or who, although such duties were originally attached to his office, would, on the requisition of his cestui que trust, be compellable in equity to convey the estate to them, or by their direction, is a bare trustee within the meaning of s. 48 of the Land Transfer Act 1875. Id.

7. A trustee with a beneficial interest in the trust estate is not a "bare trustee" within the Land Transfer Act 1875, s. 48. Morgan v. Swansea Urban Sanitary Authority, 9 L. R., Ch. D., 582.

8. Thus a vendor of freeholds who let the purchaser into possession before payment of the purchase money and execution of the conveyance, was, by reason of his having a lien on the property for his purchase money and not being bound to convey until payment, held, not to be a "bare trustee" within the Act, so that, upon his death, the money still remaining unpaid and the conveyance unexecuted the legal estate passed to his heir-at-law. Id.

IV. OTHER CASES.

9. Where trustees of a charity devise die in the life of the testator, the conduct shall go to his heir-at-law. Att.-Gen. v. Downing, Amb. 571.

10. Where by neglect the number of trustees in a trust to present to a living was not filled up at the time of an avoidance, the Court would not by injunction prevent the effect of a presentation under the legal title of the heir of the surviving trustee, without a special ground; but the Court will take care, as to the future, that the trust shall be properly filled up. Att.-Gen. v. Litchfield (Bishop), 5 Ves. 825.

XIII. Appointment of Trustees by Settlor.

11. Corporation may be trustees. Att.-Gen. v. Laidorfield, 9 Mod. 287.

12. Presumption against intending an infant to be a trustee. King v. Denison, 1 Ves. & B. 278.

13. Testator, devising an estate to persons whom he names trustees for such purposes as they or the major part of them shall think fit, gives no benefit to them; but is an authority only by appointing a quorum out of them. Cook v. Duckenfield, 2 Atk. 568.

14. Where a testator constitutes a person "trustee and executor of his will," that does not authorise the person to act as a trustee jointly with other persons to whom property has been given by the will on particular trusts. Siddebotham v. Watson, 1 W. R. 229, 303.

Testator gave his property to C. and D. upon various trusts, and among others upon trust for sale, and empowered C. and D., and the survivor of them, his heirs, executors, etc., to give receipts for the purchase money, and concluded by appointing his wife and C. and D. "trustees and executors" of his will:—Held, that this appointment conferred on his wife only the general powers and duties of an executrix, and did not make her a trustee with C. and D. under the specific trusts of the will. S. C. 11 Hare 170.

15. A testatrix bequeathed funds standing in the name of A. her trustee to B., C., and D. (her executors), upon certain trusts, and she directed A., within six months after her death, to execute a deed, declaring that he, his executors, etc., would "thenceforth stand and be possessed" of the funds upon the trusts declared by her will:—Held, that A. was a co-trustee of the funds under the will, and could not safely transfer them to B., C., and D. without the sanction of the Court. Iredell v. Iredell, 18 Beav. 202.

Revocation of Appointment See WILL.

XIV. Acceptance or Disclaimer by Trustees.

- I. Acceptance, 6959.
- II. Disclaimer, 6960.

I. ACCEPTANCE.

1. What amounts to, 6959.
2. Effect of, 6959.

1. What amounts to.

1. Where personal property is bequeathed to the executors, as trustees, the probate of the will is an acceptance of the trusts. Mucklow v. Fuller, Jac. 198.

2. A person to whom, with others, a term of years had, in the year 1810, been bequeathed in trust, and who was appointed, with the other trustee, an executor of the will, was in 1844 presumed to have accepted the trust, though he had never acted in it, the will having been proved by the other trustees, saving his right, and he never having disclaimed. Re Needham, 1 J. & L. 34; 6 Ir. Eq. R. 557.

3. A testator gave a legacy of 1,100*l.* to two persons, upon certain trusts, for the benefit of his daughter and her children; he then gave a message to the same persons, upon trust for his widow for her life, and after her decease to apply the rents for his grandson H. during his minority, and to convey the message to H. at twenty-one; and he appointed his widow sole executrix. At the time of the widow's death, H. had attained twenty-one; and afterwards, by deed reciting the death of the widow, and that, in her lifetime, H. attained twenty-one, "whereby it became unnecessary for them to act in the trusts declared by the will, and in fact they never intermeddled therein; but, inasmuch as the legal estate in the said message was still outstanding in them by virtue of the recited will, they had consented, at the request of H., to convey such estate to him," the two persons named in the deed conveyed the devised message to H.:—Held, that the execution of this deed was of itself sufficient evidence that the persons who executed it had accepted and acted in the trusts of the will. Urch v. Walker, 3 Myl. & C. 702; 7 L. J., N.S., Ch., 292; 2 Jur. 487.

4. A trustee who has duly executed a trust deed must, in the absence of special circumstances, be bound by that indication of his acceptance of the trust, and will not afterwards be heard to say that he thought he was merely signing as a witness. Jones v. Higgins, 2 L. R., Eq., 538; 35 L. J., Ch., 403; 14 W. R. 448; 14 L. T., N. S., 126.

2. Effect of.

5. A trustee, with notice of his appointment as such, interfering with the subject-matter, cannot repudiate the trust, and say he acted merely as factor or agent. Conyngham v. Conyngham, 1 Ves. 522.

6. A person who has accepted property as a trustee, and held it as such, is not at liberty to dispute the title to his cestui que trust, though that title may be doubtful. Neligan v. Roohe, 7 Ir. R. Eq., 332.

7. Where a trustee accepts the trust of a fund with the knowledge that it is doubtful whether it ought to be held upon such trust, he is nevertheless entitled to come to the Court, for its direction, whether the trusts ought to be executed:—Held, by Lord Justice Turner; Lord Justice Knight Bruce entirely dissenting. Neale v. Davies, 23 L. J., Ch., 744.

By deed certain trust funds were settled upon certain trusts, and the defendants were appointed trustees of the deed by an indenture executed by them, and containing a declaration that they should stand possessed of the trust funds on the trusts declared by that indenture. It was doubtful whether these trust funds were not withdrawn improperly from trust funds the trusts whereof had been declared by a separate indenture. In a suit instituted by some of the cestuis que trustent of the first indenture for transfer of their share of the settled funds:—Held, that no such transfer could be ordered except in a suit so constituted as to parties that the question of the validity of the settlement could be decided. S. C. 2 W. R. 358; 2 Eq. Rep. 530.

8. In 1823 E., by his consent, was with X. and Z. named a trustee of a marriage settlement, which comprised various sums. The deed was executed by the co-trustees of, but not by, E. X. died in 1826 insolvent. In 1829 an account was rendered which showed the sums subject to the trusts of the settlement, and that Z. had received a sum belonging to the trusts. Z. afterwards, as administrator of his father, became possessed of a large sum of residue, not administered by the executrix, and trust funds, part of this residue, he applied to his own use; but in 1830 he, by request, invested a portion of the residue in the names of himself and E., upon the trusts of the settlement, of such trustees thereof, and indorsed a memorandum thereon to the effect that it was so much of the within-mentioned and assigned sums as were subject to the trusts thereof. The memorandum Z. signed previously to 1842. In 1845 E. made inquiries of one of the cestuis que trustent relating to the trusts vested in him, and required to be satisfied as to the property comprised in the settlement. He was then informed that he was a trustee thereof, and a receipt of the stock bought in his and Z.'s names was inclosed. This receipt E. retained; and in March 1847 he for the first time saw the settlement, and on that occasion he signed the memorandum indorsed thereon. Z. died in 1852 insolvent. E. received the dividends on the stock, and regularly paid them over to the tenant for life. In 1854 inquiries were made which resulted in a bill being filed, praying that an account might be taken of all sums which had been received by E., either alone or jointly with his co-trustees, or which, without his wilful neglect and default, might have been received; and that E. might be decreed to make good all losses which had been sustained, particularly so much of the property as was subject to the trusts of the settlement:—Held, that E.'s liability must be confined to the amount comprised in the memorandum signed by him; and that, so far as the bill sought to make him liable for more than that amount, it must be dismissed. Malzy v. Edge, 2 Jur., N. S., 80; 4 W. R. 213.

II. DISCLAIMER.

- Under Trustee Act. See TRUSTEE ACTS, III. 1. 3 and IV. III. 2.
- Exercise of Powers of Sale where Trustee Disclaims. See POWER, XXI. III. 5.
- Costs of. See XXXI. IX., and XXI., 1 (b) post.

1. As to disclaimer of office of trustee by simple instrument, and disclaimer by conveying to other trustees. Nicolson v. Wordsworth, 2 Swan. 369.

2. Trustee named may disclaim by parol, and then he need not be a party in any conveyance of the legal estate. Bingham v. Glamorris (Lord), 2 Moll. 253.

3. A trustee named without his sanction, being called on to disclaim:—Held, authorised to take the opinion of counsel as to the necessity of executing a disclaimer. Re Tryon, 7 Beav. 496.

4. If one of two persons named trustees and executors disclaims and renounces, and afterwards possesses himself of assets as the agent of the other, who has accepted the trust and proved the will, he does not thereby become accountable as a trustee and executor, and ought not to be made a party to a suit for the administration of the estate. Dove v. Everard, 1 Russ. & M. 231; Taml. 376.

5. A trustee in a will, who released and never acted, ought not to be made a party in a suit to set aside the will on the ground of fraud, and therefore need not answer as to the fraud alleged. Richardson v. Hulbert, 1 Anstr. 65.

6. Testatrix bequeathed a chattel property to her daughter on attaining twenty-one, or on day of marriage, "provided that if such marriage be had without the consent of her executors after named, or the survivor of them," then that the property should be vested in the said executors, in trust for her daughter for life, and afterwards for her children, with a limitation over to C. D. The testatrix appointed H. H., P. V., and J. C. her executors. P. V. alone proved the will. The daughter married while under age, with the assent of P. V., and J. C. executed her marriage settlement as a trustee:—Held, that the assent of H. H., who never acted in the trusts of the will, was unnecessary, the power to consent being vested in him in right of his office of executor only. Boyce v. Corbally, L.L. & G. temp. Plunk. 102.

7. Land was demised by A. to B. and C. for twenty-one years, with an agreement, that in case B. and C., or either of them, their executors, administrators, and assigns, should, at any time within the term, wish to purchase the reversion at a stipulated price and should give to A., his heirs or assigns, six months' notice in writing, they should be entitled to be the purchasers of the premises at the price mentioned. A. died within the term, and devised his real estates to trustees. The trustees disclaimed the trusts; and the estates descended upon D., an infant heir-at-law of A. Notice was served upon D. and his guardian by the lessees of their desire to purchase the property pursuant to the option reserved in the lease:—Held, that as A.'s assigns had disclaimed, the notice to purchase was properly served upon the heir, and that a valid contract was thereby constituted. Woods v. Hyde, 31 L. J., Ch., 295; 10 W. R. 339.

8. If a party having a derivative interest under a trustee refuses to execute a formal disclaimer to the trust property upon the appointment of a new trustee, he will be made to pay the costs of an application to the Court. Exp. Primrose, 3 Jur., N. S., 899; 26 L. J., Ch., 666.

XV. Retirement or Removal of Trustees.

- I. Retiring Trustees, 6960.
- II. Liability of Deceased Trustees, 6963.
- III. Removal, 6964.

I. RETIRING TRUSTEES.

- 1. In General, 6960.
- 2. Liabilities of, 6962.

1. In General.

9. Bill by trustee to be removed filed against cestui que trust. In England a trustee after he has acted is never removed at his own desire. It is done in Ireland, but trustee must do it at his own expense. He must pay the costs of the suit. Hamilton v. Fry, 2 Moll. 458.

10. Can a trustee who has accepted the trust, and committed no breach by filing a bill, get discharged if no other fit person can be found to act, and cestui que trust will not consent to his discharge, quere. Ardill v. Savage, 1 Ir. Eq. R. 79.

11. A trustee who is entitled to be discharged from his trust is bound to show that there is some other person ready to accept the trust. If no person will accept the trust, the Court may be obliged to keep the trustee before it, and not discharge him; but it will take care that the trustee shall not suffer thereby. Courtenay v. Courtenay, 3 J. & L. 519; 9 Ir. Eq. R. 329.

12. Money in the funds belonging to wards of the Court cannot be transferred into the name of the accountant-general, to the credit of the cause, until the account is taken by a master, and his report made. This does not mean that such a transfer cannot be made, but that it could not operate as an acquittance and discharge of the trustees until they had passed their accounts. Benocrat v. Rich, 1 Bro. C. C. 56, and note there.

1. Trustees are not entitled as against the trust estate capriciously to refuse to continue; but if they find the trust estate involved in complicated questions, not in contemplation when they undertook the trust, they have a right to come to the Court to be relieved from it. Greenwood v. Wakeford, 1 Beav. 576; 8 L. J., N. S., Ch., 333.

2. Trustee cannot, by any act of his own, denude himself of that character till he has performed his trust. Chalmers v. Bradley, 1 Jac. & Walk. 68.

3. A trustee cannot, from mere caprice, retire from the performance of his trust without paying the costs occasioned. But circumstances arising in the administration of a trust which have altered the nature of his duties, justify him in leaving it, and entitle him to his costs. Forshaw v. Higginson, 20 Beav. 485.

The want of confidence in a co-trustee is a ground for asking to be relieved from the administration of trusts. Ib.

A trustee was desirous of retiring, and was justified in so doing, though from private circumstances; his cestuis que trustent having prevented him retiring, he instituted a suit to administer the trusts. He was allowed his costs. Ib.

The costs of evidence arising out of personal transactions between trustees will not be allowed to them, or charged on the trust fund. Ib.

The personal costs of the cestuis que trustent in respect of this evidence must be borne by themselves; but in a case where no one objected, they were allowed out of the trust fund. Ib.

A trustee desirous of retiring, by reason of his want of confidence in his co-trustee, cannot safely effect his object by getting such co-trustee to appoint a new trustee in his place, under a power vested in him for that purpose. Ib.

4. A trustee cannot withdraw from his trust unless under a provision to that effect. Manson v. Bailie, 2 Macq. H. L. Ca. 80.

5. A trustee thirty years after his appointment, when one of his colleagues, the acting trustee, had died, was, upon a bill filed by him:—Held, entitled to be relieved from the trusts of the settlement. Gardiner v. Downes, 2 Jur., N. S., 847; 25 L. J., Ch., 881; 22 Beav. 395; 4 W. R. 621.

Held, also, that he was, as trustee, entitled to the costs of the suit, as between solicitor and client, and also to his costs, charges, and expenses. Ib.

6. The trustees of a marriage settlement being desirous of retiring from the trusts in consequence of the responsibility to which they were exposed by the acts of the tenant for life, in repeatedly charging the trust estates and funds with annuities and other incumbrances, filed a bill to be discharged from the trusts, and for the appointment of new trustees under direction of the Court. The Court granted the relief sought by the bill, and ordered the costs to be paid out of the interest of the tenant for life. Coventry v. Coventry, 1 Keen 758; 6 L. J., N. S., Ch., 275.

7. A trustee of a marriage settlement (which contained the usual power for the appointment of new trustees in place of any desiring to be discharged, etc.) applied, on account of his failing health, to the donee of the power to appoint a new trustee in his place. He neglected to do so for sixteen months, alleging that no person willing to act could be found. No embarrassment had arisen in the execution of the trusts:—Held, that he was entitled to be discharged, but that failing health alone, where the trusts were of a formal character, was not a sufficient reason for his seeking to resign so as to entitle him to costs:—Held, also, that he must pay the costs of being released from his trusteeship and of the petition. Richardson v. Grubb, 16 W. R. 176.

8. By deed, a mortgage debt, being money invested by the settlor upon the security of the estate of his nephew, was assigned to the plaintiff and two other persons, who were a brother and a brother-in-law of the mortgagor, upon trust for the settlor for life, and then for the children of the mortgagor. The settlement contained a power of appointing new trustees in the place of any desiring to be discharged. The plaintiff claimed to be discharged by the Court, and that a new trustee should be appointed in his place. His co-trustees had refused to exercise the power, and now appeared by counsel, and refused to act with any other trustee in the plaintiff's stead, and if he retired, desired to retire also:—Held, that the plaintiff and his co-trustees were entitled to be discharged, but as the plaintiff had shown no reason, in the circumstances of the trust, for his resignation, no costs of his application were given to him. Costs of the other trustees out of the estate. Porter v. Watts, 16 Jur. 757; 21 L. J., Ch., 211.

9. When a trustee retires, and new trustees are appointed by the Court, the retiring trustee is entitled to have the accounts taken. Nott v. Foster, 15 Jur. 3.

10. A retiring trustee is not entitled to an attested copy of the settlement under which he was a trustee, or to a duplicate of the deed of appointment of new trustees (except at his own expense). The defendant in this case was the executor of the surviving trustee of a settlement of 1821. The plaintiffs were by a deed of 1851 duly appointed new trustees. The defendant refused to transfer the settled funds to the new trustees, unless an attested copy of the original settlement and a duplicate of the deed of 1851 were given him at the expense of the estate, though he had had a copy of the latter deed, which he had compared with the original:—Held, that he was not entitled to make the demand, and he was refused his costs. Warter v. Anderson, 1 W. R. 493; 1 Eq. Rep. 266; 11 Hare 301.

Quere, whether if the trustee offered to pay for the duplicate copy, and the means of furnishing it existed, but the request was refused, the Court would not say the request was reasonable. Ib.

11. Where executors and trustees have made an assignment on the appointment of a new trustee, they lose their character of executors, and become trustees only. Smith v. Smith, 1 Dr. & Sm. 384; 7 Jur., N. S., 652; 9 W. R. 406; 4 L. T., N. S., 44.

2. Liabilities of.

1. The existence of a suit in which an appointment of trust funds made in execution of a power is before the Court, and directions consequential thereto are obtained, and the trustees retire and are succeeded by others, but in which material facts connected with such appointment of the trust funds are not brought to the knowledge of the Court, does not protect the retiring trustees from the liabilities which result from such facts if they involve a breach of trust, but, on the contrary, renders such breach of trust less excusable. Harrison v. Randall, 9 Hare 397; 21 L. J., N. S., Ch., 294; 16 Jur. 72.

2. Where a settlement requires that a retiring trustee should assign the trust property to the continuing trustee, and that a new trustee should be chosen in the place of the retiring trustee, and there is no power to appoint a sole trustee, then, if a retiring trustee assign the trust property to a continuing trustee, and he, in abuse of his trust, dispose of it, the retiring trustee is answerable. Wilkinson v. Parry, 4 Russ. 272.

3. A trustee must effectually divest himself of his trusteeship, or he will retain his liability. Pearce v. Pearce, 22 Beav. 248; 2 Jur., N. S., 843; 26 L. J., Ch., 893.

A retiring trustee executed a power of attorney for transfer of trust stock to a proposed new trustee before the appointment of the new trustee had been completed. The trust stock was misapplied by the new trustee and lost:—Held, that the retiring trustee was liable for a breach of trust. Id.

A. and B. were trustees. A deed was prepared appointing C. a new trustee in the place of B. It was executed by C., but not by the other parties, so that the appointment was invalid. At the same time the trust fund was transferred by A. and B. to A. and C. Afterwards A. and C. authorised the husband of the tenant for life to receive the fund, and it was lost:—Held, that both C. (who had not been appointed a trustee, though she had acted as such) and B. were liable for the loss. Id.

4. The Court will only allow trustees to release themselves from responsibility by transferring trust funds into the hands of new trustees if they have reasonable grounds for believing that the funds will be secure in the hands of those to whom they commit them; and in the event of a breach of trust being committed by such new trustees, the Court will protect the retiring trustees from liability, unless clearly shown by incontrovertible evidence to have been guilty of negligence, misconduct, or fraud in relation to the transfer to the new trustees. Webster v. Le Hunt, Le Hunt v. Webster, 9 W. R. 918; 4 L. T., N. S., 723; 8 Jur., N. S., 345.

Trustees of a settlement commit a breach of trust by advancing part of the trust fund to the tenant for life upon various securities, some of which are realised. The tenant for life urges the appointment of new trustees, on the ground that he has been treated unjustly by retention of income to recoup the trust fund and the realisation of the securities; and the trustees express their willingness to resign if others can be found who would put him to less inconvenience. Certain persons being proposed, the old trustees insist upon knowing who they are, and make objections, but eventually transfer the residue of the trust fund and the other securities to the new trustees, one of whom advances sufficient to reinstate the trust fund; but not only that sum, but the whole of the trust fund, is sold out within a few days, and appropriated by the tenant for life. Upon a bill filed by the children of the marriage against the tenant for life and the new and old trustees, it is deposed that the old trustees had been solemnly cautioned that the tenant for life had concocted a scheme with the intended new trustees, and the tenant for life swears that he communicated as much to them. By their answer the old trustees deny the caution, but do not contradict the affidavit of the tenant for life, although at the bar they state that they would have done so, but were ignorant of its existence. Subsequently to this bill, the plaintiffs purchase the real estate settled and the life interest of the tenant for life; and a cross-bill is filed by the old trustees, on the ground that this was a condonation. The tenant for life dies, and a policy on his life, part of the security taken by the old trustees, is paid into court by the office, and a third suit is instituted to recover that sum, the old trustees disclaiming. Kindersley, V.-Ch., made a decree (8 W. R. 534) holding the retiring trustees responsible for the loss of the fund. On appeal, however:—Held, that there was no evidence to corroborate the testimony of the tenant for life, and as he was a party to the fraud, no reliance ought to be placed on his unsupported statement. Id.

5. By a marriage settlement the husband assigned a policy of assurance on his life to the two trustees of the settlement, and covenanted to pay the premiums. One trustee disclaimed, and the other, by assigning the policy to a single new trustee, enabled the husband to mortgage and dispose of the policy and a bonus thereon:—Held, that such breach of trust being an act of commission and not of omission only, the trustee so assigning to the new trustee was liable to pay to the trust estate the money actually received for the policy. Kingdon v. Castleman, 46 L. J., Ch., 448; 36 L. T., N. S., 141; 25 W. R. 345.

6. H. W., as trustee of a marriage settlement, held a bond to secure 1,200*l.* W., his brother, who was a specialty creditor of the obligor, obtained possession of the obligor's assets, and applied them in payment of his own debt and of simple contract debts before administration, which was afterwards granted to the obligor's widow, the sister of W., who was entirely guided by his advice and under his control. Subsequently W. represented to H. W. that only the sum of 600*l.* was forthcoming on foot of the bond. H. W., acting on this statement, retired from the trust, and a memorandum was endorsed on the trust deed, signed by the administratrix and the tenant for life of the trust fund, stating that the sum of 600*l.* only was available to pay the bond, and W. was appointed trustee of the marriage settlement in place of H. W. The assets of the obligor would have been, if properly administered, sufficient to pay the bond in full:—Held, that W. and H. W. were both liable to the full amount of the bond, but that W.'s assets (he having died) were primarily answerable, as he had received the trust fund. Fetherstone v. West, 6 Ir. Eq. R. 86.

Held, also, that in such a state of facts it was not necessary to take an account of the assets of the obligor. Id.

1. D. gave his estates real and personal to A., B., and C., upon trust to hold the proceeds after conversion as to one-fourth part of the net residue for his daughter Ann, afterwards the wife of B., for her separate, inalienable use during her life, remainder for her children as she should appoint, and failing appointment among the children equally, and as to another one-fourth part of the residue for the testator's daughter Susan, afterwards the wife of A., for her separate use during her life, remainder for her children as she should appoint, and failing appointment among such last-mentioned children equally. B. and C. having died, A. became sole trustee of the residuary trust funds of the will, and being importuned and frightened by B., in affected exercise of a power of appointing new trustees contained in the testator's will, constituted B. sole trustee of his wife Ann's share, for his wife Ann and her children, and remained sole trustee of his own wife Susan's share for the like trusts for Susan and her children. The transfer of Ann's share into her husband's name was effected on the 31st March 1857, and the fund representing that share being a sum of 2,000*l.* stock and odds, was, only one day afterwards, sold by B., and the proceeds employed by him in his business and lost. D. had acted from 1851 for A. in his private affairs, and strongly dissuaded A. from seeking to effect the appointment of Ann's husband as her trustee, but ultimately deferred to the determined commands of his client, and prepared a draft deed of appointment, and one of indemnity, and was even present at the transfer of the funds from A. to B., the husband of Ann. P. had approved the deed of appointment on behalf of B. and wife, but was not otherwise acquainted with the trust. On a bill filed by Ann's children against A., D., and P.:—Held, that P. was not liable, that D. was not liable, but that A. was liable to replace the principal. Barnes v. Addy, 21 W. R. 324; 28 L. T., N. S., 398. Affirmed 9 L. R., Ch., 244; 43 L. J., Ch., 513; 22 W. R. 505; 30 L. T., N. S., 4.

The bill was framed in such manner as to obtain costs as incident only to the principal relief:—Held, that the principal relief having failed against D. and P., both were entitled to receive their costs of suit. Id.

Neither B. nor his assignees in bankruptcy, nor his wife Ann were parties to the suit; A. had died pending the suit, and his personal representative was made a party by order of revivor:—Held, that a decree might be made against A.'s estate, notwithstanding a decree for the replacement of the principal sum lost in case the representative of A. admitted assets, and one for a general administration of A.'s estate, in case his representative did not admit assets, with further consideration reserved. Id.

2. In order to fix a trustee with the consequences of a breach of trust on the ground that, though himself refusing to be a party to it, he has retired in order to enable it to be committed, the particular improper act which was in contemplation at the date of his retirement must be committed, and he will not be held liable for another analogous breach of trust which the parties in whose favour he retires may immediately on his retirement commit or sanction. Clark v. Hoskins, 19 L. T., N. S., 331; 16 W. R. 1159; 37 L. J., Ch., 561. Varying 15 W. R. 1161; 36 L. J., Ch., 689; 16 L. T., N. S., 730.

Therefore, where trustees of a settlement which contained a power to raise money on the security of the settled estates for repairs refused a request of the tenant for life to exercise the power on the ground that the money was wanted, not for the repairs, but for the general purposes of the tenant for life, but retired in favour of more accommodating trustees, who did not raise any money under the settlement, but delivered the title-deeds to the tenant for life in order that she might deal with the estate as her own, and suppress the settlement, and she borrowed money accordingly of the plaintiff:—Held, that the retiring trustees were not liable to make good the advances of the plaintiff, and a bill to make them liable was, as against them, dismissed with costs. But a decree was made against the tenant for life and the new trustees, and also against the solicitor of the tenant for life, who had advised and participated in what had been done, though avowedly aware throughout of the fraudulent nature of the transaction. Id.

II. LIABILITY OF DECEASED TRUSTEES.

3. Breach of trust can fall only on the personal estate of a trustee. Vernon v. Vandy, 2 Atk. 119.

4. The executors of a deceased trustee, having admitted the receipt of assets, which would have been sufficient to satisfy a particular breach of trust committed by their testator, besides his other debts, held chargeable with the loss occasioned by such breach of trust, although they had paid all his debts of which they had any knowledge out of the assets, and had distributed the whole surplus among his residuary legatees many years before, and at a time when they had no notice of the breach of trust, or of any claim in respect of it. Knatchbull v. Fearnhead, 3 Myl. & C. 122; 1 Jur. 687. See 6 L. J., N. S., Ch., 13. n.

5. Defendants, executors to their father, who was guardian in socage to plaintiff, ordered to answer for profits taken by him. Burgh v. Wentworth, 1 Vern. 54.

6. Two trustees allowed funds which ought to have been invested on real or Government security to remain for several years in a bank to their joint account. After the death of one of the trustees the survivor appropriated the balance of the fund, and afterwards became insolvent:—Held, that the estate of the deceased trustee was liable to make good the amount. Gibbins v. Taylor, 4 W. R. 432.

1. Where one of several trustees has died, the cestui que trust may generally sue the surviving trustees for an account without making the representatives of the deceased trustee a party, it being the duty of the surviving trustees to place the fund in a proper position, and recover from the estate of the deceased any portion of the trust money that may have remained in his hands, semble. Beattie v. Johnstone, 8 Hare 169.

2. Where one of several trustees dies pending a suit which does not seek to charge them personally in that character, his representatives are not necessary parties; for the trusteeship survives. London Gas Light Co. v. Spottiswoode, 14 Beav. 264.

3. A testator devised his residuary real and personal estate to A. and B., on trusts in which B. was beneficially interested. B. received part of the assets, and died:—Held, that a bill could not be maintained by the surviving trustee against the representatives of B. alone to recover the trust fund received by him, but that the bill ought to seek the general administration of the testator's estate. Chancellor v. Morecraft, 11 Beav. 262; 17 L. J., N. S., Ch., 11.

4. One trustee of a deed of settlement was dead, and a bill for an account was filed against the surviving trustees, but no allegation was made against the deceased trustee, whose legal personal representatives were never parties to the suit, and no account was prayed with regard to him. The surviving trustees, however, alleged in their answer, that he had taken an active part with them in the execution of the trusts:—Held, that the decree must go against the estate of the deceased trustee. Elwes v. Barnard, 11 Jur., N. S., 1035; 13 L. T., N. S., 426.

5. Where one of two trustees commits a breach of trust, the representatives of such trustee are liable. Jenkins v. Robertson, 1 Eq. Rep. 123; 1 W. R. 298.

6. Trustees of stock sold it, and lent the money to the tenant for life on improper security. One of them died, and the survivor received the money lent, and invested it in a different security, and shortly afterwards sold it out and again lent it to the tenant for life. The fund was lost:—Held, that the original breach of trust was not cured, and the estate of the deceased trustee was liable for the whole fund. Lander v. Weston, 3 Drew. 389; 2 Jur., N. S., 58; 25 L. J., Ch., 235.

7. D. appointed her bankers, A., B., and C., who were partners, to be her executors. They then owed her 20,400*l.*, without any agreement as to any particular rate of interest. Six weeks afterwards A. died, before probate of D.'s will or collecting any of her assets. He appointed B. and C. his executors. B. and C. continued in trade, and ultimately died, without having ever paid the 20,400*l.*:—Held, that the estate of A. was only chargeable, in aid of the estates of B. and C., with simple interest at 4*l.* per cent. on the principal sum unpaid. Penny v. Avison, 3 Jur., N. S., 62.

8. One of two trustees of a deed of settlement had, with the advice of the other, who was a solicitor, and who had acted as the legal adviser of the trustees, concurred in the investment of trust funds on unauthorised securities. The solicitor died, and a suit was instituted against the surviving trustee and the representative of the deceased trustee to have the loss made good occasioned by the breach of trust. Another suit was instituted for the administration of the estate of the deceased trustee. In the latter suit proof was made in respect of the loss as a speciality debt, and the amount of the assets payable in respect of the proof was ordered to be transferred to the credit of the other suit. In that suit the unauthorised securities were realised, and were not sufficient to make good the breach of trust; and after it had been made good out of the proceeds, and out of the money transferred from the administration suit, there remained a surplus:—Held, first, that the surviving trustee was not, independently of the 19 & 20 Vict., c. 97, s. 5, a speciality creditor of the deceased trustee in respect of costs which he had paid under the decree in the settlement suit. Lockhart v. Reilly, 1 De G. & J. 464; 27 L. J., Ch., 54.

Held, secondly, that that Act is applicable to contracts made before it passed, and applied to the amount which the surviving trustee had paid since the passing of the Act. Id.

Held, thirdly, that the surviving trustee was not entitled to have the fund transferred from the administration suit applied in the first instance to make good the breach of trust, and to have the proceeds of the unauthorised securities treated as part of the trust fund out of which his costs were primarily to be paid, but that those proceeds were to be first applied, and the deficiency made up out of the fund transferred from the administration suit, leaving the balance of that fund to be transferred back to the credit of the administration suit, and applied ratably towards payment of the costs of the surviving trustee and the general simple contract debts of the deceased trustee. Id.

9. The representative of a deceased trustee, who is called upon to transfer the trust property to new trustees, is not entitled to be furnished at the expense of the fund with a duplicate of the instrument appointing such new trustees, nor is he entitled at the expense of the fund to an attested copy of the deed creating the trust. Warter v. Anderson, 11 Hare 301; 1 W. R. 493; 1 Eq. Rep. 266.

10. Where a breach of trust is committed by a trustee holding property upon an express trust, his assets in the hands of his personal representatives continue liable to the cestui que trust even after a lapse of six years from his death. Obee v. Bishop, 6 Jur., N. S., 132; 29 L. J., Ch., 148.

1. Under Trustee Acts.

1. Where A. was nominated trustee and executor of a will, upon a petition presented for his removal under 1 Will. 4, c. 60, s. 22, stating that the will had been produced and shown to A., and read by him previously to its having been executed by the testator in his lifetime; and that A. had thereupon approved thereof and consented to act as such trustee, but that, subsequently to the testator's death, he had declined to interfere in the trusts of the will, the Court made an order for his removal, and referred it to the remembrancer to approve of a proper person to be appointed trustee in his place. Crook v. Ingoldsby, 2 Ir. Eq. R. 375.

2. The Court has not power, under the 13 & 14 Vict., c. 60, s. 32, to remove a trustee. Re Garty, 10 L. T., N. S., 331; 3 N. R. 636.

3. The 13 & 14 Vict., c. 60, does not, by s. 32, give power to the Court of Chancery to remove a trustee who is unwilling to retire; but such a trustee is entitled to have his accounts taken in the presence of all parties interested, so that they may be bound, and to have any balance due to him ascertained and paid in the same manner as before the Act. Re Blanchard, 7 Jur., N. S., 505; 30 L. J., Ch., 516; 9 W. R. 647; 4 L. T., N. S., 426.

4. The Court will not under the Trustee Act order the removal of a trustee merely on the ground of his having gone out of the jurisdiction. Re Mais, 16 Jur. 608; 21 L. J., Ch., 875.

2. Of Solicitor Trustee. Summary Jurisdiction.

5. A trustee who is a solicitor cannot be removed under the jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery over solicitors, that jurisdiction being exercised only in respect of acts done by a solicitor in that character, or in some relation immediately arising out of it. Re Blanchard and Re Le Doucet, 30 L. 8. If trustee of lunatic renews lease for his own benefit, it is breach of trust, and he will be discharged. Exp. Phelps, 9 Mod. 357.

9. The Court will not, upon petition, remove a trustee who has accepted the trust, but refuses to continue to act. A bill must be filed for the purpose, the costs of which will be cast on the trustee if it appear that he has improperly refused to act. Anon., 4 Ir. Eq. R. 700.

10. Charges of vexatious conduct, as a ground for the removal of a trustee, must be made by bill, and not by petition. Re Bridgman, 1 Dr. & Sm. 164.

11. The mere fact of there being a dissension between one of several cestuis que trustent and the trustee is not a sufficient ground for removing the trustee from the trust. Forster v. Davies, 8 Jur., N. S., 65; 31 L. J., Ch., 276; 10 W. R. 180; 5 L. T., N. S., 532; 4 De G. F. & J. 133.

12. Decree discharging from a trust to a woman who had married a foreigner, though the answer denied any intention of quitting the kingdom, and stating her desire of continuing the trust. Lake v. De Lambert, 5 Ves. 592.

13. The defendant was one of two trustees for sale of an estate, the produce of which was divisible amongst persons sui juris. He refused to concur in a sale agreed upon by his cestuis que trustent until he had been furnished with deeds, etc., relating to another and an independent trust, and to which the Court held he was not entitled. He also refused to retire from the trusts to facilitate the sale. Upon a bill by the other trustees and the persons beneficially interested, he was removed from the trusts and ordered to pay the costs of the suit. Palairer v. Carem, 32 Beav. 564; 9 Jur., N. 14. A testator appointed two trustees and executors of his will, but by a codicil he excluded them, and appointed two other persons. One of these retired in consideration of 75*l.* paid to him by one of the excluded trustees, and executed a deed appointing the excluded trustee in his room. The Court directed the new trustee to be removed and the deed to be cancelled, declared the conveyance to be void, and directed the 75*l.* to form part of the assets. *Sudgen v. 3. Although the proper course is to proceed under the Trustee Act for the appointment of new trustees, a bill may be resorted to for the same purpose. Legg v. Mackrell, 4 L. T. N. S., 568.

4. A suit for the removal of the trustee of a settlement and the appointment of new trustees, and for the payment of certain moneys comprised in the settlement, and which had been lent to the husband to such new trustees, out of a sum of money belonging to the husband, which had been paid into court under the Trustee Relief Act, and for general administration of the trusts of the settlement, may be sustained. Thorp v. Thorp, 1 Kay & J. 438.

5. How parties beneficially interested, where one executor and trustee has disclaimed, and the other is dead, are to obtain an appointment of new trustees for the purpose of executing the trusts of will. Wood v. Stane, 8 Price 613.

6. When the interest of a money fund, vested in two trustees, was payable to H. and his wife for their lives, remainder, as to the principal sum, to F. and his wife, and the deed contained a power of appointing a new trustee in case of the death of one of the present trustees, and one of the trustees had died:—Held, that a bill to appoint a new trustee by F. and his wife was maintainable, although there was no proof that the other parties had refused to appoint under the power. Finlay v. Howard, 2 Dr. & War. 490.

7. The representatives of a surviving trustee who had concurred with his co-trustee in a breach of trust by lending to the tenant for life on his promissory note, were held entitled to file a bill against such tenant for life, and the other cestuis que trustent, for replacing the funds, and the appointment of new trustees, with costs against the tenant for life, or out of the fund. Greenwood v. Wakeford, 1 Beav. 576; 8 L. J., N. S., Ch., 333.

8. Where the surviving trustee of a will devised the trust estate upon the same trusts on which he held:—Held, that the cestuis que trustent were entitled to have new trustees appointed of the original will. Ockleston v. Heap, 1 De G. & Sm. 641.

9. The survivor of two executors and trustees bequeathed the trust property to A., upon the trusts declared by the original testator, expressing by the same instrument his wish that A. would execute the trusts with fidelity. No direction was given by the will of the original testator as to the appointment of new trustees. On a bill by the cestuis que trustent for that purpose:—Held, that A., though legally in the possession of the trust property, was not a trustee properly constituted, and that the cestuis que trustent were entitled to have new trustees appointed by the Court. Mortimer v. Ireland, 6 Hare 196; 16 L. J., N. S., Ch., 416; 11 Jur. 721.

10. A testator gave a legacy to a trustee in trust to invest it for the benefit of E. S., independent of the control of her husband. On a bill by the husband and wife against the trustee to have it declared that the wife was absolutely entitled to the fund, and to have the same transferred to her or to her husband by her direction or in her right, it was held, that the wife was entitled to the entire disposal of the fund, but that the husband could not obtain it in that suit; and it was referred to the Master to approve of a trustee, to whom the fund might be transferred, upon the trust declared in the will, and to approve of a deed declaring that trust. Simons v. Hornwood, 1 Keen 7.

11. A trustee, by his answer, declined to act, and on the hearing it was referred to the Master to appoint new trustees; the original trustee afterwards agreed to act: and, on application to the Court that the trustee might be at liberty to amend his answer in this respect, so as to enable the Court, on a re-hearing, to vary that part of the decree, the Court refused to do this, but thought the Master was at liberty, on statement of these circumstances, to decline the appointment of new trustees. Miles v. Neale, 1 Cox, 159.

12. On a bill filed by one director of a company on behalf of the company, praying a transfer of the fund to new trustees, the Court will, without having the new trustees before the Court, direct the transfer. Wilson v. Parker, 10 Jur. 979.

1. Semble, it has never been the practice of the Court on appointing new trustees of funds to inquire whether the old trustees have received notices of incumbrances. Phipps v. Lovegrove, Prosser v. Phipps, 16 L. R., Eq., 80; 42 L. J., Ch., 892; 21 W. R., 590; 28 L. T., N. S., 584.

2. Who Appointed.

2. A trust deed between father and son contained a power for the appointment of new trustees; this power was given, in the first instance, to the father and son during their joint lives, and after the death of either of them to the survivor. A suit was instituted after the death of the son by the father against the representative of the trustee for a conveyance of the legal estate in the trust premises to new trustees nominated by the father. A reference having been made to the Master to appoint a proper person to be trustee, he instituted an inquiry as to the relative fitness of the persons proposed by the father and the party representing the interest of the son, and reported against the nominee of the father:—Held, upon exceptions to this report, that the right of nomination rested with the father, and that the Master ought to have selected his nominee, except he was objectionable. Kennedy v. Turnley, Dr. 415; 6 Ir. Eq. R. 399.

Principles upon which the Court acts in the appointment of trustees in such cases. Ib.

3. In the appointment of new trustees by the Court, it is governed by the following rules and principles:—First, the Court will have regard to the wishes of the person by whom the trust has been created if expressed in the instrument creating the trust, or clearly to be collected from it; secondly, the Court will not appoint a person to be trustee, with a view to the interests of some of the persons interested under the trust, in opposition either to the wishes of the testator, or to the interests of others of the cestuis que trustent; thirdly, the Court, in appointing a trustee, will have regard to the question whether his appointment will promote or impede the execution of the trusts, for the very purpose of the appointment is that the trusts may be better carried into execution. Re Tempest, 1 L. R., Ch., 485; 12 Jur., N. S., 539; 35 L. J., Ch., 632; 14 W. R. 850; 14 L. T., N. S., 688.

4. Where the trusts of a settlement were of a complicated nature, and no stranger could be found willing to accept the office of trustee, the Court, departing from its usual practice, appointed as trustees two of the parties beneficially interested. Re Clissold, 10 L. T., N. S., 642.

5. Where the trusts are onerous, and other persons cannot be found to undertake them, the Court will appoint one of the cestuis que trustent to be trustee. Earp. Clutton, 17 Jur. 988.

6. Under special circumstances, the Court will appoint one of the cestuis que trustent as trustee of an estate. Earp. Conybeare's Settlement, 1 W. R. 458.

7. The Master of the Rolls will not appoint a near relative of the cestuis que trustent a trustee unless he finds it absolutely impossible to get some one unconnected with the family to undertake the office. Wilding v. Bolder, 21 Beav. 222.

8. The Court declined making an order allowing a feme sole to propose herself to be trustee, on the ground that, on her marriage, her husband might interfere with the trust. Brook v. Brook, 1 Beav. 531.

9. Where it was not possible to get another person, the Court, with the consent of a lady who was interested under a will for her separate use, appointed her husband one of two new trustees of the will, the order containing a direction that if he became sole trustee there should be a new trustee appointed. Re Parrott, 30 W. R. 97.

10. The husband of a cestui que trust being appointed a trustee by the Court, was required to undertake to apply for the appointment of an additional trustee as soon as he became a sole trustee. Re Hattatt, 18 W. R. 416; 21 L. T., N. S., 781.

11. An unmarried lady of education and position, and having independent means, was appointed a co-trustee of a will. Re Campbell, 31 Beav. 176; 8 Jur., N. S., 1199; 31 L. J., Ch., 821; 10 W. R. 640.

12. The Court appointed an unmarried lady, aged twenty-seven, who was a relation of the cestuis que trustent under a will, to be a trustee, there being a difficulty in finding any other suitable person to accept the office. Re Berkley, Berkley v. Berkley, 9 L. R., Ch., 720; 43 L. J., Ch., 703; 31 L. T., N. S., 365.

Part of a testator's estate consisted of shares upon which there was an unlimited liability. Upon a petition to appoint a new trustee, an order was made that one of the continuing trustees, in whose name the shares stood, should sell them, and invest the proceeds in the names of himself and the other trustees. Ib.

Persons out of the Jurisdiction.] 13. A father gave six separate sums in trust for six daughters respectively for life, with remainder for the benefit of their children respectively at twenty-one or marriage, with ultimate gifts over for the benefit of all his children in certain contingencies. He gave a general power of appointment of new trustees. One of the six daughters married a Canadian; her children were Canadians, and had attained twenty-one or married, and the investments of the sum of money for her benefit were mostly Canadian. One of the trustees of the will retiring as far as regarded that sum, the Court appointed a Canadian trustee of the same jointly with the other trustee of the will. Re Cunard, 27 W. R. 52; 48 L. J., Ch., 192.

14. Consols stood settled upon a trust for a married woman for life to her separate use, without power of anticipation, with remainder as she should by will appoint, with remainder to her executors or administrators. She and all her family resided in Ireland:—Held, that the Court would appoint two persons residing in Ireland, though out of the jurisdiction. Re Austen, 38 L. T., N. S., 601.

1. Where all the cestuis que trustent are resident out of the jurisdiction, the Court will appoint new trustees resident out of the jurisdiction. Re Liddiard, 14 L.R., Ch. D. 310; 49 L. J., Ch., 373; 42 L. T. 621; 28 W. R. 574.

2. By a deed poll, declaring the trusts of certain sums of stock, power was reserved to the trustees to invest the trust moneys in the French funds. The trustees, although applied to by the tenant for life to make such investment, refused to do so, and paid the trust funds into court under the Trustee Relief Act. Upon a petition presented by the tenant for life, praying for the appointment of three foreigners resident in Paris as trustees in the room of the old ones, and the transfer of the trust funds to them accordingly, the Court refused to make the order. Re Guibert's Trust, 16 Jur. 852.

3. Trustees having a power of advancement for the benefit of children, were authorised by the Court to make an advancement for the passage and outfit of the children with their parents to New Zealand, for the sake of their health, each child's share contributing equally to the passage and outfit of their parents. Re Long, 38 L. J., Ch., 125; 17 W. R. 218; 19 L. T., N. S., 672.

The Court declined to sanction the transfer of the trust funds to new trustees resident in New Zealand. Id.

3. Number.

4. Several trustees appointed on petition, under the Act 1 Will. 4, c. 60, in the stead of a sole surviving lunatic trustee. Re Welch, 3 Myl. & C. 292; 7 L. J., N. S., Ch., 169.

5. It is not contrary to the practice of the Court to appoint three trustees in the place of two nominated in a will containing a power to appoint new trustees. Birch v. Cropper, 2 De G. & Sm. 255.

6. One sole trustee appointed in place of a lunatic trustee, where the trust was shortly to be wound up, and there had been but one trustee originally. Re Reynault, 16 Jur. 233.

7. When there are three trustees, and one dies, another disappears, and the third is desirous of retiring, the Court will appoint two in the place of the three. Re Marriott, 16 W. R. 749.

8. Where a suit was instituted for the administration of the trusts of a will, for an account of the funds, and for the removal of the surviving trustee, and, at the hearing of all parties, waived all the prayer, except the appointment of new trustees, and stated that all parties interested were before the Court, a petition was directed to be presented, supported by a proper affidavit of the fitness of the intended new trustees, and an order to be made for the appointment of the same number as were appointed by the will, without a reference. Buckley v. Buckley, 14 Jur. 189.

9. A., B., and C. were trustees under a will. A. died; B. and C. became bankrupt. Three new trustees were appointed by the Court in the place of A., B., and C. Exp. Vaughan, 13 L. J., Bk., 22.

10. The Court can appoint two or more new trustees in place of one becoming bankrupt. Exp. Wilkinson, 3 Mont. & A. 145.

11. A testator having devised to two trustees upon trust to sell, and one of the trustees named being an infant, the Court declined to make an order vesting the whole estate in the other trustee, being adult, but appointed a person to be trustee in the room of the infant, and vested the whole estate in such new trustee with the original adult trustee jointly. Re Porter, 2 Jur., N. S., 349; 25 L. J., Ch., 688.

12. A testator by his will devised his real estate to one trustee upon certain trusts. The trustee died intestate. Under the stat. 13 & 14 Vict., c. 60, the Court appointed two trustees, and made a vesting order. As the property was very small, the appointment was made without a reference on affidavit of fitness of the new trustees. Exp. Tunstall, 15 Jur. 645, 981; 4 De G. & Sm. 426.

13. One sole trustee appointed in the place of a lunatic trustee where the trust was shortly to be wound up, and there had been but one trustee originally. Re Reynault, 16 Jur. 233.

14. Where a testator had bequeathed a large fund to a single trustee, the Court, at the instance of the tenant for life of the fund, appointed an additional trustee at the cost of the corpus of the trust property. Grant v. Grant, 11 Jur., N. S., 787; 34 L. J., Ch., 641; 13 W. R. 1057; 13 L. T., N. S., 721; 6 N. R. 347.

15. The Court will never place a trust fund belonging to persons not sui juris in the power of a sole trustee. Re Dickinson's Trusts, 1 Jur., N. S., 724.

16. The Court will not appoint one new trustee to supply the place of more than one originally constituted. Re Ellison, 2 Jur., N. S., 62.

17. Under special circumstances two trustees will be appointed where the original number was three. Bulkeley v. Eglington (Earl), 1 Jur., N. S., 994.

Where the property settled was very considerable, and the original settlor had nominated three trustees, the Court required clear proof of the alleged impossibility to find a third person to act with two new proposed trustees. Id.

18. In appointing new trustees, the Court is not limited to the number originally nominated. Plenty v. West, 16 Beav. 356.

19. Two trustees appointed, in addition to two existing trustees, in a case where only two trustees were originally appointed, but where the trust property had been very much increased. Re Boycott's Settlement Trusts, 5 W. R. 15.

20. When a trustee wishes to retire, and a successor cannot be found, the Court can appoint the continuing trustees to be sole trustees in the place of the continuing and retiring trustees. Re Stokes, 13 L. R., Eq., 338; 41 L. J., Ch., 290; 20 W. R. 396; 26 L. T., N. S., 181.

21. One of four trustees of a will desiring to retire:—Held, that the Court had jurisdiction, under s. 32 of the Trustees Act, 1850, to appoint the remaining three as trustees in the place of themselves and the fourth. Re Shipperdon's Trust, 49 L. J., Ch., 619.

22. One of the four trustees of a will having absconded:—Held, that the Court had jurisdiction, under s. 32 of the Trustee Act 1850, to appoint the remaining three as sole trustees in place of themselves and the fourth. Re Harford's Trusts, 13 L. R., Ch. D., 135; 28 W. R. 239; 41 L. T. 382.

1. Where one of several trustees is of unsound mind, the Court will not re-appoint the other trustees as trustees in the place of themselves and the lunatic trustee, for the purpose of excluding the lunatic trustee from the trust; but a new trustee must be appointed in his place. Re Harford's Trusts (13 L. R., Ch. D., 135), not followed. Re Aston, 23 L. R., Ch. D., 217; 48 L. T. 195; 31 W. R. 801.

2. The Court will not, on petition, on the lunacy of one of several trustees, appoint the other trustees to be new trustees in the place of themselves and the lunatic trustee. Re Colyer, 50 L. J., Ch., 79; 43 L. T. 454.

3. A testator appointed A. B. (the tenant for life) and C. D. trustees. The will contained no power to appoint new trustees. C. D. having disclaimed, A. B. (under the powers of the 23 & 24 Vict., c. 145, s. 27) appointed a single trustee in his place:—Held, that the cestuis que trustent were entitled to have a third trustee appointed, and that the statute did not take away the jurisdiction of the Court to increase the original number of trustees. D'Adhemar (Viscountess) v. Bertrand, 35 Beav. 19.

4. Form of order appointing two continuing trustees to be trustees of real and personal estate settled by will, in place of themselves and one retiring trustee. Re Northrop, Taylor v. Northrop, 29 W. R. 134.

4. Insertion of Power to Appoint toties quoties.

5. The power of appointing new trustees in a settlement provided that the new trustees so to be appointed from time to time should have the same power as the trustees named in the settlement. The power was incapable of being exercised in consequence of neither of the trustees acting. On new trustees being appointed in the suit:—Held, that the Court could not give them the power of appointing new trustees. Specified persons were appointed by the Court new trustees without a reference. Oglander v. Oglander, 2 De G. & Sm. 381; 17 L. J., N. S., Ch., 439; 12 Jur. 786.

6. Power was given to trustees and their successors to appoint new trustees. The Court, being called on to appoint new trustees, declined to enable such new trustees to appoint successors. Holder v. Durbin, 11 Beav. 594; 18 L. J., N. S., Ch., 479.

7. The Court, in decreeing the appointment of new trustees, will not direct a power to be inserted in the deed for appointing new trustees toties quoties. Bowles v. Weeks, 14 Sim. 291.

8. It will not be directed by the Court, that, in a deed appointing new trustees under the Court, a power to appoint new trustees, when required, shall be inserted. Att.-Gen. v. Madden, 2 Con. & L. 519.

9. On a petition for the appointment of new trustees of a charity, the Court directed that, in the deed appointing the trustees, a power should be inserted for appointing new trustees in future. Re 52 Geo. 3, c. 101, 12 Sim. 262.

10. Trustees appointed by the Court in the place of others whose appointments had failed by their deaths in the lifetime of the testator authorised to appoint future trustees in the manner and under the circumstances mentioned in the will. White v. White, 5 Beav. 221; 6 Jur. 160.

11. In a suit to appoint new trustees, the Court refused to insert in the will a clause authorising such new trustees to appoint others in their stead. Brown v. Brown, 3 Y. & Coll. 395.

12. Where deed does not provide for appointment of new trustee, Court will not add such a power. Southwell v. Ward, Taml. 314.

13. On bill for appointment of new trustee, the decree directed, although not prayed, a proviso to be inserted in the deed authorising the parties from time to time thereafter to appoint new trustees. Joyce v. Joyce, 2 Moll. 276.

5. Powers of New Trustees appointed by the Court.

14. By deed, power was given to the trustees or trustee for the time being, at their or his entire discretion, to pay certain rents for the benefit of one, two, or more of the children of A. B., the tenant for life, and there was a power to the surviving or continuing trustee to appoint new trustees. The trustees all died without appointing new trustees, and new trustees were appointed by the Court:—Held, that they had the discretionary power given to the original trustees. Bartley v. Bartley, 3 Drew. 384.

15. Marriage articles authorised the tenant for life to withdraw the fund from the settlement, with the assent of the "undersigned trustees":—Held, that the power of assent was annexed to the office, and might therefore be exercised by new trustees appointed by the Court. Byam v. Byam, 19 Beav. 58; 1 Jur., N. S., 79; 24 L. J., Ch., 209.

16. Under a power to the survivor to appoint new trustees:—Held, upon the terms of the power, that surviving trustees, appointed by the Court and not under the power, had no authority to exercise it. Cooper v. Macdonald, 35 Beav. 504; 14 W. R. 755.

17. A testator bequeathed the residue of his personal estate to three persons, their executors, administrators, and assigns, in trust that they or the survivor of them, or the executors, administrators, or assigns of such survivor, should invest it in the purchase of estates in England or Scotland, such estates, if in England, to be settled according to the limitations of the same will as to his own English estates, which were thereby limited to one for life, with remainder to his first and other sons in tail, and, if in Scotland, according to the limitations of a Scotch deed of strict entail, to which his own Scotch estates were then subject, and until such purchase could be found, should pay the income of the residuary fund to the person who would be entitled to the rents of the English estates so to be purchased in case the same were actually purchased. And the will contained a power to such person, or, in case of his minority, to his guardian, to appoint new trustees, who were to have all the powers and capacities of those in whose room they should be substituted. The three trustees invested the greater part of the residue in Scotch estates; and all died during the lifetime of the tenant for life. On his death, his son, who was entitled under the Scotch deed to the Scotch estates, as well as under the will to the English estates, conceiving himself entitled absolutely to what remained of the residuary fund, executed disentailing deeds both of the money and of the English estates, and obtained payment of the fund to himself; but his right to do so being disputed on his death by the next Scotch heir of entail.—Held, that he had no such right; but that he was entitled only to the income of the fund during his life, and that upon his death, there being then no one by whom new trustees could be appointed under the power in the will, and the Court being of opinion that the discretionary power of selecting between English and Scotch investment would not extend to trustees appointed by the Court, the fund became divisible in equal moieties, one half belonging to the personal representatives of the deceased, and the other half to be invested in Scotch estates to the uses of the Scotch deed. Fordyce v. Bridges, 2 Ph. 497; 2 Coop. C. C. 326; 17 L. J., N. S., Ch., 185. Varying 10 Beav. 90; 16 L. J., N. S., Ch., 81; 10 Jur. 1020.

1. One by will gives annuities, and directs residue of her estate to be disposed of in charity to such persons and in such manner as her executors or survivor may think fit. On death of them new trustees were appointed to sustain the annuities, but they could not dispose of the residue, it being a trust confined to executors personally. Hibbard v. Lamb, Amb. 309.

2. The effect of an order made by a court of equity under the Trustee Act 1850, substituting new trustees for those named in the will, is to transfer to the new trustees all the rights and power of the old ones. The Court, therefore, granted administration (with will annexed) to the substituted trustees, without requiring the execution of a deed of conveyance to them by the old trustees. Woodfall, In goods of, 42 L. J., P. C., 64; 29 L. T., N. S., 248; 21 W. R. 933.

6. Costs.

3. A person named a trustee without his knowledge, and in that character a party to the suit, having never accepted the trust, is entitled to his costs as between solicitor and client. Sherratt v. Bentley, 1 Russ. & M. 655.

4. A person named a trustee in a deed, who declines to accept the office, is in the situation of any other defendant against whom a bill is dismissed, and can only have his costs as between party and party. Normay v. Normay, 2 Myl. & K. 278; 4 L. J., N. S., Ch., 111, 163.

5. On petition to have a new trustee appointed in the place of the bankrupt, who had misappropriated the trust fund, the Court will give the assignees their costs only out of the general estate. Exp. Heelis, Re Atkinson, 7 Jur. 684.

6. The trustees of a meeting-house, having by a change of their religious opinions become disqualified for the trust and refused to retire, ordered to pay the costs of the appointment of new trustees incurred in a suit instituted for that purpose on the information of the attorney-general. Att.-Gen. v. Murdoch, 2 Kay & J. 571; 27 L. T. 118.

7. The survivor of two trustees being guilty of misconduct, the cestui que trustent filed a bill to remove him, and to appoint a trustee in his place. After the bill was filed, he appointed a new trustee under a power in the settlement, in the place of the deceased trustee, without the consent of the cestui que trustent. The new trustee, who had no notice of the filing of the bill, was made a party by supplemental bill. The Court made him pay his own costs of the supplemental bill, but not those of the other parties. Peatfield v. Bonn, 2 W. R. 68; 23 L. J., Ch., 497.

8. Bill having been filed for the appointment of new trustees in a case where it was proper to have recourse to the mode provided by the provisions of the Act of Parliament, costs directed to be paid to the plaintiff. Thomas v. Walker, 18 Beav. 521.

9. An executrix of a deceased and sole trustee having declined to receive and pay the dividends on stock standing in the name of the trustee, the cestui que trust filed a bill against her for the appointment of new trustees, a transfer of the trust fund, and payment of a dividend.—Held, that the executrix was entitled to her costs out of the fund. Legg v. Mackrell, 2 De G. F. & J. 551.

1. Who may be Appointed.

10. Where trustees for sale have taken various steps with a view to the execution of their trust, and, one of them retiring shortly before the sale, a new trustee is, under a power contained in the trust deed, appointed in his stead, the new trustee must be a person who can and will exercise his discretion fairly and beneficially for all persons, and as fairly and beneficially as the retiring trustee could have done. Roberts v. Bozen, 3 L. J., Ch., 113.

1. Upon the marriage of an English woman with a citizen of the United States, who was temporarily resident in England, the fortune of the wife, consisting of stock in the British funds, was assigned to trustees, who were Englishmen and relatives of the wife, upon certain trusts for the husband and wife and the issue of the marriage. By the settlement, power was given to the trustees, with the consent of the husband and wife, to invest the trust property in the names of the trustees or trustee for the time being in the public funds of Great Britain or America, or upon real securities in England, Wales, or America; and power was also given to the husband and wife or the survivor, in case the existing trustees should be desirous of being discharged from the trusts, to appoint new trustees. After the marriage, the husband and wife lived for about five years in England, and then went to reside permanently in America, having, previously to their departure, appointed three Americans to act as trustees in the room of the original trustees, the trust property being at the same time transferred by the English trustees into the American funds in the names of the three American trustees:—Held, that this appointment of American trustees, though not expressly authorised by the settlement, was valid. Meinertzhagen v. Davis, 1 Colly. 353; 13 L. J., N. S., Ch., 457; 1 Jur. 973.

2. Number.

- (a) Single Trustee, 6971.
- (b) Reduction of, 6971.
- (c) Increase of, 6972.

(a) Single Trustee.

2. Where, by the terms of a settlement, it appears to be the intention of the parties that there should at all times be two trustees of the property comprised in the settlement, the appointment of a single trustee in the place of two original trustees, and the transfer by them of the trust property to such single trustee, is a breach of trust, and the original trustees are responsible accordingly. Hulme v. Hulme, 2 Myl. & K. 682.

3. By a settlement, lands were assured to A. and B. upon certain trusts, with a power, in case they or either of them, or any trustee or trustees to be appointed under the power, should die or become unwilling to act for the settlor during his life, and after his decease, for the acting trustees or trustee for the time being, or for the executors or administrators of any surviving trustee, to nominate any fit persons or persons to supply the place of the trustees or trustee so dying or becoming unwilling to act. A. never executed the deed, nor acted. After A.'s death, B., being desirous of retiring, nominated C. to be a new trustee, and conveyed to C. all the trust estate. Afterwards, on account of doubts as to the validity of this appointment, the executor of B. executed a deed, appointing C. and D. to be trustees of the settlement in the place of the original trustees; and by the same deed C. conveyed the property to the use of himself and D. They then sold the trust estate under a power of sale in the settlement:—Held, that the survivor of the original trustees had not been guilty of a breach of trust in appointing only one new trustee, and that the two new trustees were well appointed, and had validly exercised the power of sale, so as to exonerate the purchasers from responsibility. Miller v. Priddon, 1 De G. M. & G. 335; 21 L. J., Ch., 421.

The bill contained an allegation that the new trustee was, when the sales were made, the sole trustee of the settlement. Semble, that this allegation would not have precluded the plaintiff from insisting upon the invalidity of the appointment of that trustee, if the appointment had been invalid. Id.

4. By a will, three trustees were appointed; and in the power of appointing new trustees, it was provided that, if the trustees thereby appointed, or to be appointed under the power, or any of them, should die, or be desirous of being discharged, etc., it should be lawful for the surviving and continuing trustees or trustee, or the executors or administrators of the last surviving or continuing trustee, to appoint any other person or persons in the stead of the trustee or trustees so dying, etc., either solely or jointly with the other trustee or trustees. And that thereupon the trust estates should be conveyed so as to vest in the surviving or continuing trustees or trustee and the new trustee or trustees, or if there should be no such surviving or continuing trustee, in such new trustees only. One of the persons named trustees died in the testator's lifetime. The survivor of the two trustees being desirous of retiring, appointed one new trustee in his own place:—Held, that the appointment was invalid, and that the Court would not, under the power, appoint two trustees only, without being satisfied that such a course was for the benefit of the cestuis que trustent. Lonsdale (Earl) v. Beckett, 4 De G. & Sm. 73; 19 L. J., Ch., 342.

(b) Reduction of.

5. By an indenture of settlement three trustees were appointed. The settlement contained a power for the cestuis que trustent, in case the trustees therein named, or either of them, should die, or be desirous of being discharged from the trusts, to appoint any other person or persons to be a trustee or trustees in the place of any such trustee or trustees so dying, or being desirous to be discharged. One trustee died, and the other two were desirous of being discharged, upon which two new trustees only were substituted. The two continuing trustees refused to transfer the fund to the new trustees, upon the ground that the appointment was not properly executed, and paid the trust fund into court under the Trustee Act:—Held, upon petition for payment of the money into court, that it was competent for the cestuis que trustent to appoint two trustees only, and that the old trustees were not justified in paying the money into court, and they were ordered to pay costs thereby occasioned, and their costs of the petition. Re Fagg's Trust, 19 L. J., N. S., Ch., 175.

1. Where three trustees were named in a settlement, with a power to the cestuis que trustent, to nominate, substitute, or appoint any person or persons in the place of the said present or other trustee or trustees who should die, etc.:—Held, that an appointment of two persons only in the room of the three original trustees, was a valid appointment. Re Bathurst's Estate, 2 Sm. & G. 169; 18 Jur. 568.

2. Trustees of a deed had a discretionary power of distribution over a fund amongst a class of children, who in default took equally. There were originally five trustees, one of whom was a member of the class. After the death of the surviving trustee, three new trustees were appointed under a power, one of whom (A.) was a member of the class. These three apportioned the fund, except a minute portion, amongst the three survivors of the children, equally, including A.:—Held, that the appointment of three trustees, instead of five, was not void; and, secondly, that the appointment of the fund was good. Reid v. Reid, 30 Beav. 388.

3. A testator appointed A., B., and C. to be trustees of his will, and declared that if the trustees thereby appointed or any of them should happen to die, it should be lawful for the surviving trustee or trustees to appoint any other person or persons to be a trustee or trustees, in the place of the trustees or trustee so dying; and that, on such appointment, the trust premises should be conveyed, so that the same should be vested in the surviving trustees and such new trustees, or in such new trustees solely, on the same trusts. A. died in the lifetime of the testator:—Held, that it was the intention of the testator that there should be three trustees of his will, and that a new trustee might be appointed in the place of A. Lonsdale (Earl) v. Beckett, 19 L. J., N. S., Ch., 342; 4 De G. & Sm. 73.

(c) Increase of.

4. Where, by a settlement, a certain number of persons are appointed trustees, and power is given, upon the death or retirement of a trustee or trustees, to appoint any person or other persons to be a trustee or trustees in his or their room, an appointment of a greater than the original number of trustees is not a valid exercise of the power. Exp. Davis, Re Clark, 2 Y. & Coll. C. C. 46; 3 M. D. & De G. 304; 12 L. J., N. S., Bk., 38; 7 Jur. 430.

5. Upon the construction of the power for appointing new trustees contained in a marriage settlement:—Held, that the appointment of three new trustees in the room of the two original trustees of the settlement, was valid. Meinertzhagen v. Davis, 1 Colly. 353; 13 L. J., N. S., Ch., 457; 8 Jur. 973.

6. Semble, that the appointment of more than one trustee in the place of one dead or retiring trustee, cannot be justified without express words indicating the intention of the settlor. Stones v. Romton, 1 W. R. 499; 17 Jur., N. S., 750; 22 L. J., Ch., 975; 1 Eq. Rep. 427; 17 Beav. 308.

3. Who may Appoint.

7. Under a power enabling a surviving or continuing trustee to appoint a new trustee in the place of a trustee dying, going to reside abroad, becoming incapable of acting, etc., the surviving trustee, although himself residing abroad, may appoint another trustee in the place of the one deceased. O'Reilly v. Alderson, 8 Hare 101.

8. Two retiring trustees, held not authorised to appoint two new trustees, under a power given to surviving or continuing trustees. Stones v. Romton, 17 Beav. 308; 17 Jur. 750; 22 L. J., Ch., 975; 1 Eq. Rep. 427; 1 W. R. 499.

By a settlement two trustees were appointed, and it was provided that "if the said trustees, or either of them, should die, or be desirous of being discharged, or refuse or become incapable to act, the settlor during his life, and after his decease the surviving or continuing trustees or trustee, or the executors or administrators of the last acting trustee, might appoint any other person or persons to be a trustee or trustees in the stead of the trustee or trustees so dying, or desiring to be discharged, or refusing or becoming incapable to act; and upon every such appointment the trust premises should be so transferred that the same might become vested in the new trustee or trustees jointly with the surviving or continuing trustee or trustees, or solely, as the case might require." The settlor died without appointing new trustees, and the two original trustees (being desirous of being discharged from the trusts) afterwards appointed by the same deed two other persons to be trustees in their places:—Held, that this was not a valid appointment of new trustees under the power. Id.

9. A testator, after devising real estate to two trustees, and bequeathing his personal estate to his wife, and the same two trustees, declared that if any of the trustees thereby appointed, to be appointed as thereafter mentioned, should depart this life, or decline or become incapable to act, it should be lawful for the surviving or continuing trustee for the time being, or the executors, etc., of such survivor, but with the consent of his (the testator's) said wife, during her widowhood, to appoint one or more person or persons to be a trustee or trustees in the room of the trustee or trustees so dying, or declining or becoming incapable to act; and thereupon the said trust estates, moneys, and premises should be vested in the same trustee or trustees, solely or jointly with the continuing trustee or trustees, as occasion should require; and that such new trustee should have the same powers, etc., as if he or they had been originally nominated a trustee or trustees. A new trustee having been appointed in the place of one who died, and having survived the widow and the other original trustee:—Held, that he was authorised, under the power, to appoint two new trustees. Hillman v. Westwood, 24 L. J., Ch., 57; 3 W. R. 41; 3 Eq. Rep. 142.

10. A lady being entitled to a sum, payable at a future time, out of her father's estates, it was agreed, by articles on her marriage, that in the settlement to be made in pursuance thereof a power should be inserted for her father in his lifetime, or his executors within six months after the sum should be payable, to invest that sum in the names of the trustees to be appointed for the purpose, and for the trustees, with the consent of the husband and wife, or the survivor, or of their own authority, as the case should happen, to change the securities, the trusts of the fund being for the husband for his life, then to the wife for her life, then to the children. No settlement was executed, and the father and the husband died before the fund was invested, leaving the wife surviving and four children:—Held, that the wife had no power to appoint a trustee to receive the funds. Brasier v. Hudson, 9 Sim. 11.

1. A power for the surviving or continuing trustees to appoint new trustees in the stead of any trustees dying or declining to act, does not authorise declining trustees to appoint new ones in their own stead. Nicholson v. Wright, 3 Jur., N. S., 313; 26 L. J., Ch., 312.

2. The testator appointed A., B., and C. executors and trustees of his will, providing that if either of them, or any succeeding trustee or trustees, should die, or refuse or neglect or become incapable to act in the trust, it should be lawful to and for the survivor of them, the said A., B., and C., and such new trustee or trustees to be nominated in their or either of their stead, to appoint a new trustee or new trustees instead of the said A., B., and C.; or either of them, or any future trustee or trustees so dying or desiring to be discharged, or refusing or neglecting or becoming incapable to act as aforesaid. A. having disclaimed the trust, and B. having died, C. alone, though not the survivor of A., B., and C., appointed new trustees under the power:—Held, that the new trustees were well appointed. Cafe v. Bent, 5 Hare 24; 9 Jur. 653.

3. A power in a settlement to a party, his executors, etc., to appoint new trustees, may, on the renunciation of one executor, be exercised by the remaining acting ones. Granville (Earl) v. McNeile, 7 Hare 156; 18 L. J., N. S., Ch., 164; 13 Jur. 252.

4. E. M. N. and his wife, under a power in their marriage settlement, directed the trustees, after the decease of the survivor of them, to receive a sum of 3,000*l.*, and pay it to their three daughters equally. F. M. N., one of the daughters, upon her marriage with S. D., assigned all her interest in the appointed fund, by way of settlement, to C. R. and T. L. Upon C. R. requiring to be discharged from being a trustee, T. L., who had never accepted the trusts, executed a deed of disclaimer, upon which B. W. N. and J. N. were appointed trustees in the place of C. R. and T. L., and C. R. assigned the trust fund to them; but the trustees of the original settlement alleged that T. L. had accepted the trusts, and that B. W. N. and J. N. were not trustees, and they refused to pay the share of F. M. N. to them:—Held, upon a bill filed by B. W. N. and J. N., that they were duly appointed trustees; and upon an objection for want of parties, that the cestuis que trustent and T. L. were not necessary parties to the suit; that the capital and dividends of F. M. N.'s share ought to be transferred to the trustees; that the costs of the suit ought to be paid out of the trust funds; and that the defendant was not entitled to any costs of the objection for want of parties, but that the plaintiffs were entitled to their costs out of the trust funds. Noble v. Meymott, 14 Beav. 471; 20 L. J., N. S., Ch., 612.

5. Where the testator gave 300*l.* to each of three trustees who should prove and act, but if any one should die without having acted, or should refuse to act, the legacy should go to such trustees as, under the powers of the will, should be appointed in their place, two died in the testator's lifetime, and, under a decree in a suit for the administration, two others having been proposed by the survivor and appointed by the Master:—Held, that they were not entitled to the legacies, the power of appointing new trustees by the will being in the surviving trustee or trustees, who were to nominate, etc., and that thereupon the estate, etc., vested in the trustee dying or refusing to act, should become vested in the new trustee, etc. Quare, whether the estate, never having vested in the trustees dying in the testator's lifetime, new trustees could be appointed by the survivor under the power. Walsh v. Gladstone, 14 Sim. 2; 8 Jur. 51.

6. A testatrix gave real and personal property to trustees, with a proviso, that if the trustees thereby appointed or to be appointed should die or decline to act, it should be lawful for the then surviving or continuing trustee, or if there should be no surviving or continuing trustee then for the trustee so declining to act, by deed to substitute or appoint any other person or persons to be a trustee or trustees in the place of the trustee or trustees so dying or declining to act. One of the two trustees died in the lifetime of the testatrix: the other survived her, and by deed disclaimed the trust, except the power of nominating other persons to be trustees; and by the same deed he appointed two persons to be trustees in the place of the trustee who had died before the testatrix and of himself:—Held, that the power had been properly executed. Exp. & Re Hadley, 5 De G. & Sm. 67; 21 L. J., N. S., Ch., 109; 16 Jur. 98.

7. Power for "the surviving or continuing or other trustee or trustees" to appoint new trustees:—Held, that under the words "other trustee or trustees" new trustees were well appointed by the sole surviving trustee, although he was himself retiring at the same time. Camoy's (Lord) v. Best, 19 Beav. 414.

8. A testator appointed three trustees, and empowered "the surviving or continuing trustee or trustees" to appoint new trustees. Two of the trustees disclaimed; the third acted, and by deed, reciting that he "now declined to act," appointed new trustees:—Held, that such retiring trustee was not a surviving or continuing trustee within the power, and that the appointment was invalid. Travis v. Illingworth, 2 Dr. & Sm. 344; 11 Jur., N. S., 215; 34 L. J., Ch., 481; 13 W. R. 489; 12 L. T., N. S., 134; 5 N. R. 427.

Two trustees were originally appointed by a settlement, which contained a power that if the trustees or either of them should be desirous of being discharged, the tenant for life, "and after his decease, the surviving or continuing trustees or trustee," might appoint any other person or persons to be a trustee or trustees, in the stead of the trustee or trustees so desiring to be discharged:—Held, that this did not authorise the two original trustees, after the death of the tenant for life, to retire together and appoint two new trustees in their stead. Ib.

4. On Bankruptcy.

1. When there was a power in a settlement to appoint new trustees, in case any of the trustees therein "should become incapable, or unfit to act in the trust thereof":—Held, that by the bankruptcy of a trustee he became "unfit to act" within the meaning of the power. Re Roche, 2 Dr. & War. 287; 1 Con. & L. 306.

2. A power to appoint a new trustee in the place of a trustee who should become incapable to act, contemplates the personal incapacity of such trustee; and, therefore, a trustee who had become bankrupt, and been indicted for not surrendering to the fiat, and had absconded, was held not thereby to have become "incapable" of acting in the trust within the meaning of the power. Re Watt's Settlement, 9 Hare 106; 20 L. J., N. S., Ch., 337; 15 Jur. 459.

5. On Death before Testator.

3. A new trustee cannot be appointed under the usual powers, in the place of one appointed by the will, who died in the lifetime of the testator. Winter v. Rudge, 15 Sim. 596.

A testator empowered his wife (who was a cestui que trust under his will) during her life, and after her death the then surviving or continuing trustee of his will, to appoint any new trustee or trustees as often as any of his first or future trustees should die, etc. One of the trustees named in the will died before the testator:—Held, that the power did not authorise the widow to appoint a new trustee in the place of the deceased. Ib.

4. A testator appointed A., B., and C. to be trustees of his will, and declared that if the trustees thereby appointed, or any of them, should happen to die, it should be lawful for the surviving trustee or trustees to appoint any other person or persons to be a trustee or trustees in the place of the trustee or trustees so dying, and that, on such appointment, the trust premises should be conveyed, so that the same should be vested in the surviving trustees and such new trustees, or in such new trustees solely, on the same trusts. A. died in the lifetime of the testator:—Held, that it was the intention of the testator that there should be three trustees of his will, and that a new trustee might be appointed in the place of A. Lonsdale (Earl) v. Beckett, 19 L. J., N. S., Ch., 342; 4 De G. & Sm. 73.

5. Where the testator gave 300*l.* to each of three trustees who should prove and act, but if any one should die without having acted, or should refuse to act, the legacy should go to such trustees as, under the powers in the will, should be appointed in their place, two died in the testator's lifetime, and, under a decree in a suit for the administration, two others having been proposed by the survivor and appointed by the Master:—Held, that they were not entitled to the legacies, the power of appointing new trustees by the will being in the surviving trustee or trustees, who were to nominate, etc., and that thereupon the estate, etc., vested in the trustee dying or refusing to act, should become vested in the new trustee, etc. Quære, whether the estate never having vested in the trustees dying in the testator's lifetime, new trustees could be appointed by the survivor under the power. Walsh v. Gladstone, 14 Sim. 2; 8 Jur. 51.

6. On Refusal to Act.

6. A trustee who had paid money into court under the 10 & 11 Vict., c. 96:—Held, to have retired from his trust, and a new trustee held to have been duly appointed in his stead, under a power for that purpose to arise in the event of a trustee "refusing or declining to act in the trusts of the settlement." Re Williams, 4 Kay & J. 87.

7. On Lunacy.

7. A power of appointing new trustees provided that if any trustees or trustee should die, or become unwilling or unable to act, the trustees or trustee for the time being, whether continuing or declining to act, might appoint a new trustee or trustees. One of the three trustees became of unsound mind, but was not so found by inquisition, and the other two appointed a new trustee in his room:—Held, that the power was well exercised. Re East, Re Bellwood's Trusts, 8 L. R., Ch., 735; 42 L. J., Ch., 480.

A petition for an order vesting the trust estate in the continuing trustees and the new trustee having been presented:—Held, that service on the trustee of unsound mind was not necessary. Ib.

8. Where Trustee out of the Jurisdiction or Absconding.

8. A power to appoint a new trustee on an existing one becoming incapable to act, does not apply to the case of a trustee going to reside abroad. Withington v. Withington, 16 Sim. 104.

9. A trustee going out of the jurisdiction is not thereby incapable, unwilling, or unable to act within the terms of the power to appoint new trustees, and an application to the Court is proper. But if a breach of trust has been committed, this Court, though it sanctions the appointment of a new trustee, will make no order as to the trust property. Re Harrison's Trusts, 22 L. J., Ch., 69.

10. In a deed of settlement of property in the city of London, it being declared, that if either of the trustees should die, or decline or become incapable to act, it should be lawful to appoint a trustee in his room. One trustee having for several years been domiciled in New York, as a bookseller:—Held, he was incapable of acting within the meaning of the deed. Meenard v. Welford, 1 Sm. & G. 426; 17 Jur. 815; 22 L. J., Ch., 1053.

11. A power to appoint a new trustee in the place of a trustee who should become incapable to act, contemplates the personal incapacity of such trustee; and therefore a trustee who had become bankrupt, and been indicted for not surrendering to the fiat, and had absconded, was held not thereby to have become "incapable" of acting in the trust, within the meaning of the power. Re Watts's Settlement, 9 Hare 106; 20 L. J., N. S., Ch., 337; 15 Jur. 459.

1. Semble, that a power in a settlement to appoint a new trustee in the place of a trustee incapable to act applies to personal incapacity, and not to simple residence abroad. Re Bignold, 7 L. R., Ch., 223; 41 L. J., Ch., 235; 26 L. T. 176; 20 W. R. 345.

2. New trustees of a charity were to be appointed in lieu of those who should depart the United Kingdom, from whatever cause or motive, or under whatsoever circumstances; and every such trustee so departing the United Kingdom was immediately upon his departure to be, and be considered to be, discharged from the trusts of the charity. A temporary departure from the United Kingdom held insufficient to vacate the office of trustee. Re Moravian Society, 4 Jur., N. S., 703; 6 W. R. 861; 26 Beav. 101.

9. Construction and Due Exercise of Power in Other Cases.

3. A settlement contained a proviso that in case either of the trustees should die or become unwilling to act in the trusts, it should be lawful for the acting trustees or trustee for the time being, or the executors or administrators of any surviving trustee, to nominate any fit person to supply the place or places of the trustee or trustees respectively so dying or becoming unwilling to act. On the death of one trustee, the survivor executed a deed reciting that he was desirous of retiring from the trust, and that he had appointed another person to be a trustee in his place, and conveying the trust property to such new trustee:—Held, that the surviving trustee had power to nominate a sole trustee to act in his place, and that the appointment by recital was good. Miller v. Priddon, 18 L. J., N. S., Ch., 226; 1 De G. M. & G., 335; 21 L. J., Ch., 421.

4. By a marriage settlement, a policy and moneys thereby assured were assigned to four trustees on the trusts of the settlement, with power to the husband and wife, on and after the death of the survivor, or the continuing trustee, or, in case there should be no continuing trustee, for the retiring trustee, in case the trustees should die or desire to be discharged, to appoint new trustees; and the estate should thereon be assigned, so as to vest in such trustee jointly with the former trustees; and in case there should be no former continuing trustee, then in such new trustee or trustees only. Two of the trustees being dead and two desirous of retiring, three new trustees were appointed, of whom one being afterwards desirous of retiring, a new trustee was appointed:—Held, a valid exercise of the power. Emmet v. Clark, 3 Giff. 32; 7 Jur., N. S., 404; 30 L. J., Ch., 472; 9 W. R. 515; 4 L. T., N. S., 319.

5. By deed of trust of 1682 for the appointment of a vicar, it was declared that upon the death of any of the trustees the survivors should from time to time, when and as often as they should think fit, before the number of trustees should be reduced to the number of five, or within three months after they should be reduced to the number of four, appoint new trustees, and convey the premises to them, so as to complete the number of nine trustees. It appeared that from the date of the deed to the election of a clerk in 1840 this clause had never been strictly acted upon, though the number of trustees had generally been kept up to nine:—Held, that the informality in the appointment of the trustees did not vitiate the election. Att.-Gen. v. Cumming, 2 Y. & Coll. C. C. 139; 7 Jur. 187.

6. On an original trustee joining with a new trustee, but the deed not duly executed in appointing a trustee in the stead of one retiring, and afterwards, on receiving an indemnity, joining with the latter, the deed purporting to be an execution of the power was not a proper execution of it. Lancashire v. Lancashire, 1 De G. & Sm. 288; 11 Jur. 1024. Affirmed 2 Ph. 657.

7. The power to appoint new trustees directed that upon such appointment being exercised, the trust estate should be vested in the newly appointed trustee jointly with the surviving or continuing trustee:—Held, that the meaning of such a power was to appoint new trustees whenever the event requiring such a change should arise, and that a valid appointment of and a transfer of the estate to new trustees might be made under the power, notwithstanding the removal of the surviving trustees. Re Roche, 2 Dr. & War. 287; 1 Con. & L. 306.

8. A testator by his will appointed S. and C. trustees of certain property therein comprised, which appointment he afterwards revoked by codicil, substituting H. and B. in their room. The will contained the ordinary clauses authorising the appointment by the continuing trustees or trustee of a new trustee or new trustees in the place of any dying or desiring to be discharged. Shortly after the death of the testator, C., one of the excluded trustees, paid 75*l.* to H., upon the understanding that H. should retire and that he, C., should be appointed a new trustee in his place. This arrangement was assumed to be carried into effect by an indenture made between H., B., and C., in which the pecuniary consideration was not disclosed:—Held, that this attempted execution of the power of appointment was fraudulent and void. The deed was directed to be cancelled, and the sum of 75*l.* to be paid over by H. to the cestui que trust. Sugden v. Crosland, 4 W. R. 343; 20 Jur. 318.

9. Estates were vested by a settlement, in the Scotch form, in two trustees, each of whom was empowered to nominate any other person to succeed him in the trust after his decease. One trustee disclaimed; the other trustee appointed by his will three persons to succeed him:—Held, that they were duly appointed. Sands v. Nugee, 8 Sim. 130; 5 L. J., N. S., Ch., 329.

10. A settlement contained a power for the tenant for life during his life, and after his decease for the surviving or continuing trustees or trustee, or the executors or administrators of the last acting trustee, to appoint any other person or persons to be a trustee or trustees, in the stead of any trustee or trustees dying, or desiring to be discharged, etc. There were two trustees named in the will, both of whom were desirous of being discharged after the death of the tenant for life. They accordingly executed an indenture whereby they appointed two new trustees in their place, and conveyed the trust property to them accordingly:—Held, that the power had not been properly executed. Stones v. Rowton, 1 W. R. 499; 1 Eq. Rep. 427; 17 Jur. 750; 22 L. J., Ch., 975; 17 Beav. 308.

10. Exercise of Power Pending Suit.

1. The institution of a suit against trustees for the administration of the trust estate under the direction of the Court, does not preclude the exercise of the discretion given to the trustees by the will of the testator, as to the appointment of new trustees, or the management of the trust; but the trustees are required, after the institution of the suit, to act under the control of the Court. Cafe v. Bent, 3 Hare 245; 13 L. J., N. S., Ch., 169; 8 Jur. 141.

2. The appointment of a new trustee under a power, pending a suit for administration, is not necessarily invalid. Graham v. Graham, 16 Beav. 550; 17 Jur. 569; 22 L. J., Ch., 937.

3. In a suit for the appointment of new trustees, occasioned by the refusal of the surviving trustees to exercise a power of appointment, reference was made to the Master to approve of proper persons. Exceptions to his report on the ground that he had not regarded the right of nomination given to the surviving trustee by the instrument creating the power, but not raising any objections to the fitness of the persons nominated by the Master, were overruled. Middleton v. Reay, 7 Hare 106; 18 L. J., N. S., Ch., 153; 13 Jur. 116; 18 L. J., N. S., Ch., 153.

If the party's right of nomination is to be preserved, there should be special directions to the Master, semble. Id.

4. A decree for the administration of the trusts of a will directed "that some proper person be appointed" a trustee of the will in the place of a deceased trustee. The power of appointing new trustees was given by the will to the surviving trustee, who was the defendant. The plaintiff took out a summons to have A. B. appointed trustee, and the defendant a summons to have C. D. appointed. The summonses were adjourned into court, and Bacon, V.-Ch., appointed the nominee of the plaintiff:—Held, on appeal, that the decree did not take away from the defendant the power of appointing new trustees, though after decree he could only exercise it subject to the supervision of the Court; that if he nominated a fit and proper person, such person must be appointed, and the Court would not appoint some one else on the ground that such other person was, in the opinion of the Court, more eligible; and that if he nominated a person whom the Court did not approve, the Court would not itself make the choice, but would call on him to make a fresh nomination:—Held, therefore, that the appointment of A. B. must be discharged. Middleton v. Reay (7 Hare 106) distinguished. Re Gadd, Eastwood v. Clark, 23 L. R., Ch. D., 134; 52 L. J., Ch., 396; 48 L. T. 395; 31 W. R. 417.

5. Real estate was settled by will on D. for life, with remainders over, and the will appointed two trustees, and empowered them to sell at the request and by the direction of the person entitled to the actual freehold, with the usual provisions for re-investment in land and interim investment in other securities. The will also gave a power to appoint new trustees vested in the same person. One of the trustees was dead. D., who was over eighty years of age, proposed to sell the estate. The remaindermen brought this action for the appointment of a new trustee, and to restrain the sale as improper, adducing evidence to show that the estate would sell to better advantage at a future date, owing to the existence of minerals at present unworked, and a projected railway which would pass through the estate. D. had no re-investment in land in view, and proposed to invest in consols. After action brought, the Settled Land Act 1882 came into operation; and shortly before the action came on for trial, D., under the power in the will, appointed a new trustee without referring the appointment to the Court. The trustees consented to the proposed sale:—Held, that D. was entitled to sell the estate as well under the power in the will as under the Settled Land Act. Thomas v. Williams, 24 L. R., Ch. D., 558; 52 L. J., Ch., 603; 49 L. T. 111; 31 W. R. 943.

Held, also, that the new trustee was properly appointed, notwithstanding the pending action. Id.

11. Duty in Exercise of Power and Control of Court.

6. Court controls trustee in the exercise of power to appoint new trustees, though given in very large words. Webb v. Shaftesbury (Earl), 7 Ves. 480.

7. Trustees ought not to exercise a power of selecting new trustees for the mere purpose of continuing the trust property under the management of a particular solicitor. Marshall v. Sladden, 7 Hare 428; 19 L. J., N. S., Ch., 57; 14 Jur. 106.

Circumstances in which it is improper for a retiring trustee to appoint a new trustee, with communication with the cestuis que trustent. Id.

8. It is the duty of trustees having power to appoint new trustees, to make such appointment impartially, as between the cestuis que trustent, and not without communication with them. O'Reilly v. Alderson, 8 Hare 101.

9. S., in 1852, appointed B. and C. trustees of his will, which contained a power of appointing new trustees. By a codicil made in the same year he revoked the appointment of B. and C., and appointed D. and E. in their place as trustees. After the death of the testator, C., in consideration of 75*l*. paid by him to D., who retired from the office of trustee, was by deed, purporting to be an appointment under the power, appointed in his place:—Held, that the deed was fraudulent and void, and that no estate passed to C. under it. The Court ordered the deed to be delivered up to be cancelled, and the 75*l*. to be repaid by D. for the benefit of the parties beneficially interested under the will. Sugden v. Crosland, 2 Jur. N. S., 318; 25 L. J., Ch., 563.

1. When a person having a special power of appointment over a fund of personality appoints trustees for the objects of the power, the Court, though recognising the validity of such an appointment, will not, as a matter of right, transfer the fund to the trustees appointed by the donee of the power. Busk v. Aldam, 19 L. R., Eq., 16; 44 L. J., Ch., 119; 31 L. T. 370; 23 W. R. 21.

12. Other Matters.

2. When, in the inception of a trust, the funds are vested in two trustees, and one of them dies, the survivor is entitled to have the advice and co-operation of a new trustee before dealing with the principal of the trust funds in any way which involves a question of discretion. Livesey v. O'Hara, 14 Ir. Ch. Rep. 12.

3. An executrix, by a deed reciting that she intended to appropriate a part of her testator's assets in payment of a debt due from him to her, declared trusts of the fund intended to be thus appropriated. She died without making the appropriation, which was made after her decease by her executors. New trustees of the deed, subsequently appointed, executed a declaration of trust (contained in the deed appointing them) whereby they declared that they would hold the fund upon the trusts. On inquiring, before their appointment, for evidence in verification of the recital as to the existence of the debt from the testator to the executrix, none could be discovered:—Held, that the trustees could not be compelled to execute these trusts without further evidence of the settlor's title to appropriate the fund. Neale v. Davies, 5 De G. M. & G. 258.

4. Where there is a joint power of appointing new trustees in a settlement, and the parties are separated and cannot agree, and the husband refuses to appoint or approve of a person nominated by the wife merely for that reason, a claim by him dismissed with costs. Fry v. Watson, 1 W. R. 282.

5. By a marriage settlement, certain policies of assurance affected by the husband upon his life were assigned to trustees upon trust to pay the proceeds to the wife for life, and then to divide the capital between the children of the marriage. The settlement also contained a covenant on the part of the husband to pay the premiums, and hand over the receipts to the trustees. There was also a power for the husband and wife jointly to appoint new trustees, with a proviso that on such appointment the old trustees should convey to the new trustees. The husband and wife jointly executed the power of appointing new trustees; the old trustees refused to execute a conveyance of the trust property, upon which a bill was filed to compel them to do so:—Held, that there was nothing vested in the trustees; consequently there was nothing for them to do, and nothing for the Court to direct them to do: and the bill was dismissed with costs. Dodson v. Powell, 18 L. J., N. S., Ch., 237.

6. When the power to appoint new trustees directs the property to be vested in the new trustees jointly with the surviving or continuing trustee, and the surviving trustee had become bankrupt:—Held, that, notwithstanding, a valid appointment of and transfer of the estate to the new trustee might be made under the power. Re Roche, 2 Dr. & War. 287; 1 Con. & L. 306.

7. Seemle, that is the duty of a trustee parting with a fund to a new trustee to inform him of all notices he has received affecting the fund. Re Booth's Settlement Trusts, 1 W. R. 444; 16 Jur. 965.

8. Seemle, that new trustees of trust funds in settlement are not bound to inquire of the old trustees whether they have received notice of any incumbrance. Phipps v. Lovegrove, Prosser v. Phipps, 16 L. R., Eq., 80; 42 L. J., Ch., 892; 21 W. R. 590; 28 L. T., N. S., 584.

9. As to liability of new trustees for breaches of trust. See Exp. Geaves, Re Strahan, 8 De G. M. & G. 291; 2 Jur., N. S., 651; 25 L. J., Bk., 53; 4 W. R. 356.

2. Number Appointed, 6977.

3. Effect of Conveyancing Act 1881, s. 31, 6978.

1. Who may Appoint.

8. When an express power contained in a will for the appointment of new trustees by the surviving or continuing trustees had not been acted on, the Court refused to compel the legatees to acquiesce in an appointment by the executor of the last surviving trustees, under 23 & 24 Vict., c. 145, s. 27. Re Jackson, 16 W. R. 572; 18 L. T., N. S., 80.

9. One of the trustees of a deed of separation which contained no power of appointment of new trustees having died:—Held, that the power was vested in the surviving trustee by 23 & 24 Vict., c. 145, s. 27, and a petition by the husband claiming the right of selection was dismissed. Re Southby, 21 W. R. 256.

10. A settlement executed in 1878 contained no express power to appoint new trustees, but there was a declaration that the husband and wife during their joint lives, and the survivor of them during his or her life, "shall have power to appoint new trustees or a new trustee for this settlement." There was no express reference to the power of appointing new trustees conferred by a 27 of Lord Cranworth's Act, which was then in force:—Held, that, after the commencement of the Conveyancing Act 1881, the husband and wife were the proper persons to exercise the power conferred by s. 31 of that Act of appointing a new trustee in place of one of the trustees who had remained out of the United Kingdom for more than twelve months, though s. 27 of Lord Cranworth's Act did not provide for, and the parties when they executed the settlement probably did not contemplate, the occurrence of a vacancy in that event. Re Walker, and Hughes' Contract, 24 L. R., Ch. D., 698; 49 L. T. 597.

2. Number Appointed.

11. A testator appointed A. (the tenant for life) and B. trustees. The will contained no power to appoint new trustees. B. having disclaimed, A., under 23 & 24 Vict., c. 145, s. 27, appointed a single trustee in his place:—Held, that the other cestuis que trustent were entitled to have a third trustee appointed, and that the statute did not take away the jurisdiction of the Court to increase the original number of trustees. D'Adhemar v. Bertrand, 35 Beav. 19.

1. The power of appointing new trustees given by s. 27 of the Act 23 & 24 Vict., c. 145, authorises a retiring trustee, one of two originally appointed, to appoint a single trustee in place of himself, the other original trustee having previously disclaimed without acting. West of England & South Wales District Bank v. Murch, Re Booker, 23 L. R., Ch. D., 8; 52 L. J., Ch., 784; 48 L. T. 417; 31 W. R. 467.

3. Effect of Conveyancing Act 1881, s. 31.

2. Sect. 31 of the Conveyancing Act 1881 having given a power to appoint new trustees in every case where a trust is subsisting, it is now improper to apply to the Court for the appointment of new trustees under the Trustee Act 1850, s. 32, unless there is some reason to make it "difficult, inexpedient, or impracticable to appoint them without the assistance of the Court" other than the mere absence of a power to do so in the instrument creating the trust. Re Gibbon's Trusts, 45 L. T. 756; 30 W. R. 287.

- I. General Position of Trustee, 6978.
- II. Trustee de facto, 6979.
- III. Possession of Cestui que Trust, 6979.
- IV. Right of Cestui que Trust to Alienate, 6980.
- V. Duty of Trustee to convey Legal Estate or to transfer Fund to Cestui que Trust, 6980.

I. GENERAL POSITION OF TRUSTEE.

3. Mere trustee has no right to traverse inquisition. Re Sadler, 1 Madd. 581.

4. Trustees not to take advantage of their own laches. Kentish v. Newman, 1 P. W. 236.

5. The Court will not take a trust deed out of the possession of the bankrupt's trustees. Esp. Holder, 3 Dea. & Ch., 276; 2 L. J., N. S., Bk., 64.

6. A trustee is bound to preserve evidence of his acts. Aspland v. Watts, 25 L. J., Ch., 53; 3 W. R. 526.

7. It is the duty of trustees to obtain information of the disposition of the trust fund. Walker v. Symonds, 3 Swan. 58.

8. No trustee of property having a right, the exercise of which conflicts with his duties as a trustee, can, even with the consent of his cestuis que trustent, enforce his own right to their detriment. Cook v. Addison, 38 L. J., Ch., 322; 7 L. R., Eq., 466; 17 W. R. 480; 20 L. T., N. S., 212.

9. Trustees cannot set up, as against their cestuis que trustent, the adverse title of third parties. Newsome v. Flowers, 30 Beav. 461.

10. A person who has accepted property as a trustee, and held it as such, is not at liberty to dispute the title of his cestui que trust, though that title may be doubtful. Neligan v. Rooke, 7 Ir. R., Eq., 332.

11. It would be dangerous where a person enters on the foot of a trust, and never makes a declaration of his having performed the trust, in pursuance of the will, to construe this such an entry, as that a fine and non-claim would bar the right of plaintiff, a remainderman. Shields v. Atkins, 3 Atk. 560.

12. Upon a trust in equity, no estate can be gained by disseisin, abatement, or intrusion while the trustee continues in possession of the land, neither will Equity suffer a merger of the trust estate. Hopkins v. Hopkins, 1 Atk. 591.

13. It is not competent to a trustee to dispute the title of his cestui que trust; neither does the Court listen to imputations of imbecility against a grantor in the absence of those beneficially interested. Pearson v. Lindley, 2 Jur. 758.

14. A seceding congregation of a chapel attempted to obtain possession of it by procuring some of their body to be appointed new trustees. In a suit to set aside the appointment:—Held, that the new trustees could not raise as a defence, that the congregation had departed from the original form of worship, and that such an objection could only be made available on an information filed by them and raising the question. Newsome v. Flowers, 30 Beav. 461.

15. Position, duty, and liability of a trustee for infants of an estate created by an invalid deed or a deed of doubtful validity, and which is impeached by other parties. Elsey v. Lutyens, 8 Hare 159.

16. A trustee will be restrained from using the legal powers that have been conferred upon him otherwise than for the legitimate purposes of his trust, and therefore a demurrer for want of equity cannot be sustained to a bill seeking such relief, although the plaintiff may have a remedy at law. Balls v. Strutt, 1 Hare 146; 5 Jur. 1035.

Where the plaintiff, as a drawer of a bill, indorsed it in trust for himself, and it was again indorsed by the defendant on the like trust, to a person who commenced an action on the bill against the plaintiff:—Held, that the Court would restrain a trustee from using the powers conferred on him otherwise than for the real purposes of the trust, and a demurrer to a bill (to restrain the defendant from negotiating, and for having the bill delivered up), for want of equity, overruled, notwithstanding the plaintiff might also have a remedy at law. Id.

17. A trustee is entitled to act on his own judgment, and is not bound to follow the opinions of the cestuis que trustent. Selby v. Bowie, 9 Jur., N. S., 432; 11 W. R. 606; 8 L. T., N. S., 372; 1 N. R. 420; 2 N. R. 2.

18. Trustees with power to change stocks, cannot thereby change cestui que trust's interests. Lord v. Godfrey, 4 Madd. 455.

19. No act of the trustee can vary the right of the cestui que trust, but his situation may; as where the cestui que trust is his heir, and the right to dower depends upon which dies first. Selby v. Alston, 3 Ves. 341.

20. A trustee who is in possession of land

so on behalf of his cestuis que trustent, and his making a mistake as to the persons who really are his cestuis que trustent cannot affect the rights of the cestuis que trustent inter se. Lister v. Pickford, 34 Beav. 576.

A. was equitable tenant for life of the Whiteacre estate, with a legal remainder to B. in tail. The trustee of the life estate had a power of entering during the minority of a tenant in tail. When A. entered into possession of the Whiteacre estate, he also wrongfully took possession of a piece of land vested in the trustees, in trust for C., and such wrongful possession continued till his death, eight years after. At that time B. was an infant, and the trustees entered upon this piece of land, believing that it formed part of the Whiteacre estate, and they dealt with the rents accordingly:—Held, that the trustees' possession enured for the benefit of C., their real cestui que trust. S. C. 6 N. R. 243.

1. The necessary funds having been subscribed by certain parties, a piece of land was purchased and conveyed by deed to trustees, for a charitable purpose. Under this deed the trustees entered into and continued in possession for several years; and with the acquiescence of all the subscribers, including some not parties to the deed, a considerable expenditure was made, and heavy liabilities were incurred:—Held, that, even assuming the subscribers not parties to the deed had an equitable interest in the land in respect of the moneys subscribed by them, yet they would not be heard to assert a title to the land adverse to that of the trustees. Att.-Gen. v. Munro, 9 Jur. 461.

2. A trustee has as much the benefit of the pleading of this court, as he that has the equitable interest; and a cestui que trust is entitled to have the privilege maintained by the trustee. Suffolk (Earl) v. Green, 1 Atk. 450.

3. A trustee cannot, upon receiving a proper indemnity, refuse the use of his name to his cestui que trust for the purpose of prosecuting an appeal in the House of Lords, on the ground that he thinks such appeal unreasonable, and that he is the solicitor of the party in whose favour the decree appealed from was made. Pakington v. Benbow, 5 W. R. 670; 29 L. T. 194.

4. The non-interference of the trustees for a long period does not preclude them or their representatives from sustaining a suit for carrying the trust into effect, so long as the trust subsists. But, semble, on the contrary it is the duty of the trustees or their representatives to take steps for enforcing the trust. Hughes v. Wells, 9 Hare 749; 16 Jur. 927.

5. A cestui que trust is entitled to inspection of the deed creating the trust, notwithstanding that the trustee alleges that by the exercise of a power contained in the deed the cestui que trust's interest under it has ceased. Bugden v. Tylee, 21 Beav. 545.

6. Quære, whether a cestui que trust can have an injunction to restrain his trustees from assenting to a bill in Parliament. Parker v. River Dunn Navigation Co., 1 De G. & Sm. 192; 11 Jur. 624.

Adverse Possession of Trustee. See LIMITATIONS. STATUTE OF, X. XIV.

VOL. VII.

II. TRUSTEE DE FACTO.

7. A person who assumes the character of a trustee incurs the responsibility of a trustee. Rackham v. Siddall, 16 Sim. 297; 12 Jur. 640.

A party assuming to act as heir or devisee of a trustee, and committing an act which, if done by the trustee, would have been a breach of trust, cannot relieve himself of liability by asserting that he was not acting as trustee. S. C. 1 Macn. & G. 607; 2 H. & Tw. 44.

8. Although the responsibility of trustees may be extended in equity to persons who are not properly trustees, if they are found either making themselves trustees de son tort, or actively participating in any fraudulent conduct of the trustee, to the injury of the cestui que trust, yet strangers are not to be made constructive trustees, merely because they act as agents of trustees in transactions within their legal power, even though such transactions may be such as the Court would not approve of. Barnes v. Addy, 9 L. R., Ch., 244; 43 L. J., Ch., 513; 22 W. R. 505; 30 L. T., N. S., 4. Affirming 21 W. R. 324; 28 L. T., N. S., 398.

9. A person taking upon himself to act as trustee cannot set up as an excuse for a breach of trust that he did not know what the trusts were, or what were the legal consequences of the acts done by him in relation to the trust estate. Pearce v. Pearce, 25 L. J., Ch., 893; 2 Jur., N. S., 843; 22 Beav. 248.

See also VI. ante, and Cross References there.

III. POSSESSION OF CESTUI QUE TRUST.

10. It is not of course to let a cestui que trust under a will into possession of estate; it must depend on the testator's intention. Tidd v. Lister, 5 Madd. 429.

11. Equity will never permit the trustee to evict his cestui que trust. Shine v. Gough, 1 Ball & B. 445.

12. Trustees, who joined with remainderman to eject cestui que trust for life, not excused from making good the whole rent reserved by subsequent accidental deficiencies. Inquiry directed as to the interference of remainderman. Kaye v. Powell, 1 Ves. J. 408.

13. A trustee allowed one of his cestuis que trustent to have the trust fund, with a view to its investment in the foreign funds. The cestui que trust went to America, and invested it in his own name; he afterwards sold out a part, and, remitting the money to agents in London, came home. The trustee impounded the money so remitted, in the Lord Mayor's Court, and this Court granted an injunction, restraining proceedings on the part of the cestui que trust to get it out. Hopkins v. Newton, 9 L. J., Ch., 227.

14. Tenant for life subject to a trust term, not let in possession before account, till the trust is executed; unless on paying into court a sum sufficient to answer it, or where the best way of performing the trust appears to be by letting him into possession. Blake v. Bunbury, 1 Ves. J. 194.

Tenant for life let into possession on consent and giving security to pay charges, payable out of rents and profits, and to keep down interest of the fund to answer contingent charges. S. C. 1 Ves. J. 514; 4 Bro. C. C. 21.

1. Upon the construction of a devise of real property:—Held, that an equitable tenant for life was entitled to the personal enjoyment of the property upon giving security for the due fulfilment of the objects of testator's will. Baylies v. Baylies, 1 Colly. 587.

2. Where a testator bequeaths a life interest in freeholds, by way either of legal or of equitable estate, and the freehold is dilapidated, and extensive repairs are required, the Court will not withhold possession from the devisee for life, in order to impose upon him terms as to the execution of the repairs. Warren v. Rudall, 1 John. & H. 1.

3. Where a trustee of a term of years, upon the usual trusts for securing annuities, has taken possession of the estates under the trusts, the Court, although all arrears of the annuities may afterwards be paid, will not order possession to be given up to the grantor, except upon such terms as will enable the trustee to resume it, and to receive the rents, the moment the annuities are again in arrear. Jenkins v. Milford, 1 Jac. & Walk. 629.

4. The possession of the cestui que trust under the trusts of a settlement is the possession of the trustee, and gives the trustee a seisin of the estate, which is not interrupted by the death of the cestui que trust, but immediately enures for the benefit of the person next entitled to the equitable interest; and notwithstanding the adverse possession of another party soon afterwards commenced, the Court cannot presume such adverse possession to have commenced so instantaneously on the death of the first cestui que trust as wholly to exclude the equitable seisin of the parties next entitled to the beneficial interest. Parker v. Carter, 4 Hare 400.

5. W. devised estates in trust to pay the rents, issues, and profits unto, or permit the same to be received and taken by, his daughter S. H., the wife of T. H., during her life, for her sole and separate use, free from the control of her husband, her receipt alone being a sufficient discharge for the same; and after the decease of S. H., to convert the estates into money, and to pay and divide such money unto and equally amongst her children as she should appoint. The trustees having, as alleged, refused to account for the rents and profits received, a bill was filed for the administration of W.'s estate. The Court, on motion for that purpose by S. H., ordered that she should be permitted to enter into the possession of the receipt of the rents and profits of the estates devised in trust for her separate use. Horner v. Wheelwright, 2 Jur., N. S., 367.

6. A dissenting minister, placed in possession of a chapel and dwelling-house by persons in whom the legal estate is vested in trust to suffer the chapel to be used for the purpose of religious worship, is, at law, tenant at will to those persons. Perry v. Shipway, 1 Giff. 1; 5 Jur., N. S., 535; 7 W. R. 406; 33 L. T. 1023. Affirmed 5 Jur., N. S., 1015; 28 L. J., Ch., 660; 7 W. R. 574; 33 L. T. 251.

7. The fact that the Court in its discretion might upon terms put an equitable tenant for life into possession, or take the receipt of the rents from the trustees and give them to him, does not make him a person "entitled to the possession, or to the receipt of the rents and profits," within s. 32 of the Sales of Settled

Estates Act, 19 & 20 Vict., c. 120. Taylor v. Taylor, Exp. Taylor, 44 L. J., Ch., 727; 20 L. R., Eq., 297; 23 W. R. 947; 33 L. T., N. S., 89.

8. A. being entitled under a will to the use of certain articles of plate for her life, pawned them with B., who kept an open pawnbroker's shop. Bill was filed by the representatives of the testator, after the death of A., against B., for a discovery of the different articles pawned, in order to enable the plaintiffs to proceed in an action at law, for the recovery of them. To this discovery the defendant pleaded, that certain articles of plate were deposited with him, for certain sums of money bond fide lent and advanced thereon to A.; but he did not by his plea (though he did by his answers aver, that he had no other articles of plate in his possession). For this defect in point of form the plea was overruled. The defendant then insisted on the same point by his answer in bar to the discovery, but the Court thought, that where a plea to a bill of discovery was overruled, the defendant could never insist on the same thing by answer. Hoare v. Parker, 1 Cox 224; 1 Bro. C. C. 578. And see 2 T. R. 376.

9. The wife is not debarred of her paraphernalia, by a bequest of the use of all household goods, furniture, plate, jewels, linen, etc., for life. Marshall v. Blen, 2 Atk. 217.

Such a bequest entitles her to use the goods anywhere, or even to let them out to hire. Ib.

IV. RIGHT OF CESTUI QUE TRUST TO ALIENATE.

10. Courts of equity have given the same power to cestui que trust, as to alienation, as if it were a use executed. Hopkins v. Hopkins, 1 Atk. 591.

11. A trustee cannot prevent his cestui que trust from making an effectual gift of his interest in the trust property or any part of it. Kekewich v. Manning, 1 De G. M. & G. 176; 21 L. J., N. S., Ch., 577; 16 Jur. 625.

See also Next Subdivision.

V. DUTY OF TRUSTEE TO CONVEY LEGAL ESTATE OR TO TRANSFER FUNDS TO CESTUI QUE TRUST.

12. A cestui que trust in tail brings a bill against the trustees to the intent they should join in a recovery; this not proper; but it is proper to pray that the trustees may convey the premises to the cestui que trust in tail, who may then suffer a recovery, though, if the trustees are also trustees for any annuities subsisting, they are not compellable to part with the legal estate out of them, to the cestui que trust in tail. Carteret v. Carteret, 2 P. W. 133.

13. One buys an estate in the name of a trustee, who gives a bond in 200l. penalty to assign the estate as the cestui que trust or his executor shall direct; cestui que trust dies, and his executor brings debt on the bond and recovers judgment, and has the money paid him, after which he brings a bill to have a conveyance of the estate; trustee to convey to the plaintiff, and to account for the profits, but in account is to be allowed the 200*l.* and interest which he paid. Moorecroft v. Downing, 2 P. W. 314; 2 Eq., Ca. Abr., 746; pl. 3.

1. The trustee of a mortgage holds same in trust to the extent of the mortgage for the mortgagee, subject thereto for the mortgagors, and he cannot do anything to prejudice the mortgagors. The trust of a mortgage, as between mortgagor and mortgagee, differs from that of an outstanding term in a third person unconnected with either of the parties seeking the legal estate, the only question there being, which had the better equity to call for the legal estate. Blennerhasset v. Day, 2 Ball & B. 133.

2. In a clear case of a fee simple interest, the limitation being to the heir male of the tenant for life and the heirs of such heirs male, a conveyance was decreed, with costs, against the trustee of the will, who set up a title derived from the tenant for life, supposing her to have an estate of inheritance by virtue of the rule, and also a clause in testator's will, which was clearly void for perpetuity, under which it was alleged plaintiff had forfeited his interest. Willis v. Hiscox, 4 Myl. & C. 197; 4 Jur. 738.

3. Where a trust estate descended to one who refused to execute a conveyance to the cestui que trust, after it had been approved by his solicitor, unless he were paid a sum of money, the Court ordered the conveyance, with costs against the defendant. Watts v. Turner, 1 Russ. & M. 634.

4. Trustee of a term in trust for securing to a mortgagee in fee (with a power of sale) his mortgage money, and subject thereto in trust for the mortgagor, his heirs, etc., decreed, in a plain case, to pay the costs of a suit brought against him to compel him to execute a deed for surrendering the term to a purchaser from the mortgagee. Hampshire v. Bradley, 2 Colly. 34.

5. Infant died seised of equitable estate descended ex parte maternâ. His incapacity to call for conveyance of legal estate (whereby course of descent might be changed) is not reason for it to be considered as actually done, it being trustee's duty not to convey till called upon. Langley v. Sneyd, 1 Sim. & S. 45; 1 L. J., Ch., 14.

6. Where cestui que trust of a term had put an end to the trusts thereof:—Held, that though the purchaser had a right to an assignment of it, yet the trustees not having received full information as to the determination of the trust, they were justified in refusing to execute an assignment, without the sanction of the Court, and were allowed their costs. Holford v. Phipps, 3 Beav. 434; 10 L. J., N. S., Ch., 209. And see S. C. 4 Beav. 475; 5 Jur. 31.

7. By an indenture made in contemplation of marriage, certain leasehold property belonging to the intended wife was conveyed to trustees on certain trusts; and the trusts of a sum of stock, also belonging to the intended wife, which had been transferred into the names of the trustees, were declared. The marriage did not take effect; and soon after the date of the indenture, the lady married another person. In a suit instituted by the husband and wife against the trustees, it was ordered that the leasehold property should be conveyed to the husband, and the stock transferred into his name. Thomas v. Brennan, 15 L. J., N. S., Ch., 420; 11 Jur. 95.

8. Certain copyhold lands having been devised to trustees for the benefit of a charity, and the copyholds having been enfranchised, the Court directed the trustees to convey the legal estate to the company. Att.-Gen. v. Clothworkers' Co., 17 L. J., N. S., Ch., 456.

9. Where a fund is vested by a settlement in trustees for A. for life and over, and the reversion has been subsequently settled, the person entitled to the life interest and the trustees of the subsequent settlement are entitled to call for a transfer of the trust fund, and can give the original trustees an effectual discharge although the settlement does not provide for a transfer or payment by anticipation. Anson v. Potter, 13 L. R., Ch. D., 141; 41 L. T. 582.

10. The relation of father and daughter does not of itself render the validity of an arrangement between persons thus related, respecting a reversionary interest of the daughter, so doubtful as to justify a trustee in refusing to transfer a fund, in pursuance of the arrangement, without the indemnity of the Court. A trustee so refusing, and who did not show that he had endeavoured to ascertain the real nature of the transaction, was decreed to pay costs. Firmin v. Pullham, 2 De G. & Sm. 99; 12 Jur. 410.

11. A bare trustee who, under s. 31 of the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 74, is protector of a settlement, can insist on retaining the legal estate, only so long as the purposes of the trust exist, that is, so long as, according to the rules of the Court of Equity, he is required to be a trustee. Buttansham v. Martin, 1 John. 89; 5 Jur., N. S., 647.

Therefore, where there was a devise of lands to trustees upon trusts for the testator's daughter during her life, for her separate use without power of anticipation, with remainder to the use of her children as tenants in common in tail, with remainders over:—Held, that the testator's daughter, having become discoverte and being sui juris, could compel a conveyance by the trustees of the legal estate. Id.

12. When a purchaser of a mere equitable interest in property, after a conveyance of it to him, files a bill to obtain from the trustees the legal estate, the vendors may, without filing a cross-bill, set up the invalidity of the purchase. Hannah v. Hodgson, 30 Beav. 19; 7 Jur., N. S., 1092.

Real estates, devised for sale, were vested in trust for parents for life, with remainder for their children. In 1839 the parents and children sold and conveyed their interests to the plaintiff, who remained in undisturbed possession until the death of the tenants for life. In 1858 the purchaser filed a bill against the trustee and the vendors, to obtain the legal estate. The Court, on the ground of the unfairness of the transaction, as regarded the children, dismissed the bill, but refused to grant any active relief to the defendants. Id.

Where a 'Series of Equitable Interests Exists.' 13. The owner of an equitable estate conveyed it to trustees upon trust for sale, and by a deed of even date with the conveyance, declared the trusts upon which the produce of the sale were to be applied. The party who had the mere legal estate and no beneficial interest, refused to convey it to the equitable trustee unless the persons interested as cestui que trust under deed of even date were made parties to the conveyance:—Held, that he was not justified in that refusal, but as he acted bona fide, under the advice of a conveyancer of character, the Court made the decree against him without costs. Angier v. Stannard, 3 Myl. & K. 566; 3 L. J., N. S., Ch., 216.

1. If the trustees of a term and the cestui que trust are before the Court, an intermediate trustee of the equitable interest need not be the party to a bill filed to carry the trusts of the term into execution. Head v. Teynham, 1 Cox 57.

2. A trustee under a deed held freehold premises in trust for L. S., her heirs and assigns, for her and their own use and benefit. L. S., by her will, devised these premises, among others, to trustees, in trust to sell, and out of the proceeds to pay debts and legacies, the legacies being specified in a certain paper marked A. This paper not being forthcoming, the trustee of the deed, offering to pay the debts, claimed to be entitled to retain the trust premises for his own benefit. On a bill filed, however, by the trustees of the will, a conveyance to them was directed, the Lord Chancellor holding that the will gave them a title as against the trustee of the deed, who had nothing to do with the question how the premises would be disposed of in consequence of the trustees of the will not being able to carry the trusts into full effect. Onslow v. Wallis, 1 Macn. & G. 506; 1 H. & Tw. 513; 19 L. J., N. S., Ch., 27; 13 Jur. 1085. Affirming 16 Sim. 485.

3. If A., for valuable consideration, undertakes to surrender a copyhold to B., and B., on borrowing money from C., enters into a written agreement with C. that he, B., will surrender the same copyhold to C., by way of mortgage security; A. is not justified in refusing to surrender the copyhold to B., because he, A., has received notice from C. of the agreement between him and B. The surrender by A. to B. does not prejudice, but promotes that agreement. — v. Walford, 4 Russ. 372.

4. Real estates were devised to a trustee upon trust, on a given event, to convey them to certain parties, upon one of them electing which he would take. A party, in whom, as satisfied mortgagee at the date of the will and death of the testator, a satisfied mortgage term in one of the estates was held bound to execute a deed of surrender of the term to the trustee, and the cestui que trust were held not to be necessary parties thereto. Pooler v. Pass, 1 Beav. 600; 8 L. J., N. S., Ch., 323.

5. A married woman having a general power of appointment by will over a fund vested in trustees, appointed the fund in favour of specific persons, and nominated executors of her will:—Held, that the administration of the fund was vested in the executors, and not in the original trustees. Re Philbrick, 11 Jur., N. S., 558; 34 L. J., Ch., 368; 13 W. R. 570; 12 L. T., N. S., 261.

6. When a person having a special power of appointment over a fund of personalty appoints trustees for the objects of the power, the Court, though recognising the validity of such an appointment, will not, as a matter of right, transfer the fund to the trustees appointed by the donee of the power. Busk v. Aldam, 19 L. R., Eq., 16.

7. Under a settlement a sum of 10,000*l.*, secured by mortgage, was vested in trustees for the wife of S. for her life, and after her death, for S. for his life, and subject as aforesaid, for such persons as the wife should by deed or will appoint, and in default of appointment for S. The wife made a will, by which she directed that her husband should enjoy the income of the fund during his life, subject to payment of two annuities; and she directed certain pecuniary legacies to be paid, after his death, out of one moiety of the fund, and she gave the other moiety of the fund and the residue of her property to her husband, whom she appointed executor. The trustees of the settlement paid over the whole trust fund to the husband; and part of the 5,000*l.* applicable to the payment of the pecuniary legacies was lost by him:—Held, that the payment to him was proper, and that the trustees were not answerable for the loss. Hayes v. Oatley, 14 L. R., Eq., 1; 26 L. T., N. S., 26; 41 L. J., Ch., 510.

Refusal to pay Trust Money to Cestui que Trust.] 8. A trustee who, on untenable grounds, withholds trust money from his cestui que trust may commit what in equity may be considered a fraud, without being chargeable with personal fraud. Thompson v. Eastwood, 2 L. R., App. Cas., 215.

A legacy was given on an express trust in 1807; it was not paid to the original legatee. He became insolvent, released the legacy, and died. His only child came of age in 1849. Litigation on matters connected with the legacy, but not upon a direct claim to it, was going on in 1865. A. took an assignment of the legacy, and also became the administrator of the original legatee's estate, and the assignee under his insolvency; in 1872 he filed a bill to enforce payment of the legacy with interest. He was held entitled to the assistance of a court of equity in respect of it. Ib.

9. A trustee is always justified in refusing to pay over a wife's fund to the husband, even at her request, and insisting on affording her an opportunity of asserting her equity to a settlement. Re Swan, 3 Hem. & M. 34; 12 W. R. 738.

10. By a marriage settlement, the income of funds, part of which had previously been the property of the husband, was settled on the wife for her separate use. She was also entitled to the separate use under the same settlement of an annuity covenanted by the husband's father to be paid to her during his life. After having been married some years, the wife had eloped and was living in adultery. No proceedings had been taken in the divorce court. The trustees of the settlement having refused to pay to the wife since her elopement the income accruing to her from that part of the fund which was formerly her husband's, and the proceeds of the annuity, upon a bill by the wife to enforce the trusts of the settlement:—Ordered, that the trusts be performed, with costs to be paid by the husband and the trustees. Goldsmid v. Heathcote, 10 L. T., N. S., 811.

The Court of Chancery does not undertake to vindicate the laws of morality, nor can the Court interfere with the laws of property, and the adultery of the wife (in the absence of any clause of forfeiture in the settlement) furnishes no ground why the Court should not compel trustees to fulfil the trusts of the settlement. Id.

1. A testator left all his property to trustees on trust for his wife for life, and all the residue to A. H., daughter of his brother W., absolutely. The testator's brother W. had three daughters, E., M., and M. A., the plaintiff, who had long prior to the will been Mrs. S., and on the ground of the doubt of identity the trustees refused to pay over the residue:—Held, that the refusal was not warranted by the circumstances; that the plaintiff's second name being A., and she being a daughter of the testator's brother W., was sufficient. Southwell v. Martin, 21 L. T., N. S., 135.

I. IN GENERAL.

2. Trustee cannot change the nature of the estate, by turning money into land, or a lease for years into a freehold, et c. conerso. Witter v. Witter, 3 P. W. 100.

3. A trustee, for a particular purpose, must not intermix the trust fund with other trust funds and apply the whole in the manner he thinks fit. Att.-Gen. v. Goldsmith's Co., C. P. C. 292.

4. It is not of course to let the cestui que trust under a will into possession of an estate; it must depend on the testator's intention. Tidd v. Lister, 5 Madd. 429.

5. Power to trustees to lay out money on securities, includes power to give discharges to borrowers. Wood v. Harman, 5 Madd. 368.

6. Trustees may render the property of their beneficiaries liable to third persons for an act done by them in the exercise of their trust. Morsey Dock Trustees v. Gibbs, 11 H. L. Ca. 686.

7. Quere, whether the trustee of leaseholds settled to separate use of married woman, is bound to see that head rents are paid, or liable as for wilful default, if the premises are evicted for non-payment of rent. Booth v. Purser, 1 Ir. Eq. R. 40.

8. Where a manor is conveyed to trustees upon trust, to divide the profits of it amongst the tenants of the manor, it is the duty of the trustees not to let the right of sporting to any of the tenants, upon terms advantageous to them as tenants; but to make the best profit they can by letting the right of sporting to all eligible persons, whether tenants or otherwise, and to divide the profit so made ratably amongst the cestui que trustent. Hutchinson v. Morritt, 3 Y. & Coll. 547.

9. A trustee letting a farm originally at a proper rent will not be held personally liable for the difference between that rent and the rent which, at a subsequent period of the tenancy, might have been obtained, merely because he neglected to give notice to quit a few months after there appeared to be a probability that the price of agricultural produce would enable him, with propriety as between landlord and tenant, to obtain a higher rent. And, semble, that rule would be applicable even to a case in which the tenant was a near relation to the trustee, unless there were some other circumstances to confirm the suspicion of personal favour which that relationship is calculated to excite. Ferraby v. Hobson, 2 Ph. 255; 16 L. J., N. S., Ch., 499.

10. Under a devise of manors, lands, etc., to A., his executors, etc., for a term of eleven years, in trust to receive the rents, issues, and profits of the premises that should from time to time accrue and become due, and dispose of the same for the benefit of a certain cestui que trust; A. may, by the directions of the cestui que trust, and for his benefit, assign the advowson of a rectory appendant to a manor, to a purchaser for the said term of eleven years, to intent that purchaser may present for the next turn, in case of an avoidance before the expiration of term, and in case of such avoidance, the purchaser may present accordingly. Albemarle (Lord) v. Rogers, 7 Bro. P. C. 522.

11. In taking accounts against a trustee when he is to be fixed with a personal liability, his good faith is to be considered, and every fair allowance is to be made in his favour, especially if the demand against him is one which arose many years ago, and the beneficiary was at the time cognisant of all the matters connected with it. McDonnell v. White, 11 H. L. Ca. 271.

A., being greatly in debt, executed a deed of trust for the benefit of creditors; and among the property assigned under the trust deed was a lease for lives renewable for ever, on which the rent reserved was really a high rack-rent; the tenant complained, and the trustee, with the knowledge of A., though without his consent, but with the full assent of

A.'s brother, to whom A. had committed the management of his affairs, received from the tenant an abated rent. A. complained of the abatement, but he took no steps to put an end to it:—Held, that the estate of the trustee could not after the expiration of the trust be called on to make up the deficiency. Ib.

1. By a marriage settlement a lunatic asylum was assigned to trustees on trust at the request of the husband and wife to sell and to stand possessed of the proceeds of the sale for the benefit of the wife and children; but the trustees were to allow the husband to carry on the business of the asylum without paying any rent, but paying certain premiums and other moneys. The husband became bankrupt, and thereupon the surviving trustee of the settlement entered into possession of the asylum, and carried on the business until the asylum was sold for a large sum of money. A tradesman had supplied the trustee with goods for the use of the asylum, and brought an action claiming payment out of the trust funds of the settlement:—Held, that on the construction of the settlement the trustee would not have been entitled to recover moneys advanced by him for the purposes of the asylum, and that consequently the tradesman who had no better right could not recover. Strickland v. Symons, 22 L. R., Ch. D., 666; 52 L. J., Ch., 423; 48 L. T. 188; 31 W. R. 888.

2. An agent of a foreign railway company deposited with the plaintiffs, who were bankers in England, certain bonds of the company, and a sum of 5,000*l.* to guarantee the payment of the interest on the same bonds, which was payable at the plaintiff's bank; and in case of non-payment of the interest the 5,000*l.* was to be forfeited, and divided among the bondholders. The interest was not duly paid:—Held, that the plaintiffs were trustees of the money for an unascertained class of individuals, and that they could not be called upon to ascertain, at their own risk and expense, who was included in that class; and therefore one who claimed to be an unsatisfied bondholder, and had in that character commenced an action against the plaintiffs for part of the 5,000*l.*, was restrained by injunction. Hankey v. Morley, 4 Jur., N. S., 234.

II. PAYMENTS AND ADVANCES. ALLOWANCE OF.

3. Upon marriage, certain stock was settled in trust for the husband for life, remainder to the wife for life, with remainder to the children of the marriage. After the death of the husband, A. and B. became trustees of the fund; and an account was opened between B. and the widow, in respect of certain receipts and payments and bills of costs, upon which account there was an apparent balance due to B. B., as trustee, received the dividends of the trust funds, to which the widow was entitled to for life:—Held, that B. was entitled to retain, out of such dividends, the balance due to him from the widow. Russell v. Buchanan, 9 L. J., N. S., Ch., 129.

4. A., who was a trustee for B. of 1,000*l.* South Sea stock, at the desire of B. borrows 1,000*l.* on this stock of the company, and B.

receives the money; A. pays the 10 per cent., on 7 Geo. 1, sess. 2, s. 7, to be discharged of the loan: though B. forbade the payment, yet he is liable. Baleh v. Hykam, 2 P. W. 453.

5. A testator, after devising lands on trust to constitute a grammar school, directed that the trustees should have the management of it, and should appoint a master and usher, and pay to them respectively 50*l.* a year, and 30*l.* a year; the trustees established a school, which, however, from mistake was not conducted as a free grammar school, and the rents of the charity lands having increased, an augmentation was made to the salaries of the master and usher:—Held, that the trustees were entitled to have the sums paid in receipt of this augmentation allowed them in their accounts, notwithstanding their error in the application of the charity, and the mention of salaries of a specified amount in the will. Att. Gen. v. Christchurch (Dean), 2 Russ. 321.

6. West India estates were devised upon trust for sale, and distribution of the proceeds among the testator's children absolutely. In a suit for the administration of the trusts consignees were appointed, and pending the suit settlements were made of the children's shares, by which interests for life and in reversion were limited. In making payments which had been sanctioned by the Court, the consignees became in advance to the trust estate:—Held, that these advances were a charge upon the corpus of the trust estate. Morison v. Morison, 7 De G. M. & G. 214.

7. A husband being held liable at the suit of the children of his wife's first marriage, to replace the trust funds received by him, claimed a large sum expended in maintaining the children after the second marriage. The claim was disallowed. Grove v. Price, 26 Beav. 106.

8. A trustee, who, acting in the bona fide exercise of his discretion, makes a payment which, though not authorised by the terms of the trust, is in his opinion necessary to enable him to execute the trust, will be allowed such payment in passing his accounts; though he does not act prudently in assuming the responsibility of such a payment without the sanction of the Court. Forsham v. Higginson, 3 Jur., N. S., 476; 26 L. J., Ch., 342; 8 De G. M. & G. 827. Reversing 26 L. J., Ch., 174.

A., by will, charged his real estate with debts, and gave a legacy to B. in terms which made it an arguable question whether it was not charged on the real estate. Afterwards the estate was conveyed to trustees for sale by a deed to which the legatee was not a party. The trustees entered into a contract for sale of part of the estate on very advantageous terms. The purchaser required evidence that the legacy had been paid, but no such evidence could be found, and it appeared probable that it never had been paid. The purchaser insisting on the objection, the trustees, acting under legal advice, and considering the most advantageous course for the trust estate, paid the legacy:—Held, that the amount so paid must be allowed them in passing their accounts. Ib.

9. Infant fraudulently concealing his age, and obtaining from trustees part of stock which he was entitled to on coming of age; and when of age, a few months afterwards, applying for and receiving the residue of such stock:—Held, a fraud in infant, and that neither himself nor his assignees could enforce re-payment by trustees of stock paid during infancy, and that applying for residue of stock when of age was a recognition of first payment. Cory v. Gertchken, 2 Madd. 40.

1. The trustees of a mixed fund of realty and personalty laid out 1,600*l.*, part of the personalty, upon the erection of a house on the real estate, for the bona fide purpose of increasing the value of the whole as building land:—Held, that the trustees should not be entirely disallowed the sum so expended, but if the cestui que trust desired it, they should be ordered to take the house themselves at the price of 1,600*l.*, and the value of the site as unbuilt upon. Vyse v. Foster, 42 L. J., Ch., 245; 8 L. R., Ch., 309; 21 W. R. 207; 27 L. T., N. S., 774.

2. A father devised his real estate to trustees to pay an annuity of 6,000*l.* a year to his daughter, and subject thereto upon trust to accumulate the rents for twenty-one years, and out of the accumulated fund from time to time to pay his debts, legacies, and the incumbrances on the estates, and invest the residue in the purchase of lands to be held on the same trusts; and he directed the estates, on the expiration of the trust for accumulation, to be settled in strict settlement. He directed that as soon as the incumbrances were paid off, the annuity should be increased to 8,000*l.* He gave his residuary personal estate to his trustees to pay off the incumbrances, and apply the surplus in the same way as the accumulated rents and profits. He died leaving personalty which, within a month after his death, was ascertained to be amply sufficient to pay off his debts, legacies, and incumbrances. The trustees, however, retained a considerable part of the personal estate, as it was producing a high rate of interest; and they did not for several years pay off all the incumbrances:—Held, that the trustees were right in paying the annuity at the rate of 8,000*l.* a year from the testator's death, and must be allowed it in their accounts. Astley v. Essex (Earl), 6 L. R., Ch., 898; 25 L. T., N. S., 470.

3. Trustee and executor, although taking under will a commission as a satisfaction for trouble, is entitled to allowances under a general trust to set and manage as he should think proper, and out of the rents and profits to pay all rates and taxes, charges of repairs, stewards', bailiffs', and gamekeepers' salaries and expenses, and all other charges and expenses he should think proper; but he was not allowed to appoint an establishment, gamekeepers, etc., except as the due management required. Webb v. Shaftesbury (Earl), 7 Ves. 480.

4. Where persons entrusted with the administration of a fund have incurred legitimate and proper expenses in performing duties thrown upon them by their fiduciary situation, they have a right, both at law and in equity, to reimburse themselves out of the funds in their hands, without any special provision to that effect. Att.-Gen. v. Norrieh (Mayor), 2 Myl. & C. 407. Affirming 1 Keen 700; 1 Jur. 398.

5. Trustee, or next friend of infant, is entitled to fair expenses beyond taxed costs, under the head of just allowances. Fearn v. Young, 10 Ves. 184.

6. An executor or trustee is not to be allowed, without question, the amount of bills of costs which he has paid bona fide to the solicitor to the trust; and the Master, without regularly taxing the bills, will moderate their amount. Johnson v. Telford, 3 Russ. 477.

Fund set Apart for Payment of Expenses.]

7. As to what expenses relating to real estate are properly payable out of a fund set apart to pay, amongst other things, the expenses of executing the trusts of the will. Brougham (Lord) v. Poulett (Lord), 19 Beav. 119; 1 Jur., N. S., 151; 24 L. J., Ch., 233.

A testator declared trusts relating to his real and personal estate, and gave his personal estate to trustees, in trust to set apart and invest a sufficient fund to pay his debts, legacies, funeral expenses, expenses of providing his will, "and the execution of the trusts thereof":—Held, that the "expenses in the execution of the trusts of the will" were limited to those properly payable by the executors, in their character of executors alone, and therefore that the costs of executing the trusts of the various real estates fell on the cestuis que trustent. Id.

8. A trustee will be allowed interest upon money advanced by him, and applied in payment of his testator's debts, or otherwise on account of his personal estate. Finch v. Prescott, 23 W. R. 437; 30 L. T., N. S., 156.

III. REPAIRS, BUILDINGS, AND IMPROVEMENTS.

9. Where a testator directed his trustees to lay out money for the improvement of his estates and the erection of farmhouses and out-buildings, the Court sanctioned the building of labourers' cottages. Rivers (Lord) v. Fba, 2 Eq. Rep. 776.

10. A testator directs his trustees out of the rents and profits of his estate, to keep the mansion-house and messuages in good repair, and, if necessary, to re-build any farm building from time to time. The buildings being in a dilapidated state at the testator's death, a question arises between the tenants for life and those in remainder, as to the construction of the will in this respect:—Held, that the mansion-house and messuages must be repaired out of the annual rents and profits. That the re-building applies to farmhouses, and then only in case of their being incapable of repair, or in case of the expense of re-building being no greater—regard being had to the nature, age, dimension, and structure—than the cost of putting them into good repair. Cooke v. Cholmondeley, 6 W. R. 802; 4 Drew. 326; 4 Jur., N. S., 827; 27 L. J., Ch., 826.

11. A testator, after devising a mansion-house and farm at W., directed that all persons who should come into possession of W.

should take the name of K., it being his wish that the family of K. should be re-established there, and empowered his trustees to deduct sufficient to keep all the premises in repair, and to make such improvements, by draining, walling, building, liming, or manuring the land, at the expense of his estate, as they might think proper, or by planting for shelter or ornament. The mansion-house at W. was at the decease of the testator, and still continued, in such a want of repair as to necessitate re-building:—Held, that the power did not extend to authorise re-building against the consent of the cestuis que trustent, being of full age; and that the word "building" must be confined to building for agricultural purposes. Bleazard v. Whalley, 18 Jur. 869; 2 W. R. 608; 2 Eq., Rep. 1093.

1. A testator directed his trustees to erect a mansion-house, and suitable offices fit for the residence of the owner of his estates (which were worth about 15,000*l.* per annum), on some convenient spot:—Held, that under this direction the trustees were empowered to lay out a garden and pleasure grounds around the mansion, in addition to the houses and offices, in such a manner as the Master should direct. Lombe v. Stoughton, 17 Sim. 84; 18 L. J., N. S., Ch., 400.

2. Trustees under a will of real estates, the surplus rents and profits of which, during minority, etc., were to be invested in the purchase of other real estates, to go as the devised estates, expended very large sums of the surplus rents and profits in repairing houses, building houses, draining and fencing farms, and other similar improvements:—Held, that they were entitled to be allowed those sums in their discharge; the will containing this general direction, "that, during minority, etc., the said trustees or trustee, for the time being, of the said term, do and shall, generally, superintend the management of the same manors, hereditaments, and premises, and appoint such stewards, bailiffs, agents, and collectors, and with such salaries as they shall think proper," etc. Bowes v. Strathmore, 8 Jur. 92.

3. A trustee to whom real property is devised in trust for one for life, cannot interfere with the possession of the equitable tenant for life, because he neglects to keep the property in repair; but if the tenant for life is committing active waste, it seems that the trustee may, and probably ought to interfere, at least if the persons entitled in remainder are under disability; therefore such a trustee is not liable to the remainderman for the neglect of the tenant for life to repair. Powys v. Blagrave, 1 Kay 495; 18 Jur. 462.

4. A power to apply the rents of real estate in repairing does not imply a power to borrow money for repairing on the security of the estate. Fazakerley v. Culshaw, 19 W. R. 793; 24 L. T., N. S., 773.

The trustee of real estate, on which a dwelling-house was situate, who was empowered to lay out the rents in repairing the house, but was not empowered to borrow money for the purpose, pulled down and re-built the house, and borrowed money at interest for the purpose, which he afterwards re-paid out of the rents:—Held, that his claim for interest on the sum borrowed must be disallowed. Id.

5. Part of the property of a testator consisted of a cotton mill which he directed his trustees not to sell, nor to work themselves, but to let. The will also contained a direction to the trustees not to lend any of the personal estate on mortgage, and prescribed strict modes of investment. The cotton mill being out of repair could not be let as it then stood; the trustees, therefore, entered into a provisional agreement with a firm of cotton spinners, by which the latter agreed to take a lease of the mill for twenty-one years, and to spend large sums of money in machinery and repairs, provided the trustees advanced to them, on the security of the machinery, rather more than half the sum required for such machinery and repairs, and also spent a considerable sum in the erection of steam boilers and other landlord's fixtures. Under the terms of the will the trustees could not comply with such proposals; but, upon it being clearly proved that such an arrangement would be highly beneficial to the trust estate, and was one which it was not unusual for lessors in similar cases to enter into, the Court sanctioned the agreement, and directed the costs of all parties to the application to come out of the testator's residuary personal estate. Re Lee, 32 L. T., N. S., 298.

6. Charges by trustees for money laid out in luxuries under colour of maintenance, and for money unnecessarily expended in pulling down and re-building a house, disallowed. Bridge v. Brown, 2 Y. & Coll. C. C. 181.

7. Circumstances under which allowances will be made for maintenance, repairing, and furnishing considered. Griggs v. Gibson, 21 W. R. 818.

8. A residential estate of small extent was settled in strict settlement upon the settlor, his wife and family, and power was given to trustees, during the minority of any person entitled to the rents and profits, to re-build or repair the mansion-house, and to pay for the cost out of the rents and profits; and they also had power, with the consent of the tenant for life, to lease the property for ninety-nine years. The value of the estate to the settlor and his family depended chiefly upon the residence. Since the death of the settlor, his widow being tenant for life in possession, the house had become ruinous from the foundation having given way, and could only be rendered habitable by re-building on a new site. The Court authorised the trustees to raise by mortgage of the settled property 5,000*l.*, to be spent in re-building the residence, on being satisfied that the value of the estate, with the house, and subject to the mortgage, would not be less than if the house had been removed and the materials sold. Frith v. Cameron, 12 L. R., Eq., 169; 24 L. T., N. S., 791; 40 L. J., Ch., 778.

9. Trustees having power, during the minorities of tenants for life or in tail, to superintend the management of an estate, cut timber, erect, pull down, and repair houses, and do various other things of a more or less similar character, "and generally to deal with the premises as they or he might do if they or he were the absolute beneficial owners or owner, without being answerable for any loss or damage which might happen thereby," deposited with a bank the title deeds of the estate to secure an advance of money to be employed in the erection of buildings under the power:—Held, that the bank had no valid title under the power. Broom v. Sheffield & Rotherham Bank, 24 W. R. 948.

1. Trustees for building a chapel, having expended thereon money, borrowed on their own security with a deposit of the chapel deeds made on their own authority, and having been compelled to re-pay the amount:—Held, to have a lien on the deeds, but not to be entitled to a sale of the property to re-imburse the outlay. Darke v. Williamson, 6 W. R. 824; 4 Jur., N. S., 1009. S. C. nom. Drake v. Williamson, 25 Beav. 624.

2. When under a will real and personal estate was settled upon a person as tenant for life, with remainder to his children, but the will contained no power for investing the personal property in improving the realty, the Court, on its being shown to be beneficial for all parties, sanctioned the investment of part of the personalty in re-building the house, which was in an uninhabitable condition. Re Pearson, 21 W. R. 401; 28 L. T., N. S., 57.

3. Trustees of a term with power to apply surplus income in building and improvement were allowed to apply money standing to real estate capital account in building and improvements, including drainage. Re Leslie, 2 L. R., Ch. D., 185; 45 L. J., Ch., 668; 34 L. T. 239; 24 W. R. 546.

Trustees of real estate for a term of 1,000 years from the day of the death of the settlor, had powers, during a period of certain lives in being and twenty-one years, to manage the estates, and out of the income to keep down charges and incumbrances, and subject thereto to repair, erect new or additional buildings, and generally to make such outlay for the improvement of the estates as they should think fit or conducive to the general benefit of the estates or the tenants thereof, and hold the surplus as capital, which was to be laid out in the purchase of lands to be settled to the like uses. The settlor having died in 1870, the first tenant for life being in possession, and the income being insufficient, after keeping down charges and incumbrances, to pay for repairs, for the cost of new buildings, and generally for improvement of the property, out of capital, the Court allowed payments in draining upon which the tenants paid 5l. per cent., and in erecting new buildings. Id.

4. Certain property, comprising freeholds and leaseholds, was settled on trust for a married woman for life for her separate use without power of anticipation, with power of appointment by deed with the consent of the trustees. The settlement also provided that the trustees should at her discretion inter alia direct repairs to be done to the property, and that all expenses properly incurred by the trustees in carrying out the trusts or powers of the settlement should constitute a charge on the premises in their favour. The plaintiff, at the direction of the tenant for life, did certain repairs to the property:—Held, that the trustees were bound to carry out any repairs directed by the tenant for life, provided the cost of them did not exceed the value of the property. Skinner v. Todd, 61 L. J., Ch., 198; 46 L. T. 131; 30 W. R. 267.

Held, also, that the tenant for life herself directing the repairs to be done was in substance an exercise of her power to direct the trustees to do them. Id.

Held, also, that the trustees must raise the amount to the plaintiffs' bill for the repairs, by way of charge on the property, and pay it to him. Id.

5. When leasehold houses are vested in trustees in behalf of a tenant for life and remaindermen, it is the duty of the trustees to keep the property free from the risk of forfeiture by a breach of the covenants of the lease, and they are entitled to have the rents applied in keeping the houses in a proper state of repair. The trustees are not bound to be content with the setting apart of a sum of money in the joint names of themselves and the tenant for life as an indemnity against the consequences of a breach of the covenants of the lease, but are entitled to require the covenants to be specifically performed. When a tenant for life of leasehold houses is allowed by the trustees to receive the rents, and the houses are not kept in a proper state of repair according to the covenants of the lease, the Court will, at the instance of one of the trustees, appoint a receiver of the rents, for the purpose of enforcing the proper repair of the houses. Re Fowler, Fowler v. Odell, 16 L. R., Ch. D., 723; 44 L. T. 99; 29 W. R. 891.

6. A testator devised his mansion-house and other real estate to trustees for the term of 1,000 years, upon certain trusts, and, subject thereto, he devised the same upon legal limitations, under which the plaintiff was tenant for life. Shortly after the testator's death the mansion-house was burnt down. The sole acting trustee had expended, in addition to insurance moneys, the sum of 2,000l. in rebuilding the mansion-house, which amount he had borrowed on his own personal security and on a charge of the estate. It was admitted that this expenditure was very beneficial to the estate, and that the value thereof was increased. There were in court sums of consols, arising from the sale of part of the estate, and such funds were liable to be re-invested in land. By the decree in the action an inquiry had been directed as to what sum was necessary to complete the restoration of the mansion-house, and how the same ought to be raised, but no formal order was made sanctioning the raising of a loan for the purpose. A petition was presented by the personal representative of the trustee, asking that the funds in court might be sold, and that such further sum as, with the proceeds of such sale, would make up the 2,000l. borrowed by the trustee, might be raised by mortgage or sale of the settled estate, in order to enable such loan to be re-paid:—Held, that the Court had no jurisdiction to order a mortgage or sale of the settled estate, or to authorise the expenditure for the proposed purpose, even of moneys which were subject to a trust for re-investment in land; but it appearing that the estate had been benefited by the outlay of the trustee to the full amount of the funds in court, and that the outlay had been bonâ fide made under the impression that it would be re-paid out of the estate, the Court would, although considering the conduct of the trustee irregular, order that he should be recouped his outlay to the extent of the funds in court but no further. Jesse v. Lloyd, 48 L. T. 656.

1. Trustees of a charity having in carrying into effect a scheme for building exceeded the amount of the estimate which had been sanctioned by the Court, were made to pay their own costs of the inquiry before the Master as to the propriety and beneficial nature of the additional expenditure. Att.-Gen. v. Armistead, 19 Beav. 584.

IV. MORTGAGES BY.

2. Trustees, to pay debts, may fairly raise by sale or mortgage, without waiting for a decree. Bath (Earl) v. Bradford (Earl), 2 Ves. 590.

3. Where a term for years was by settlement vested in trustees to raise, by sale or mortgage, money to discharge the debts of the tenant for life, who soon after with his own money pays the debts, without taking assignments of the securities; a mortgage of it by the trustees, several years after, by direction of the tenant for life, is a due execution of the trust. Tenant for life has, during his own life, a right to call for an execution of the trust, and to stand in the place of creditors. After an express declaration of the tenant for life to charge, it cannot, from the debts being paid by him, from no assignment of the securities being taken, or from length of time, be presumed he intended to exonerate the estate. Redington v. Redington, 1 Ball & B. 131.

4. A. directed his trustees to raise by mortgage of all or any part of his devised estate, any sum or sums of money, not exceeding 20,000*l.*, and to apply the same in liquidation of such of the debts of M., as to them should seem expedient or proper. The trustees having refused to raise the money without the sanction of the Court, suits were instituted by the creditors and trustees for the purpose of obtaining the benefit of the trust, and obtaining the sanction of the Court to the raising of the money:—Held, first, that the trustees had not, by their refusal to raise the money without the sanction of the Court, abandoned their power of selection among the creditors. Joel v. Mills, Hervey v. Mills, 7 Jur., N. S., 389; 30 L. J., Ch., 354.

Held, secondly, that the power of selection among the creditors was not confined to debts in existence at the death of the testator. Ib.

Held, thirdly, that debts which at the time of his death were barred by the Statute of Limitations, were excluded from the benefit of the trust. Ib.

5. A. devised his estates at Blackacre to trustees for a term of 1,000 years, upon trust to pay off all incumbrances for the time being secured on his "settled and unsettled estates." At the date of his will amongst his settled estates was a renewable leasehold property at Whiteacre, which was settled upon him for life, remainder to his eldest son absolutely. Subsequently to the date of his will he purchased the reversion expectant upon the determination of the lease of Whiteacre, and he and his eldest son joined in a mortgage to secure a part of the purchase money. The equity of redemption in the mortgage was limited to A. and his eldest son as joint tenants, and the surplus moneys, in case the mortgagee sold under his power of sale contained in the deed, were directed to be paid to the testator and his son, according to their interests:—Held, that the subsequent dealings, by way of mortgage, with Whiteacre did not amount to a re-settlement, but that the same was, at the death of the testator, to be considered as one of his settled estates, and that the mortgage upon it was raisable by the trustees out of Blackacre, under the 1,000 years' term. Hastings (Lord) v. Astley, 10 W. R. 73.

6. The Court will, on motion ex parte, restrain trustees of a chapel from mortgaging it for a small sum where there appears no necessity for such mortgage to be created; the plaintiff undertaking to abide by such order as the Court might think fit in respect of payment of the debts then due. Rigall v. Foster, 18 Jur. 89.

7. Devise of real estate to trustees in fee, upon trust, "out of the rents, issues, and profits" thereof, to pay to annuities; "and by the same ways and means, or by such other ways and means (except a sale) as they may think proper, to levy and raise" sufficient to pay off the charges on the estate, and, subject to the trusts aforesaid, to A. for life, with remainders over:—Held, that the trustees could not raise the charges, either by sale, by mortgage, or by leases on fines, but that they must be raised out of the rents and profits of timber and mines, the trustees exercising a discretion, so as not to exhaust the whole income, and leave nothing for the tenant for life. Bennett v. Wyndham, 23 Beav. 521; 3 Jur., N. S., 1148.

8. By a marriage settlement, the father of the intended husband agreed to settle a money bond and certain real estates on the intended husband and wife, during their joint lives, and after the death of the husband, if the wife should survive, on her for life, and after her decease or second marriage, upon the children; and it was agreed, that if the husband should die before his wife, three trustees should be appointed to take care of the property for the child or children of the marriage. The marriage was solemnised, and there was issue of it. The husband's father died, leaving his son, the husband, the sole executor, who thereupon took possession of the bond, and deposited it with his bankers, who had no notice of the settlement, to secure a loan from them. The husband then died insolvent, leaving his wife surviving. In a suit concerning the trust property, trustees thereof having been appointed by the Court:—Held, that they might redeem the bond by raising money for that purpose out of other parts of the property included in the settlement. Sharshaw v. Gibbs, 1 Kay 333; 18 Jur. 330; 23 L. J., Ch., 451.

9. Personal liability of the trustees of a turnpike road who exceed the powers given them by their act in borrowing money on the credit of future or expected tolls. Wilson v. Goodman, 4 Hare 62.

1. The trust deeds of certain Wesleyan Methodist chapels contained powers of raising money by mortgage for the purposes of the trusts:—Held, that any of the trustees of the chapels might be mortgagees under this power, and that, if they were such mortgagees, they might exercise all the rights of mortgagees, although in opposition to the trusts. Att.-Gen. v. Hardy, 1 Sim., N. S., 838; 20 L. J., N. S., Ch., 450; 15 Jur. 441.

2. Limitation of estates to successive tenants for life, with remainders in tail, subject to a term vested in trustees, the trusts of which were, in the first place, by cutting and selling timber of full growth, or by demising, mortgaging, or selling the estate (except the mansion-house), for all or any part of the term, or by all or any of the said ways, or any other reasonable ways, to raise 30,000*l.*, and pay the same to the parties therein mentioned:—Held, that, as between the tenants for life not impeachable for waste and the remaindermen, the corpus of the estate must bear the charge; and that the interest of the charge must be paid by the tenant for life in possession, who, in the meantime, was entitled (as part of the profits of the estate) to the timber, which, as such tenant for life, he had a right to cut. Marker v. Kokenich, 8 Hare 291; 14 Jur. 544; 19 L. J., Ch., 492.

The trustees of the term in such a case have not an unlimited discretion to raise the charge in such a manner as they may think fit; and it does not follow that, because their discretion in a mode of raising the charge has been honestly exercised, the charge will be left to be finally borne by those parties upon whom their act might chance to throw it. Ib.

3. In a suit for foreclosure of a mortgage created by trustees, demurrer allowed on the ground that they had no power to mortgage, but the plaintiff allowed to amend for the purpose of claiming a lien on the interest of a cœtui que trust who was a party to the deed. Page v. Cooper, 1 W. R. 136.

4. Where absolute discretion has been given to trustees as to the exercise of a power the Court will not compel them to exercise it, but if they propose to exercise it, the Court will see that they do not exercise it improperly or unreasonably. Where the power is coupled with a trust or duty the Court will enforce the proper and timely exercise of the power, but will not interfere with the discretion of the trustees as to the particular time or manner of their bonâ fide exercise of it. Tempest v. Camoys (Lord), 21 L. R., Ch. D., 571; 51 L. J., Ch., 785.

A testator gave his trustees a power to be exercised at their absolute discretion of selling real estates, with a declaration that the proceeds should be applied, at the like discretion, in the purchase of other real estates. He also gave them power at their absolute discretion to raise money by mortgage for the purchase of real estates. A suit having been instituted for the execution of the trusts of the will, and a sum of money, the proceeds of the sale of real estate, having been paid into court, one of the trustees proposed to purchase a large estate and to apply the fund in court in part payment of the purchase money, and to raise the remainder of the purchase money by mortgage of the purchased estate. The other trustees refused to concur in the purchase:—Held, that the Court could not control the dissentient trustee in the exercise of his discretion in refusing to make the purchase, or in refusing to exercise his power of raising money by mortgage for the proposed purpose. Ib.

5. Where lands are vested in trustees by Act of Parliament, to be mortgaged for a particular purpose, it is incumbent on the mortgagee to see the money applied accordingly. Cottrell v. Hampson, 2 Vern. 5.

V. SALE TO TENANT FOR LIFE.

6. A power of sale and exchange vested in the trustees of a settlement, may be exercised by the trustees upon a sale to, or an exchange with, the tenant for life of the settled estates. Where, upon the exercise of such a power, it is declared, that the estate shall be vested in the purchaser, the purchase being made in the name of a trustee, an appointment to the trustee, in trust for the purchaser, is a valid execution of the power. Howard v. Ducane, T. & R. 81; 1 L. J., Ch., 85.

7. It is a well-settled rule that where trustees of a settlement have a power of sale and exchange over the settled estates, to be exercised at the request, or with the consent, of the tenant for life, they may sell to the tenant for life just as they may to any other person. Dickinson v. Talbot, 19 W. R. 138; 6 L. R., Ch., 32; 24 L. T. 49.

The reason for that rule is that the consent of the tenant for life to the exercise of the power is required for his own benefit, and does not place him in any fiduciary relation to the persons entitled in remainder. Ib.

Provided a sale by trustees to a tenant for life is bonâ fide and at a fair price, it is immaterial what was the object for which he made the purchase. Ib.

VI. PAYMENTS TO AND RECEIPTS BY TRUSTEES.

8. Payment of money to a trustee, with notice of the trust, is a mis-payment, though the trustee had judgment and execution against the person that paid the money. Pritchard v. Langher, 2 Vern. 197.

9. A. and B., being trustees of money for the separate use of a feme covert, lend to C., who gives bond to the trustees, and the trust is declared in the condition. The bond is kept by the feme, and, B. having received money for C., they settle an account, and B. gives C. a receipt for 100*l.* as received for the use of the feme. B. becomes insolvent: whether C. is well discharged of this 100*l.*, quære. Baldwin v. Billingsley, 2 Vern. 589.

10. A., on her marriage, assigned a debt due to her from B. to three trustees, upon trust, when requested by her to call it in and invest it, and hold in trust for A., her husband, and children. B., with full notice, but without such request, paid part of the money to the husband by order of the trustees, and other part to the trustees for the express purpose of being advanced to the husband in breach of trust. The money was lost:—Held, that B., as well as the trustees, was responsible for the breach of trust. Andrews v. Boufield, 10 Beav. 511.

1. The obligor of a bond, which had been afterwards assigned to a trustee, of which assignment the obligor of the bond had notice, but not of the particular terms of the trust, was held not liable for payments not warranted by the trust made by him under the direction of the trustee, but only for such payments as he had made without such direction. Roberts v. Lloyd, 2 Beav. 376.

2. A mortgage was made for securing the re-transfer of stock to the trustees of a will. The third share of a cestui que trust in the stock was afterwards, by his marriage settlement, vested in trustees, who had power to give receipts, to invest in Government or real security, and to vary investments. Part of the mortgaged estate was afterwards sold for less than the value of the stock lent, and one-third of the price was paid in cash to the trustees of the marriage settlement:—Held, that the estate was not discharged, there being no evidence to show that the cash had been only invested, or that the trustees received cash instead of stock, in order to invest on real security. Pell v. De Winton, 2 De G. & J. 13; 4 Jur., N. S., 225; 27 L. J., Ch., 230; 6 W. R. 179.

Semble, that if the purchase deed had contained a recital that the trustees of the settlement had determined to invest money on real security, they need not have received it in stock, but their receipt for it in cash would have a good discharge. Id.

3. A firm of solicitors having been employed by the trustees of a will to receive the proceeds of the testator's real estate which had been taken by a railway company, paid over the money to one of such trustees without the receipt or authority of the other. The money having been lost to the estate by the insolvency and death of the trustee to whom it was paid:—Held, that the receipt of one trustee only (though also an executor) was not a sufficient discharge to the solicitors for the money which they had received by the authority of the two, and that they were personally liable to make good the loss which had resulted to the trust estate from such improper payment. Lee v. Sankey, or Ginger v. Sankey, 15 L. R., Eq., 204; 21 W. R. 286; 27 L. T., N. S., 809.

4. Trustees, with a power to sell and to invest the proceeds in Government or real securities, sold the estate, and received only part of the purchase money, but executed a conveyance to the purchaser, on the back of which was endorsed a receipt for the whole sum, which was signed by them all. This deed and the other deeds they retained as a security for the unpaid purchase money, with interest, and they entered into a written agreement with the purchaser that the deeds should remain with them as such security, and that he should, if required, execute a proper mortgage. This agreement was signed by the purchaser, and by the trustee in whose custody the deeds were placed. Eight years afterwards the purchaser paid the principal and interest of his debt to this trustee, and received from him the deeds, including the conveyance, with the receipt indorsed:—Held, that by such payment the purchaser did not discharge himself of his liability incurred by participation in the breach of trust, and the trustee who received the money, having misapplied it and absconded, the purchaser was made to pay it over again. Webb v. Ledsam, 1 Kay & J. 385; 1 Jur., N. S., 775.

5. Legacy to a chapel directed to be paid to the trustees of the chapel. De Windt v. De Windt, 2 W. R. 648; 23 L. J., Ch., 776; 2 Eq. Rep. 1007.

VII. REMUNERATION.

6. Trustee is of course entitled to all reasonable expenses of trust, but not for personal trouble and loss of time, unless he makes out a special case therefor, before acceptance of trust. Brooksopp v. Barnes, 5 Madd. 90.

7. Settled rule, that, in all matters of trust or in the nature of trust, a trustee is not allowed any compensation for his trouble in the business entrusted to him. Re Ormsby, 1 Ball & B. 189.

8. Two persons, in whom were vested, under an Act of Parliament, the right to the tolls and profits arising from a certain road, for a term of fifty years, conveyed, by deed of the 27th May 1827, the same, and all their estate and interest therein, to A., B., and C. (the defendant), upon certain trusts therein mentioned; and subject thereto, in trust for the said A., B., and C., their executors, administrators, and assigns, as tenants in common, for their own use and benefit, for the residue of said term of fifty years; and the deed contained a provision, that in case any of the said trustees should be unable to join in the direction and superintendence of the said road, it should be lawful for any two of the said trustees to act of themselves in the management of the said road, and in all other things relating to the execution of the said trusts. The interests to which the said A. and B. were entitled under the said deed having become subsequently vested in the plaintiff, and C. (the defendant) having taken upon himself the exclusive control and management of the road, and insisted upon his right thereto, and also upon being paid a salary for his trouble and supervision:—Held, upon a bill filed by the plaintiff, disputing such right, that the defendant C. was entitled to have the sole management of the road, but that his claim for salary could not be maintained. Taylor v. Taylor, 4 Dr. & War. 124.

1. Mortgagor conveyed all his real and personal estate to the mortgagees in trust for creditors:—Held, that one of the mortgagees was not entitled to a commission on the rents received by him under an appointment as receiver by himself and his co-trustees. Nicholson v. Tutin, 3 Jur., N. S., 235.

2. Quere, how far the principle of English law, that a trustee cannot hold an office of profit under the trust (except with the express sanction of the Court), has been established in Scotland. Quere, also, as to the soundness of the principle. Home v. Pringle, 8 Cl. & F. 264.

A trustee does not, by being cashier to the trust estate, incur any additional liability in respect of its management, beyond what he was subject to as trustee. Ib.

3. A trustee has no right to exact or charge any remuneration or bonus in respect of great advantages accrued to the cestui que trustent from services incident to the performance of the duties imposed by the deed of trust. Barrett v. Hartley, 2 L. R., Eq., 789; 12 Jur., N. S., 426; 14 L. T., N. S., 474.

A settled account by a cestui que trust, allowing a bonus to the trustee, was set aside. Ib.

4. A trustee paid into court the balance of the trust fund, having first deducted the amount which he claimed for costs, charges, and personal expenses, which amount he knew was objected to by his cestui que trustent, as being excessive:—Held, that the trustee ought to have paid into court the whole of the trust fund, leaving it to the Court to decide the amount to which he might be entitled. Beaty v. Curson, 17 W. R. 132.

1. In General.

5. Upon a bill filed by trustees for the directions of the Court in execution of the trusts of a will, if the trustees have notice of any doubt as to the title of the testator to a part of the estate devised, the person who may be benefited by that doubt is properly made a defendant to the suit, and the Court will not proceed to the execution of the trusts of the will, until that doubt is removed, either by a proceeding at law, or by such other course of inquiry as the Court may think proper to direct. Talbot v. Radnor (Earl), 3 Myl. & K. 252.

6. Where trustees of a settlement, having a power of purchasing lands on the request of tenants for life, desired the opinion of the Court as to the propriety of applying 1,200*l.* on such request, in repairs and permanent improvement, no answer was given on the petition; but it was intimated that, on a bill filed, there would be no objection on principle to the course proposed to be taken, and subsequently the order was made in a suit instituted for the purpose. Re Barrington, 1 John. & H. 142; 6 Jur., N. S., 1073; 29 L. J., Ch., 807; 8 W. R. 577.

7. On application by trustees for the advice of the Court, where an important and difficult question is involved, the proper course is, to file a bill instead of presenting a petition. Re Mockett, Johns. 628; 29 L. J., Ch., 294; 6 Jur., N. S., 142; 8 W. R. 235.

8. Trustees of an under lease of church property authorised to take steps to obtain a clause for compensation for their tenant right of renewal, inserted in an Act pending in Parliament, to make a new street, which would require part of the property. Jones v. Powell, 4 Beav. 96.

9. Where a trustee accepts the trust of a fund with the knowledge that it is doubtful whether it ought to be held upon such trust, he is nevertheless entitled to come to the Court for its direction, whether the trusts ought to be executed:—Held, by Lord Justice Turner; Lord Justice Knight Bruce entirely dissenting. Neale v. Davies, 23 L. J., Ch., 744.

Where trustees accept such a trust, with knowledge of the doubt, and with the same and no more knowledge, are called upon to part with the fund by the cestui que trust, they are bound in morality to do so; and an adverse claimant would have no claim against them personally after they had parted with the fund in conformity with the trusts on which they accepted it, per Lord Justice Knight Bruce. Ib.

The question having been raised in a suit between the trustees and cestui que trust of the deed, one of the Vice-Chancellors refused to pronounce a decree, but ordered the cause to stand over, with liberty to the plaintiff, the cestui que trust, to amend by adding parties; and their lordships differing in opinion, the order of the Court below was affirmed. Ib.

10. A testator bequeathed to each of his six grandchildren 200*l.*, and, in case any of them should not have attained twenty-one at the death of the testator, he directed his trustees, who were also his executors and residuary legatees, to pay interest for the legacies of such children, after the rate of 5 per cent., towards their maintenance and education. Upon differences arising between the father of the children and the trustees as to the investment of the money pending minorities, the trustees file their bill to obtain the direction of the Court, and for leave to pay the amount into court :—Held, that the trustees might pay the principal money into court ; and, semble, the trustees will not be liable to make up the difference between the dividends on the money in court and the 5*l.* per cent. Abraham v. Holderness, 6 Jur. 290.

Semble, if the direction in the will had been for the trustees to pay interest at 2 per cent., and the money was paid into court, the legatees would be entitled to the full amount of the dividends. Ib.

1. That trustees have invoked the aid of the Court in administering an estate, and a decree has been made, they cannot act in the matter of the administration except under the sanction of the Court. Minors v. Battison, 1 L. R., App. Cas., 428 ; 35 L. T., N. S., 1 ; 25 W. R. 27.

2. Indemnity to Trustees.

2. Though trustees are protected in acting under the decision of a competent tribunal, the protection does not extend to persons receiving payments out of a fund for themselves ; and though the decision has been long acted on, it is no protection to such persons against the claims of others not bound by it. Foster v. M'Mahon, 11 Ir. Eq. R. 287.

3. Where the Court administers the assets, the trustees are protected against all claims on the testator's estate, but legatees still remain liable in respect of the beneficial interest. Underwood v. Hatton, 5 Beav. 36.

4. Where trustees distribute a fund under the direction of the Court, they require no indemnity. Smith v. Smith, 1 Dr. & Sm. 384 ; 7 Jur., N. S., 652 ; 9 W. R. 406 ; 4 L. T., N. S., 44.

A lessor of a testator has not a right to require the Court to retain part of the testator's assets by way of indemnity against future breaches of covenant in the lease. Ib.

2. By Partners.

7. Lease of premises where a partnership trade was carried on, renewed by one partner in his own name clandestinely, is a trust for the partnership, to be accounted for as joint property. Featherstonhaugh v. Fenwick, 17 Ves. 298.

8. A person employed on behalf of himself and his co-partners, in negotiating the term of a lease, is not entitled to stipulate clandestinely with the lessors for any private advantage to himself ; where, therefore, a sum of 12,000*l.* was paid in pursuance of such a stipulation, the party receiving it was declared to hold it in trust for the partnership. Before the transaction was discovered, one of the partners withdrew, and subsequently another partner assigned a share in the stock, and in his proportion of this claim to persons then admitted into the concern :—Held, that the retired, the continuing, and the new partners were properly joined as co-plaintiffs in a suit to have the trust declared. Faneott v. Whitehouse, 1 Russ. & M. 132 ; 4 L. J., Ch., 64 ; 8 L. J., Ch., 50.

9. A deceased partner, having contracted in his own name for a lease of premises to be employed in the partnership trade, the Court refused to restrain the landlord from granting a lease to his representatives, but restrained the representatives from disposing of the lease when granted, except for partnership purposes, and with the assent of the surviving partner. Alder v. Fouracre, 3 Swan. 489.

10. Several persons were engaged as partners in working coal mines. The partnership was at will. The mines were worked by some of the partners, who, before the expiration of the last lease, agreed among themselves to conduct the whole for their own benefit. They thereupon gave notice to the other partners to dissolve the partnership, and entered into an agreement with the landlord for renewal to themselves only. They gave public notice of the sale by auction of the plant and stock, and informed the other partners that they might bid, and that they themselves intended to do so, and told them that the landlord had agreed to a renewal. Accounts were made up, and such of the excluded partners as assented and executed releases were paid their shares, but others refused their assent, and claimed the benefit of the renewed lease, besides their shares of the partnership assets. The new lease was granted in 1846, and in 1855 some of the excluded partners filed a bill to have the benefit of the renewed lease, and an account of the profits of the old and new partnership :—Held, that the renewal was a constructive trust for the benefit of all the partners, but that these excluded partners, having taken no active steps for such a length of time to assert their rights, could not have relief, for that mere words were not sufficient without active proceedings. Clegg v. Edmonson, 3 Jur., N. S., 299; 26 L. J., Ch., 673; 8 De G. M. & G. 787.

The circumstance that the partnership was dissoluble at will would not alone have disentitled the plaintiffs to relief, for that the principle on which the Court holds each partner entitled to the benefit of a renewal effected by one is the confidential relation which exists between partners, and which exists whatever be the duration of the partnership. Semble. Id.

It is difficult, though perhaps not impossible, for a managing partner to contract, during the continuance of the partnership, for a new lease of the partnership property, and to secure for himself the exclusive benefit of such renewed lease. To give validity to such a transaction, the partners must all be placed upon an equal footing; and a mere notice by the managing partner to the others of his intention to apply for a new lease for his own benefit is not enough. Semble. Id.

1. If partnership property consists in part of leaseholds, the representative of a deceased partner may treat the surviving partner as trustee, and if the latter renews the lease, he is considered to do so for the benefit of the estate of the partner; but where the trade is one of a speculative character, requiring outlay, with an uncertain return, then, if the surviving partner continues the trade in his own name and renews the lease, the Court will not consider that the representative of the deceased partner has any interest unless he contributes a due proportion of capital. Clements v. Hall, 2 De G. & J. 173; 4 Jur., N. S., 494; 27 L. J., Ch., 349; 6 W. R. 358. Reversing 24 Beav. 333.

A. and B. were partners in lead mines held under a lease, which expired in 1845; after that time they continued to work the mines as tenants from year to year, until the death of A. in 1847, when B. worked them, so far only as was necessary to keep the mines in operation, until 1850. In that year he received notice to quit, but before the expiration of such notice he obtained an agreement for a new lease, on the understanding that he would employ a larger amount of capital in working the mines. He continued to work the mines under the new lease until 1853, when he died intestate. On a bill filed by the assignee of C., who was entitled under the will of A. to an annuity charged on the testator's interest in the mines, against D., the legal personal representative of both A. and B., claiming that the estate of the testator had an interest in the mines after his death:—Held, that the testator's interest did not cease on his death, but continued in the partnership for the benefit of his estate. Id.

2. In 1853, articles of partnership were entered into between the plaintiff and J. H., whereby, after reciting the partnership previously existing, and that the effects consisted of a leasehold dwelling-house, workshop, and land at N., and that the plaintiff and J. H. were jointly entitled to another dwelling-house at M. A., it was agreed that J. H. should stand possessed of the property at N., as to the dwelling-house and one-half of the land, for his own absolute use and benefit, and as to the workshop and other part of the land, in trust to assign the same to the plaintiff; that the property at M. A. should be assigned to the plaintiff, and that when and so soon as the plaintiff and J. H. should erect a dwelling-house at M. A. of equal value with the dwelling-house at N., the same should be assigned to the plaintiff, who should thereupon re-assign the workshop to J. H. It was also agreed that an equal division should be made of the partnership effects, and that neither of the partners should apply any part of the co-partnership moneys or effects for his own private use until such divisions as aforesaid. A renewed lease of the property at N. was afterwards obtained from the lessor by J. H. to himself alone. The partnership continued for some time, but no assignment was made, nor was any dwelling-house built, as contemplated by the agreement of 1853. J. H. afterwards assigned to G. M. the dwelling-house and half of the land at N., of which the plaintiff was then in possession, and G. M. commenced proceedings by ejectment in the County Court against the plaintiff, in order to obtain possession of the premises. On a bill filed by the plaintiff against J. H. and G. M., praying for a partnership account, and for an injunction against G. M.:—Held, that, from the circumstances which had arisen, J. H. was not entitled to hold the dwelling-house and half of the land at N. in severalty, but that the plaintiff had sufficient interest in the property to maintain his right to an injunction against G. M., J. H.'s assignee, from bringing ejectment; and an injunction was granted accordingly. Hawkins v. Hawkins, 4 Jur., N. S., 1044.

3. By Tenant for Life.

3. Tenant for life, under the settlement of a Crown lease, gets a renewal in reversion, it shall go to the uses of the settlement. Taster v. Marriott, Ambl. 668.

4. One bequeaths several leasehold estates, held for years under the duchy of Cornwall, to his wife, during so many years of the term as she shall live, and after her decease, if the terms of the several leases be then in being, unto and amongst, etc. The wife got an additional term, and:—Held, it shall not be for her own benefit, but should go to the uses of the will. Rave v. Chichester, Ambl. 715.

5. When a tenant for life of leaseholds, under a marriage settlement, suffered the lease to expire, and obtained another lease, and died, it was held that the renewed lease must be held upon the trusts of the settlement, and not enure for the benefit of his representatives. Pickering v. Voakes, 1 Bro. C. C. 197.

6. Bequest of leaseholds for years determinable upon lives, for life, with remainder over, for all the residue of the testator's term and interest to come therein at his decease: the term expired in the life of the testator, who continued to hold, and paid half a year's rent before his death as tenant by the year; upon the general words unrestrained, comprising the interest from year to year, and the intention upon the whole will, and subsequent lease obtained by the executrix, the widow and tenant for life under the will was held subject to the uses of the will, as the residue of the term at his death, if any, however short, would have been. James v. Dean, 11 Ves. 383. Affirmed 15 Ves. 236. And see Kempton v. Packman, cited 7 Ves. 176.

1. A tenant for life of a leasehold interest, the subject of settlement, surrendering the lease, and taking a new one for his own benefit, is a trustee for those entitled to estate in remainder, under the settlement; and an accumulation of rent from the death of the tenant for life, to the expiration of the new lease, belongs not to his devisee, but to the person next entitled under the settlement. Eyre v. Dolphin, 2 Ball & B. 290.

2. Testator seized in fee of a moiety of an estate at L., and in possession of the other moiety, as tenant from year to year, to St. J. College (this lease from the college having expired), gives to his wife, durante viduitate, all this his messuage or tenement, with the farm and lands at L., all his estate and interest therein, she paying the rent reserved to St. J. College, etc. The widow after his death obtains a new lease, and subsequently purchases the reversion of one to whom it had been conveyed by the college under an Act of Parliament:—Held, that the renewed lease was taken subject to the trusts of the will, and those in remainder to contribute to the fine paid by the widow in proportion to be settled by the Master:—Held, that the purchase of the reversion, not from the college, but from the person to whom it had been conveyed by the college, was not, under the circumstances, to be taken subject to the trusts of the will. Randall v. Russell, 3 Meriv. 190. And see Hardman v. Johnson, id. 347.

3. Tenant for life, with remainders over, of a Crown lease for years applies for a further term; a powerful opponent applies for a grant, the tenant for life gives up her pretensions for a sum of money; the money shall be settled to the same uses as the estate was. Owen v. Williams, Amb. 734.

4. A., on the marriage of B. his son, settles a lease on B. for life, to the wife for life, and then to the issue of the marriage; and B. covenants from time to time to renew the lease and assign it on the same trusts. B. renews the lease, but does not assign it, and dies indebted. This lease is bound by the marriage articles, and is not assets for the payment of debts. Plowman v. Plowman, 2 Vern. 289.

5. R., the last life in a bishop's lease, agrees with C. to surrender this lease on a promise of the bishop to grant a new one for the lives of C. and the son of C., and in consideration of C. surrendering the old lease, it was agreed the new one should be in trust for the infant son of C. The whole purchase money was paid by C. to the bishop, but the legal estate was granted in the new lease to R. and his heirs during his own life, and the lives of C. and his son. C., after the death of R., took upon him to dispose of it. R., by a deed poll, dated the day after the lease, declares his intention to be, that C. and his son should, after his decease, hold to them and their heirs during the remainder of the term:—Held, that R. had a valuable share in the consideration of the new lease, having given up his interest in the old, and that, having a right to declare the trust, C. had his life only in the lease. Crop v. Norton, 2 Atk. 74; 9 Mod. 233; Barnard. 179.

6. A renewal taken by tenant for life of a lease for lives, is a trust for the benefit of those in remainder, and a fine levied by the heir of such tenant for life keeping possession of the title deeds, will not bar those in remainder, nor will any length of time during such a suppression of deeds. Bowles v. Stewart, 1 Sch. & Lef. 209.

7. Where the tenant for life of leaseholds in settlement, being under no obligation to renew, obtains an extension of the term, he is a trustee for those claiming under the settlement; and the fact of the settlement containing a special provision that a particular renewal shall enure to the benefit of the trust, does not prevent the application of this general rule. Tanner v. Blivorthy, 4 Beav. 487; 5 Jur. 1099.

8. Renewal of a college lease by tenant for life, with a power of appointment, in her own name and at her expense, has not the effect of an appointment in her own favour; and, therefore, by the death of the appointee in the life of the tenant, there will be a resulting trust by lapse for the representative of the author of the power. Brookman v. Hales, 2 Ves. & B. 45.

9. A., under a voluntary settlement, of which it did not appear that she had notice, was entitled to certain leaseholds held for lives for her life, with remainder to B. Under a subsequent voluntary settlement, she took a life interest in the same leaseholds, with an absolute power of appointment over the residue of the leasehold interest. While in possession of the property, she took a renewed lease of it, and died, having appointed all her interest to C.:—Held, that the renewal enured to the benefit of B. Waters v. Bailey, 2 Y. & Coll. C. C. 219.

10. If a tenant for life of an under-lease for eighteen years, granted by a person who himself holds the premises so under-let along with other property under a lease for twenty-one years, purchases the interest of his immediate lessor, and obtains from the superior lessor a renewal of the lease thus purchased, the renewed lease is subject, so far as regards the premises which were comprised in the under-lease, to the same trusts, as would have affected the under-lease if it had not been merged or had not expired by the effluxion of time. The same rule holds, though the lease at the time of the purchase was vested in a trustee upon trusts, under which he could not have granted a renewal of the under-lease, and though the tenant for life outlived by twenty-five years the time at which the under-lease would have expired by effluxion of time. Giddings v. Giddings, 3 Russ. 241.

A., being tenant for life of a leasehold for years, with remainder to B., after devising one estate to B. in tail, bequeathed to him the leasehold during his life, with remainder over, and gave him all the residue of his real and personal property. B. took possession of the residuary estate; suffered a recovery of the lands devised to him in tail; acted as the absolute owner of the leasehold estate; and outlived the term for which the lease was granted, having previously acquired a new interest in the demised premises:—Held, that B. elected to take under the will, and was bound to give effect to the devise of the leasehold in favour of the remainderman.

Id.

1. J. B. being entitled, by virtue of a lease of 1735, to the lands of C., held under M. for three lives, devised the same to his son, John, for life, with remainders over. John, upon the death of his father, entered into possession under the will, and, in 1796 (one only of the cestui que vient in the lease of 1735 being in existence), obtained from G. and B. (the then head landlords) a new lease reciting the lease of 1735, for the lives of the surviving cestui que vie in that lease, and two other persons, with a covenant for perpetual renewal, at an increased rent and fine:—Held, that the lease of 1796 was a graft upon the original lease of 1735, and subject to the trusts of the will. Duckley v. Llanauze, L.L. & G. temp. Plunk. 327.

2. Renewable leaseholds were settled by a registered deed on B. for life, with remainders over. B. being in possession apparently as absolute owner, new leases were obtained under circumstances which against him would have made them grafts on the old interest, and at the same time the lands were sold by him to a purchaser for value without notice:—Held, that the equitable claim of a remainderman under the settlement was, under the Registry Act, preserved against the purchaser. Hill v. Mill, 12 Ir. Eq. R. 107.

3. A leasehold interest was subject to the trusts of a settlement under which A. was tenant for life, with a leasing power. A. made a lease of the premises to B., and at the same time entered into an agreement with B. to sell to him the absolute interest of the leasehold, and to make title at a future period. The agreement contained notice of the settlement. B. assigned the underlease, and the benefit of the agreement, to C., who entered into possession, and paid the head rent to the landlord. He subsequently entered into an arrangement with the landlord for a reduction of the head rent, to carry out which he suffered the lessee to be evicted by ejectment, and took a new lease from the landlord, at the reduced rent:—Held, that the new lease was a graft, and bound by the trusts of the settlement. Stratton v. Murphy, 1 Ir. R., Eq., 345.

4. A., being in possession of encroachments on Crown lands, devised the same by will to his wife B. for life, remainder to such of his sons as should survive her, as tenants in common in fee, and died. At the date of his death, the title of A. to such encroachments was clearly and immediately voidable by the Crown, under the 20 Car. 2, c. 8. But after the death of A., the 1 & 2 Vict., c. 42 passed, by which commissioners were empowered to grant leases of such encroachments for three lives, at low rents, to the then holders thereof, and the persons entitled to claim such leases were also declared to be entitled within a limited time to demand a conveyance in fee of the freehold, on payment of twenty-five years' purchase for the rent reserved. B., being in possession, applied for and obtained a conveyance of the lands to herself in fee, paying the consideration out of her own moneys:—Held, that notwithstanding A. had no good title to make, and therefore could not, strictly speaking, have made, any valid settlement of such encroachments, yet B. must be taken to have acquired the fee for the benefit of all parties claiming under the same title as that under which she herself held the lands at the time of the Act; and the remaindermen under the will of A. were therefore declared to be entitled as against the devisees of B., such remaindermen repaying to the representatives of B. the consideration which she had advanced for the conveyance, without interest. Yem v. Edwards, 3 Kay & J. 564; 3 Jur., N. S., 462; 26 L. J., Ch., 590. Affirming 27 L. J., Ch., 23.

By Husband of Tenant for Life. 5. By a will, a renewable lease was devised to A. for life, remainder to B. for life, or so long as the said lease should continue, remainder to trustees for sale and division of the produce amongst various persons. C., the husband of A., purchased the life-interest of B., and then obtained a renewal of the lease to himself, for three lives; and died. The personal representative of C. was held, by the Court, to be a trustee for those claiming under the will of the original lessee; and was decreed to convey as they should direct, on payment of their respective due portions of the expenses of the renewal; but the price given by C. for the life interest of B. was not allowed to be considered as a portion of those expenses, although B. was himself the last surviving cestui que vie of the original lease, and therefore was not likely to have renewed. Cridland v. Luxton, 9 L. J., Ch., 99.

6. Previously to marriage the fortune of the wife is so settled as, in the event of her surviving her husband, to belong to her absolutely, and by other deeds of the same date, the husband makes a settlement of his property, under which certain interests are given to the wife; he dies in her lifetime, having by his will bequeathed to her considerable benefits, which he directs shall be in satisfaction of all her claims or demands against his estate, or executors, under the settlement made by him, or on any other account whatsoever; the acceptance of the benefit given to her by the will does not preclude the wife from claiming a leasehold, part of her own fortune, which the husband was bound, by deed settling her fortune, to renew in the name of trustees, and upon the trusts of that settlement, but which he had renewed in his own name. Coleman v. Jones, 3 Russ. 312; 6 L. J., Ch., 16.

4. By Trustees, Executors, or Mortgagees.

7. A. being possessed of a lease of a market, bequeathed it to B. in trust for an infant. B., before the expiration of the lease, applied to the lessor for a renewal for the benefit of the infant. The lessor refused to grant such renewal, whereupon B. got a lease made to himself:—Held, that B. was a trustee of the lease for the infant, and must assign the same to him, and account for the profits, but he was entitled to be indemnified from the covenants in the lease. Keoch v. Sandford, Sel. Ca., Ch., 61.

8. If an executor renews a lease, he shall account for the new lease as well as the old one for the benefit of the creditors. Anon., 2 Ch. Ca. 208.

1. If trustees or mortgagee renew, the new lease is always subject to the trust and limitations of the old lease. Rame v. Chichester, Amb. 719.

2. The word "advantages" is sufficient to take in all the benefits belonging to the trust of an estate for years, not to the profits only, but the renewals which are consequential. Carte v. Carte, 3 Atk. 178.

3. An executor to a tenant by sufferance or at will obtaining a larger interest, is a trustee for the residuary legatee, like the case of general occupancy. James v. Dean, 11 Ves. 382. Affirmed 15 Ves. 236.

4. Renewal of a lease taken by a trustee, shall accrue to the benefit of the cestui que trust. Griffin v. Griffin, 1 Sch. & Lef. 352.

5. Trustee of lease, renewing for his own benefit, is considered as still holding for his cestui que trust, though it is clear that the lessor would not have renewed for cestui que trust. Flaggibon v. Scanlan, 1 Dow 269.

6. Renewable leaseholds having been devised by testator upon trusts, one of the trustees obtained a renewal of the lease of the devised lands, and a new lease of additional lands, in one lease, at a bulk rent:—Held, that, quoad the additional land, the renewal was not a graft upon the old lease. Acheson v. Fair, 2 Con. & L. 208; 3 Dr. & War. 512.

7. A., by his will, bequeathed a term of years to his two sons, R. and F., subject to debts and legacies, and appointed his widow executrix during her widowhood, and died during the same year; the widow, having married, ceased to be executrix, and thereupon administration de bonis non was taken out by R. in 1789, but previously, in 1786, R. had procured a new lease for himself for three lives:—Held, that the new lease was a graft on the original interest, and subject to the trusts of the will, although it did not appear that the original term was unexpired at the date of the new lease. Jackson v. Welsh, Ll. & G. temp. Plunk. 346.

8. A bishop's lease was granted after the expiration of a former one at a less fine, because the lessee was son of the old tenant, who died without assets to pay the fine; another person was his administrator, but the son had made himself executor de son tort; the new lease was held a graft, and the lessee bound to renew to a sub-lessee without contribution. The sub-lessee, having been evicted on the expiration of the term granted by his lease, sued on a covenant to grant an additional term, but the term covenanted to be granted having nearly expired at the time of the decree, instead of a specific performance, an account in the nature of an inquiry quantum damnificatus was directed. McNulty v. Hamill, Beat. 544.

9. Lease obtained by a person interfering with the assets, and compelling the surrender by executors of a leasehold interest, bequeathed to minors, a graft on the former lease so surrendered. Mulvany v. Dillon, 1 Ball. & B. 400.

10. In a suit against a trustee of a church lease, who had expended considerable sums in obtaining renewals and a perpetuity grant, and had made an arrangement for the purchase of the lands in consideration of an annuity to the cestui que trust, under an award, in obtaining which there was some concealment, and which was never completed, though acted on for fourteen years:—Held, that the new interest was a graft, and the trustee bound to account for the entire period. The cases where accounts against defendants are limited in point of time, and where not, considered. Lovatt v. Knipe, 12 Ir. Eq. R. 124.

11. A testatrix by will gave her executor all her interest in a farming lease upon trust to carry on the farm for the benefit of the plaintiff. The executor accordingly carried on the farm until the expiration of the lease, and then obtained a new lease. Under the circumstances, held by the Court below that the defendant was a trustee for the plaintiff, and an account was ordered of all moneys expended or received by the defendant in carrying on the farm. Upon appeal by the plaintiff against so much of the order as directed accounts:—Held, his having elected to claim the profits of the farm, he could not resist the taking of such an account. Kendall v. Martens, 8 W. R. 747; 2 L. T., N. S., 709; 2 De G. F. & J. 200.

12. An executor, six years after the death of the testator, surrendered a lease belonging to the testator, and took a renewal lease, including additional property, and at an increased rent, in his own name. He afterwards deposited the lease as security for money advanced to him, which he applied to his own purposes. The renewed lease contained no mention of the surrender, and the mortgagee did not know that the borrower was an executor, or that he was not the beneficial owner of the lease. He did not, however, make any inquiry into the title. An action was afterwards brought to administer the testator's estate, and a consent order was made for the sale of the leasehold property, without prejudice to any right, the mortgagee giving up the lease to facilitate the sale. He claimed to be paid the amount due to him by the executor out of the proceeds of sale:—Held, that the lease was in equity part of the testator's estate, and that the equity of the estate being prior to the equity of the mortgagee, must prevail against it. Re Morgan, Pillgrem v. Pillgrem, 18 L. R., Ch. D., 93; 50 L. J., Ch., 834; 45 L. T. 183. Affirming 50 L. J., Ch., 654; 44 L. T. 793; 39 W. R. 733.

Held, also, that the equitable mortgagee was not injured by the order to give up the indenture of lease, and did not thereby acquire any claim upon the proceeds of the sale. Id.

13. A new lease obtained by a mortgagee of a leasehold interest which had been evicted for non-payment of rent, taken after the expiration of six and nine months, allowed to the lessee and mortgagee to redeem by 3 Geo. 4, c. 2, s. 4, but in pursuance of a contract entered into in the period between the six and nine months, if the parties interested did not redeem, is not a graft on the former lease, nor a trust for the lessee, the mortgagee not being in possession nor procuring the lease behind the back of the lessee. The principles on which courts of equity act in considering renewed interests obtained by mortgagees, trustees, etc., to be grafts are, that the advantage was procured either by being in possession, or, when out of it, by a contrivance to oust the lessee of the benefit of renewal. Nesbitt v. Tredennick, 1 Ball & B. 29.

1. In 1822 a lease of lands was made for twenty-one years. The lands were afterwards mortgaged, and a renewal was granted to a mortgagee in 1829. In 1830, by deed reciting the lease of 1822 and the mortgage, but not the renewal, the mortgagee conveyed the lands, and all his estate, title, interest, use, trust, property, profit, claim, challenge, and demand, both at law and in equity, therein, and also the mortgage debt and interest, to hold during the residue of the term granted by the lease of 1822. The deed contained covenants, against acts by the mortgagee, for good title and further assurance:—Held, on exceptions to the Master's report of bad title, that the legal estate, under the renewal of 1829, passed by the deed of 1830. Reynolds v. Reynolds, 12 Ir. Eq. R. 172.

By Mortgagee. 2. The defendants, who were entitled to the equity of redemption of leaseholds charged with a mortgage, attempted to get rid of it by fraudulently incurring a forfeiture, which they induced the lessor to take advantage of. They afterwards obtained a new lease from him, which they sold:—Held, that the new lease was subject to the mortgage, notwithstanding the 15 & 16 Vict., c. 76, ss. 2, 10, and a decree was made for payment by the defendants of the mortgage, with costs. Hughes v. Howard, 25 Beav. 575.

5. By Other Persons.

3. Renewal obtained by a party having a rent-charge on leasehold interest, evicted for non-payment of rent, is a trust for the original lessee, and a graft on the former lease. Fitzgerald v. Rainsford, 1 Ball. & B. 37. n.

4. Where a party is in possession of premises as the assignee of a lease, subject to an annuity, amongst other charges, and, pending an eviction for non-payment of rent, enters into a new agreement, whereby, subject to the right of redemption, he is in consideration of a sum of 750*l.* to get a lease at a less rent, to commence from the termination of the nine months allowed for redemption there, though the ejectment proceeding has been perfected, and the eviction actually had, yet the new interest is a graft upon the old, and as such subject to the annuity. Jones v. Kedrney, 1 Dr. & War. 134; 1 Con. & L. 34; 4 Ir. Eq. R. 74.

5. One lease for lives is to the "lessee and her heirs," and another, to "lessee and her executors;" as to the effect in equity of a declaration of trust for A. simply, quare. But if the leases were merely renewals by a guardian, the trust must follow the actual interest of the infant; viz., in one estate to the heir, in the other to the executor. Milner v. Harewood (Lord), 18 Ves. 274.

6. A., possessed of a church lease for three lives, devised it to trustees for certain purposes till his son, R., should attain twenty-one; and when his said son should attain that age, he directed his trustees to stand seised of it to the use of his said son, and the heirs of his body; and, by a codicil, he directed, that if his son, R., should die without issue, his son, P., should inherit the estate in the same manner as R. was to inherit it. R. being quasi tenant in tail, if he surrender his lease, and take a new one to himself and his heirs for three new lives, there is no equity on behalf of P., to make R. or his devisees trustees of the new lease for P. Blake v. Blake, 1 Cox 266.

7. In the case of leases from colleges and ecclesiastical bodies, if the lessee in the new lease takes in the right of him who had the old one, he must be subject to all the equity to which the original lessee was liable. Edwards v. Lewis, 3 Atk. 538.

8. S. was entitled, with her brother and four sisters, to a lease for thirty-one years, as one of the next of kin to her mother, one of whose personal representatives she also was. The landlord made a lease for fifty-one years, which was expressed to be made in consideration of the surrender of the former lease, and described the lands as late in the possession of the mother, and then in the possession of S., and one of her sisters, who was her co-administratrix. There was an indorsement on the lease, stating that it was made in trust for herself and her brothers and sisters. S. married, and the landlord made a lease to her husband of the same lands for forty years, to commence after the expiration of the fifty-one years:—Held, that the new lease was a graft. McAlister v. Walsh, 8 Ir. Eq. R. 250.

9. Lands were subject to a lease of a way-leave at a certain rent for sixty-three years, which the lessee had the power of determining. The land and rent were sold separately by auction in two lots, and were purchased by two different persons. After some time, the purchaser of the land entered into an arrangement with the lessee to put an end to the lease, and entered into a different one, in order to defeat the right of the purchaser of the rent:—Held, that this was contrary to equity, and the right of the purchaser of the rent was made good out of the new contract. Wood v. Londonderry (Marquis), 10 Beav. 465; 16 L. J., N. S., Ch., 460; 12 Jur. 735.

10. A. being entitled to a leasehold interest in 1814, assigns the same by way of mortgage to B. In 1824 A. obtains from the landlord a lease of lives renewable for ever in lieu of the former interest, and in 1835, deposits this new lease with his solicitor in England, to whom he was considerably indebted for the costs at the time. By the decree pronounced at the original hearing, the new lease was declared to be a graft upon the old one, and that the mortgagee was entitled to the benefit of it:—Held that the solicitor's lien upon the new lease, could not prevail against the mortgagee. Smith v. Chichester, 2 Dr. & War. 393; 1 Con. & L. 486; 4 Ir. Eq. R. 580.

11. Whoever has a lease has an interest in the renewal; and when an additional term has been granted, the old term may be said to be still in existence. Winslow v. Tighe, 2 Ball. & B. 205.

The tenant's right of renewal is a part of his interest in the lease. Id.

12. A. demises lands to B. for ninety-nine years; B. demises same to C., reserving a reversion of two years. C. demises the premises to occupying tenants, and afterwards, without notice to B., applies for and obtains a rever-sionary lease of the premises from A.; such lease is not a graft upon the original lease nor a trust for B. Munnell v. O'Brien, 1 Jones 176.

Semble, if C. had obtained the reversion lease, by representations made by him to A., that he was entitled to the entire interest in the lease made by A. to B., such misrepresentation would not be a ground for decreeing that lease a trust for B. Ib.

The reservation of a reversion by the intermediate landlord does not create an implied contract between him and the sub-lessee, that the latter shall not seek to obtain for his own benefit a reversionary lease of the premises from the head landlord. Ib.

1. In May 1835, a lease (to commence in December, 1833, and to continue for twenty-one years and thirty-three days) of certain lead mines in Yorkshire, was granted by the Crown to four lessees, of whom F. M. was one. In June 1848, F. M. conveyed and assigned to J. H., inter alia, the property of which he was possessed for any term of years, etc., upon the trusts mentioned; and in July 1848, F. M. granted and assigned to J. H. all his personal estate, and the surplus, if any, which might arise on the sale of his freehold and leasehold estates, upon trusts, after paying costs, etc., for the benefit of creditors, as therein mentioned. The plaintiffs, who were creditors of F. M., executed the deed in 1849, but no other creditor executed the deed until 1855. J. H. did not dispose of F. M.'s share in the mines. In May 1854, the Crown granted a lease of the said lead-mines to seven lessees (two of whom were F. M. and J. H.) for a term of twenty-one years, to commence on the 5th January 1855. F. M. died intestate in August 1854. G. B., in August 1848, recovered a judgment on two bonds against F. M., which was duly entered up; and in July 1848, J. C. and others also recovered judgment against F. M., which was duly entered up in August following. Subsequently these judgments were assigned to J. B. S., and were duly registered in the county of York, and in the Common Pleas, which was afterwards renewed:—Held, that the plaintiffs had, by virtue of the assignment of June 1848, and of the declaration of trust of July 1848, they having executed the latter deed in 1849, acquired a beneficial interest in the renewed lease. Langhorne v. Harland, 2 Jur., N. S., 872.

2. A testator, being seised in fee of a farm in the parish of A., and being also possessed of a lease for lives of the rectorial tithes of that parish, devised the farm to his nephews in tail male, and the lease to his brother J., his executors, administrators, and assigns, upon conditions that his said brother J., his executors, administrators, and assigns, owners or occupiers of the said parsonage, tithes, and premises, should, at all times after his decease, free and discharge his said farm from all manner of tithes, which should be payable out of the same to the said owner or occupier of the parsonage and tithes aforesaid. J. survived the testator, and devised his interest in the lease to his four sons, who took several renewals, and in 1782 assigned the existing lease for a valuable consideration to A. B., with notice of the trusts of the will:—Held, that a party to whom the tithes were bequeathed by the will of A. B., and who took a renewal of the lease in 1817, held the renewed lease upon the trusts of the will, and consequently he had no title to the tithes of the farm, and that the owner of the farm was not bound to contribute to the renewal fines. Webb v. Lugar, 2 Y. & Coll. 247; 6 L. J., N. S., Exch. Eq., 49.

3. Testator gave leasehold premises to his daughter for life, if his term or terms and interest should therein for so long subsist, for her sole and separate use, notwithstanding her present or future coverture, and after her decease to her children equally, their executors, etc., during all the remainder of the estate, term or terms, and interest therein which should be then to come and unexpired. No trustees being interposed, the husband, having possession, was held accountable according to the uses of the will, both as to the original leases, and also as to reversionary leases granted to him, as the person entitled under the will of the former tenant upon favourable terms, and the equity was established against a purchaser from him with notice. Parker v. Brooke, 9 Ves. 583.

II. PURCHASE OF REVERSION BY TRUSTEE OF LEASE.

4. Trustee of term to pay debts purchased the inheritance from tenant for life; and had it conveyed to him by fine and feoffment; remainderman is not entitled to account of rents, except from his entry to avoid the fine, and, if he neglects to claim for five years, he is barred. Reynolds v. Jones, 2 Sim. & S. 206.

5. Testator seised in fee of a moiety of an estate at L., and in possession of the other moiety as tenant from year to year to St. J. College (his lease from the college having expired), gives to his wife durante viduitate, "all that his messuage or tenement" with the farm and lands at L., and all his estate and interest therein, she paying the rent reserved to St. J. College, etc. The widow, after his death, obtained new lease, and subsequently purchases the reversion of one to whom it had been conveyed by the college under an Act of Parliament:—Held, that the renewed lease was taken, subject to the trusts of the will, and those in remainder to contribute to the fine paid by the widow in proportions to be settled by the Master:—Held, that the purchase of the reversion, not from the college, but from the person to whom it had been conveyed by the college, was not, under the circumstances, to be taken subject to the trusts of the will. Randall v. Russell, 3 Meriv. 160. And see the case of Hardman v. Johnson, id. 847.

6. A. became entitled, as administrator of an intestate, to certain lands held under a lease from the Commissioners of Church Temporalities in Ireland for twenty-one years, customarily renewable, and being so entitled he, as such administrator, obtained from the commissioners a renewal of the lease for twenty-one years. The commissioners subsequently, under s. 34 of the Irish Church Act 1869, offered to sell the reversion in fee in the lands in question to A., as their immediate tenant, at a certain price. A. declined to buy at the price named, and the commissioners thereupon set up the reversion in fee for sale by auction, and A. purchased it at the auction, and obtained a conveyance from the commissioners, which was made expressly subject to the lease and to the right of renewal thereunder:—Held, that A. became a constructive trustee of the reversion so purchased for the persons beneficially entitled to the personal estate of the intestate, and that it formed portion of such personal estate, the persons claiming it to pay the purchase money and all expenses incurred by A. in the purchase. Randall v. Russell (3 Meriv. 190) distinguished. Gabbett v. Lander, 11 L. R., Ir., 295.

1. A. was beneficially entitled to renewable leaseholds for three lives held on trust to renew, and subject to certain charges. All the cestuis que vivent had died. It being disputed whether the right to renew was lost, the reversioners granted a lease to A. for three new lives, without prejudice to the disputed question. A. subsequently bought the reversion:—Held, that the fee became subject to the charges. Trumper v. Trumper, 41 L. J., Ch., 673; 14 L. R., Eq., 295. Affirmed 8 L. R., Ch., 870.

III. DUTY OF TRUSTEES TO RENEW.

2. Where a renewable lease is vested in trustees, upon trust, to pay the rent and renewal fines, they are guilty of a breach of trust if they permit the tenant for life to take and use the rents, and neglect to take out renewals as the lives fall in. Townley v. Bond, 2 Con. & L. 393; 4 Dr. & War. 240.

When, under the provisions of a settlement, the trustees were to renew, and to pay the renewal fines out of the rents and profits, and they neglect to renew, and the tenant for life takes the rents, he will be liable to answer to the trustees for any damages they might sustain in consequence of their breach of trust. Id.

3. Trustee of lunatic renewing lease for his own benefit, declared guilty of breach of trust, and discharged. Exp. Phelps, 9 Mod. 357.

4. A testator gave his leasehold to trustees for legatees in succession, and upon trust, if the trustees "should think it proper or advantageous, as to those which were customarily or might be renewed," to endeavour to renew. And in order thereto should, "if they in their discretion should think fit or expedient, but not necessarily or peremptorily," insure the lives of the cestuis que vivent, and apply the insurance money in renewing, and out of the rents and profits raise sufficient money to renew so often as a renewal should be advisable, and he gave a power to mortgage for the same purpose:—Held, first, that this was an imperative trust, and that the trustees were bound to renew, if they could do so on reasonable terms; secondly, that if the trustees refused, the Court would exercise it; and, thirdly, that they were bound to raise the necessary funds in such a mode as would be most beneficial to all parties interested. Mortimer v. Watts, 14 Beav. 616; 21 L. J., Ch., 169.

5. A renewable lease not inconsistent with a covenant to let and manage to the best advantage; with reference to the subject, the trust for creditors. Kirkham v. Chadwick, 13 Ves. 547.

6. On demurrer:—Held, that trustees to whom discretionary power was given of renewing leases, had not an arbitrary power of renewal, but must renew when most for benefit of cestui que trust. Milington v. Mulgrave, 3 Madd. 491.

7. Testator bequeathed a leasehold for years upon certain trusts, and gave a sum of money to his executor to extend the interest in the lands, if same could be accomplished. The executor did not make any attempt, during the continuance of the term, to obtain an extension of the lease. After it had expired, the Master reported that an extension of the interest could have been obtained:—Held, that the money should go according to the trusts of the term. O'Shea v. Howley, 1 J. & L. 391; 7 Ir. Eq. R. 56.

8. Settlement of a renewable lease in trust out of the rents and profits to pay the fines and charges of renewing, and subject thereto for husband and wife successively for life; remainder to the first son at twenty-one. The trustees, not having renewed in the lives of the tenants for life, answerable as for a breach of trust, though not deriving any benefit from it. Montford (Lord) v. Cadogan (Lord), 17 Ves. 485. Affirmed 19 Ves. 635. See also 2 Meriv. 3.

I. IN GENERAL.

9. There are three modes in which a trustee may become liable, according to the ordinary rules of the Court; first, where one trustee receives trust money, and hands it over to a co-trustee without securing its due application; secondly, where he permits a co-trustee to receive trust money without making due inquiry as to his dealing with it; thirdly, where he becomes aware of a breach of trust, either committed or meditated, and abstains from taking the necessary steps to obtain restitution. Wilkins v. Hogg, 8 Jur., N. S., 25; 31 L. J., Ch., 41; 10 W. R. 47; 5 L. T.

N. S., 467. Affirming 3 Giff. 116; 7 Jur., N. S., 566; 30 L. J., Ch., 492; 9 W. R. 688; 4 L. T., N. S., 434.

1. One trustee knowing and concealing his co-trustee's having sold out the trust fund, equally liable with the trustee who actually sold. Boardman v. Moorman, 1 Bro. C. C. 68.

2. A trustee who stands by and sees a breach of trust committed by his co-trustee becomes responsible for that breach of trust. A testator bequeathed to his partner and to B. his personal estate, upon trust, to invest the same for the benefit of his wife and children. Both the executors proved the will, and the surviving partner retained the testator's moneys in the trade, which were lost. B. took no active part in the trusts, but was cognisant of the breach of trust, and took no proceedings to prevent it:—Held, that B. was responsible for the consequences of the breach of trust. Booth v. Booth, 1 Beav. 125; 8 L. J., N. S., Ch., 39; 2 Jur. 938.

3. Where some of the members of a firm are trustees of funds which they misapply, by making use of them for partnership purposes; if such misapplication be with the knowledge of the other members of the firm, the cestuis que trustent may prove against the joint estate. Exp. Heaton, Buck 386.

4. K. and S., being trustees of money in the funds, sell it for the benefit of S., who dies insolvent, and K. becomes bankrupt. The persons interested in the funds may prove against the estate of K. the value of the funds at the bankruptcy, though S.'s estate be first liable. Exp. Shakeshaft, 3 Bro. C. C. 197.

5. A man cannot take upon himself the character of trustee, and act partially as such, or deny his liability to replace trust property if, through his negligence or want of attention, a sum of money which he has told his cestuis que trustent or induced them to believe has been retained and invested by him, has, in fact, been squandered by his co-trustees. Horton v. Brookhurst, 29 Beav. 504.

A., one of two trustees, rendered accounts in the name of the two, which stated that one-third of the income had been retained and invested, but, in fact, no such investment had been made, and A. alone had received and misapplied these moneys, which were lost by his bankruptcy. The other trustee, however, having at a meeting of the cestuis que trustent so acted as to sanction and adopt the accounts:—Held, liable for A.'s default. Id.

6. One of three trustees who was alleged to have participated in a breach of trust, clearly committed by the others, being also executor of a cestui que trust:—Held, that a legatee of the cestui que trust was entitled to maintain a bill against the three trustees to recover the funds lost by the breach of trust. Sandford v. Jodrell, 2 Sm. & G. 176.

7. If trustees will bind themselves to be liable for the acts of each other, the Court will not relieve them, especially in a case of a composition of debts. Leigh v. Barry, 3 Atk. 583.

In the case of trustees, though there are not negative words in a deed that they shall not be liable for the acts of one another, yet the Court will not make them so for more than each has received. Id. 584.

8. On a marriage, two of the wife's debtors, one of them the bankrupt, were appointed trustees of a fund, to be made up of their several debts:—Held, that the debts not being got in and invested, each trustee was liable only for his own default. Exp. Woodward, Re Turner, 3 Mont. & A. 232; 2 Dea. 401; 6 L. J., N. S., Bk., 60; 1 Jur. 385.

9. Where the estate of a trustee is secondarily liable, in consequence of a breach of trust by a co-trustee, the cestui que trust is bound to pursue his demand against the former estate with due diligence. Newham v. Newham, 1 L. J., Ch., 22.

10. A testator, resident in India, directed his trustees and executors to invest his residue in Government or other good securities, and then declared trusts of it for the benefit of his children and other persons, all of whom were resident either in England or Ireland, and were mentioned so to be in the will. The residue was allowed to remain in the hands of the testator's bankers and agents in India, who ultimately failed:—Held, that the acting executor and trustee was responsible for the loss thereby occasioned to the estate. Lowry v. Fulton, 9 Sim. 104; 7 L. J., N. S., Ch., 158.

11. P., by will, gave a legacy to Mrs. W., defendant, which legacy was on her marriage settled in the usual way, being then still unpaid, the testator's estate being very deficient. Afterwards Mrs. P., the widow of the testator, by her will directed her trustees to pay and make good, out of her assets, all the legacies given by her husband, "upon condition that all parties concerned should abstain from requiring any claim against her husband's estate, and should also execute any releases which her husband's executors might require in respect thereof." Mrs. P.'s estate being ample, the legacy was ready to be paid, but the executors required the discharge of three trustees of Mrs. W.'s settlement. There was at that time but one trustee. Mr. W. procured A. and another person to be trustees; and the legacy having been paid to the solicitor of all three trustees, he paid it over to A., who immediately misapplied it, by suffering W. to convert it to his own use. On a bill filed by the other two trustees against A. and Mr. and Mrs. W. to have the fund brought back:—Held, first, that the legacy under Mrs. P.'s will was bound by the trusts of the settlement. Gray v. Addison, 2 Jur., N. S., 662.

Held, secondly, that the two trustees had been guilty of no conduct, by laches or otherwise, to deprive them of their right to relief. Id.

Held, thirdly, that they had a right to have the whole fund replaced by A., and not for contribution only. Id.

12. A marriage settlement empowered the two trustees to vary the investment of the trust funds, "with the consent in writing of the husband and wife." Part of the trust funds consisted of 1,000l., which was paid in cash to the two trustees, who, in breach of trust, invested it in ordinary railway shares. Thereby a loss was sustained; and the trustees, in further breach of trust, transferred these shares to the N. Bank, to secure the private debt of the husband, the tenant for life. Subsequently O., one of the trustees (without the knowledge of his co-trustee), procured an assignment (for a nominal consideration) of those shares to two persons, who became trustees thereof for the R. bank, which had made to the husband large advances, the full amount of which was secured by the guarantee of O. A week after this assignment, the amount of the husband's debt to the N. Bank was paid by a cheque on the R. Bank, which, before the transfer of the shares was lodged with it, cashed that cheque out of the original credit given to the husband. These shares were sold, without the other trustee's knowledge, for 592*l.* 10*s.*, which sum was applied in reducing the debt due by the husband to the R. Bank. O. obtained from the husband mortgages of the hotel, furniture, etc., to the amount which covered the whole sum guaranteed by him to the R. Bank:—Held, that O. was, as between him and his co-trustee, primarily bound to replace the 592*l.* 10*s.* Costello v. O'Rorke, 3 Ir. R., Eq., 172.

1. Right of a cestui que trust to proceed separately against one trustee implicated in a joint breach of trust. Walker v. Symonds, 3 Swan. 75.

2. A bill by a widow and children (who were infants) against A., B., C., and D., to have the trusts of two deeds and of a will, under which they were interested, carried into execution, is not multifarious, though A. and B. were the trustees of one of the deeds, C. and D. of the other, and A., B., and C. of the will. Campbell v. Mackay, 7 Sim. 564; 1 Myl. & C. 603.

3. Two classes of trustees had committed a breach of trust:—Held, that the cestui que trust might proceed against the one class, without making the other class parties. McGaughen v. Dew, 15 Beav. 84.

II. TRUST FUNDS LEFT UNDER SOLE CONTROL OF CO-TRUSTEE.

4. A trustee, having placed the trust fund under the sole control of his co-trustee, without any sufficient reason, was:—Held, to have committed a breach of trust, and if the money should be lost by such co-trustee's bankruptcy is liable to make it good. Broadhurst v. Balguy, 1 Y. & Coll. C. C. 17.

Early in 1818 a cestui que trust, with power of directing the variation of the trust securities, requested B., who was one of his trustees, to sell out trust stock then standing in the 5 per cents. and invest it in the 3 per cents. In April of the same year the trustees, B. and H., sold out the stock by power of attorney, and soon afterwards H., at the request of B., joined in a cheque on the bankers who acted in the sale, requesting them to pay the amount to themselves or bearer. In the letter of B. requesting H. to sign the cheque, he stated, as a reason for expedition, that the money was to be paid on Thursday to the gentlemen to whom it was engaged; B. afterwards applied the money to his own use. On a bill filed in 1838 by the cestui que trust to compel H. to replace the money:—Held, that H. was primâ facie liable, for that neither of the trustees contemplated an investment pursuant to the direction of the plaintiff, and, even if H. had so contemplated, the course taken by him was not required by necessity or convenience. Id. 16.

5. Two trustees having properly sold out trust money, one of them handed the cheque for the proceeds to the other, who misapplied it:—Held, that they were both liable. Trutch v. Lamprell, 20 Beav. 116.

It is a contradiction in terms to say, that a trustee who acts is not an active trustee, and a defence by a trustee that he only acted for conformity's sake, is unavailing. Id.

6. Two trustees, having power to alter and vary a trust fund, sold it out for that purpose, but allowed the produce to be received by one alone:—Held, that the other, who failed to show that the fund was properly invested, was bound to pay the amount into court. Wiglesworth v. Wiglesworth, 16 Beav. 269.

7. Trustees of stock signed a power of attorney to sell it out, and the proceeds were received from the broker by one of the trustees, who afterwards became insolvent:—Decree, that the other trustees account for and pay the amount. Marriott v. Kinnersley, Tam. 470.

8. One trustee suffering the other to have trust money under a note of hand, held liable. Kable v. Thompson, 3 Bro. C. C. 112.

9. Where a trust fund standing in the name of two trustees had been sold out, and the money had been received by one of them, who was to pay it to the cestui que trust, but failed to do so and afterwards became insolvent, and the money was lost:—Held, that the other trustee was not exonerated from personal liability to make good the fund, on the ground that all the acts which he had done were required for convenience of conformity. Curtis v. Mason, 12 L. J., N. S., Ch., 442.

10. Two trustees executed a release for trust money, but one alone obtained possession of it, and he invested it on improper security:—Held, that the other was liable, for it was his duty to see that it was properly invested. Thompson v. Finch, 22 Beav. 316; 25 L. J., Ch., 681.

11. A box containing securities of the Spanish Government, the property in which passed by delivery, was deposited at a bank in the names of three trustees. The Spanish Government having afterwards made proposals for a change in the securities, one of the three trustees, who was a stockbroker, was allowed to take the securities out of the box for the purpose of such conversion. He effected the conversion, but appropriated a part of the converted securities to his own use, and placed the rest in a box, which he returned to the bank. The fraud was not discovered for several years. The trustee kept the key of the box, being allowed to have access to the box for the purpose of from time to time tearing off coupons and obtaining the dividends, and from time to time took out others of the securities, which he converted to his own use, until at last the box was empty:—Held, that the co-trustees were liable for the first breach of trust, it being their duty after the conversion to see that the securities were all deposited in the box, but that they were not liable in respect of the subsequent misappropriation. Mendes v. Guedalla, 2 John. & H. 259; 8 Jur., N. S., 878; 31 L. J., Ch., 561; 10 W. R. 482; 6 L. T., N. S., 746.

12. Each of two trustees retained possession of a moiety of bonds held in trust, and which passed by delivery, and one trustee committed a breach of trust:—Held, that the other trustee was liable to make good the loss sustained. Lewis v. Nobbs, 8 L. R., Ch. D., 591; 47 L. J., Ch. D., 662.

1. A., by his will, gave the residue of his property to three trustees, whom he appointed executors, upon trust to sell and invest the same, and to pay the income thereof to his widow for life, and after her decease, to his children, who were all infants at the time of his death. The eldest child attained twenty-one in 1839, and the youngest in 1846. The three executors proved the will, but one of them almost exclusively acted. The money which was the proceeds of the estate was suffered by two of the executors to remain in the hands of the third, who ultimately became insolvent. On the youngest child attaining twenty-one, he, on behalf of himself and his brothers and sister, attempted to obtain payment from the acting executor, and in 1848 wrote to him a letter consenting to receive payment of the amount then admitted to be due by annual instalments. In 1849, and shortly before the insolvency of the acting trustee, a bill was filed by all the children against the trustees for the purpose of making them each responsible:—Held, that inasmuch as it was the duty of the three trustees to have explained to their cestuis que trustent what their rights were, and as they had not done so, there was nothing in the conduct of the children to deprive them of their remedy against the three trustees, who were accordingly declared to be jointly and severally liable to make good the deficiency. Burrows v. Walls, 5 De G. M. & G. 233; 3 W. R. 327.

2. An order of dividend found that a certain balance was in the hands of one of the assignees, and directed that assignee to divide the same among the creditors:—Held, that the other assignee, having never interfered with the control and application of the trust fund, was not liable to the creditors for the payment of the dividends. Exp. Dawson, 4 Dea. & Ch. 130; 2 Mont. & A. 94; 4 L. J., N. S., Bky., 42.

3. On a marriage a sum of stock was settled for the separate use of the wife for life, remainder to the husband for life, remainder for their children, with power to change securities with consent of the wife. The dividends on the stock being reduced, one of the trustees, in whom the husband and wife principally confided, and who, with his partners, was their solicitor, informed his co-trustees that he had an opportunity of investing the property in a mortgage at 5 per cent., and, with the consent of the husband and wife, requested his co-trustees to execute a power of attorney to enable him to sell the stock. The co-trustees, without inquiring into the matter, complied; the trustee sold the stock and absconded:—Held, that the co-trustees were liable. Handbury v. Kirkland, 3 Sim. 265.

4. The trustees of estates in Scotland appointed one of themselves to be factor, with a salary; and he, though of undoubted responsibility at that time, afterwards retained large balances at the annual settlements of accounts; whereon one of the trustees, who was cashier, urged him to pay up; but the balances against him increasing, both trustees, after failing in their exertions to obtain payment, revoked his appointment as factor, and he became bankrupt, owing a large debt to the trust estate:—Held, by the Lords (affirming decrees of the Court of Session in Scotland, in an action raised by the first heir of entail, to whom the trustees were bound to account for their management), first, that the appointment of one of the trustees to be factor, even though it gave him no right to charge as factor, was not of itself such a breach of trust as subjected the other trustees to all the consequences of it; secondly, that there was not such gross negligence, in the two trustees permitting the factor to retain balances, as to subject them to liability for the ultimate balance due from him to the trust estate, the Lord Chancellor observing, as to the first point, that the rule was the same in Scotland as in England. Horne v. Pringle, 8 Cl. & F. 234.

5. Slaves in the West Indies were bequeathed to executors, upon trusts for a niece of the testator for her life with remainder to her children. The executors having renounced and disclaimed, administration with the will annexed was granted to the niece, who afterwards married a minor. Before her husband had attained twenty-one the husband and wife executed a settlement, reciting that the husband was, in right of the wife, possessed of the slaves, theretofore the property of her late uncle; but not in any manner referring to the will. The settlement purported to assign the slaves to trustees, in trust to sell and invest the proceeds and pay the income for the separate use of the wife for life, without power of anticipation, with trusts by way of remainder to the children of the marriage. Before the husband came of age, the husband and wife sold the slaves without noticing the settlement in the contract, but paid part of the purchase money to one of the trustees of the settlement, the other trustees not concurring in or being in fact aware of the sale or payment. An amicable bill was then filed on behalf of the infant children of the marriage, to have the trusts of the settlement carried into execution, or a new settlement made in conformity with an offer of the husband to execute such settlement on receiving 3,500*l.* out of the wife's fortune. This bill contained an allegation that the proceeds of the slaves had been invested in the names of the trustees. The trustees by their answer admitted the truth of this allegation. The husband and wife, answering separately, disputed the validity of the settlement, and refused to be bound by it; but the husband offered to execute a settlement on the terms above mentioned. The decree declared the settlement void, and directed a new settlement to be made upon the footing of the offer made by the husband. A settlement was accordingly executed, and the 3,500*l.* paid to the husband. Afterwards it was discovered that the admission in the trustees' answer was incorrect, the trustee who received the proceeds of the slaves having applied the money to his own use, and having by false statements induced his co-trustees to believe and admit upon the answer that the investment in their names and his had been made as there stated. His circumstances were such that any attempt to recover the amount at any period would have been hopeless. More than twenty years after the wife was aware of these circumstances she instituted a suit against the co-trustees to make them personally liable for the breach of trust:—Held, first, that the above facts, independently of the admission of the co-trustees in their answer, did not render them personally liable in respect of the proceeds of the sale of the slaves, the title of the settlors not having been such as to enable the trustees legally to possess themselves of the fund: and, secondly, that in the circumstances of the case that admission did not create any such liability. Derbishire v. Home, 3 De G. M. & G. 80.

Sembla, that a clause restraining a married woman from anticipation does not exempt her from the ordinary consequences of lapse of time and acquiescence; also, that in the circumstances above stated, the administratrix committed a breach of trust by marrying without providing for the security of the trust property; also, that having by her separate answer in the first suit refused to be bound by the first settlement, she could not afterwards sue the trustees for non-performance of the trusts of it; also, that her having concealed from them the nature of her title when she assumed to settle the funds, would of itself have been a defence to such a suit. Ib.

1. An appointment of new trustees recited that certain stock and shares had been transferred into the names of the new trustees, and that by an indenture of even date a mortgage debt and the premises subject thereto had been assigned and conveyed to the new trustees. The trust property having been sold and the proceeds received by one of the trustees and lost, the Court on the hearing decided that the co-trustee, not having inquired what had been done with the proceeds, was liable for all sums actually received by him, jointly with his co-trustee, and which had been lost, and referred it to the chief clerk to find what had been jointly received. The chief clerk by his certificate found that all the trust property had been jointly received:—Held, that the chief clerk had rightly found by his certificate. Hale v. Adams, 21 W. R. 400.

2. A., B., C., and D. were co-trustees of a charity, under a will, which directed that one trustee in rotation should be acting trustee for the current year, and keep the accounts. A., being the acting trustee in a particular year, applied some of the funds to his own use, without the knowledge of the other trustees. A. was succeeded by, and delivered his accounts to B., who delivered his accounts in like manner to C., the next acting trustee. The Court held that D. was not liable for the breach of trust committed by A. Att.-Gen. v. Holland, 2 Y. & Coll. 683; 7 L. J., N. S., Exch. Eq., 51.

3. Under a trust to lend trust money to one of the trustees on his personal security until the trustees should deem it advantageous to invest the money in the funds:—Held, that the omission to call in the money, which had been accordingly lent to the trustee, and its consequent loss did not, in the absence of any proof of misconduct on the part of his co-trustee, create any liability on the part of such co-trustee. Paddon v. Richardson, 7 De G. M. & G. 563; 1 Jur., N. S., 1192; 3 Eq. Rep. 933.

Held, also, that as payment of the debt was only enforceable in equity, and the cestui que trust might have enforced it himself, this circumstance was an answer to a suit by him seeking to render the co-trustee personally liable. Ib.

4. There are three modes in which a trustee may become liable, according to the ordinary rules of the Court; first, where one trustee receives trust money, and hands it over to a co-trustee without securing its due application; secondly, where he permits a co-trustee to receive trust money without making due inquiry as to his dealing with it; thirdly, where he becomes aware of a breach of trust, either committed or meditated, and abstains from taking the necessary steps to obtain restitution; but the operation of these rules was excluded by the indemnity clauses contained in the will. Wilkins v. Hogg, 8 Jur., N. S., 25; 31 L. J., Ch., 41; 10 W. R. 47; 5 L. T., N. S., 467. Affirming 3 Giff. 116; 7 Jur., N. S., 566; 30 L. J., Ch., 492; 9 W. R. 688; 4 L. T., N. S., 434.

5. When one of two trustees allows the trust fund to be under the sole control of the other, both trustees are liable to make good to the trust estate any money misapplied. Rodbard v. Cooke, 36 L. T., N. S., 504; 25 W. R. 555.

L. appointed G. C. and L. A. C. executors and trustees of his will. They kept at their banker's an account relating to the estate, separately from their own. Cheques were drawn against that account with the knowledge of G. C., but signed by L. A. C. alone. In 1867 a sum of 4,000*l.* was received by L. A. C. on account of the estate, and handed by him to accountants, through whose hands all money transactions relating to the trust passed, and paid by them into the bank to the account of the trust estate. Shortly after a sum of 3,645*l.* 2*s.* 7*d.* was drawn out by cheques signed by L. A. C. alone. Of that amount a sum of 628*l.* was applied by L. A. C. to his own use, without the knowledge of G. C. L. A. C. had since died:—Held, that G. C. having allowed the fund to be under the sole control of L. A. C., the estates of L. A. C. and G. C. were jointly and severally liable to make good the loss to the estate. Ib.

Accountants employed by trustees, through whose hands the accounts of the trust estate passed, are in the nature of servants, and bound to accept as correct statements made by one or other of the trustees with regard to the intended application of the trust fund, and are not liable for the misapplication of the trust fund by their employers, on the ground of negligence, by not seeing that the fund was applied properly. Ib.

III. FRAUD BY ONE TRUSTEE.

6. Trustees are not liable to the cestui que trust for money belonging to the trust which their co-trustee gets into his possession without their consent or knowledge, and by a fraud upon them. Barnard v. Bagshaw, 3 De G. J. & S. 355; 9 Jur., N. S., 220; 7 L. T., N. S., 544.

If joint trustees draw a cheque for the trust moneys upon the bankers in whose hands such moneys are, and cross that cheque with the name of certain other bankers, and having so crossed it deliver it to one of their number for the purpose of paying it into the bank of the bankers with whose name the cheque is crossed, the co-trustees are not liable for the misapplication of the money by the trustee to whom the cheque is delivered, if he strikes out the crossing from the cheque, and then receives and misapplies the money. Ib.

1. A box containing the securities of the Spanish Government, the property in which passed by delivery, was deposited at a bank in the names of three trustees. The Spanish Government having afterwards made proposals for a change in the securities, one of the three trustees, who was a stockbroker, was allowed to take the securities out of the box for the purpose of conversion. He effected the conversion, but appropriated a part of the converted securities to his own use, and placed the rest in a box, which he returned to the bank. The fraud was not discovered for several years. The trustee kept the key of the box, being allowed to have access to the box for the purpose of from time to time tearing off coupons and obtaining the dividends, and from time to time took out others of the securities, which he converted to his own use, until at last the box was empty:—Held, that the co-trustees were liable for the first breach of trust, it being their duty after the conversion to see that the securities were all deposited in the box, but that they were not liable in respect of the subsequent misappropriation. Mendes v. Guedalla, 2 John. & H. 259; 8 Jur., N. S., 878; 31 L. J., Ch., 561; 10 W. R. 482; 6 L. T., N. S., 746; 5 L. T., N. S., 308.

IV. JOINING IN RECEIPTS.

2. Each trustee shall be charged for no more than he actually receives. Otherwise, if the trustees join in receipts. Spalding v. Shamlor, 1 Vern. 303.

3. Two trustees join in a receipt, and one receives the money: only the receiving trustee shall be charged. Sed quere. Churchill v. Hobson, 1 P. W. 241; 3 Ark. 318.

4. Two trustees in a mortgage join in an assignment of the term, and in a receipt for the whole, each receiving a moiety only of the mortgage money, are to be answerable only for what they respectively receive. Fellows v. Mitchell, 1 P. W. 81; 2 Vern. 504, 515.

5. A trustee joining in a receipt and reconveyance of a mortgaged estate, though he does not receive the money, is liable, and, the receipt being in evidence, no inquiry can be directed as to the fact. Scurfield v. Howes, 3 Bro. C. C. 90.

6. Co-trustee held liable for acts of other, though he merely joined in receipt for conformity's sake, and never meddled in trust beyond that. Bradwell v. Catchpole, cited 3 Swan. 78.

7. Trustees joining in receipt are not chargeable unless they also receive the money. Chambers v. Minchin, 7 Ves. 198.

8. A trustee charged, though he did not receive the money, under the circumstances, having joined in the receipt; the sale unnecessary; and permitting his co-trustee to keep and act with the money contrary to the trust; not charged in the respect of the interest of one of the cestuis que trustent having notice of the breach of trust, and acquiescing. Brice v. Stokes, 11 Ves. 319. And see Griffiths v. Porter, 25 Beav. 236.

9. Trustee joining in receipt, though only for conformity, is accountable. Westly v. Clarke, Dick. 330.

10. One of three trustees for sale was also the solicitor employed in the matter, and he alone received the purchase money, and neglected to apply it. The conveyance was executed, and the receipt signed by all three trustees:—Held, that the solicitor was not the agent of the other trustees, so as to make the receipt by him the receipt of all; and the other trustees, having joined merely for the sake of conformity, were not chargeable. Re Fryer, 3 Kay & J. 317; 3 Jur., N. S., 485; 26 L. J., Ch., 338.

V. REMEDIES OF CO-TRUSTEES INTER SE.

11. Contribution enforced among assignees in bankruptcy, to reimburse a payment by one under an order for a loss occasioned by their joint act; and the objection that the defendants acted only for conformity upon the representation and advice of the plaintiff, did not prevail. Lingard v. Bromley, 1 Ves. & B. 114.

12. Contributions between trustees cannot be enforced in a suit instituted against them to repair a breach of trust for which they are all liable. Fletcher v. Green, 33 Beav. 513.

As to the right of co-trustees, who had committed a breach of trust, to contribution in a suit to make them replace the trust fund. Ib.

13. When a decree has been made against an executor, and the estate of a deceased executor, to make good a breach of trust, payment by the surviving executor of the whole amount due is a complete discharge of the deceased executor's estate, and it is not competent for the Court to enforce payment against the deceased executor's estate in order to establish contribution. Micklethwait v. Winstanley, 5 N. B. 204; 34 L. J., Ch., 281; 11 L. T., N. S., 582.

14. By a settlement made in contemplation of marriage, a lady assigned a certain sum of money and interest, due to her from a trading firm, to one of the partners in the firm and the plaintiff, as trustees, upon trust, to permit the fund to remain in the hands of the firm until the trustees should be requested by the settlor, in writing, to call it in, and upon such request to call in and compel payment of the same, and invest it, and to hold such sum and the investment upon the trusts therein mentioned; and it was provided, that it should be lawful for the trustees, with the consent of the settlor, after giving to the partner trustee, or any other member of the firm, three months' notice in writing, to call in the said fund; but that, so long as it remained in the hands of the firm with the consent of the settlor, the trustees were not to be answerable for any insufficiency thereof. The firm suspended payment, and made a composition with their creditors; and after such suspension, the settlor, for the first time, requested the trustees to call in the fund. The plaintiff thereupon requested his co-trustee to pay the money. Upon his refusal to do so, the plaintiff filed his bill against his co-trustee and the cestuis que trustent, to have the trust executed by the Court, and himself indemnified:—Held, that the partner trustee must be considered as having the fund in his hands from the expiration of three months after the notice requiring him to pay it; and that, therefore, a decree or payment of the debt might be made against him, although the other partner in the firm was not a party to the suit. Norton v. Steinkopf, 1 Kay 45.

If adult cestuis que trustent insist upon their strict rights, the Court will not exercise any discretion for the benefit of other cestuis que trustent who are infants. Ib.

1. If A. and B., two trustees, have committed a breach of trust and are equally liable, but B. received the produce, A. may sustain a bill against B. alone to recover the amount for the benefit of the trust. Baynard v. Woolley, 20 Beav. 583.

H. assigned property to B. and W. to be invested in the public funds or other securities upon trust for himself for life, remainder to his wife for life, remainder to his son. After H.'s death the trustees, having received 400*l.* of the trust money, lent it to W., who already owed H. 100*l.*, and who thereupon signed an informal memorandum, stating that the title-deeds of his house, etc., were held as a collateral security. These deeds were in B.'s possession in respect of a debt due to another person, and secured by a term of 500 years. The widow was informed of this transaction, and received interest on the 500*l.* at 4 per cent., subsequently, at her request, raised to 5*l.* per cent. W., having conveyed all his real and personal estate to L. for the benefit of his creditors, and having afterwards ceased to pay interest on the 500*l.*, a bill was filed against him by B. (the widow and the son of H. and L. being also made defendants) for the recovery of the 500*l.*, etc.:—Held (1) that B. was entitled to file such bill against his co-trustee, notwithstanding that he had himself been guilty of a breach of trust; (2) that he was himself liable to replace the whole trust fund, if it could not be recovered from W.; (3) that the acknowledgment signed by W. constituted an equitable mortgage; (4) that the legal estate in the hereditaments therein comprised being vested in B., the subsequent assignment to L. did not affect the term of 500 years; (5) that the widow was liable to account to the trust fund for interest received by her in excess of 4*l.* per cent. Ib.

2. P., by will, gave a legacy to Mrs. W., defendant, which legacy was on her marriage settled in the usual way, being then still unpaid, the testator's estate being very deficient. Afterwards Mrs. P., the widow of the testator, by her will directed her trustees to pay and make good, out of her assets, all the legacies given by her husband, "upon condition that all parties concerned should abstain from requiring any claim against her husband's estate, and should also execute any releases which her husband's executors might require in respect thereof." Mrs. P.'s estate being ample, the legacy was ready to be paid, but the executors required the discharge of three trustees of Mrs. W.'s settlement. There was at that time but one trustee. Mr. W. procured A. and another person to be trustees; and the legacy having been paid to the solicitor of all three trustees, he paid it over to A., who immediately misapplied it, by suffering W. to convert it to his own use. On a bill filed by the other two trustees against A. and Mr. and Mrs. W. to have the fund brought back:—Held, first, that the legacy under Mrs. P.'s will was bound by the trusts of the settlement. Gray v. Addison, 2 Jur., N. S., 662.

Held, secondly, that the two trustees had been guilty of no conduct, by laches or otherwise, to deprive them of their right to relief. Ib.

Held, thirdly, that they had a right to have the whole fund replaced by A., and not for contribution only. Ib.

3. G. and H., trustees of a settlement, on the solicitation of D., the tenant for life of the settlement, lent the trust funds on a security which totally failed. G. was a solicitor, and in the transaction of the loan, no other solicitor was employed for the lenders, and no sufficient investigation of title was made:—Held, that the trustees were compellable to replace the trust fund. French v. Graham, 10 Ir. Ch. R. 522.

Held, also, that both being solvent, H. was bound to replace one moiety, and G. the other moiety, that G. was not entitled to be indemnified by the tenant for life, the onus of investigating the title having been cast upon him, but that H. was entitled to be recouped, by the tenant for life, the amount of his moiety. Ib.

4. Two trustees advanced to a builder money on mortgage of land and houses thereon. The land had belonged to one of the trustees, and part of the money advanced was applied by the builder in payment of the price of the land and of other money due by him to that trustee. The other trustee filed a bill against him, alleging that the security was insufficient, and asking that the security should be realised, and that he should make good any deficiency:—Held, that under such circumstances one trustee had no equity to make the other trustee primarily liable. Butler v. Butler, 5 L. R., Ch. D., 554; 46 L. J., Ch., 548; 37 L. T., N. S., 33. Affirmed 26 W. R. 85; 37 L. T., N. S., 518; 47 L. J., Ch., 77; 7 L. J., Ch. D., 116.

Held, also, that the Court would not direct a sale in the absence of the cestuis que trustent, and merely to ascertain the deficiency, if any. Ib.

I. LIABILITY OF TRUSTEES FOR ACTS OF OR BREACHES OF TRUST BY.

1. In General, 7006.
2. Bankers, 7006.
3. Brokers, 7007.
4. Solicitors, 7008.

1. In General.

1. As to losses by agents of trustees, see Re Lithfield, 1 Atk. 87. Exp. Belcher and Exp. Parsons, Ambl. 218; 1 Ken. Ch. 38.

2. Though the appointment by trustees of a co-trustee as factor of estates would not make them liable for his defaults, by making him their agent they would be liable for his defaults, the same as of any other agent. The principle is the same in Scotland as in England. Horne v. Pringle, 8 Cl. & F. 264.

3. A., B., C., D., and E. (the two latter being married women) take out administration to an intestate, and afterwards appoint C. to be the acting administrator, and direct the creditors to pay their debts to him. C. becomes insolvent:—Held, that A., B., and C., and the husbands of D. and E., are responsible for C.'s receipts. Lees v. Sanderson, 4 Sim. 28.

4. It being the duty of A., under the trusts of a settlement, to remit a sum of 1,000*l.* from India to B., C., and D., in England, he permitted it to remain in the hands of private traders, in whose hands it was lost:—Held, that A. was responsible for it, though it had been properly invested by those parties, and been sold out at the request of the cestui que trustent, and the loss was occasioned by their subsequent bankruptcy, and the bankruptcy of their correspondents in London, on whom they had drawn bills for the amount. Bacon v. Clark, 3 Myl. & C. 294.

2. Bankers.

5. Trustee incautiously leaving trust fund in banker's hands without security, held liable to loss on banker's failure. Anon., Loft. 492.

6. If trustee pay rents to a banker, in credit, who fails, the trustee is not liable. Exp. Belchier, Exp. Parsons, Ambl. 219; 1 Ken. Ch. 38.

7. Trustees having contracted to purchase land, sell out stock, and deposit the produce at a banker's when the purchase seems to be near completion; they are not liable to make good the money if the bankers fail. Franco v. Woods, Taml. 172.

8. Trustee depositing a trust fund with his bankers, accompanied by an order in writing to invest the money in consols, answerable for the omission of the bankers to make the investment, where he made no subsequent inquiry respecting it until about five months afterwards, when the bankers became bankrupt. Challen v. Shippam, 4 Hare 555.

9. A receiver, in order to obtain sureties, agrees with them that A., the partner of one of the sureties, shall attend upon the receipt of the rents of the estates, and that they shall be paid into a bank at L., in the name of the sureties, and that all moneys to be applied for the purposes of the receivership shall be drawn for by checks prepared and written by D., and signed by the receiver. This agreement having been acted upon, the bank at L. failed, and a loss was sustained. The account was then transferred to another bank, under the same agreement, when another loss ensued by failure of the bankers:—Held, on petition, that receiver was responsible for amount of losses, etc. White v. Baugh, 9 Bl. N. S. 181; 3 Cl. & F. 44.

10. Trustees and executors who, for upwards of a year after their testator's death, allowed a considerable portion of the assets to be unproductive in the hands of banker, who failed, were under the circumstances charged with the loss. Moyle v. Moyle, 2 Russ. & M. 710.

11. Trustee not charged with a loss by failure of banker to agent in whose hands money was deposited, pending transaction for change of trustee. Adams v. Claxton, 6 Ves. 226.

12. Preparatory to the final winding up of a trust, the agent and solicitor of the trustee paid the trust money to his bankers, to the credit of his general account with them, and informed the cestui que trust that the money was lying idle at his bankers. The cestui que trust took no notice of the information, and more than a month afterwards the bankers failed:—Held, that as the agent did not inform the cestui que trust that the money had been paid to the credit of his general account, and as the payment to the bankers was not necessary to the winding up of the trust, the agent and the trustee were jointly liable for the money. Macdonnell v. Harding, 7 Sim. 178; 4 L. J., N. S., Ch., 70.

13. The trustee of a legacy which had been invested in stock, authorises the sale of the stock, and permits B. to receive the proceeds; B. retains the money in his hands, and, during many years, the legatee, who was not aware that the legacy had ever been invested in stock, or that stock, in which it once was vested, had been sold, deals with B., as the only person accountable to her for the money; notwithstanding these dealings on the part of the legatee, the trustees continue to be accountable for the stock. Adams v. Clifton, 1 Russ. 297.

14. A testator died in March 1823. In January 1824 and January 1825, the executors and trustees deposited part of the assets in the hands of bankers, on their notes carrying interest. The bankers failed in November 1825, and, no necessity having been shown for such deposit, the trustees were held personally responsible for the loss. Darke v. Martyn, 1 Beav. 525.

15. Bankers of trustees wrongfully sold out stock, and applied it to their own purposes:—Held, that the measure of their liability was the amount paid in replacing the stock. Sadler v. Lee, 6 Beav. 324; 12 L. J., N. S., Ch., 407; 7 Jur. 476.

16. A trustee of certain estates received the proceeds and paid them into a bank, where they were left for many years. A suit was instituted, and a receiver appointed of the rents and interest. The bank having failed, it was held that the cestui que trustent, who were infants, must not be prejudiced by the neglect of the trustee to place the fund in safety, and that the trustee was liable to refund the money lost. Dreuer v. Mardesley, 16 Sim. 511; 18 L. J., N. S., Ch., 273; 13 Jur. 330. And see S. C. 13 L. J., N. S., Ch., 433; 8 Jur. 547.

1. Trustee, allowing moneys appropriated by him for a particular purpose to remain in the hands of bankers in India, after he had quitted that country, the bankers becoming insolvent before the moneys were paid over by them:—Held, liable for the loss. Brown v. Clark, 1 Jur. 838.

2. A trustee was ordered to pay the balance of moneys in his hands belonging to his testator's estate to new trustees, and was discharged from his trusteeship. He kept the trust money in his name at a bank, but to a separate account, for some time after the costs had been taxed and the balance ascertained. The bank shortly afterwards failed:—Held, that he was personally liable to make good the loss which had accrued to the trust estate by reason of the failure of the bank. Lunham v. Blundell, 4 Jur., N. S., 3; 27 L. J., Ch., 179; 6 W. R. 49.

3. Trustees included in their account brought into chambers certain sums which they had received, and which stood in their names in a bank. They were ordered to pay the amount found due into court, and ultimately did so partly out of subsequent receipts, leaving the sum in question still in the bank. On the failure of the bank:—Held, that the trustees were liable for the loss of the sums included in the amount passed, but not for sums subsequently paid in. Wilkinson v. Bewick, 6 W. R. 849; 4 Jur., N. S., 1010.

4. Trustees made personally liable for loss arising from placing trust money with bankers on a deposit account, which was not authorised by the will, and that, notwithstanding a trustee indemnity clause against losses by a banker of money deposited for safe custody. Rehden v. Wesley, 29 Beav. 213.

5. An administratrix, plaintiff in a suit for administration of the estate, received the purchase money of property sold under a contract directed by the decree of the Court to be carried into effect. The decree also directed sales of mortgaged property, and that the mortgagees should be paid out of the produce of the sales; it gave no direction about the purchase money of the property sold by the administratrix. With the advice of the solicitors of the principal, but not all, of the beneficiaries, she paid the money into a private bank to a separate account, and left it there for many months. The administratrix applied by petition, and thereon obtained money out of court to pay off the mortgagees while she had the purchase money lying at the bankers. The bank failed:—Held, that she was not liable for a breach of trust. Wilks v. Groom, 3 Drew. 584; 2 Jur., N. S., 681; 25 L. J., Ch., 724.

6. G., being entitled to a share of an estate, went abroad, leaving a power of attorney to receive such share. The estate was sold, but the purchaser requiring his confirmation, his share was deposited in the names of E. & P. in a bank on a declaration of trust. On the confirmation arriving, E. was repeatedly applied to for more than four months, but neglected to hand the fund over, alleging a difficulty in making out the account; the bank failed, and the money was lost:—Held, that E. was liable to restore the money with interest and pay the costs, P. being always ready to hand over. Gough v. Etty, 20 L. T., N. S., 368.

3. Brokers.

7. Assignee of bankrupt employs a broker to sell a quantity of tobacco, the broker receives the money, and at the end of ten days fails, before he paid it over. The assignee not bound to make it good. Exp. Belochier, Exp. Parsons, Amb. 218.

8. A trustee is bound to conduct the business of the trust in the same way in which an ordinary prudent man of business conducts his own, and has no further obligation. He may employ brokers and agents in cases in which they are employed in the ordinary course of business. Re Speight, Speight v. Gaunt, 22 L. R., Ch. D., 727; 52 L. J., Ch., 503; 48 L. T. 279; 31 W. R. 401. Affirmed 9 L. R., App. Cas., 1; 53 L. J., Ch., 419; 50 L. T. 330; 32 W. R. 435. Reversing 51 L. J., Ch., 715; 46 L. T. 726; 30 W. R. 785.

G., a sole acting trustee and executor, having under his control a trust fund of about 15,000*l.*, determined, with the assent of the cestuis que trustent, to invest the same in the securities of the Municipal Corporations of Leeds, Huddersfield, and Halifax. For this purpose he employed (as alleged, at the express desire and request of the cestuis que trustent) C., a broker, then in good repute, to act for him. There was no necessity for the employment of a broker, as the securities were obtainable from the corporations respectively by application direct to them. G. received from C. what purported to be a bought-note, in the words and figures following: "Bradford, February 24th 1881. To the executors of the late John Speight. We have this day bought for you, as per your order, subject to the rules of the London Stock Exchange, 5,000*l.* Leeds Corporation Debenture Stock, at 105*½*, commission, net, 5,275*l.*; 5,000*l.* Huddersfield Corporation ditto ditto, at 100, commission, net, 5,000*l.*; 5,000*l.* Halifax Corporation ditto ditto, at 100, commission, net, 5,000*l.*—Total, 15,275*l.*—Account. (Signed) John Cooke and Son." Neither the corporation of Huddersfield nor of Halifax issued debenture stocks, although they borrowed on debenture bonds. On receipt of the bought-note, G. drew three cheques for 5,275*l.*, 5,000*l.*, and 5,000*l.* respectively, in favour of "John Cooke and Son," and handed them to C. G. applied several times during a period of nearly five weeks to C. for the securities, but received various excuses, with which, although wholly unfounded, he remained satisfied, and took no steps to ascertain what had actually been done in the matter, or to have the purchase completed by obtaining transfers of the securities. Subsequently it appeared that C. had, in fact, never bought or contracted to buy any securities, but had appropriated the three cheques to his own use, and, having been adjudicated a bankrupt, absconded. There was evidence that about a fortnight was generally required to get corporation bonds completed when obtained direct, the broker holding in the meantime a banker's receipt for the money. Evidence was given that the form of the bought-note would indicate to brokers, though probably not to others, that the bonds were to be procured from the corporation direct:—Held, that the trustee, having acted in the ordinary course of business, was not liable to make good the loss occasioned by the embezzlement of the trust moneys by the broker. Bostock v. Floyer (1 L. R., Eq., 26) explained; Hopgood v. Parkin (11 L. R., Eq., 74) questioned. Ib.

Whether the trustees would have been justified in paying the money to the broker if he had had notice that the bonds were to be procured direct from the corporation, quære. Ib.

4. Solicitors.

1. A sum of 3,000*l.* was vested in A. and B. on certain trusts. The cestui que trust mortgaged it to C. for 1,200*l.*, and C. transferred the mortgage to E. and F. on family trusts, with power to E. and F. to give receipts. The solicitor of A. and B., having notice of the secondary trusts, paid the 1,200*l.* to F. alone:—Held, that A. and B. were personally liable to repay the money, with interest and costs. Hall v. Franck, 11 Beav. 519; 18 L. J., N. S., Ch., 362; 13 Jur. 222.

2. Where a trustee for sale executed the conveyance, and placed the same, with the receipt indorsed, in the hands of an attorney, who misapplied the purchase money, and became bankrupt:—Held, to constitute a breach of trust, and trustee liable. Ghost v. Waller, 9 Beav. 497.

3. A trustee to uses, with power of sale, which uses, in the event, became executed in A. for an absolute estate in fee, was held not liable to A. for the purchase money of part of the estates, where the sale was conducted and the money received by the solicitor of the trustee, although the evidence was conflicting, whether he acted in the matter by the direction of the trustee, or by the direction of A., the conveyance being executed by A. alone. Waugh v. Wyche, 2 Drew. 318; 23 L. J., Ch., 833; 2 W. R. 485.

A trustee of the legal estate in a mortgage in trust for A. absolutely, executed a reconveyance, and signed a receipt for the mortgage money, and handed it to one of A.'s executors, who was also his own solicitor, and who afterwards misapplied the money:—Held, that the money having got into the hands of the executor, the trustee was not liable. Ib.

4. Trustees of stock sold it out, and committed the proceeds to their solicitor for investment, by whom it was misapplied, and lost:—Held, that the trustees were liable for a breach of trust, and that the cestui que trust were entitled to relief against both the trustees and solicitor, and that they might sue either the trustees alone or the trustees jointly with the solicitor. Romland v. Witherden, 3 Macn. & G. 568; 21 L. J., N. S., Ch., 480.

5. Preparatory to the final winding up of a trust, the agent and solicitor of the trustee paid the trust money to his bankers to the credit of his general account with them, and informed the cestui que trust that the money was lying idle at his bankers. The cestui que trust took no notice of the information, and more than a month afterwards the bankers failed:—Held, that as the agent did not inform the cestui que trust that the money had been paid to the credit of his general account, and as the payment to the bankers was not necessary to the winding up of the trust, the agent and trustee were jointly liable for the money. Macdonnell v. Harding, 7 Sim. 178; 4 L. J., N. S., Ch., 70.

6. Assignee of a bankrupt, employing an attorney to sue for and recover debts due to the estate, is answerable for his receipts, and if he misapplies the money must make it good, although no proof or allegation of fraud or negligence. But there are two modes by which the assignee may relieve himself from this responsibility; by obtaining the assent of the creditors, or by having the approval of the Master in respect to the person appointed agent. Account passed by the commissioners, ordered to be reviewed before a Master. Ecp. Townsend, 1 Moll. 139.

7. A., one of two trustees and executors of a will, and resident in London, authorised a person to get in three mortgages (part of the estate). The solicitor forwarded the deeds of conveyance to B., the other trustee, in the country, who executed and returned them. The solicitor received the money and paid it to A. alone, who misapplied it:—Held, that B. was liable for the amount. Cornell v. Gatoombe, 27 Beav. 568.

8. A trustee will be liable to make good to the trust estate a loss which has been occasioned by the fraud and forgery of the solicitor whom he employed, although in employing such solicitor he may have exercised ordinary care and discretion. Bostock v. Flower, 11 Jur., N. S., 962; 35 L. J., Ch., 23; 14 W. R. 120; 13 L. T., N. S., 489; 1 L. R., Eq., 26.

A trustee employed a solicitor to invest trust money; the solicitor, who was steward of the manor, sent the trustee some title deeds and a copy of a surrender of copyholds to secure the trust money, but misapplying the trust money; the pretended surrender had really no existence:—Held, that the trustee was liable to make good the loss. S. C. 35 Beav. 603.

9. Trustees are bound to employ competent solicitors and agents; and therefore, where trustees lent trust funds upon mortgage, and their solicitor accepted without inquiry an abstract and a valuation made for the purpose of a previous mortgage, and it afterwards turned out that the solicitor for the mortgagor had concealed the fact that since the date of the mortgage and valuation two other mortgages had been effected, and loss resulted to the trust estate in consequence:—Held, that the trustees were liable to make good the loss to their cestui que trust. Hopgood v. Parkin, 18 W. R. 908; 22 L. T., N. S., 772; 11 L. R., Eq. 74.

10. Upon the occasion of the investment of a trust fund on mortgage, the trustee employed the same solicitor as the mortgagor. Subsequently he had reason to suspect the sufficiency of the security, but took no steps to inquire into the matter. It afterwards turned out that the solicitor had practised a fraud on the trustee, and that the security was insufficient:—Held, that the trustee was liable for the loss occasioned to the trust estate. Sutton v. Wilders, 12 L. R., Eq., 373; 25 L. T., N. S., 292; 19 W. R. 1021.

1. In General.

1. A mere agent of the trustee may not be accountable to the cestui que trust, but otherwise with respect to a substituted trustee, who accounts to nobody else. Myler v. Fitzpatrick, 6 Madd. 360.

2. Agent of an administrator keeping money of the intestate's in his hands which he had proposed to his principal to lay out in the funds, ordered to pay interest with annual rests. Brown v. Southouse, 3 Bro. C. C. 107.

3. If one of two persons named trustees and executors disclaims and renounces and afterwards possesses himself of assets as the agent of the other, who has accepted the trust and proved the will, he does not thereby become accountable as a trustee and executor, and ought not to be made a party to a suit for the administration of the estate. Dove v. Everard, 1 Russ. & M. 231; Tam. 376.

4. The commercial correspondents of executors, acting under a power of attorney:—Held, to be responsible to the testator's estate for the amount of the produce of stock, part of such estate, sold by them and applied by the direction of the executors in payment of a balance due from the latter, as partners in a commercial concern, to their correspondents, with full knowledge on the part of the correspondents, that the stock was part of the testator's assets. There is no primary liability in respect of breaches of trust, all parties to a breach of trust being equally liable; and it is no objection to a suit brought by parties seeking relief against a breach of trust, that one of the defendants against whom no relief is prayed, may have been a party to such breach of trust. Wilson v. Moore, 1 Myl. & K. 127.

5. An agent assisting in a breach of trust is personally responsible. Att.-Gen. v. Leicester (Corporation), 7 Beav. 176.

6. A trustee, without authority from the cestui que trust, agreed with his agent that the latter should pay him 100*l.* a year from the trust property, and retain the residue (180*l.*) for himself. No fraud was proved by the agent (who denied knowledge of the trust), but no explanation was given. In a suit for account by a cestui que trust after the trustee's death:—Held, that, notwithstanding the general rule that a trustee's agent is accountable to the trustee only, an inquiry should be had of the circumstances of the agent's appointment and his knowledge of the trusts affecting the property. Aroher v. Lavender, 9 Ir. R., Eq., 220.

7. A trustee, one of a firm of stockbrokers, misapplied the trust securities. His partners were, under the circumstances, made responsible. De Ribeyre v. Barolay, 23 Beav. 107; 26 L. J., Ch., 747.

A., who was in partnership with B., C., and D., as stockbrokers, was one of the trustees of the plaintiff's marriage settlement. Some Portuguese bonds belonging to her, which were in A.'s custody, were included in the settlement. After the marriage, the firm bought some Brazilian bonds on account of the trust. The Court, from the course of dealing, considered the bonds to be in the custody of the firm, and A., the trustee, having applied them to his own use:—Held, that his co-partners were (as custodians) liable to replace them. Id.

8. A trustee empowered S. to manage a trust estate. S. accounted to him. The trustee died, yet S. was decreed to account again to cestui que trust. Pollard v. Downes, 2 Ch. Ca. 121.

9. A bill will lie against directors, committee-men, and other officers of a corporation, for relief against a breach of trust, fraud, and mismanagement; for they are agents to those who entrust them to superintend the affairs of the company, and a gross non-attendance makes them guilty of the breaches of trust in others. So a supine negligence, by which a great loss arises, makes them all equally guilty in the second degree, and liable; for they must not neglect to exercise the powers vested in them, to prevent the ill consequences arising from a confederacy. Charitable Corporation v. Sutton, 2 Atk. 405; 9 Mod. 349.

10. A testator named A. a trustee of part of her personal estate, and appointed him, her son, and X.'s husband executors; the son and X.'s husband alone proved the will, but A. did not disclaim. The son and X. took life interest in the trust fund, to a part of which the plaintiff became, by X.'s appointment, entitled. A. had been the testator's agent, and acted in the management of the assets, under power of attorney from the executors who proved and X.; and, after the son's death, from the surviving executor and X., which authorised him to receive the assets for the uses and purposes of the will. On A.'s death, the defendant, his son and executor, acted under a similar power, and continued to do so after the death of X.'s husband. X. and her husband get possession of the entire assets:—Held, that A. and the defendant were responsible as trustees, and could not protect themselves as being agents only. Montgomery v. Johnson, 11 Ir. Eq. R. 476.

11. Four executors holding stock in their name directed their solicitor to sell the stock. The solicitor, in the name of his firm, gave to a stockbroker, whom the solicitor had employed in Stock Exchange speculations, directions to sell the stock. The stock was sold by the broker, and the solicitor returned to the stockbroker transfers of the stock, with receipts endorsed, signed by the four executors. The sale was completed, and the stockbroker sent to the solicitor a cheque for part of the purchase money for the shares, and carried the balance on the transaction to the credit of the solicitor in the account between them, which account was afterwards settled by a payment made to the stockbroker:—Held, that, under the circumstances, the stockbroker must be held to have had notice that the shares were not the property of the solicitor, and that, though the solicitors had from the executors authority to receive the purchase money, payment to him by giving him credit in an account between them, that was not sufficient to discharge the stockbroker, who remained liable to the executors for the balance. Pearson v. Scott, 9 L. R., Ch. D., 198; 38 L. T., N. S., 747; 26 W. R. 796.

1. Accountants employed by trustees, through whose hands the accounts of the trust estate passed, are in the nature of servants, and bound to accept as correct statements made by one or other of the trustees with regard to the intended application of the trust fund, and are not liable for the misapplication of the trust fund by their employers, on the ground of negligence, by not seeing that the fund was applied properly. Rodbard v. Cooke, 36 L. T., N. S., 504; 25 W. R. 555.

2. Bankers.

2. Bankers, under the circumstances of the case, decreed to refund moneys which had been drawn by a trustee from a trust account standing in their books, and placed to the credit of the trustees' private account at the bank, upon the balance of which latter account the bankers were creditors. Pannell v. Hurley, 2 Colly. 241.

3. Bankers, the agents of executors, authorised by them to receive certain assets, but prior to receiving them advancing the amount to executors in the course of their duty as agents, and afterwards applying the assets when received in payment of the amount of such advances, are not responsible, in respect to the misapplication by the executor's agents, not being privy to any intention of such misapplication. Keane v. Roberts, 4 Madd. 332.

4. P., being receiver of the rents of the R. estate, had a private account with certain bankers; he asked leave to overdraw that account, to which the bankers assented; and, at the same time, he promised to introduce the R. estate account to the bankers. He accordingly overdraw his private account, and opened a separate account called the "R. estate account." Afterwards the bankers, by his direction, transferred the balance of the R. estate account to the private account, which was then overdrawn. P. became insolvent:—Held, that the bankers were liable to the owner of the R. estate for the balance. Bodenhams v. Hoskins, 2 De G. M. & G. 903; 21 L. J., N. S., Ch., 864; 16 Jur. 721.

5. In order to hold a banker justified in refusing to pay a cheque of his customer, the customer being an executor, and drawing a cheque as executor, there must be a misapplication of the money intended by the executor so as to constitute a breach of trust, and the banker must be cognisant of that intention. Gray v. Johnston, 3 L. R., H. L., 1; 16 W. R. 842.

The existence of a personal benefit to the banker, designed or stipulated for, as a consequence of the payment, would be strong evidence that the banker was privy to the breach of trust. Id.

Bankers had acted as such to J., who carried on business with his son-in-law under the style of J. & M., but whose accounts with them were kept in his own name alone, and were unsettled at his death. He left a will, bequeathing all his property to the use of his wife for life, and after her death to be divided among their children as she might think fit; part of the property consisted of life policies which were put into the hands of the bankers, together with the probate of J.'s will, and they received the amount of the policies, made up their accounts, and, after deducting their own unsettled claims, declared a certain sum to remain due from themselves to the executrix. She continued her husband's business with his late partner under the style of J. & M., and a new account was opened with the bankers in the name of the new firm, and she, as executrix, drew a cheque for the amount stated to be due to her, and paid it in to the bankers to be credited to the firm of J. & M., and it was so credited and paid out, with other money, on account of cheques drawn by the new firm:—Held, that these circumstances were not in themselves sufficient to show that a breach of trust had been committed, and that the bankers knew of the intention to commit it so as to render them liable to replace the money. Id.

6. When a bank, with knowledge of the relative position of the parties, places the proceeds of a promissory note, which has been made in its favour by A. (a person just come of age), unreservedly in the power of B. (a person who stands in loco parentis to A.), knowing at the time that B. claims to be a creditor of A. to a large amount for necessities supplied, and B. afterwards misappropriates the money, the bank will be restrained from suing on the note. Dettmar v. Metropolitan and Provincial Bank, 1 Hem. & M. 641; 10 L. T., N. S., 63.

7. B., a trustee, laid out the trust money, together with other money in his hands, upon mortgage in his own name, and executed a declaration of trust as to so much of the mortgage debt as represented the trust money. He afterwards deposited the mortgage deed with his bankers as security for money advanced to him, and absconded:—Held, in the absence of negligence on the part of the cestui que trust, that the deposit of the deed passed no interest in the trust fund to the bankers. Stackhouse v. Jersey (Countess), 30 L. J., Ch., 421.

8. Preparatory to the final winding up of a trust, the agent and solicitor of the trustee paid the trust-money to his bankers, to the credit of his general account with them, and informed the cestui que trust that the money was lying idle at his bankers'. The cestui que trust took no notice of the information, and more than a month afterwards the bankers failed:—Held, that as the agent did not inform the cestui que trust that the money had been paid to the credit of his general account, and as the payment to the bankers was not necessary to the winding up of the trust, the agent and the trustee were jointly liable for the money. Macdonnell v. Harding, 7 Sim. 178; 4 L. J., N. S., Ch., 70.

1. Trustees of stock sold it out, and committed the proceeds to their solicitor for investment, by whom it was misapplied and lost:—Held, that the trustees were liable for a breach of trust, and that the cestuis que trustent were entitled to relief against both the trustees and the solicitor, and that they might sue either the trustees alone or the trustees jointly with the solicitor. Rowland v. Witherden, 3 Macn. & G. 568; 21 L. J., Ch., 480.

2. Where an agent is authorised by trustees to receive trust money and receives it accordingly, the receipt of that money by the agent binds the trustees, and discharges the person who paid it. Robertson v. Armstrong, 28 Beav. 123.

Trustees authorised their solicitors to receive trust money. The solicitors received it and handed it over to the tenant for life, whereby it was lost:—Held, that a bill by a cestui que trust seeking to charge the solicitors only, and not the trustees, could not be maintained, for that it was only through the trustees that the solicitors could be made liable. Id.

3. A party advising a loan unauthorised by the trust, for the purpose of deriving a benefit from, as by obtaining payment out of the money lent of a debt to him by the borrower, is liable for any loss consequent on the breach of trust. But where the solicitors who were concerned for the borrower acted also usually, and to some extent in this case, as the solicitors of the trustee, but another solicitor who was called in on behalf of the trustee, and one of the cestuis que trustent, assented to the loan, and the loss did not take place upon the original security, which was ample in point of value, but upon a security substituted for it in pursuance of a provision in the original mortgage deed, and it was not a proof, though it was alleged that the solicitors had applied part of the money lent in payment of a debt due to them by the borrower; the bill of the cestuis que trustent was dismissed as against the solicitors, but without costs. Fyler v. Fyler, 3 Beav. 550; 5 Jur. 187.

4. An agent employed by a trustee is not accountable so long as his acts are merely acts of agency; but where a solicitor got possession of the trust moneys, and allowed the executrix, who was entitled to the income only, to misapply the principal, the Court directed an account against him as if he were a trustee. Morgan v. Stephens, 3 Giff. 226.

A testator, having bequeathed his furniture and farming stock to his wife absolutely, gave the residue of his personal estate upon trust to invest and apply the interest and proceeds of one moiety to the maintenance and education of the plaintiff, his son, until twenty-one, and then in trust for him absolutely. The testator's widow became his sole acting trustee and executrix. The defendant, who was admitted as a solicitor two years after the testator's death in 1833, was employed by the executrix as her solicitor. He received moneys from her and invested them at interest at her request, and in her name. He also called in other moneys owing to the estate and invested them. He received the proceeds of the investments and paid the debts and legacies; and the surplus remained invested on the same securities at the request of the executrix. The defendant made in respect of the moneys placed by the executrix in his hands certain payments, both of principal and interest, and continued to do so during her life. She died in 1844. Subsequently in 1846, when 800*l.* became payable on the securities, the defendants alleged that, upon an account being taken between him and the estate of the executrix, there was no balance in her favour, or a small balance in his favour. He thereupon renewed the securities in his own name. He admitted knowledge of the trusts, but submitted that, during the lifetime of the executrix, he acted under her instructions as solicitor, and was not called upon to take cognisance or notice of any breach of trust committed by her in respect of the plaintiff, or any other cestui que trust:—Held, that the acts of the defendant were more than the acts of a mere agent; that he had assumed the character of trustee, and that a breach of trust having been apparently committed, he must be held accountable on that footing. S. C. 4 L. T., N. S., 614.

5. A voluntary settlement of leaseholds was suppressed by the settlor with the privity of the trustees and under the advice of a solicitor, in order to enable money to be raised on mortgage of the trust estate. Two existing trustees had retired, knowing of the proposed dealing with the trust property, and with a view to the carrying out of the mortgage:—Held, that the mortgagee was entitled to a decree for payment of his advances and costs against the solicitor, the old and new trustee and the settlor, although he might when he discovered the defect in title have had an opportunity of obtaining further security for his money; and notwithstanding nine years had elapsed from such discovery to the filing of the bill. Clark v. Hoskins, 36 L. J., Ch., 689; 16 L. T., N. S., 730; 15 W. R. 1161.

6. In 1855 a bill was filed for the administration of an estate, and in February 1857 a decree was made, which directed the personal representative V. to get in the outstanding estate, and to pay the moneys so received into court from time to time within two months after their receipt respectively. After this decree was made, an estate, which was mortgaged to the testator, was sold, and the purchase money was received by the solicitors of V., who, instead of paying it into court, retained a part of it in payment of some costs due to themselves, and allowed V. to receive the rest. V. having become a defaulter, a bill was filed by the beneficiaries against the solicitors:—Held, that the solicitors were liable to make good the whole sum thus received by them, less the costs of actually realising it, together with interest. Harries v. Rees, 16 W. R. 91; 17 L. T., N. S., 418.

Two other sums were also received after the decree of February 1857, in respect of two bonds, upon which, before that decree, part of the testator's estate had been invested by V. These investments had been disallowed in the administration suit:—Held, that these sums must be taken to have been throughout in the hands of V., and that the solicitors could not be held responsible for them. Ib.

1. A firm of solicitors, acting for two trustees, and receiving trust moneys from them, and paying over a portion of such moneys to one only of the trustees, who afterwards dies insolvent, is liable to the trust estate for the whole amount of moneys received from the two trustees. Lee v. Sankey, or Ginger v. Sankey, 21 W. R. 286; 27 L. T., N. S., 809; 15 L. R., Eq., 204.

2. A., the surviving trustee of a fund, one moiety of which was settled upon his wife and children, and the other moiety upon the wife and children of B., in exercise of a power in the settlement, appointed B. sole trustee of half the fund, taking an indemnity from him, and retained the other half in his own name. B. sold out and misapplied the moiety of the fund transferred to him, and became bankrupt. A.'s solicitor advised him against the appointment of B. as sole trustee, but prepared the deeds of appointment and of indemnity, and introduced him to a broker for the purpose of selling out some of the stock to pay costs to which it was liable, and the same broker afterwards transferred a moiety of the residue to B. B. employed another solicitor, who warned B.'s wife of the risk attending the proposed transaction, but settled the deed of indemnity on her behalf:—Held, in a suit by B.'s children, seeking to make A. and the two solicitors responsible for the fund which was lost, that, as neither of the solicitors had any knowledge of, nor any reason to suspect, a dishonest design in the transaction, and as the fund had not passed into their hands, the bill must be dismissed against them both with costs. Barnes v. Addy, 9 L. R., Ch., 244; 43 L. J., Ch., 513; 22 W. R. 505; 30 L. T., N. S., 4. Affirming 21 W. R. 324; 28 L. T., N. S., 398.

Although the responsibility of trustees may be extended in equity to persons who are not properly trustees, if they are found either making themselves trustees de son tort, or actively participating in any fraudulent conduct of the trustee, to the injury of the cestui que trust, yet strangers are not to be made constructive trustees, merely because they act as agents of trustees in transactions within their legal power, even though such transactions may be such as the Court would not approve of. Ib.

The Court disapproves of the practice of making solicitors or others, who are properly witnesses, and who are not primarily chargeable with any part of the relief prayed, parties to suits with a view of charging them with costs alone. Ib.

3. A settlement of land in Wales, the property of the husband, was executed shortly after a marriage, which took place in India. The husband and wife went to reside in Wales, and the husband employed a solicitor there to make his will and sell part of the land, the solicitor concluding from the statements of the husband that there had not been any marriage settlement. The husband died, leaving his widow trustee and executrix, and directing his debts to be paid out of his estate. The widow employed the same solicitor to sell other parts of the land, and the solicitor received the purchase moneys and applied them in payment of the debts of the husband. The deed of settlement had been in the possession of the wife, but had been by her given to the husband. There was no evidence as to what had become of it, but after the sales had been made a copy was found. The solicitor had concluded from what he was told by the husband that there had been no settlement, and though, before all the sales were completed, his clerk had been told by the wife that there had been a settlement, the solicitor continued to believe that there had been none. An action was brought by the children of the marriage, entitled under the settlement, claiming to recover from the solicitor the money which had so passed through his hands:—Held, that under the circumstances, although the solicitor might have been negligent in that character, he could not be held to have had such notice of the settlement as to be treated as constructively a trustee, and therefore liable for the money which had passed through his hands. Notice to raise a constructive trust is different from notice to an actual trustee. Cothay v. Sydenham (2 Bro. C. C. 391) discussed. Williams v. Williams, 17 L. R., Ch. D., 437; 44 L. T. 573.

(b) Liability of Firm for Acts of Partner.

4. Trust money was sent to A. (one of a firm of solicitors, who was himself one of two trustees) for investment on mortgage. The money was paid into the bankers to the account of the firm, and was afterwards drawn out by A., and never invested:—Held, that the other member of the firm was liable. Eager v. Barnes, 31 Beav. 579.

A. and B., solicitors, in partnership, jointly attended to the management of certain settled funds, of which A. and E. were trustees, who had executed the settlement. E. was the client of A., who represented to E. that he had a good mortgage security on which to invest a portion of the trust moneys; and E., accordingly, assented to his making such investment. A. did not, however, invest the money on the mortgage, but paid it into the bank of his firm, to their partnership account there; the proceeds being applied, with the knowledge of B., to the use of the firm. A. died in insolvent circumstances, leaving B. him surviving:—Held, that B. was personally liable to E. for the money; and that E. was (pro tanto) a specialty creditor of A.'s estate. S. C. 7 L. T., N. S., 408.

5. Under a will 2,910*l.* stock was vested in the testator's three unmarried nieces, who were his executrices, in trust for themselves for life, then for children, with ulterior trusts. Their confidential solicitors were a firm of two persons of whom the senior, under his own advice, was associated as their co-trustee, and a declaration of trust, prepared by the firm, was executed by the four persons in 1822. Subsequently, on the advice of the senior solicitor, the fund was sold out, and paid to him alone; but he, on the same day, paid the precise amount to the credit of the banking account of the firm. In 1824 the senior partner untruly represented that the money had been laid out on specified freehold security; but in 1825 a sufficient freehold mortgage was taken by the senior partner to himself alone, and was treated by him as the security for the trust fund, less a very small balance, which was divided among the three ladies. The interest was duly paid to the ladies until 1828, when the senior partner realised that security without their privity, and again untruly alleged that he had laid out the amount on another specified security. The firm dissolved partnership in 1834, and each partner practised separately; the senior partner continued regularly to pay sums as the interest to the ladies until 1844, when he became bankrupt, and afterwards died abroad uncertificated. In a suit by the three ladies against the junior partner, charging him as liable to make good the amount:—Held, that a sufficient investment having been made in the name of the senior partner, and communicated to the parties, and adopted, the duty of the firm was discharged, and the subsequent loss was a breach of duty by the senior partner alone, and not by the partnership, and the suit was dismissed, with costs. Coomer v. Bromley, 5 De G. & Sm. 532; 16 Jur. 609.

1. Lands devised to three trustees, upon trust for sale, were sold, and the purchase money paid to one of them, who was a solicitor, and acted in the matter of the sale as solicitor for himself and the other trustees. The money having been retained by him and lost:—Held, after his decease, that it must be taken to have been received by him not in his capacity of solicitor, it being no part of his duty in that capacity to receive it, but in his capacity of trustee; and that the survivor of the three could not, upon a common decree for an account, be held liable for its loss. Re Fryer, 3 Kay & J. 317.

2. Trustees deposited with a solicitor certain bonds payable to bearer. His partner had no actual knowledge of this, but letters referring to the bonds were charged for in bills of costs delivered by the firm; letters referring to the bonds were also copied into the letter book of the firm; and cheques for money received as interest on the bonds were drawn on the account of the firm. The solicitor made away with the bonds:—Held, that under the circumstances his partner was liable. Cleather v. Twisden, 24 L. R., Ch. D., 781; 53 L. J., Ch., 365; 49 L. T. 633; 32 W. R. 198. Reversed 28 L. R., Ch. D., 340.

III. DUTY TO EMPLOY. WHEN APPOINTED BY PERSON CREATING THE TRUST.

3. A direction that a particular individual shall be employed as the agent in the management of the testator's estates, where the trustees may have occasion for such a party, does not create a trust which he can enforce. Finden v. Stephens, 2 Ph. 142; C. P. C. 318; 17 L. J., N. S., Ch., 342; 11 Jur. 1019; 12 id. 319. Reversing 16 L. J., N. S., Ch., 526; 11 Jur. 898.

A testator expressed a "wish and desire that F., in whose judgment and integrity he placed great confidence," should be appointed agent, receiver, etc., by his trustees for all purposes for which they might have occasion for an agent, etc.:—Held, that F. could not compel the trustees to appoint him agent, etc. 1*b.*

4. A. S., being seised in fee of certain lands, devised the same to W. S. for life, with remainders over, and expressed it to be his particular desire, that his executors, whilst acting in the management of his affairs, and W. S. when he should enter into the receipt and management of the rents, should continue B. E. L. in the receipt and management thereof, and should likewise employ and retain him in the receipt, agency, and management of the rents of such other lands as should be purchased in pursuance of the directions of his will, at the usual fees allowed to agents:—Held, not a trust for B. E. L., and that the devisees were not bound to retain him as agent at the usual fees. Shaw v. Lawless, 5 Cl. & F. 129; 1 Dr. & Wal. 512; 1 L. & G. temp. Plunk. 558. Reversing on this point Lawless v. Shaw, 1 L. & G. temp. Sugd. 154.

5. A testator devised and bequeathed real and personal estate, which produced a considerable annual income, to trustees, on certain trusts, which would necessarily continue during several years; and he appointed A. auditor of his real estate during the continuance of the trusts, and directed his trustees to pay to A. a proper annual remuneration, with power to the trustees, in case of A. refusing or becoming unable to act as auditor, to appoint another auditor; and he directed the trustees to submit their accounts to the auditor once in every year. A bill was filed by the auditor to have the benefit of this appointment:—Held, that A., being able and willing to perform the duties of auditor, and not having been guilty of any misconduct, could not be removed by the trustees; and a reference was ordered to the Master to fix the amount of his remuneration. Williams v. Corbet, 8 Sim. 349; 6 L. J., N. S., Ch., 182.

6. Testator directs "that A. be appointed receiver of his real and personal estate," and dies seised of no real estate except an estate in the West Indies, having by his will directed a sum of money to be invested in the purchase of lands in England. A. appointed manager of the West India estate, upon entering into a personal recognisance to account for the produce. Hibbert v. Hibbert, 3 Meriv. 681.

7. A codicil contained the following clause: "I appoint C. my agent at a salary of 140*l.* a year and to be paid by quarterly payments, to live in my house called the Henblas, with the garden belonging to it, for which salary he must do my business and the business of my executors and trustees, and not be employed in the service of any other person or persons; and to live rent free as long as he continues to be my agent, that is, as long as he does my business honestly and to the satisfaction of my executors and trustees or any one of them." Pursuant to the powers of the will, trustees were appointed, and B., one of them, appointed H., an attorney, to act in all matters relating to the will and codicil. H. directed A. to make an inspection of certain real estate for which C. was agent. C. refused to assist in making the inspection, and refused to deliver up the documents relating to the estate. He was thereupon dismissed from the agency by H., pursuant to the express authority of B. An action of ejectment was brought to recover possession of Henblas:—Held, that even if C. had an estate for life in Henblas, it was defeasible upon the trustees being dissatisfied with his conduct; and that, even if the Court had power to inquire whether the trustees were acting reasonably, he had misconducted himself, and the trustees had good grounds for their dissatisfaction. Belaney v. Kelly, 19 W. R. 1171; 24 L. T., N. S., 738.

1. A direction in a will appointing a particular person solicitor to the trust estate, imposes no trust or duty on the trustees of the will to continue such person as their solicitor in the management and affairs of the estate. Foster v. Bisle, 19 L. R., Ch. D., 518; 51 L. J., Ch., 275; 30 W. R. 596.

IV. OTHER MATTERS.

2. Semble, that a trustee resident in England, appointed under an English will, can by the English law appoint an attorney to act in matters of discretion connected with a trust in an English colony or a foreign country. Stuart v. Norton, 14 Moo. P. C. 17.

3. Trustees may dismiss an agent for misconduct committed by him anterior to his own appointment. Belaney v. Kelly, 24 L. T., N. S., 738; 19 W. R. 1171.

4. Trust money was lent upon certain securities in breach of trust. One of the trustees was ordered to pay into court the whole amount of the trust money. He proceeded to realise the securities, and paid into court the produce, which was insufficient to answer the breach of trust:—Held, that his solicitor could not be in a better position than himself, and consequently had not a lien on the fund in court for the costs of realising the securities. Thompson v. Francois, 5 De G. M. & G. 108.

I. DUTY AND POWERS. IN GENERAL.

5. Trustees not answerable for having applied the trust property, even to what turned out a losing adventure, if without fraud or negligence. Wilkinson v. Stafford, 1 Ves. J. 41.

6. Trustee investing money at his own discretion, runs risk of depreciation. Hancock v. Allen, Dick. 498.

7. A testator empowered his trustees to lend such part of the trust moneys as they should think proper to A. and B., who were respectively his son and son-in-law:—Held, that this authorised a several loan to either. Parher v. Bloom, 20 Beav. 295.

8. One year is a "reasonable time" in which a purchase directed by will should be made. Parry v. Warrington, 6 Madd. 155.

9. It is the duty of a trustee who executes a power to show that he has complied with the exigencies required by it. So where he varies the investment of the trust fund, the burden of proof lies on him to show that it is a fit and proper investment. Norris v. Wright, 14 Beav. 291.

10. A testator gave a legacy of 12,500*l.* 4 per cent. annuities. At the making of his will there was a stock called new 4 per cents., in which he had a small sum, and a stock called 4 per cents. consolidated, of which he was a holder to a very large amount. Before the death of the testator the latter stock was reduced to 3½ per cent.; another 4 per cent. stock was created. The investment of the legacy is to be made in an existing 4 per cent. stock, and not in the stock which had been reduced to 3½ per cent. Banks v. Sladen, 1 Russ. & M. 216; Taml. 407; 8 L. J., Ch., 101.

11. Personal estate was bequeathed to a trustee to lay out upon personal or Government security, paying the interest to one for life, remainder as to the principal sum, after the life-interest to others:—Held, that upon the bill of the next in remainder, the money not already laid out upon private security must be laid out on Government security. Holmes v. Moore, 2 Moll. 328.

12. When specific property is bequeathed upon trust without any power being given to the trustees to alter the mode of investment, such trustees may, nevertheless, sell the property and invest the proceeds on any of the statutory investments, and vary such investment from time to time, provided that they never buy any redeemable security at a premium. Waite v. Littlewood, 41 L. J., Ch., 636.

13. Although the Court will not, except under special circumstances, invest a fund in court in any stock except consols, yet if executors or trustees have power under the will to invest in other Government securities, they will not be held liable for a breach of trust for so doing, although the stock in which they invest should be reduced, provided they acted fairly and reasonably. Where a testator gave personal estate to his executors, upon trust to convert the same and to invest the produce in "Government or some other good security," and left a sum of navy 5*l.* per cents., which were afterwards reduced to 3*l.* 5*s.* per cents., the surviving executrix, who was also tenant for life, was not held liable for having permitted the fund to remain in that investment. Baud v. Fardell, 4 W. R. 40; 25 L. J., Ch., 21; 1 Jur., N. S., 1214.

1. Words held sufficient to give an option of investing on real security or in consols. Aspland v. Watte, 3 W. R. 526; 25 L. J., Ch., 53.

2. Where the question as to the propriety of an investment by trustees for a tenant for life and remainderman arises between the latter parties, while the Court will not, on the one hand, sanction a collusive and fraudulent investment that would have the effect of diminishing the capital to which the remainderman will be entitled on the death of the tenant for life, yet, on the other hand, it is not in the power of the remainderman to require the investment to be made at the lowest rate of interest, in order that the capital may be increased. Vickery v. Evans, 10 Jur., N. S., 30; 9 L. T., N. S., 822; 8 N. R. 286; 33 L. J., Ch., 261; 33 Beav. 376; 12 W. R. 237.

Where, however, the trustees are also residuary legatees, and where there is a large discretion reposed in them, and no fraud in the case, it would seem that there is no rule prohibiting an investment of the trust-funds at 4½. per cent., on sufficient security. Ib.

3. Where it appeared, upon an information against the Fishmongers' Company, that the company had omitted to invest a legacy directed to be invested in land for the benefit of the charity, but had applied their own funds in aid of the charity to a larger amount than the investment would have produced, the Court held, that the neglect to invest it either in land, or (if that could not be advantageously accomplished) in some separate fund, was a substantial ground of complaint, and directed accordingly such investment as appeared most beneficial to the charity, but refused an inquiry as to the loss alleged, but not shown to have been sustained by the neglect to invest. And, considering that the suit was not instituted for the benefit of the charity, the Court directed the defendants to pay the costs, as between party and party, and refused the relators their extra costs out of charity fund. Att.-Gen. v. Fishmongers' Co., 1 Keen 492.

4. C. bequeathed 2,000*l.* to trustees upon trust to invest in real estate; and he then gave certain cottages and hereditaments to the same trustees on the same trusts as he had declared as to the estate to be purchased with the 2,000*l.* He then gave his thirty shares in the Leeds Banking Company to the same trustees upon the same or the like trusts as were declared concerning the 2,000*l.* and the cottages. The banking company failed, and the trustees had paid large sums out of the testator's estate on account of the shares. A suit was instituted for the administration of the testator's estate, and the Master of the Rolls considered the trustees of the will liable for not having converted the shares:—Held, that the directions for investment contained in the will could not be taken to apply equally to the 2,000*l.* and the cottages, and must be read reddendo singula singulis. The bequest of the bank shares was specific, and the shares need not be converted unless the direction to convert was clear. The Court was of opinion that it was not clear, and reversed the order of the Master of the Rolls. Craven v. Craddock, 20 L. T., N. S., 638.

5. Trustees authorized by a settlement to lend the trust fund upon such security as they should think advantageous laid out a portion of the trust fund in the purchase of lands in fee simple; an offer having been made to purchase the lands at a profit, the Court directed the purchase to be completed, and the purchase money to be brought into court to the credit of the trust. Robinson v. Robinson, 10 Ir. R., Eq., 189.

6. When trustees lend on irregular securities, the onus is on them to show that they were of sufficient value, not on the cestui que trust to show that they were insufficient. Stretton v. Ashmall, 3 Drew. 9; 24 L. J., Ch., 277.

II. DISCRETION.

7. Discretion of trustees having power to change securities with consent, is not to be controlled by Court, unless mischievous and ruinous to that fund. De Manneville v. Crompton, 1 Ves. & B. 364.

8. An express direction by a testator for the conversion and for investment of his personal property from time to time as trustees may think fit, does not necessarily prevent the operation of the general rule of investing in securities approved by the Court. Caldecott v. Caldecott, 1 Y. & Coll. C. C. 312; 11 L. J., N. S. Ch., 158; 6 Jur. 232.

9. Where trustees are directed to pay a certain sum to a person for life, and are empowered according to their discretion to invest the trust funds out of which that sum is to arise, but decline or neglect to act, and the assistance of a court of equity is sought in order to carry into effect the purposes of the will, the Court will not, as a matter of course, exercise that discretion, but will only act on its established and known rules, unless the intention of the testator plainly appears to exclude such a mode of proceeding. Prendergast v. Prendergast, 3 H. L. Ca. 195; 14 Jur. 989.

A testator, after making certain specific bequests, proceeded as follows: "I give and bequeath to my trustees hereinafter named, so much of my personal estate and effects, as, at the time of my decease, shall produce the clear annual income of 1,500*l.*; and I direct that the same shall be selected and appropriated, and set apart, as soon as may be, etc., by my said trustees, in their uncontrolled discretion, upon trust to pay" to his wife the dividends during her life or widowhood; and after her death or second marriage, the same was to become part of his residuary personal estate. He directed that if the annual produce so appropriated should be increased or reduced in amount, his wife was to receive the increased or reduced dividends, as the case might be, in lieu of those before directed to be paid to her. The trustees were fully empowered, at their discretion, to permit the personal estate to continue on the same securities as at the time of his decease, or to sell and reinvest, as the testator himself might do. Some of the foreign funds ceased to pay any dividends, and the trustees refused to exercise their discretion as to altering the investments, but submitted to act as the Court should direct. The Court refused to exercise the discretion vested in the trustees, but acting on its general rule in such matters (as the testator had not expressed a different intention), directed the annuity to be raised by the purchase of an adequate sum in consols, and ordered the Master to inquire, having regard to the interests of other parties under the will, what investments must be called in to effect this object:—Held, that the decree thus made was correct. Ib.

1. By a will a sum was given to two trustees on trust to pay the income to C. for his life, with a gift over of the principal on his death; but the trustees had a discretionary power to purchase with the principal an irredeemable annuity for the life of C. for his benefit. The trustees did not purchase an annuity, but one of them paid to C. during his life, from time to time, various small sums, amounting in the aggregate to more than the total income, but less than the principal:—Held, that this was a proper exercise of the discretionary power. Messena v. Carr, 39 L. J., Ch., 216; 9 L. R., Eq., 260; 18 W. R. 415; 22 L. T., N. S., 3.

2. A testator directed his trustees to lay out and invest 15,000*l.* upon Government, real, or personal security, or in such stocks, funds, or shares as they might, in their absolute discretion, think fit, and pay the interest to his wife for life; the capital to be for his children. The trustees, with the sanction of the widow, invested a portion of the money upon railway stock bearing a high rate of interest. Upon her death the securities were greatly reduced in value:—Held, that the trustees were bound to invest upon securities of a permanent nature; that, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, it must be assumed from the rate of interest that these investments were not permanent, and that the 15,000*l.* must be invested for the benefit of the children of the testator. Stewart v. Sanderson, 10 L. R., Eq., 26; 18 W. R. 278.

Discretionary Trusts in General.] See IX. ante.

III. EXPRESS POWERS OF INVESTMENT WITH CONSENT.

3. A marriage settlement recited that it had been agreed that a debt should be assigned to the trustees upon trust, after calling it in to invest the money upon such security as should be approved of by the husband and his father, either on Government, real, or personal security; and by the witnessing part, the debt was assigned upon trust for calling in, and investing the same on Government, real, or personal security, or in the purchase of lands at the sole order and by the sole direction, consent, and approbation of the husband and his father or the survivor, to stand possessed thereof on the trust therein mentioned. Then followed the trusts, and a power in the usual form for the trustees, with the consent of the husband and his father or the survivor in writing, to invest the trust money in the funds or on real security or in the purchase of freehold or leasehold estates:—Held, that the last clause controlled and interpreted the former parts of the settlement, and that a loan of the trust fund to a bank in which one of the trustees was a partner on an interest note without a written consent, was a breach of trust constituting a provable debt against the separate estate of the trustee. Exp. Hakenill, Re Wise, 2 M. D. & De G. 607; 6 Jur. 787.

4. Consols were settled to the separate use of the wife for life, with a power to appoint by will, and with a power for the trustees, with the consent of the wife, to alter the securities, such securities to be either real or in the public funds. The trustees, without such consent, sold the consols, and invested the produce in long annuities, which they afterwards sold and lent the money, which was afterwards received by the husband, who invested it in leaseholds. The wife received the long annuities until sold, and afterwards joined her husband in executing a deed, reciting that the sale of the long annuities and the subsequent investments had been with her consent:—Held, that the appointees of the fund under her will were entitled, as against the husband and trustees, to have the consols replaced, and that the interest, over which the wife had a general power of appointment, was not liable to make good the breach of trust. Kellaway v. Johnson, 5 Beav. 319; 6 Jur. 751.

5. The trustees of a marriage settlement being empowered by it to invest the trust funds in freeholds, or copyholds of inheritance, with the consent of the husband and wife, authorised the husband to purchase a certain estate, as an investment of part of the trust funds, and afterwards they sold out a sufficient part of those funds to pay for the estate, and the husband received the proceeds. The estate was copyhold for lives, and the purchase was made without the wife's consent:—Held, nevertheless, that, as between the husband and the trustees, he must be considered to have purchased the estate for them. Trench v. Harrison, 17 Sim. 111.

6. Stock was transferred into the names of trustees of a marriage settlement, in trust for the intended wife for life, with trusts over. The trustees had power to sell out the stock and invest it on the mortgage or other securities, with the consent of the intended husband and wife. After the execution of the settlement, and before the marriage, the intended wife and husband and the settlor signed a memorandum, requesting the trustees to lend the stock to the owners or lessees of a particular property called V., who at that time were the settlor and two others. The stock was sold out and lent to the three, but no security was taken. The settlor then sold his interest in the property called V. to the other two, who gave a mortgage on the same:—Held, that the loan was a breach of trust on the part of the trustees. A bill was filed by the wife, her daughter, who had attained twenty-one, and her infant children, for the restoration of the stock; and by the decree the stock was ordered to be brought into court. Fowler v. Reynal, 13 Jur. 649; 2 De G. & Sm. 749. Affirmed 3 Macn. & G. 500; 21 L. J., N. S., Ch., 121; 13 Jur. 1019.

7. Where trust funds are invested on inadequate security, it is the duty of the trustees to re-invest them, although the written consent of the tenant for life, rendered necessary to any change in the investment, is refused, and the security is one expressly authorised by the trust. Harrison v. Theaton, 4 Jur., N. S., 550.

1. A marriage settlement empowered the two trustees to vary the investment of the trust funds, "with the consent in writing of the husband and wife." Part of the trust funds consisted of 1,000*l.*, which was a first charge on an hotel premises, of which the husband was, at the time of the marriage, the sole proprietor. Afterwards, the hotel was destroyed by fire, but was rebuilt on the same site, enlarged by the addition of adjoining ground. Subsequently the husband became bankrupt, and one of the trustees became, by purchase, sole proprietor of the new hotel and premises. The other trustee filed a bill against him, and against the assignees in bankruptcy of the husband, and prayed that the 1,000*l.* might be raised by a sale of the premises. It did not appear that the consent of the husband and wife had been obtained:—Held, that the want of the consent could not fetter the action of the Court, which, if satisfied that the existing security was insufficient, was bound, independently of any consent, and in order to protect the interests of all the cestui que trustent, to require that the money should be called in and properly invested; and the Court decreed that the 1,000*l.* should be raised out of the premises on which it was charged. Costello v. O'Rorke, 3 Ir. R., Eq., 172.

Another portion of the trust funds consisted of 1,000*l.*, which was paid in cash to the two trustees, who, in breach of trust, invested it in ordinary railway shares. Thereby a loss was sustained; and the trustees, in further breach of trust, transferred these shares to the N. Bank, to secure the private debt of the husband, the tenant for life. Subsequently O., one of the trustees (without the knowledge of his co-trustee), procured an assignment (for a nominal consideration) of those shares to two persons, who became trustees thereof for the R. Bank, which had made to the husband large advances, the full amount of which was secured by the guarantee of O. A week after this assignment, the amount of the husband's debt to the N. Bank was paid by a cheque on the R. Bank, which, before the transfer of the shares was lodged with it, cashed that cheque out of the original credit given to the husband. These shares were sold, without the other trustee's knowledge, for 592*l.* 10*s.*, which sum was applied in reducing the debt due by the husband to the R. Bank. O. obtained from the husband mortgages of the hotel, furniture, etc., to the amount which covered the whole sum guaranteed by him to the R. Bank:—Held, that O. was, as between him and his co-trustee, primarily bound to replace the 592*l.* 10*s.* Id.

2. A., on her marriage, assigned a debt due to her from B. to three trustees, upon trust, when requested by her to call it in and invest it, and hold it in trust for A., her husband and children. B., with full notice, but without such request, paid part of the money to the husband by order of the trustees, and other part to the trustees for the express purpose of being advanced to the husband in breach of trust. The money was lost:—Held, that B., as well as the trustees, was responsible for the breach of trust. Andrews v. Boufield, 10 Beav. 511.

3. Trustees of a marriage settlement were empowered, with consent of the husband and wife, to invest the funds on such security, either real or personal, as they, with such consent, should think proper. At the date of the marriage a sum of 2,500*l.*, part of the trust funds, was outstanding on the note of hand of the husband, having been advanced to him by the intended wife prior to the marriage. A separation having taken place, but the wife, nevertheless, desiring that the fund should remain in the husband's hands:—Held, that this investment might be continued until further order on the husband executing a bond to the trustees for the amount. Picard v. Anderson, 13 L. R., Eq., 608; 26 L. T., N. S., 725.

4. By a settlement trustees were authorised to invest the trust money in debentures, preference shares, or other securities, issued or guaranteed by any incorporated public company paying a dividend or a guaranteed income; and, with the consent in writing of the tenant for life (notwithstanding her coverture), to alter, vary, and transpose the funds and securities from time to time. The trustees, without any consent, invested the trust money in debentures of a railway, which were afterwards paid off, and the money then received was, in like manner, re-invested in debentures of another line. The dividends on that line were guaranteed by the contractors of it. The tenant for life and her husband joined in signing the receipts for the dividends from the latter investment, till the contractors failed, when the line ceased to pay anything. The wife died; but after her death the husband received a dividend from the subsequent investment. On a bill by him against the trustees of the settlement, to make them liable for a breach of trust:—Held, that the previous consent in writing of the wife was not required to an investment by the trustees; and that he could not make them liable for a breach of trust. Stevens v. Robertson, 37 L. J., Ch., 499; 18 L. T., N. S., 427; 16 W. R. 724.

The husband was entitled under the settlement to the trust funds for his life; and under his wife's will to the absolute interest in them in remainder (subject to the payment thereof, on his death, of certain legacies). He, as the executor of his wife's will, wished to pay the legacies forthwith, out of the settlement moneys, and for that purpose to have those moneys paid to him on his undertaking to satisfy the legatees:—Held, that the proper decree was to declare the trust funds bound by the trusts of the settlement and the will, with liberty to all parties interested to apply. Id.

5. Where a tenant for life gave his consent (as required by the terms of a settlement) to the investment by trustees of trust funds upon a particular mortgage:—Held, that he could not afterwards, on the security turning out inadequate, complain that it was an improper investment; but the loss being chiefly attributable to the subsequent mismanagement and negligence of the trustees, that he might recover against the trustees the loss of interest incurred thereby, and that his original consent to the improper investment gave them no counter-claim against the funds in court representing his life interest, in respect of the costs incurred by them in suits and proceedings instituted on account of the trust funds. Lockhart v. Reilly, 25 L.J., Ch., 697; 3 W. R. 227.

The consent of the tenant for life was obtained from him by an acting trustee, when he was just of age, in pecuniary difficulties, and without a proper knowledge of the facts, yet the deed which signified such consent never having been set aside:—Held, that the Court was bound to treat it as a binding consent. Id.

IV. EXPRESS POWER TO ADVANCE TRUST FUNDS TO HUSBAND WITH CONSENT.

1. By a marriage settlement the interest of a trust fund was limited to a wife for life, for her separate use, with power to the trustees, upon her consent in writing, to advance the trust fund to her husband, upon the security of his bond; if the trustees, with consent of the wife, advance the fund to the husband, but without her written consent, and without the husband's bond, and if the trust fund be lost by his subsequent bankruptcy, the trustees are not entitled to be indemnified to the extent of the wife's interest. Cocker v. Quayle, 1 Russ. & M. 535.

2. Power to trustees to advance to A. 1,000*l.* with consent of B. under her hand, signed by two witnesses. Trustees advance the sum without consent. Subsequent acquiescence by such deed not sufficient, and trustees ordered to refund. Bateman v. Davis, 3 Madd. 98.

3. Trustees were empowered by a settlement to lend the trust funds to the husband, with the consent in writing of the wife. They lent him part of the funds, the wife by deed consenting to that loan and to the loan of the remaining trust moneys at such times and in such proportions as the husband might require, and the husband covenanting to repay the loan then made in six months on demand. Further parts of the trust moneys were advanced. The moneys advanced were all lost by the insolvency of the husband:—Held, that the trustees were not bound to call in the money at the end of six months, the form of the wife's consent showing that she sanctioned the loan for an indefinite time. Held, also, that the wife could not give a prospective consent, but her consent was necessary to each particular loan. Child v. Child, 20 Beav. 50.

4. Trustees of settled money due on bond by the husband, having power, with consent in writing of him and his wife, to call it in, or allow it to remain outstanding, neglect to call it in, and, the husband being twice bankrupt, the trustees prove for the bond, but never get in the composition, and afterward get the wife's consent to its remaining uncalled in. The trustees also purchase copyholds, having no other power than to lay out the trust money upon Government or real securities. This purchase turned out very profitable, and the cestuis que trustent refused to allow it to be sold. On bill filed to make the trustees liable for the bond debt, and on the question whether the profits made on the copyholds could be set against the loss on the bond:—Held, that the trustees were liable; the subsequent consent of the wife had no retrospective operation; the investment in copyholds was a breach of trust, and the profits could not be set against the loss. Costs out of the estate. Wiles v. Gresham, 2 W. R. 355; 2 Drew. 258; 2 Eq. Rep. 560; 23 L. J., Ch., 667. Affirmed 3 W. R. 87; 24 L. J., Ch., 264; 3 Eq. Rep. 116; 24 L. J., Ch., 264; 5 De G. M. & G. 770. S. C. on motion for injunction 1 Eq. Rep. 348.

5. By a marriage settlement, 700*l.*, then in the hands of H., was agreed to be transferred to the joint account of H. and two other trustees, to be held by them upon trust to pay the same to the lady at her request in writing, and, subject thereto, for her separate use, and on her death, as she should by will appoint; with certain trusts over in default. The money was left for many years, with the lady's acquiescence, in the hands of H., who advanced to the husband the greater part of the principal, as to 200*l.* with the lady's knowledge, but not by her request in writing:—Held, that H. was liable to replace the 500*l.* but no more, and that the lady was disentitled to relief against the other trustees by reason of acquiescence. Jones v. Higgins, 2 L. R., Eq., 528; 35 L. J., Ch., 403; 14 W. R. 448; 14 L. T., N. S., 126.

6. By a clause in a marriage settlement, trustees were empowered and required, at the request in writing of the wife, to advance part of the trust moneys to the husband, on the security of his bond. After the marriage, the husband was arrested, went to prison, and took the benefit of the Insolvent Debtors Act. The wife then applied to the trustee for a loan to the husband, according to the terms of the settlement:—Held, that such a change had taken place in the circumstances of the husband, as rendered the clause inapplicable to him, and consequently that the trustee was justified in refusing to lend the money. Boss v. Goddall, 1 Y. & Coll. C. C. 617; 11 L. J., N. S., Ch., 391; 7 Jur. 146.

V. RIGHT TO SEVER FUND FOR INVESTMENT.

7. A testatrix directed her trustees to pay the interest or annual rent of 2,000*l.* to Mrs. A. during her life, and after her death to divide that sum among her children; and to pay the interest or annual rent of a similar amount to Mrs. B. in life-rent, with the fee to her children. The trustees were empowered by the deed to realise, or to continue to "hold any or all of such shares or stocks" as might belong to the testatrix at her decease, "should they consider it advisable or expedient to do so, without any personal responsibility for loss, if any, thereby sustained:" with power also "to lend or place out on such securities, heritable or movable, as they shall consider advantageous, the aforesaid legacies of 2,000*l.* and 2,000*l.* respectively, the securities to be conceived in favour of my trustees, and that for the purposes of this trust and no otherwise." The testatrix at her death held 850*l.* stock of an unlimited bank. The trustees, at the desire of Mrs. A., and without consulting Mrs. B., set 200*l.* of this stock aside as part of the fund appropriated to Mrs. A., and realised the remainder. They afterwards, on the narrative of the purposes of the trust deed, and of the sums invested for the two specific legacies of 2,000*l.*, and that they had paid the residue, received their discharge from Mrs. A. and Mrs. B. Statements and separate accounts of interest on the investments allocated to each were sent half-yearly to Mrs. A. and Mrs. B. All the investments stood in the names of the testatrix's trustees. The bank became insolvent, and calls were made upon the trustees in respect of the 200*l.* stock. They sought to indemnify themselves for payment of the calls out of the whole trust estate. Mrs. B. objected to any portion of her legacy being taken:—Held, reversing the decision of the Court below, that the trustees had the power to sever and had severed the two legacies, and had placed them in separate investments for behoof of the respective beneficiaries, and therefore the trustees had no right to relief from the investments allotted to Mrs. B. and her family for liabilities incurred on those allotted to Mrs. A. and her family. Exp. Garland (10 Ves. 110) followed. Fraser or Robinson v. Murdoch, 6 L. R., App. Cas. (Sc.), 855; 45 L. T. 417; 30 W. R. 162.

VI. BY TRUSTEES FOR THE PURCHASE OF REAL ESTATE.

See also V. ante.

1. In General, 7019.
2. Purchase of Leaseholds with Consent, whether Imperative or Discretionary, 7022.

1. In General.

1. By private Act, money was directed to be laid out in the purchase of freehold lands, tenements, or hereditaments, and the fee-simple and inheritance thereof, which might be approved by this Court:—Held, first, that the purchase of a fixed rent-charge was not a proper investment; and secondly, that the purchase of a freehold estate, subject to a term of 1,000 years, at a fixed rent, was equally objectionable. Exp. Gartside, 6 L. J., N. S., Ch., 266.

2. A power to invest trust funds in the purchase of hereditaments of a clear and indefeasible estate of inheritance in fee simple in possession, authorises an investment in freehold ground rents. Re Peyton, 38 L. J., Ch., 477; 7 L. R., Eq., 463; 20 L. T., N. S., 728.

3. The trustees of a marriage settlement being empowered by it to invest the trust funds in freeholds, or copyholds of inheritance, with the consent of the husband and wife, authorised the husband to purchase a certain estate, as an investment of part of the trust funds, and afterwards they sold out a sufficient part of those funds to pay for the estate, and the husband received the proceeds. The estate was copyhold for lives, and the purchase was made without the wife's consent:—Held, nevertheless, that, as between the husband and the trustees, he must be considered to have purchased the estate for them. Trench v. Harrison, 17 Sim. 111.

4. A trust fund is created by will to be laid out in the purchase of lands; an estate is purchased, and trust money is laid out in repairs and improvements; this is a misapplication, and shall not be allowed; part of the trust money was sold out just before a dividend was payable; no allowance can be made to the tenant for life, who would be entitled to the dividend in price; where a trustee sells out trust money, the cestui que trust may elect whether he will have it replaced, or be paid the produce of it. Bostock v. Blakeney, 2 Bro. C. C. 653.

5. A testator directed his trustees to invest certain funds in the purchase of lands to be held with others devised in strict settlement:—Held, that they might invest in the purchase of the mines and minerals under part of the settled estates. Bellet v. Littler, 22 W. R. 836; 30 L. T., N. S., 861.

6. Moneys, which under the trusts of a will, settlement, or private Act of Parliament, are to be invested in the purchase of land, as well as moneys to be invested under the Settled Estates Act or the Lands Clauses Act, may be properly employed in the erection of new buildings on land settled to the same uses, provided the Court is satisfied that it is beneficial to the estate; but repairs and permanent improvements do not come within this principle. Drake v. Trefusis, 33 L. T., N. S., 85; 10 L. R., Ch., 364; 23 W. R. 762.

7. A testator devised real estates in strict settlement, and directed his residuary personalty to be laid out in the purchase of lands to be settled to the same uses. After the date of the will, the testator executed a deed whereby he assigned specific personalty to a large amount to the same persons, whom he named as the trustees and executors of his will, upon trusts (not referring to, but) corresponding with, and only in a remote contingency differing from, those of the will. The mansion-house having been pulled down, and requiring to be re-built, the tenant for life proposed that, out of the specific personalty fund settled by the deed, 24,000*l.* should be advanced to him to pay for the re-building, and that out of the same fund 40,000*l.* should be set aside, and the dividends accumulated for twenty years, until an amount of 24,000*l.* should be saved, with which the same fund should be recouped:—Held, that the Court had jurisdiction to make the order. Donaldson v. Donaldson, 3 L. R., Ch. D., 743; 34 L. T., N. S., 900; 24 W. R. 1037.

8. Where a testator orders his money to be laid out in land in a particular county, and his trustees cannot purchase in that county, the Court, after a convenient time, will deviate from the strict terms of the trust. So, where trustees cannot purchase a freehold without great disadvantage, unless they take a college-holding with it, the Court will dispense with the strict directions of the will. Maynaring v. Maynaring, 3 Atk. 414.

9. An estate was settled with a direction that the proceeds of the sale of timber should be laid out in land, to be settled to the like uses:—Held, that a sum produced by the sale of timber could not be laid out in building a farmhouse, as a permanent improvement of the settled estate. Poulett (Earl) v. Somerset, 19 W. R. 1048; 25 L. T., N. S., 56.

1. A nobleman directed his trustees to lay out his residuary personalty in the purchase of land to go along with certain settled property. The settled property comprised an advowson, of which the parsonage-house was, at his death, in a ruinous state, and he was about to re-build it:—Held, that the trustees might properly lay out part of the residuary personalty in re-building the house. Re Hotham (Lord), 12 L. R., Eq., 76.

2. A testator devised his residuary personalty to the trustees of a settlement to be held and applied as moneys arising from the sale of any of the settled estates. The settlement directed that the moneys to arise from the sale of any of the settled estates should be laid out in the purchase of other lands to be settled to the same uses:—Held, that the trustees might apply the residuary personalty in making good sums expended by them in the permanent drainage of part of the settled estates, and in the erection of new farm buildings on other parts of the estates. Re Leslie, 34 L. T., N. S., 239; 24 W. R. 546; 2 L. R., Ch. D., 185; 45 L. J., Ch., 668.

3. Trustees of a settled estate having, out of moneys in their hands, in trust to be laid out in lands to be settled to the same uses, purchased a farm for 20,000*l.*, the Court, in an action, authorised 1,000*l.* of the same moneys to be applied in repairing, improving, and re-building the farm buildings and cottages upon the purchased lands. Cowley (Lord) v. Wellesley, 46 L. J., Ch., 869.

4. When the rents of real estate devised in strict settlement were directed to be accumulated during the minority of any person who should become tenant for life, and the accumulated fund and interest thereon were from time to time to be invested in the purchase of other lands to be settled to the same uses:—Held, that no part of such accumulated fund could be applied, at the instance of a tenant for life, in necessary repairs and improvements on the estate. Brunskill v. Caird, 16 L. R., Eq., 493; 21 W. R. 943; 43 L. J., Ch., 163.

5. Devise of lands to successive tenants for life, and then in strict settlement, with a condition that "he or they" should reside in the mansion-house on the lands, and a declaration of forfeiture in case of non-residence. The first tenant for life, who was a married woman, was named as such in the will:—Held, that on breach of the condition by her the estate for life was forfeited. Dunne v. Dunne, 3 Sm. & G. 22; 3 W. R. 256, 380; 3 Eq. Rep. 760; 7 De G. M. & G. 2070; 1 Jur., N. S., 176.

Held, also, that although the mansion-house was inadequate to the income of the devised property, and was also dilapidated, the tenant for life was not authorised to employ towards improving or repairing the mansion-house any part of the capital of funds directed by the testator to be laid out in the purchase of lands to the same uses. Id.

6. A testator devised his mansion-house and other real estate to trustees for the term of 1,000 years, upon certain trusts, and, subject thereto, he devised the same upon legal limitations, under which the plaintiff was tenant for life. Shortly after the testator's death the mansion-house was burnt down. The sole acting trustee had expended, in addition to insurance moneys, a sum of 2,000*l.* in re-building the mansion-house, which amount he had borrowed on his own personal security and on a charge of the estate. It was admitted that this expenditure was very beneficial to the estate, and that the value thereof was increased. There were in court sums of consols, arising from the sale of part of the estate, and such funds were liable to be re-invested in land. By the decree in the action an inquiry had been directed as to what sum was necessary to complete the restoration of the mansion-house, and how the same ought to be raised, but no formal order was made sanctioning the raising of a loan for the purpose. A petition was presented by the personal representative of the trustee, asking that the funds in court might be sold, and that such further sum as, with the proceeds of such sale, would make up the 2,000*l.* borrowed by the trustee, might be raised by mortgage or sale of the settled estate, in order to enable such loan to be re-paid:—Held, that the Court had no jurisdiction to order a mortgage or sale of the settled estate, or to authorise the expenditure for the proposed purpose, even of moneys which were subject to a trust for re-investment, in land; but it appearing that the estate had been benefited by the outlay of the trustee to the full amount of the funds in court, and that the outlay had been bonâ fide made under the impression that it would be re-paid out of the estate, the Court would, although considering the conduct of the trustee irregular, order that he should be recouped his outlay to the extent of the funds in court, but no further. Jesse v. Lloyd, 48 L. T. 656.

7. The S. estates were by Act of Parliament vested in trustees upon trust to sell, with the consent of the earl, the tenant for life in possession, and to invest the sales moneys in the purchase of other lands convenient to be held with the bulk of the property. Under these trusts certain outlying portions of the estates were, by a contract between the trustees, the earl, and P., contracted to be sold to P. for 29,000*l.*, and 5,000*l.* was paid by P. to the earl as deposit, to be paid by him to the trustees when a proper purchase should be fixed upon in which to re-invest the sales moneys according to the trust. The purchase was never completed, and the 5,000*l.* thus left in the earl's hands was forfeited, and the same lands were, some years afterwards, sold for 22,000*l.*:—Held, that the 5,000*l.* belonged to the settled estates, and not to the Earl absolutely. Shrewsbury (Earl) v. Shrewsbury (Countess), 18 Jur. 397.

The earl had bought, in his own name, for 18,000*l.*, the C. H. estate, which was convenient to be held with the bulk of the S. estates, and with the view of offering it to the trustees. In order to raise the purchase money the earl immediately mortgaged it to nearly the full amount of 18,000*l.*, and after having made some alterations in it to suit his own purposes, he offered the same to the trustees for 16,350*l.* The trustees agreed to the proposition, and a joint petition was presented to the Court, praying a reference to inquire into the title, and whether it was a fit and proper purchase, and an order was made in the terms of the prayer. Before any other step was taken the earl died. The agreement by the trustees to purchase the C. H. estate was not signed by the trustees, but rested on some letters written by the earl to his solicitors, and by them to the earl, the solicitors being also solicitors to the trustees:—Held, that the C. H. estate was part of the earl's estate, and not part of the settled estates, there being no binding contract entered into by the earl capable of being enforced against his real representative. Id.

Quære, what would have been the result if the order had not stopped at directing the inquiries, but had proceeded to order the completion of the sale, in case of the inquiries as to fitness and title being satisfactory. Id.

1. Trustees, with the consent of A. B., the tenant for life, had a power to sell the trust estate, and invest the produce in other real estate in 1810. A. B., with the concurrence of the trustees, sold the estate for 8,440*l.*, and received the purchase money about the same time (but whether with the concurrence of the trustees was not proved). A. B. purchased another estate for 17,400*l.*; of the 8,440*l.*, 8,124*l.* was paid by A. B. in part payment of the second estate; the remainder was partly paid out of A. B.'s moneys, and partly by money raised by a mortgage of the estate. The estate was conveyed to A. B. in fee. No acknowledgment or declaration of trust was ever made by A. B., and he retained possession of the estate till thirty years after, when he became bankrupt. The Court, against A. B.'s assignees, presumed, under these circumstances, that the purchase had been made under the power for the benefit of the trust, and held that there had been no such adverse possession, and no such acquiescence on the part of the trustees, as to preclude the Court making a declaration that they had a lien on the estate to the extent of the trust moneys invested in the purchase. Price v. Blakemore, 6 Beav. 507.

2. By a private Act of Parliament certain settled estates, of which the ultimate remainderman was an infant, were vested in the plaintiffs as trustees for sale, with directions to sell the same for building purposes, and lay out the proceeds in the purchase of other lands, to be settled to uses similar to those declared by the settlement with respect to the lands sold, and to pay over the surplus, if any, to the tenant for life. The Act did not contain any express power to the trustees to expend any part of the trust funds in laying out the property in lots, or in making roads. Part of the land sold in accordance with the above Act, was purchased by the defendants, who were the solicitors of the plaintiffs in the management of the sale. Some portion of the property so purchased by the defendants they immediately re-sold at a considerable profit. The remaining portion was purchased by them with money paid into the bank in their names for that purpose by S. and R., to whom, upon receiving their own conveyances, they executed mortgages for securing such advance:—Held, on appeal, first, that the trustees ought, and that it was to be understood that the Legislature intended that they should have the power of doing that which was necessary to effect the purposes pointed out by the Act, viz., the power of making roads, and dividing the property into lots for sale. Held, secondly, that the sales made to the defendants ought to be set aside, and their sub-sales of the property adopted for the benefit of the estate; and that they were chargeable with the purchase money so received. Held, thirdly, that S. and R., having had sufficient notice of the position filled by the defendants, could stand in no better position than they. Cookson v. Lee, 23 L. J., Ch., 243.

3. Personal estate was given to executors in trust to invest 50,000*l.*, part thereof in the purchase of land to be conveyed to the use of a nephew, with remainders over, and as to a considerable residue, in trust for his nephew as residuary legatee. The executor did not prove, and the residuary legatee became administrator with the will annexed, and purchased several estates, partly with money of the testator, in his own name, at prices amounting to 49,773*l.* He subsequently improved one of these estates so that it was worth 60,000*l.*, and by his will gave it to the tenant in tail in remainder of the estates directed to be purchased, on condition that he should accept it in satisfaction of all claims under the original will:—Held, that the estates purchased for 49,773*l.* were purchased in execution of the trust for investment, and that the condition was nugatory. Mathias v. Mathias, 3 Sim. & G. 552; 3 Jur., N. S., 429.

4. Trustee for the purchase of land died without personal assets, but, having purchased land, the estates purchased were held not liable to the trust, the circumstances affording no presumption that they were purchased in execution of the trust. Perry v. Phelps, 4 Ves. 108. Affirmed 17 Ves. 173.

5. J. S., by will, lent 8,784*l.* to A. in trust, to be invested in lands, and settled on herself for life; remainder to the heirs of B. A decree was had against A., to lay out the money in lands, and to settle the same according to J. S.'s will. A. purchased land to the value of 8,800*l.*, and devised those lands to C. (who was heir-at-law to B.) and her heirs, and gave several legacies, which could not be paid if the devise were not to be taken as part satisfaction, and for that reason it was decreed. Gibson v. Scudamore, Sel. Ch. Ca. 63.

6. Where trustees who are directed by will to purchase land within a reasonable time (a time being taken as the limit of such reasonable time), do not purchase within one year, the party who would have been entitled to land to be purchased is entitled to interest on fund provided for that purpose. Perry v. Warrington, 6 Madd. 155.

7. A testator, by his will, gave various annuities, which he directed to be secured in the public funds, and that as they respectively fell the principal should be added to the residue of his fortune, and be disposed of by his executors, as after directed, for the benefit of the heirs, under a bond or deed of entail therein mentioned. He then gave some legacies, and directed his executors to consolidate into one fund the whole of his fortune and movables, which fund they were to lay out in purchasing lands in Scotland, to be entailed upon the series of heirs specified in the bond and deed of entail already mentioned:—Held, reversing the decision of the Court of Session in Scotland, that the first year's clear annual proceeds of the executory estate from the death of the testator, it being invested in consols, was properly paid by the executors to the first heir under the deed of entail. Macpherson v. Macpherson, 16 Jur. 847.

1. Effect of a contract for the purchase of lands for the reinvestment of trust moneys being made without reference to the fund proposed to be thereby reinvested. Re Cadiz's Settlement, 9 Hare (App.) lxxxv.; 17 Jur. 84.

Advance by Trustees of Part of Purchase Money. Lien.] 2. Under a marriage settlement the trustees were empowered, at the request of the husband and wife, to invest the trust fund in the purchase of real estate, and to re-sell the same. In exercise of this power the trustees, at the request of the husband and wife, bought certain real estate at a price which exceeded the whole of the trust fund, the husband promising to provide the balance out of his own moneys. The husband could not fulfil his promise, and C. P., one of the trustees, at the request of the husband and wife, borrowed the sum necessary to complete the purchase from a bank, and deposited with them the title deeds of the estate. C. P. died, and the husband was unable to repay the loan. In an action brought by the bank for an account and the realisation of their security, and for administration of C. P.'s estate:—Held, that the trust estate was entitled to a first charge upon the real estate purchased for the full amount of the trust fund; that, subject to such charge, the estate of C. P. was entitled to be indemnified out of such real estate for the amount borrowed by him, and actually invested in or about the purchase, and to enforce such indemnity by sale of such real estate without the consent of the husband and wife; the bank being entitled to stand in the place of C. P. as against the trust estate for the amount due to them. Re Pumfrey, Worcester City and County Banking Co. v. Blisk, 22 L. R., Ch. D., 255; 52 L. J., Ch., 228; 48 L. T. 516; 31 W. R. 195.

Costs.] 3. Under a direction by will to accumulate and lay out a certain sum of money in the purchase of land to be settled to uses thereby declared, the costs of the investment are to be paid out of the particular sum directed to be invested. Gwyther v. Allen, 1 Hare 506.

See also POWER, XXI. IX.

2. Purchase of Leaseholds with Consent, whether Imperative or Discretionary.

4. Where the power of trustees, with consent of husband and wife, or survivor, to vary the securities, was discretionary, and the wife having survived and married again, sought to have the funds invested in leaseholds (although eligible securities), the Court refused to interfere. Lee v. Young, 2 Y. & Coll. C. C. 532; 12 L. J., N. S., Ch., 478; 7 Jur. 761.

5. Trustees were "authorised and empowered," with the "consent and discretion" of the tenant for life, to lay out the trust moneys on leasehold hereditaments "in some convenient place":—Held, that it was imperative on the trustees, on the requisition of the tenant for life, to invest in leaseholds, and that they could not refuse to do so on the ground of the liabilities to be incurred by them on the covenants, they having expressly contracted on the subject, but that they had a discretion to exercise as to value, title, and locality; secondly, that leasehold houses were within the power. Beauclerk v. Ashburnham, 8 Beav. 322; 14 L. J., N. S., Ch., 241; 9 Jur. 146.

6. By a deed, power was given to trustees, and they were required, with the approbation of the tenants for life, to invest in the purchase of leaseholds:—Held, that it was compulsory on them to invest when called upon to do so by the tenants for life. Cadogan v. Essex (Earl), 2 Drew. 227; 18 Jur. 782; 23 L. J., Ch., 487; 2 Eq. Rep. 351.

By settlement certain moneys were vested in trustees upon trust to permit them to remain on the then securities during the lives of the tenants for life, and the survivor, with their consent in writing; and with the consent of the survivor, or after the decease of the survivor, at their discretion, to lay out such funds in stock, or upon freehold, copyhold, or leasehold premises, not less than sixty years being unexpired, and to stand possessed of the moneys or investments for the plaintiff for life, and after to the children, if any; and there was a proviso that it should be lawful for the trustees, and they were thereby required, at any time during the lives of the plaintiffs, or the survivor, with their approbation in writing, to lay out the moneys in the purchase of premises, freehold, copyhold, or leasehold, of not less than sixty years. The plaintiffs, the tenants for life, purchased leaseholds, and gave the trustees written notice of the fact, and required them so to apply a portion of the trust funds:—Held, that trusts were imperative and not discretionary. S. C. 2 W. R. 313.

1. In Bank Stock.

7. Where there was a power to invest trust funds in Government or real securities, the Court sanctioned an investment in Bank Stock and in East India Stock. Bishop v. Bishop, 30 L. J., Ch., 624; 9 W. R. 549; 4 L. T., N. S., 350.

1. Where a petition prayed an investment of 3 per cent. consols, in Bank Stock, or East India Stock, the Court directed the investment to be made in Bank Stock. Peillon v. Brooking, 4 L. T., N. S., 731.

The costs of all parties were ordered to be paid out of the capital of the trust fund; but several residuary legatees who had appeared by different counsel were allowed only one set of costs. Ib.

2. A trust fund invested in consols was paid into court under the Trustee Relief Act, on the petition of the tenant for life to change the investment into East India or Bank Stock, and for payment of the dividends to him: a transfer into Bank Stock was, under the circumstances, ordered; and, a petition being otherwise necessary, the costs were directed to be paid out of the corpus. Re Langford, 2 John. & H. 458; 31 L. J., Ch., 334; 5 L. T., N. S., 579; 10 W. R. 121.

3. On application of a person who had a life interest in two funds invested in consols, the Court, under the provisions of 22 & 23 Vict., c. 35, directed such funds to be sold by the accountant-general, and to be invested in Bank Stock. Cohen v. Whaley, Newton v. Whaley, 7 Jur., N. S., 937; 3 L. T., N. S., 436; 9 W. R. 137.

4. Where a party is very poor, the Court will not only sanction the exchange from Consols to Bank Stock, but will dispense with any provision in the order disenabling the party from receiving three dividends in one year. Re Ingram, 11 W. R. 980; 8 L. T., N. S., 758.

5. The Court of Chancery will not, at the instance of one having a life interest in a trust fund, change the investment of it from new 3 per cent stock, under 23 & 24 Vict., c. 38, without a special reason. Re Boyces, 1 Ir. R., Eq., 45; 2 Ir. R., Eq., 255.

More increase of income is not a sufficient reason. The change of investment may be made, if it appears that the increase of income will be beneficial to those entitled in remainder. Ib.

On an application by two unmarried women and a married woman and her husband to have certain sums of money, to which they were entitled for life under their father's will, transferred from the Government new 3 per cent. stock to Bank of Ireland stock. The Court will not permit such a transfer, except under special circumstances, showing either that the transfer will be beneficial to those entitled in remainder, or that it is necessary in order to carry out the primary object of the trust. S. C. nom. Re Boyce, 15 W. R. 827.

See also Next Subdivision.

2. In East India Stock.

6. While the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 85, for the regulation of the East India Company's charter, was in force, the capital stock of the company was not "a Government or parliamentary stock or fund," nor was it "a foreign stock or fund." Brown v. Brown, 4 Kay & J. 704.

The Court will in no case authorise trustees to invest trust money in the New East India stock. Re Fromon, 8 W. R. 272.

7. Money having been paid into court in obedience to the Standing Orders, upon an intended application to Parliament for a bill for the construction of a railway, the parties paying in the money applied that the same might be invested in the New East India 5 per cent. loan, raised under the powers of the 22 & 23 Vict., c. 39; but Wood, V.-Ch., was of opinion that such investment would not be East India Stock within the meaning of the 22 & 23 Vict., c. 35, s. 32, and the full Court of Appeal concurred. Re Colne Valley and Halstead Railway Bill, 29 L. J., Ch., 33; 1 L. T., N. S., 20, 26; 1 De G. & J. 53; 1 John. 528; 8 W. R. 18; 5 Jur., N. S., 1129; 29 L. J., Ch., 33.

Such investment is not what the Court of Chancery would sanction; but if a trustee had so invested money, and were brought before the Court as for a breach of trust, and he pleaded the provisions of the 22 & 23 Vict., c. 35, s. 32, the Court would be bound to decide in his favour. Ib.

8. It is a matter of discretion vested in the Court as to whether a transfer of a fund in court, belonging to a married woman equitably entitled for life, and which was invested in consols, should be laid out in East India Stock, under 23 & 24 Vict., c. 38. Cockburn v. Peel, 7 Jur., N. S., 810; 30 L. J., Ch., 575; 9 W. R. 725; 4 L. T., N. S., 571.

Where, however, the fund is not in court, trustees making the transfer will be entitled to the protection of the Court, if they act bonâ fide and to the best of their discretion. Ib.

9. In the administration of trust funds in court no direction will be made for the investment in East India Stock, though the Court gave the tenants for life permission to apply in chambers for leave to invest the funds on real security in England. Ungless v. Twiff, 30 L. J., Ch., 784; 9 W. R. 729.

10. An investment of settled trust funds in East India or Bank Stock sanctioned, upon the petition and at the cost of the tenant for life, who was the settlor. Equitable Insurance Co. v. Fuller, 1 John. & H. 379; 7 Jur., N. S., 307; 30 L. J., Ch., 497; 9 W. R. 400; 4 L. T., N. S., 50. Affirming 30 L. J., Ch., 848.

11. D., by will, dated in 1844, gave all his real and personal estate to trustees, to convert such part as should not consist of money, or securities for money in Government securities, into money, and to invest the same in the public stocks or funds of Great Britain, and to stand possessed thereof, and to lay out and invest the same in the purchase of freehold lands of inheritance in Ireland, either in one purchase or from time to time, as eligible purchases might offer; the estates, when purchased, to be vested in the trustees, to the use of C. for life, and after her death to H. for life, with limitations over in favour of the sons of H. in tail; and until such time as his residuary estate should be laid out in the purchase of lands, his trustee should pay and apply the dividends, interest, and annual produce, or of such part as should remain so uninvested, in the purchase of lands, to and for the use of such persons, and for such estates and interest, as he or they would be entitled to in the hereditaments directed to be purchased, or as near thereto as the law would permit. D. died in 1858, and at the time of his death a considerable portion of his estate was vested in English and Irish Bank Stock and in East India Stock. Upon a case for the opinion of the Court, whether the trustees were justified in retaining such part of the estate as was so invested in the English and Irish Bank Stock and East India Stock until eligible purchases of land could be obtained, and for the direction of the Court as to the proper mode of paying the income and accumulations of it, and as to future investments, and the costs of the special case:—Held, first, that the trustees were justified in retaining the English and Irish Bank Stock and East India Stock by way of interim investment until proper purchases of land could be effected. Hume v. Richardson, 8 Jur., N. S., 686; 31 L. J., Ch., 713; 10 W. R. 528; 6 L. T., N. S., 624; 4 De G. F. & J. 23.

Held, secondly, that the whole of the future income arising from such investments should be paid to the successive tenants for life. Id.

Held, thirdly, that according to the terms of the will, Bank and East India Stock were not securities for money in Government securities; that the 12th section of 23 & 24 Vict., c. 38, which made the 32nd section of 22 & 23 Vict., c. 35, retrospective, made it so only as to instruments on which the 32nd section did not previously operate, but did not alter rights which had then actually accrued and arisen; and that the tenant for life was entitled to no more than the stock would have produced if placed in the state of investment which the testator intended: that was to say, to the income of so much 3l. per cent. consols as would have been produced if the Bank Stock and India Stock had been converted into those funds at the death of the testator. Id.

Held, also, that the costs of the special case must be paid out of the surplus income, which was to be treated as capital. Id.

1. Section 32 of 22 & 23 Vict., c. 35, enabling trustees, in certain cases, to invest their trust funds in Bank Stock or East India Stock, does not apply where the trust fund is already invested in Bank Annuities, and the trustee has no power, independently of the Act, to vary any investment. Re Warde, 2 John. & H. 191.

2. The Court ordered a fund invested in consols, out of which maintenance had been allowed by an order of the Court for infants in a suit, and which has become diminished, to be invested in East India Stock, the infants having nearly attained their majority. Fluid v. Fluid, 7 L. T., N. S., 590.

3. Where a fund invested in consols, out of which maintenance has been allowed by an order of the Court, for infants in a suit, becomes diminished, the Court will, if the infants have nearly attained their majority, order the fund to be sold and invested in East India Stock. Hard v. Hard, 11 W. R. 50.

4. Where a woman, fifty-one years of age, who had been married thirty-four years without ever having had children, asked that a sum of consols which was settled upon herself for life, remainder to her children, remainder to herself absolutely, might be sold out and invested in East India stock, the Court directed the change of investment, notwithstanding the opposition of the petitioner's husband, as the probability of there being any children to take under the settlement was extremely remote. Vidler v. Parratt, 12 W. R. 976; 10 L. T., N. S., 686; 4 N. R. 392.

5. An intended husband, by his marriage settlement and under a power enabling him, appointed the freeholds, of which he was tenant for life in possession, to trustees during his intended wife's life upon trust out of the rents and profits to pay her an annuity of 500l. for her jointure in lieu of dower, and gave her the usual powers of distress and entry for securing the due payment of the annuity (such powers extending to give her the enjoyment in case she took possession without impeachment of waste, and such extension being beyond her power to give), and covenanted for further assurance. He afterwards acquired the fee. Subsequently, in 1843, the settled hereditaments being in part subject to an antecedent mortgage created by the husband, and being considered by the wife an insufficient security for her annuity, the husband, by an indenture reciting these facts, assured, subject to the mortgage, the same and other property, the wife releasing her 500l. annuity, to trustees upon trust (in the events which happened) for sale, and for the investment of the whole if not more than sufficient, and if more than sufficient, then of a sufficient part in a competent share of consols to produce a clear yearly income of 500l.; or if the moneys should not be equal to purchase a sufficient amount of such stock to produce such yearly income, then for the investment of the whole of such moneys in or upon some or one of the parliamentary stocks or public funds, or upon Government or real securities, with power of variation of securities; and after the death of the husband for payment of the income of the wife during her life, in lieu and full satisfaction of her annuity under the marriage settlement, with remainder over. The settled property was from time to time sold, and the net proceeds invested in consols; but the investment failed to produce 500l. a year. The husband having sold his reversionary interest in part of the trust fund expectant on his wife's death and died:—Held, in a suit constituted by the wife to have the trusts of the settlement and the deeds of 1843 carried into effect, first, that the object of the arrangement of 1843 was to give the wife a better means of insuring to her 500l. a year; but that she had no right to come upon the capital of the investment to make good that annual sum. Mortimer v. Pictou, 4 De G. J. & S. 166; 3 N. R. 338; 10 Jur., N. S., 83; 33 L. J., Ch., 337; 12 W. R. 292; 9 L. T., N. S., 591, 795.

Held, secondly, that the income of the investment in consols falling short of that annual sum, and the chief object of the trust being likely to be defeated by the insufficiency of the investment, the case was one for a change of investment into East India Stock, under 22 & 23 Vict., c. 35, s. 32; 23 & 24 Vict., c. 38, ss. 10, 11, 12, and the General Order of 1st February 1861, notwithstanding the opposition of the purchasers of the reversion of the fund, but without prejudice to their rights as between the husband's executors and themselves, and that the wife was entitled to the interest of that new investment as from the date of the order of it. Ib.

Where the condition of a trust fund is such that the income arising from it does not answer its primary purpose, it is the duty of the Court to exercise the power given by the statute. Ib.

1. When money is paid into court in consequence of a tenancy for life, and there is no provision in the private Act under which it is paid in for service on any other person than the tenant for life, service on the trustees of the instrument under which he claims was dispensed with, and an investment was ordered in East India Stock under 23 & 24 Vict., c. 38, s. 10. Re Adam, 17 L. T., N. S., 641.

2. The Court of Chancery may order the investment in East India Stock of a fund paid into court under the provisions of a special Act anterior to 23 & 24 Vict., c. 38, although such special Act directs the investment to be in consols or 3l. per cent. reduced bank annuities. Re Wilkinson, 9 L. R., Eq., 343.

3. An application for an order for investment of such a fund in Bank Stock or New East India Stock (in which trustees are authorised to invest by 30 & 31 Vict., c. 132) refused. Exp. Great Northern Railway Co., 9 L. R., Eq., 274.

3. In Irish Securities.

4. The 3rd section of 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 29 enacts that in certain cases loans on real securities in Ireland shall be made under the directions of the Court of Chancery or Exchequer in England to be obtained in any cause upon petition in a summary way:—Held, that the concluding part of the section must be read thus: "in any cause, or upon petition in a summary way;" and that the proposed securities must be approved of by the Master. Exp. French, 7 Sim. 510.

5. Under the 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 29, a trust to invest money in real securities in England or Wales or Great Britain, will authorise an investment on real securities in Ireland also; and although the money be already invested in Great Britain, the Court will, on the application of the tenant for life of the fund, direct a reference to the Master to inquire whether it will be for the benefit of all parties interested that that investment should be changed for one at a higher rate of interest in Ireland. Exp. Pamlett (Lord), 1 Phil. 570; 14 L. J., N. S., Ch., 321.

6. An application made under the 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 29, to invest trust funds on Irish security, refused, for though for the benefit of the tenant for life, as increasing his income, it was otherwise as to those in remainder, as affording a less secure investment. Stuart v. Stuart, 3 Beav. 430; 10 L. J., N. S., Ch., 148; 5 Jur. 3.

7. Lynch's Act (4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 29) only relieves a trustee from liability in respect of an investment in Ireland instead of England, and therefore where, upon petition under the Act, the Court sanctioned an investment which was made without proper evidence of value, and without the consent of the necessary parties, and there was a loss, the trustees were held liable for the breach of trust. Norris v. Wright, 14 Beav. 291.

8. Pending a suit to make trustees liable for the improper investment of trust moneys on an Irish estate, the property was put up for sale under the Incumbered Estates Act, and an order was made giving the trustees liberty to buy, which they did:—Held, that this order did not relieve the trustees from any liability in the cause, although it was not expressed to be made "without prejudice." Ib.

9. An order of reference, under the Act 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 29, as to whether it would be for the benefit of the parties beneficially interested in a settled fund to land it on the security of freehold estates in Ireland, may be made ex parte; but the Court will not confirm the Master's report, finding that such a loan would be for the benefit of such parties, unless they all, as well those entitled in remainder as those entitled for life, have either been served with the petition or appeared before the Master. Re Kirkpatrick's Trust, 15 Jur. 914.

4. In Other Securities.

10. The Court will not, on the application of a tenant for life, except in special cases, order a fund in court to be invested in any other security but that of consols. Darwin v. Darwin, 17 Jur. 781; 22 L. J., Ch., 1007.

11. Sum of money paid into court under the Trustee Act allowed to be invested in new 3l. per cent. annuities. Re Dunster's Trust, 3 W. R. 267; 3 Eq. Rep. 449.

12. Under special circumstances the Court permitted an infant's fund to be invested in new 3l. per cent. reduced bank annuities, instead of consols. Hanson v. Murray, 1 Jur., N. S., 917; 3 W. R. 557.

There is a difference between an order for investment made in the cause and one made on petition, in the matter of the Trustee Relief Act 1847, with regard to varying the stock for investment. S. C. 3 Eq. Rep. 758.

13. The Court will allow the investment of a fund in court on foreign bonds where the interest is payable to bearer by coupons passing from hand to hand. Re Brackenbury, 22 W. R. 682; 31 L. T., N. S., 79.

14. An investment of a fund in court in freehold houses will not, however eligible, be sanctioned by the Court. Moore v. Walter, 11 W. R. 713; 8 L. T., N. S., 448.

15. Trustees, under a power in a will, invested the residuary estate in London and Westminster Bank shares. An administration decree having been made the remaindermen under the will applied to have the funds invested in consols; and it appearing that one of the trustees desired the change of investment, but was willing to retire from the trust, the Court ordered the fund to be invested in consols, with liberty to apply with reference to any appointment of new trustees. Butler v. Withers, 1 John. & H. 333; 4 L. T., N. S., 736.

16. After an administration decree has been made all powers of management of the estate which may be vested in trustees are subject to the control of the Court; and the judge who exercises such control must be personally satisfied of the propriety of the course proposed to be adopted by the trustees. Bethell v. Abraham, 17 L. R., Eq., 24; 43 L. J., Ch., 180; 22 W. R. 179; 29 L. T., N. S., 715.

Trustees having power to invest certain moneys belonging to a testator's estate at their discretion, and having also power to continue or change securities from time to time, as to the majority should seem meet, applied to the Court in a suit for the administration of the trust estate for liberty to invest the moneys in and to convert securities into American funds or railway stocks. Infants were interested in the trust estate:—Held, that if the trustees had the discretion they claimed (which was doubtful), the Court ought not, in a case where infants were interested, to permit them to exercise that discretion in the way they proposed. Id.

1. A testator by his will gave 6,000*l.* on trust for C. for life, and after her death, in certain events, for R. for life. He directed the 6,000*l.* to be invested inter alia in the guaranteed stock of any railway company in India upon which a minimum rate of interest should be guaranteed by the Government of India. All railways in India, not belonging to the Government, are leasehold. C. applied that the 6,000*l.* might be invested in East Indian Railway Stock Annuity B., and in Scinde, Punjab, and Delhi Railway 5 per Cent. guaranteed Stock. R. opposed:—Held, that the Court would approve of the proposed investment. Re Mansel, Rhodes v. Jenkin, 45 L. T. 741; 30 W. R. 133.

2. The trusts of a settlement as to two-thirds of the trust funds made it imperative on the trustees, and as to the remaining one-third left it discretionary with them, to invest in American securities. During the civil war in America two petitions were presented, seeking an authority from the Court to make such investments, but, having regard to the then condition of the United States, the Court directed an investment in British funds with liberty to apply. After the termination of the war a third petition was presented, which the Court answered by authorising investments in American Federal securities, directing the costs to be paid out of the corpus. Re Knowles, 37 L. J., Ch., 840; 18 L. T., N. S., 809.

3. Stock in the funds belonging to a charity incorporated by Act of Parliament, and having power to invest in the public funds, may, under 23 & 24 Vict., c. 38, s. 11, be sold out for the purpose of re-investment on any of the stocks, funds, and securities on which cash under the control of the Court may be invested. Re Clergy Orphan Corporation, 18 L. R., Eq., 280; 22 W. R. 789; 30 L. T., N. S., 809.

Such funds may also be sold out and re-invested on metropolitan consolidated stock under the Metropolitan Board of Works Loans Act 1871, 34 & 35 Vict., c. 47, s. 13. Id.

4. Upon a petition by a tenant for life without impeachment of waste for the investment of 6,100*l.*, part of a large fund in court, in the purchase of land, the Court approved of the purchase, notwithstanding the timber on the property was valued at 1,800*l.* Re Jones, 1 Jur., N. S., 817; 24 L. J. Ch., 504.

5. Where Special Securities Directed by the Trust.

5. By an Act of Parliament, funds in court were, by way of interim investment, to be laid out in navy, victualling, or Exchequer bills. But under 23 & 24 Vict., c. 38, and the General Orders of the 1st February 1861, the Court allowed them to be invested in consols. Re Birmingham Blue Coat School, 35 Beav. 345; 35 L. J., Ch., 837; 1 L. R., Eq., 632.

6. Money paid into court under a private Act, and invested in Exchequer bills, is "cash under the control of the Court," within the meaning of the Act 23 & 24 Vict., c. 38, and the General Order of the 1st February 1861, and may be invested in any of the securities sanctioned by the Court, although such private Act directs the investment to be in Exchequer bills. Jackson v. Tyas, 52 L. J., Ch., 830.

7. Trustees of settlements coming within the operation of Lord St. Leonards' Act 1860 (23 & 24 Vict., c. 38), may invest the trust funds in any securities in which cash under the control of the Court may be invested, notwithstanding prohibitive or restrictive words in the instrument creating the trust. Re Wedderburn, 9 L. R., Ch. D., 112; 47 L. J., Ch., 743; 27 W. R. 53; 38 L. T., N. S., 904.

6. Practice on Application.

8. On motion for application of money placed in bank by a former order, there must not only be a certificate that the money was paid into the bank, but that it is actually there at the time of the motion. Anon., 1 Atk. 519.

9. Notice of motion was given for the payment of money into Court, but the notice did not proceed to state that any application would be made for its investment; one of the parties did not appear on the motion:—Held, that no order for investment of the fund could be made. Robinson v. Wood, 1 Beav. 206.

10. When money is to be laid out under a marriage settlement in purchases, application must be made to the Court upon each separate purchase. Harrington v. Fleming, 1 Bro. C. C. 74.

11. On a petition for the investment of stock, and payment of the dividends, the Court required an affidavit of title to be made by the petitioners. Exp. St. Mary's College, Winchester, 14 W. R. 788; 14 L. T., N. S., 550.

12. Upon an application for the investment of money paid into the bank, in the name of the accountant-general, to the credit of the copyhold commissioners, under the 73rd section of this Act, it is proper for the petitioner to serve the commissioners with notice of the application; and, notwithstanding the Act for the commutation of manorial rights in respect of copyholds makes no provision for the payment of any costs, the Court ordered the petitioner to pay the costs of the copyhold commissioners, and to add them to his own; and that all such costs should be paid to the petitioner out of the fund, and said that this would be the rule for the future. Exp. Hereford (Bishop), 5 De G. & Sm. 265; 21 L. J., Ch., 608.

13. An order for the interim investment of money paid into Court under a private Act had been made by the Vice-Chancellor Kindersley:—Held, that an application for the payment out of court of part of the funds for the purposes of the same Act, should be made before the same judge. Re Harman's Bowden Park Estate Act, 1 W. R. 492; 1 Eq. Rep. 246.

1. The 23 & 24 Vict., c. 38 is an enabling Act, and s. 10, which enacts that all orders for conversion of bank annuities into other funds or securities be made upon petition, to be presented by any of the parties in a summary way, does not preclude the Court, in the exercise of its ordinary jurisdiction, from making such orders on a decree in a suit. Lucas v. Rudd, 16 W. R. 325.

2. When money is paid into court in consequence of a tenancy for life, and there is no provision in the private Act under which it is paid in for service on any other person than the tenant for life, service on the trustees of the instrument under which he claims was dispensed with, and an investment was ordered in East India Stock under 23 & 24 Vict., c. 38, s. 10. Re Adam, 17 L. T., N. S., 641.

1. Exchequer Bills.

3. The words "Government security or securities":—Held, not to apply to Exchequer bills. Exp. Chaplin, 3 Y. & Coll. 397; 3 Jur. 750.

4. Where the trustee was authorised to invest the fund in Government or real security:—Held, that pending a treaty for a mortgage he was justified in investing in Exchequer bills, but that having left them in a broker's hands, who misapplied them, he was personally liable for the value of the bills at the time of the loss, and not for the stock which the money would have purchased. Matthews v. Brise, 6 Beav. 239; 12 L. J., N. S., Ch., 363. Affirmed 15 L. J., N. S., Ch., 39; 10 Jur. 105.

2. Foreign Bonds or Securities.

5. If shares in a foreign adventure are bequeathed to trustees, the Court, unless asked to change the investment, will make no order as to the continuance of the shares as an investment. Bates v. Mackinley, 8 Jur., N. S., 299; 31 L. J., Ch., 389; 5 L. T., N. S., 783.

6. Under a direction in a will of "all my personal property invested in Government or other securities, in bonds or shares of whatever nature or kind, be held in the same or the like investments by and in the names of my trustees," Victoria, Russian, and Brazilian Government bonds, which pass by delivery and were lodged for safety with a bank, and also railway stocks, are investments within the meaning of the will. Arnould v. Grinstead, 21 W. R. 155.

7. Under a settlement the trustees were empowered to invest the trust funds in the "bonds, debentures, or other securities, or the stocks or funds of any colony or foreign country." The question arose whether they could properly invest in the bonds of a French railway company, the payment of the capital on which within fifty years was secured by a sinking fund guaranteed, together with interest in the meantime, by the Imperial Government:—Held, that these bonds were not "securities of a foreign country" within the meaning of the trust for investment. Re Langdale, 10 L. R., Eq., 39.

8. A testator by will gave all his residue to trustees upon trust to invest in the parliamentary stocks or funds, or upon real securities; and the will contained a proviso that, as often as the trustees should think it expedient so to do, they might sell out, transfer, or otherwise vary any of the trust moneys, funds, and securities, and invest the same in or on any other funds or securities whatsoever:—Held, that the sale of new 3½ per cent. annuities and the investment of the proceeds in Russian railway and Egyptian bonds was authorised, and not a breach of trust. Lewis v. Nobbs, 8 L. R., Ch. D., 591; 47 L. J., Ch., 662.

9. Where a sum of 4,000*l.* was vested in trustees upon certain trusts, with a power to invest it in land or in Government securities in England, but they invested it in bills and other private securities in Ireland, whereby a sum of 1,200*l.* remained unaccounted for by them:—Held, that although, from the nature of the trusts, none of the cestuis que trustent had a present right to any part of the principal fund, yet that the sum unaccounted for was a debt due in equity, and demandable from the defendant as a defaulting trustee. Waller v. Fowler, San. & Sc. 274.

10. Where the testator directed his executors to set apart so much of his estate as would produce a certain annuity, and pay the interest to his widow for her life or widowhood, and that she should receive any surplus and bear any deficiency that might arise in the annual produce of the fund so set apart, and the principal afterwards to fall into his residuary estate, the conversion and investment were to be in the absolute discretion of the executors. At the time of his death the personal estate was invested in foreign funds; the Court refused to direct any appropriation of the latter funds, but that the annuity should be raised by the purchase of consols, after a reference to ascertain which should be applied to that purpose; regard being had to the interests of other parties under the will. Pren-dergast v. Inshington, 5 Hare 171. And see 8 C. 16 L. J., N. S., Ch., 125.

3. Loan on Personal Security.

11. Power to lend trust money upon real or personal security, does not enable trustees to accommodate a trader with a loan upon his bond. Langton v. Olivant, Coop. 33.

12. Though the settlor should authorise the trustees to continue the trust funds upon the personal security of a trading firm, in which he had invested them, yet the trustees are guilty of a breach of trust, if, upon a change taking place in the firm, they permit the funds to remain upon the personal security of the new firm. Cummins v. Cummins, 3 J. & L. 64; 6 Ir. Eq. R. 723.

1. Trustees lending money on personal security, is not of itself such gross neglect as to amount to a breach of trust; and the legatee, and afterwards his assignee, having acquiesced in such loan, a bill to charge the trustees was dismissed. Harden v. Parsons, 1 Eden 145.

2. Trustees may lend money on good personal security, until a proper purchase in land can be had, but are not justified in placing it out in a fluctuating or precarious fund. Emelie v. Emelie, 7 Bro. P. C. 259.

3. The investment of trust money on personal security, is a breach of trust. Walker v. Symonds, 3 Swan. 63.

4. Trustee charged with breach of trust for not putting out money at interest, nor on the best security, according to the trust in a deed. Money lent on a promissory note, is not put out on a security. Ryder v. Bickerton, 3 Swan. 80.

5. Trustees taking upon themselves to lend an infant's money on a private security, must in all cases be responsible in case of the failure of the security. Holmes v. Dring, 2 Cox 1.

6. One trustee suffering the other to have trust money under a note of hand, held liable. Kable v. Thompson, 3 Bro. C. C. 112.

7. Testator bequeathed 500*l.* to his executors, upon trust that they should lay out and invest the same in the public funds, or in such other security or in such other manner as to them should seem expedient, at interest, and apply the produce to a charitable purpose. One of the executors, who took the entire management of the estate, paid the debts, and most of the legacies of the testator, but neither specifically appropriated nor invested 500*l.* for the charity. He paid interest, however, on 500*l.* to the charity; at the same time receiving interest on the promissory note of a debtor to the estate, who was in good credit, but whose debt was the only fund available for payment of the legacy. The executor afterwards died. On the admission, by his representatives, that he had, in his lifetime, assented to the payment of the legacy to himself as trustee:—Held, that his estate was severally answerable as for a breach of trust. Att.-Gen. v. Higham, 2 Y. & Coll. C. C. 634.

(a) Of Copyholds.

8. A trustee taking a mortgage of copyholds without a power of sale does not thereby commit a breach of trust. Farrar v. Barraclough, 2 W. R. 244; 2 Sm. & G. 231.

9. Defendant, being trustee under a will, containing no direction as to investment, lent part of the trust fund upon the security of unsundered copyholds, the deposit of a lease, and a bond. He was ordered to bring the money into court within six weeks. Wyatt v. Sharratt, 3 Beav. 498.

(b) Of Freeholds.

10. A testator bequeathed all the residue of his property to trustees upon trust to invest it "on good and approved freehold or leasehold securities." The trustees advanced a sum of 2,600*l.* of the trust fund to a builder, upon security of certain freehold buildings and land, valued by a surveyor at 3,500*l.*, the income of which was 175*l.* per annum. The mortgagor became insolvent, and upon a sale of the mortgaged property there was a loss of 353*l.* to the trust estate:—Held, that, although the defendant's general conduct had been faithful and honest to his cestuis que trustent, he had been negligent and wanting in judgment in making the investment upon property of such doubtful value; that to advance two-thirds of the supposed value of the property could not be considered a prudent act of a trustee, notwithstanding he had had the property valued by a surveyor; and that, as the defendant had not exercised due care and diligence in the investment, he must be held liable to make good the loss occasioned to the trust fund; but as there was nothing to impeach his character, no costs would be given as against him. Jones v. Lewis, before the Ld. Ch., 26th February 1852. Reversing S. C. 3 De G. & Sm. 471; 18 L. J., N. S., Ch., 430; 13 Jur. 877.

11. Power to trustees to invest on Government or real security:—Held, not to authorise a loan by the trustees of part of the trust fund on the security of freehold houses in a town, the value of which depended upon their situation, and was besides liable to be diminished by the effect of covenants relating to other premises which were let with them. Phillipson v. Gatty, 7 Hare 516; 13 Jur. 318. Affirmed 2 H. & Tw. 459.

12. The general understanding is, that a trustee should only lend to the extent of two-thirds of the value on agricultural freeholds, and to the extent of one-half on freehold houses. Semble, also, that one-half is the limit in the case of a leasehold renewable for ever at a large head rent. Macleod v. Annisley, 16 Beav. 600; 17 Jur. 608; 22 L. J., Ch., 633; 1 W. R. 250.

13. Trustees having power to invest upon real security invested 1,400*l.*, part of the trust fund, upon the security of a freehold house at Broadstairs, used as an hotel. The evidence of value, upon which they made the investment, was a report made by a London surveyor, who, according to his report, went to Broadstairs, and examined the property, and made some inquiries; he valued the security at 2,700*l.*, including in this sum 800*l.*, as the value of the beer and spirit licence. No other inquiries appeared to have been made. In fact, the house had only recently been opened as an hotel, and did not prove successful. The security turned out to be deficient:—Held, that the security was not a proper security for the investment of trust funds, and that the trustees must be charged with the amount advanced. Budge v. Gummow, 42 L. J., Ch., 22; 27 L. T., N. S., 666; 7 L. R., Ch., 719; 20 W. R. 1022.

1. Two executors were empowered by will to lend money on Government real or personal security. One of them, in 1815, lent part of the fund to the other executor and his partner in trade, upon mortgage. The mortgagors became bankrupt in 1831, and then the mortgaged property, which consisted in part of a windmill, a watermill, and a house in a town, being sold, produced considerably less than the sum advanced; the executors were held liable for the deficiency. Semble, so much as two-thirds of the value should only be advanced upon property of a permanent value, as freehold land, and not upon houses or buildings used in a trade, and whose value depends upon the absence of competition in that trade. Stickney v. Semell, 1 Myl. & C. 8.

2. A testatrix directed her executors, who were also her residuary legatees, to invest such sums in the stocks, or on freehold security, as would produce 150*l.* a year, and she bequeathed 150*l.* to A. for life; and after his death she gave the security on which the investment should have been made to B. The executors invested 3,530*l.* at 4½ per cent., on a mortgage for five years of freeholds, which were let for a long term on ground rents producing 176*l.* per annum. The value of the freeholds was about 4,344*l.*, but the property on which the rents were secured was of much greater value:—Held, that the investment was not improper. But held, that if the payment to the plaintiff should not be delayed by the inability of the trustees to call in the mortgage for five years, the plaintiff was entitled to have the mortgage sold and the deficiency paid by the executors. Vickers v. Evans, 33 Beav. 376; 10 Jur., N. S., 80; 9 L. T., N. S., 822; 33 L. J., Ch., 261; 12 W. R. 237; 8 N. R. 286.

A. by will directed her executors and trustees to invest such a sum of money as, when so invested, would produce 150*l.* per annum, and to pay the income to A. for life, and after A.'s death, to hold the stocks, funds, and securities in or upon which the investment should be made, for B. absolutely. The executors were made residuary legatees; and the will also contained a clause directing that it should not be binding on the trustees to make such investment, if doing so involved selling the testatrix's freehold or leasehold property, or shares in public companies, or other investments; the trustees having the fullest discretionary powers to sell such shares or other investments or not, and to retain them as long as they might think expedient so to do. The executors set apart capital, which, being invested at interest at 4½ per cent., was sufficient to meet the annuity; and they invested such sum on a mortgage of freehold ground rents, more than sufficient in amount to raise the annuity, and reserved in respect of newly-erected building property. On a bill by B., challenging the amount of the appropriation as insufficient, and the investment as improper:—Held, that having regard to the bona fide exercise of the discretion reposed in the executors, the appropriation was sufficient, and that their being interested as residuary legatees did not prevent them from exercising such discretion in a manner which might prove beneficial to themselves. Id.
